No, he believed nothing of this! In the light of modern theology he was a heretic. Were he living now and making such assertions, our religionists would say to each other: "don't be led away by him."

Nevertheless this was his doctrine, for he adds, on the supposition that the dead rise not: "let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," and that is the last of us.

Reader, I have given you the word of God for it, that men are not dead and alive at the same time. I add before we part, that "he that hath the son hath life" beyond all this, in an unending degree, by a resurrection. By all the love of God in Christ, I entreat you to believe and obey his truth. The redemption that is in Christ Jesus, remember, is for mortals who believe the truth; not for immortals who believe what they please.

Sententious.

All discords in the universe become concords in Christ Jesus.

God has given evidences of himself, visible to those who seek for them, and invisible to those who do not seek for them.

To rejoice in another's prosperity is to give content to your own lot; to mitigate another's grief is to alleviate or dispel your own.

Destructive criticism adds nothing to the sum total of human knowledge, and should be treated with no tenderness when it lays its impure hands upon our holy religion.

A creed that contradicts divine revelation is not made truth because millions believe it. All the time pieces in Christendom, if set by one that is disordered, or in error, cannot establish the true time against one that registers the time on the great dial plate which God has fixed in the heavens.

A PLACE WITH HIM.

O tired worker, faltering on life's rugged way,
With faithful hands so full they may not rest,
Forget not that the weak of earth have one sure stay,
And humblest ones by God himself are blest,
Who work for him!

Then courage take, faint heart! and though the path be long,
God's simple rule thy steps will safely guide:
"Love Him, thy neighbor as thyself, and do no wrong."
In calm content they all shall surely bide,
Who walk with Him!

The characters of the alphabet are few, yet capable of endless combinations. So it is with the elements of thought; but they may by permutations be made to satisfy the capacities of an endless variety of minds.

"Thinketh no evil." How very, very far short are we of that standard. As the pigmy dwarf shrub of the lowlands is to the majestic mountain pine, so are we to this moral nobility of soul.

HEAVEN OVER ALL.

How many hours of patient toil
Our faithfulness to test!
How many burdens yet to bear
Before the hands may rest!
How many crosses are they to
Calm folded on the breast!
Yet toil and burden, cross and rod,
Divinest love hath blest.

How fierce the battle ere we win
The conqueror's robe and palm!
How sharp the wounds before they feel
Two healing drops of balm!
How loud the fiat's thunder of strife
Before the evening psalm!
And yet, o'er all, the heaven extends
Its soundless deeps of calm.

THE NOBILITY OF LIFE.

There is no action so slight nor so mean but it may be done to a great purpose, and ennobled therefor; nor is any purpose so great but that slight actions may help it, and may be so done as to help it much, most especially that chief of all purposes,—the pleasing of God. We treat God with irreverence by banishing him from our thoughts, not by referring to his will on slight occasions. His is not the infinite authority or intelligence which cannot be troubled with small things. There is nothing so small but that we may honor God by asking his guidance in it, or insult him by taking it into our own hands; and what is true of the Deity is equally true of his revelation. We use it most reverently when most habitually; our insolence is in ever acting without reference to it; our true honoring of it is in its universal application. God appoints to every one of his creatures a separate mission; and if they discharge it honorably, if they quit themselves like men, and faithfully follow the light which is in them, withdrawing from it all cold and quenchless influence, there will assuredly come of it such burning, as according to its appointed mode and measure, shall shine before men, and be of service constant and holy. Degrees infinite of luster there must always be, but the weakest among us has a gift, however seemingly trivial, which is peculiar to him, and which, worthily used, will be a gift, also to his race forever. Says George Herbert,—

"For all...is have,
If they choose, a glorious life or grave."

RUSKIN.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, March 16, 1881.

THANKS to Brother H. Hoyes for English papers of late date.

IN our enlarged form four papers each month is all we can safely undertake to issue.

Do not send for books that we do not advertise; also, when an advertisement is dropped out of the paper it signifies that we have not the work on hand.

QUESTIONS.

To the Editor of The Restitution.

1. What is the seal of God?
2. What is the seal of the beast?

J. M.

In reply to the first question we say —The Holy Spirit.

In reply to the second question we say—Never had a seal so far as we know.

The Scriptures never originated the absurd idea that any space of time, longer or shorter, is a seal. Might as well talk about sealing men with New Year's Day, Christmas, or the Fourth of July, as with any given day of the week. Sealing with duration is out of the question, as seals leave an impress. Men can brand, mark, or put a badge on beasts, but they do not seal them. The idolatrous powers, symbolized as beasts, had a very different mark for the devotees of their idols, as well as for soldiers and slaves, than to make them keep some day of the week.

THE following short sketches, taken from the Chicago Evening Journal, of the 14th, will be as we think, acceptable to our readers in connection with the account of the assassination of the Czar on Sunday last, as related in our news column. How this event may affect the great questions at issue in the orient, time alone must determine. The Divine plan will develop itself, all the same, whether kings live or die. The last forms of royalty, as prefigured in the Great Image, will be utterly demolished in the earthquake revolutions that will close up Gentile times. Into the times of these revolutionary tempests and upheavals we are about to enter. Notwithstanding all the infidel mocking and scoffing ominous fingers point to the decade of the eighties.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

Alexander II., the late Emperor, was born April 17 (April 29, new style,) 1818. He was the oldest son of Emperor Nicholas I. and of Princess Charlotte of Prussia; educated under the supervision of his father, by General Moerder, a learned German, and the Russian poet Jonkowski: entered the army in 1831; was Colonel in the regiment of grenadiers in 1835; Chancellor of the University of Helsingfors, Finland, in 1837; was superintendent of the military schools of the Empire in 1839; was appointed to a command in the Caucasian army in 1850; succeeded to the throne at the death of his father in 1855, and was crowned at Moscow in 1856. In 1841 he married the Empress Maria, daughter of the late Grand Duke Ludwig II. of Hesse-Darmstadt. The Czar leaves six children—Alexander, who succeeds to the throne; the Grand Duke Vladimir, the Grand Duke Alexis, the Grand Duchess Marie, the Grand Duke Sergius, and the Grand Duke Paul, the last named being in his 21st year. Their first-born son, Nicholas, died at Nice, France, 1865. Since the death of the Empress, in 1880, the Czar contracted a morganatic marriage with his former mistress, the Princess Dolgorouski. There have been five previous attempts on the life of the Emperor.

THE NEW CZAR.

Alexander was born March 10, 1845, married Marie-Feodorovna, Princess Dagmar, daughter of King Christian IX. of Denmark, who had previously been engaged to his elder brother. Their eldest child, Nicholas Alexandrovitch, was born May 18, 1868, George, their second son, was born May 10, 1871; their third child, a daughter, Xenia, was born April 18, 1875, and their fourth, Michael, was born December 5, 1878.

THE FORMER ATTEMPTS AT ASSASSINATION.

This is the sixth attempt which has been made upon the Czar's life, the first having been made on April 16, 1866, when he was fired at while entering his carriage at St. Petersburg. The pistol, however, was turned aside by Dimitri Karakosow, who afterwards was ennobled for the act. The second attempt was made at Paris, June 6, 1867, by Berezowski, a Pole, who fired into the carriage in which the Czar was seated with his two sons and the Emperor Napoleon. Both sovereigns escaped unhurt.

Another great shock was given to the public feeling April 14, 1877, when Alexandox Solovieff attempted to shoot the Czar in front of the house of the military staff in St. Petersburg. The assassin was arrested.

Another attempt was made Dec. 3, 1879, when a mine was exploded under the railroad with the intention of blowing up the train on which he was entering Moscow. His Majesty, however was not on the train.

About 7 o'clock on the evening of Feb. 17, 1880, an explosion occurred in the basement of the Imperial Winter Palace, under the principal guard-room. Owing to an accident the Czar and the royal family did not enter at the usual time. The explosion made a hole in the dining hall fifteen feet long and twelve feet wide. The escape of the Emperor was almost miraculous. Eight soldiers were killed. The sixth, the successful attempt is chronicled elsewhere.

News Items.

ASSASSINATED.

THE CZAR OF ALL THE RUSSIAS KILLED BY A NIHILIST BOMB.

THE ASSASSINATION.

LONDON, Mar. 13—A St. Petersburg correspondent says: The Imperial carriage was attacked on the Ekat Rinofsky Canal, opposite the imperial stables, while the Emperor was returning with the Grand Duke Michael from Michael palace in a closed carriage, supported by eight Cossacks. The first bomb fell near the carriage, destroying the back part.

The Czar and his brother alighted uninjured.

The assassin, on being siezed by a colonel of the police, drew a revolver, but was prevented from firing it.

A second bomb was then thrown by another person, and fell close to the Czar's feet, its explosion shattering both legs.

The Czar was immediately taken in an unconscious state to the Winter Palace, where he died at 3:30 this afternoon.

Two persons were concerned in the crime, and both were arrested. One of them gave his name as Roussakoff.

The explosion also killed an officer and two Cossacks. Many policemen and other persons were injured.

It is stated the bombs were made of thick glass filled with nitro-glycerine. The assassins stood on opposite sides of the road. The carriage was moving fast, and the first shell struck the ground behind it, and the back of the carriage was blown out. The coachman implored the Czar to enter the carriage again, but he moved a few paces from the carriage to see his wounded escort.

DEATH OF THE CZAR.

The Czar seemed to recover consciousness before death, as he motioned away the doctors, who wished to amputate his legs.

He lingered an hour and a half and all efforts to rally him failed. The only word he uttered after being struck was the name "Czarowitz."

The Imperial family were all assembled at the death-bed.

The Council of State was immediately convened.

All places of public resort are closed, and the bells are tolling.

The Czarowitz and Czarina drove to their palace after his death, amid sympathetic cries of the people. The Czarowitz, on leaving the palace after the death of the Czar, was hailed as Emperor by the crowd. He was surrounded, contrary to his custom, by a strong mounted escort.

The people are intensely excited and indignant. The soldiery, who greatly loved the Czar, are furious. All the officials hastened to the palace to enquire as to the condition of the Czar.

Telegrams announcing his death were sent to all the foreign courts and to every part of the Empire.

ALEXANDER III.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 14.—The following dispatch is just received:

ST. PETERSBURG, March 14.—To Blaine, Washington: The Czarowitch ascends the throne as Alexander III.

Signed, FOSTER.

AT HALF MAST.

NEW YORK, March 14.—The flags in the city are at half-mast in respect for the Emperor of Russia.

ESCAPED.

The Agence Russe says the Grand Duke Michael was driving behind the Czar's sleigh with Colonel Dorjibky. The second bomb-thrower was not arrested, but disappeared in the crowd.

THE TROOPS

have taken the oath of allegiance to the new Emperor.

THE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE.

The Imperial family and court officials swore allegiance to Alexander III.

ONE OF THE ASSASSINS.

The man arrested yesterday confessed that he threw the first bomb, but denies all knowledge of the person who threw the second. In addition to the revolver which the prisoner attempted to use, a dagger was found on him. The name he gave is believed to be false. The prisoner is 21 years of age, and a native of Berovitcha, in the Government of Novgorod.

DIED OF THEIR WOUNDS.

During the night a Cossack and a civilian, who declined to give his name, died from the injuries received by the bursting bomb. Altogether, twenty persons were more or less injured, thirteen of whom are in the hospital.

IN MOURNING.

The whole city is in deep mourning.

THE ANTI-MELCHISEDEK PRIESTHOOD.

J. H. STEPHENSON.

The apostle says in Hebrews v. 5, 6: "So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest; but he (David) that said unto him (Christ), Thou art my son, to-day have I begotten thee. As he (David) saith also in another place, Thou (Christ) art a priest forever, after the order of Melchisedek. For he (David) testifieth, Thou art a priest forever, after the order of Melchisedek."

1. If it shall be affirmed that Christ was a priest at the time Paul wrote his letter to the Hebrews, from the fact that he uses the present tense of the verb, it may be replied that Paul quotes the language of David, uttered a thousand years before, in the present tense also. Psa. cx. 4.

This objection proves too much. It would prove that Christ was a defacto priest a thousand years before he was born.

Paul lets David speak for himself. He simply quotes his language in the present tense when speaking of a day of rest which was then at least eighteen hundred years future. See Heb. iv. 6, 7.

Thus, Paul in like manner repeated the language of David in the same tense in which David uttered these words, and so this objection is not valid. David uttered them and Paul repeated them also, when referring to a period more than eighteen years future, and which is still future.

Just so in reference to the Melchisedek priesthood; it was in David's, in Paul's, and is in our day a future event.

That Christ is the antitype of the Aaronic priesthood will appear from the following language of Paul. He says:

"Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man. For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices; wherefore it is of necessity that this man should have somewhat also to offer. For if he were on earth he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts and sacrifices according to the law; who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for see (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern showed thee in the mount." Heb. viii. 1-5.

There are several points of analogy between the sanctuary and the tabernacle in which the Aaronic priesthood officiated and that in which Christ is now officiating, which demonstrates that the tabernacle erected by Moses was the perfect duplicate of the sanctuary and true tabernacle, which God pitched and not man.

The service of the high priest who officiated in the tabernacle pitched by Moses is declared in the foregoing Scripture to be an example of the service of the great antitypical high priest in the sanctuary and tabernacle that God pitched in heaven. An example is a pattern or model.

Again, Paul calls the sanctuary on earth a shadow of the sanctuary in heaven. A shadow takes its form from the substance, and is therefore the perfect counterpart of the substance. There cannot be a shadow without the substance. There must therefore be a substance in the heavenly sanctuary for every shadow cast upon the earthly sanctuary.

God commanded Moses to make everything according to the pattern showed him in the mount. When he who made the original shall draw a perfect pattern of it, it will be drawn to the life.

Now, if Moses obeyed the command of God in making a perfect pattern of the original, then by comparing the original with the pattern, the shadow, and example, we may certainly ascertain the exact position, relation, and work of Christ in heaven.

In this perfect example, shadow, and pattern, made in all things just like the original, there was no king, kingdom, throne, or royalty.

Could so great a disparity as this be found in that exact example, shadow, and pattern? Could such grand and glorious substances as these fail to cast their far-reaching shadows upon that perfect pattern which God made? As well may we talk of a perfect shadow of a tree which would only represent a few of the topmost branches, leaving the trunk and main limbs unrepresented in the shadow. As well attempt the impossible task of making a perfect pattern, or drawing a perfect picture of a man, and yet leave out his head, breast, and arms.

Could the master painter who made the heavenly sanctuary, in drawing a perfect pattern of the original sanctuary and tabernacle, with all its services, have overlooked or ignored the crowns, the throne, and the purple robes of royalty? As well leave out of the perfect pattern the white-vested priesthood.

Christ's official mission in heaven is purely, and exclusively sacerdotal and legal, and not in any sense regal. He has no throne or regal glory in heaven. As the nobleman he has gone into the far off country—"to his father to receive kingly authority" (Whiting) and then return to earth to exercise that authority in the place from which he had gone away, the same as did a Roman nobleman in the simile Luke xix 11-16. According to Peter Christ's priestmission in the heavenly sanctuary is not associated with a kingly position or work, but as "a prince and savior to give repentance and remission of sins." Acts v 31. A prince it not a king but an expectant of a kingdom.

Christ has no title to a throne or kingdom in heaven. The only throne and kingdom to which he is heir are the throne and kingdom of his father David Ps. 132 11; Isa. ix 7, Luke 1 33. David never had a throne or kingdom in heaven, therefore Christ has no title to a throne or kingdom in heaven. The throne and kingdom of David are the only throne and kingdom upon earth which God has called his. He gave this throne and kingdom to David and they were his. He will give them to Christ and they will be his.

When Christ receives his throne, where shall it be located, in heaven or upon earth? It will be upon the earth, and in the regeneration, when the Lord returns to earth. Matt. xix 28-xxv, 31. By reference to the forgoing texts it will be seen:

That Christ will not receive his throne or be invested with regal gluty until he returns to earth; and:

That earth will be the locality of his throne, glory and kingdom, is evident from the fact that he must return to the earth before he is seated upon his throne or is invested with his glory.

His throne and kingdom will be located where all nations are standing before him. The nations of earth will not be marshalled upon the plain of heaven.

When seated upon his throne, the twelve apostles will be seated upon twelve thrones, and reigning jointly with Christ over the twelve tribes of Israel. This event neither has occured or will never in heaven; therefore Christ never has or will have a throne or kingdom in heaven. It has never occured in the past; therefore his throne and kingdom are future.

Christ affirms that he is not upon his throne, but promises that when he shall be seated upon his throne that all who shall have overcome will sit with him in his throne. Rev. iii. 21. He will not be seated upon his throne until he shall return to earth therefore:

He has no throne in heaven, and:

He will not occupy his throne on earth until he shall return to earth.

When seated upon the throne of his glory, he will invite the blessed of his father to come and inherit the kingdom prepared man, and from the foundation of the world, which was the dominion of the whole earth. Thus, his kingdom and dominion will be located upon earth; and therefore he must return to earth to receive them. Thus Christ and all the saints are joint heirs to a kingdom upon earth, and not in heaven, to be received when he returns to earth, not when he went to heaven. Christ is now Prince of the kings of the earth. Rev. i 5. But when he comes again to earth he will be King of the kings of earth. Rev. xix 11-16. This is just the difference between Christ's present position in heaven—and future position on earth.

(To be Continued.)

MAN A LITTLE LOWER THAN THE ANGELS.

Why So Created?

S. H. OATMAN.

At his creation man was endued with the image and likeness of the angels of God. They are similitudes of the Great Uncreated One; therefore man was the similitude of God, but he was the likeness of God in a different nature to them. The nature of man was "lower" than the nature of the angels. Their nature is the "Divine Nature," which does not decay or waste away; man's nature was then, and is now, of the earth, earthy, and therefore subject to weakness, emotion, decay and dissolution. Gen. ii. 7. 1 Cor. xv. 47.

After he transgressed the law of his creator his flesh was placed under "the law of sin and death" which causes it to pass away. The nature of angels is devoid of this law of mortality: therefore they abide even in God's great tabernacle; man but "a few days." which are "full of trouble." Isa. xliv. 22. Job xiv. 1. But man shall not always remain in the inferior nature of the first Adam, "a little lower than the angels" and the subject of pain, sorrow, crying, dishonor, corruption and death. 1 Cor. xv. 42-45: Rev. xxi. 4: Psalm viii. 5.

A time comes when through the grace of God and by the Spirit of God the righteous of our race shall exchange "the image of the earthy" for "the image of the heavenly". 1 Cor. xv. 49: Isa lxi. 3.

They will then be equal to the angels of God in nature, and therefore spirits or spiritual bodies, and deathless. Luke xx. 35-36. This great change of vile bodies into angelic bodies is the birth of the Spirit. Jno. iii.6. This takes place at the judgment seat of Christ. 2 Cor. v. 10: Rom. viii. 11.

The spirit of the Father, which quickeneth, will be poured out upon the persons of all whom the Son shall approve, and shall change their mortal bodies to identify with the nature of the Son. They will then be partakers of the God-nature, and therefore Spirit, for "God is Spirit," John vi. 63: Phil. iii. 3-21: and will appear with Christ in glory, and the glory of God will be revealed in them. Col. iii. 4: Rom. viii. 18: Isa. xl. 5. Man was created for this glorious end. But why, it may be asked, was he not created in the angelic nature? Why these weary ages of sin and death before arriving at the perfect state? The Bible answers these questions.

Trial before exaltation is the immutable fiat of the Creator. Heb. v. 8, 9. The elaboration of a world of angelic beings in accordance with this principle requires a preliminary state of probation in which God's intelligent creatures should be compassed about with a sinful nature, and surrounded with an evil order of things to afford scope for the exercise of faith and hope, and for the trial of the former. Hence the "creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope." Rom. viii. 21.

"Now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations, that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than gold that perisheth, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. i. 6-7.

The subjection of man to mortality and all the multiplied evils of an imperfect state, was not of his own choice. After he became a sinner, he was not allowed to exercise his will in the matter.

It was the purpose of God from the beginning to envolve a national system of things pervaded with evil, and out of this to create a spiritual and eternal world. Herein is the reason for the long reign of evil upon the earth. The design of God required that it should be so as a preface to the endless reign of unmixed good which shall succeed this dreary night. The evils then which afflict the children of men is from God. He says, "I create evil." He creates evil that he may bring great and lasting good out of it.

When the sons of God begin the race for the prize of endless life, they discover, by the light of the law of the spirit of life written upon the fleshy tablets of their hearts, through hearing understandingly the word of God as contained in the writing of Moses, the prophets and apostles, that their flesh contains nothing good, that they are full of unholy passions and lusts, which if obeyed, would lead them into disobedience to God, and bring about their rejection by him, and consignment to eternal death. They are also brought to see that the "world lieth in wickedness," and knows not God or the things which belong unto its peace. The knowledge of these things causes those who truly fear God, to circumcise their hearts, to "cease to do evil," to be separate from the world, to trust not in themselves, or in "man whose breath is in his nostrils;" but in the living God who doeth all things right, to keep chained the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, and to live holily, and unblamably, and unreprovably in the sight of God. Their faith being of Abrahamic type, they, like the holder of the promises, "get the victory." Rom. 4, 20-24; 1 John 5. 4. "At the last day," God will save them by his Son from mortality and death, and all the glory of the deliverance will renound to the Great Deliverer. When crowned with glory, honor and immortality they will not have whereof to boast in themselves.

The supreme sentiment of every heart will be that uttered by the angels in the great anthem of praise chanted at the birth of Jesus, in the hearing of humble shepherds, "glory to God in the highest." It is with the society of such persons, and such only, that the holy King of the universe is pleased; for they alone honor him. But had he made man perfect in nature at the beginning, he would have failed to secure this great glory to himself. Man would then have obeyed his creator of necessity as the piston rod obeys the steam; and there would have been no soil in which to plant the seeds of faith and hope, and no arena upon which to work out "an exceeding and eternal weight of glory," and from the creation no spontaneous outflow of gratitude, such as springs forth from pure hearts when deliverance comes after years of patient submission to evil.

In view of God's plan, we can but exclaim with the Apostle Paul, "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out."

RICHMOND, Mich., Feb. 23.

Editor Restitution:

I see in your issue of the 16th, a notice from our beloved Brother Wilcox, and would ask of him how long since you missed the blessed of the Book? You had it while in Michigan a few years ago, and I am sure it was a splendid blade, and it owner wielded it in a masterly way. We are glad to learn that he is still alive and ready for active service. What we want is live, practical men. The times demand active labor. Thinking men are getting tired of old dead theories, and thousands are merging into infidelity and thousands more into spiritualism. As a people are we doing our whole duty? We ought to scatter a thousand tracts where we do ten, and with a proper zeal and determination the circulation of the paper could be doubled in a year.

Brother Myers asks to hear from others in regard to Dr. Thomas' article. I have read it with care, and pronounce it the best and most practical argument on the subject I have ever read, and it ought to go into tract form. It would be just the thing in these days. People will read a tract when they will not even look at a large book.

Let us remember the people are perishing for lack of knowledge, and if we expect to have it said, Come ye blessed of my Father, we must do our whole duty.

WM. B. WOODWARD.

[We think some of printing the above mentioned article in tract form soon.—ED.]

Brevities.

It has been resolved by the Municipality of Rome that the venerable Ghetto, the well-known Jewish quarter, shall be levelled with the ground, in order that a number of stately houses may be erected upon its site. The huge group of sordid buildings thus sentenced to destruction is the most ancient of its kind in southern Europe. The originator of the Ghetto is stated to have been King Herod, who caused a palace to be built near the Pons Janiculensis, for the accommodation of his sons and diplomatic envoys when visiting Rome. When the Apostle Peter and Paul came to the Eternal City to preach the Gospel, they abode in the Ghetto. Ten centuries later it was the residence of the celebrated Israelitish jeweller Elkanan Biodato, who became a Christain, and whose grandson, under the name of Anacleto II., occupied the Papal throne from 1130 to 1138. The Ghetto has long been a physical as well as historical reproach to the Italian capital, and its demolition is one of the many modern reforms and improvements upon which its municipal rulers may unreservedly be congratulated.

The fir tree growths of Puget Sound form one of the wonders of the American world. They average 200 feet in height, and some specimens have been cut that measured 320 feet in length and 12 feet in diameter at the base, with a straight and well proportioned log length of ninety feet to the first limb. The cedar trees are in like proportion, and are most valuable for wooden wares of all kinds, while the firs are the best for spar and ship timber yet found in any country. There are few nations that do not use them in shipbuilding. One-fourth the wealth of San Francisco was culled from the firs of Puget Sound while the Government slept, and to-day all the principal steam mill owners who saw and prepare for market from 100 to 200,000 feet a day to each mill—and there are thirty or more mills—are residents of San Francisco, where they invest their profits, to the great injury of residents of the Sound. There is, apparently, no exhaustion of the timber, and a century will possibly elapse before Puget Sound forests will be cleared of their immense resources of varied tree growths.

A Danish physician, E. Hornemann, has written an interesting essay on the state of man just before death. Much experience and fine insight have led the author to conclusions which can but be grateful to those who stand at a death-bed to those who mourn over a loss, and to those who fear death. Here is one statement out of many: "The feeling of death's approach changes and purifies the inner sense, while the outer sense, including that of bodily pain, is made dull by the gradual decrease of the vital functions." The experience of others corroborates this. A slow death usually prepares the mind of the patient for the final step, and often makes the latter welcome. Hence so few people who are mortally ill are really afraid to die. Persons who have for a time lost the uses of their senses by drowning or suffocation confirm this experience, while persons in perfect health shrink from death as they do from eating an unknown drug or from playing with unknown animals. Death seems hard, chiefly to surviving friends.

THE GREAT PLAGUE OF 1666 IN SCOTLAND.

It was a fearsome time! whole households died, and there were none to bury them, neither would any go near to them; and these houses for the dead were avoided, till first the thatch fell in, then the walls, and then a green knoll covered all, giving them a burial, many, many years after it had been denied them by man. You see there Carradale Glen, where the plantings are, and where the river comes down from the mountains. Well, sir, in that glen, in the Great Plague, there was a man who took the sickness; and, hearing of what I've told you of the people dying in their houses, he feared he should not be buried. So this fear took such a power over him, that he prevailed on some of his friends to dig his grave; and he went and set by, and saw it done. When it was dug, he laid himself in the grave, with his sword by his side and presently he died; and his friends covered his body with the turf. Mac Caog was the man's name; and they will show you the grave to this day. "Cuigh-Mhic-Caogs" is its Gaelic name, which means "the Grave of Mac Caog."—Cuthbert Bede's "Glencreggan."

Rainbow.

GOOD NEWS FROM DR. PETAVEL, OF GENEVA.

MY DEAR SIR,—You will be glad to hear that La Semaine Religieuse, which is the chief evangelical paper of French Switzerland, has just given up the traditional dogma, and advocated Conditional Immortality. Two leaders to that effect have been written by the late editor, Pastor Mittendorff. This friend of mine is now preparing a third article, and has the intention of publishing it with the preceding ones, in the pamphlet form. Not long since, Pastor Edw. Delon, of Praulex, wrote to me that he read a paper upon this subject in the annual meeting of the French evangelical pastors at Marseilles; and that his views, which are nearly ours, were shared by a large majority of his colleagues.

With kind remembrances, believe me to remain, yours very truly,

E. PETAVEL.

DISCUSSION.

MAGY, Miami County, Ind.
March 6, 1881.

Editor Restitution:

I was at Argos, Ind., the evening of March 3d, and heard one T. W. Drennen, a German Baptist, and in his discourse he offered to discuss the points of difference in faith with any man the brethren might select.

By solicitation of the friends, I agreed to debate the following propositions:

Resolved, That trine immersion, as taught by the German Baptists, is essential to Christian baptism.

T. W. Drennen affirms.
W. J. B. Fenimore denies.

Resolved, That in death all things pertaining to man become unconscious.

W. J. B. Fenimore affirms.
T. W. Drennen denies.

Resolved, That the kingdom of God, spoken of by the prophets, Christ and the apostles, is yet future, and will be set up on earth.

W. J. B. Fenimore affirms.
T. W. Drennen denies.

The discussion to take place at Argos, Ind., commencing April 25, '81, at 10 o'clock, A. M., also that these resolutions be published in THE RESTITUTION. Each proposition to be discussed two days.

W. J. B. FENIMORE.

Poetry.

"WHEN THE SON OF MAN COMETH."

Oh! sad is my heart, for the daylight is dying;
Like eagles the cloud sweeps with fire from the sea;
The gull seeketh shelter, the pine trees are sighing,
And all giveth note of the tempest to be.
A spell hath been whispered from cave or from fountain,
The shepherds are sleeping, the sentinels dumb,
The flocks are all scattered on moorland and mountain,
And no one believes the Master will come.

He cometh, but whom shall he find their watch keeping?
Oh, where, where he comes, shall be faith the world o'er?
The rich, every sense in soft luxury steeping;
The poor, scarce repelling the wolf from the door.
Oh, man, and oh, maiden, drop trifling and pleasure,
Oh, hark, while I tell of the sorrows to be
As well might I plead to the path of yon glacier,
Or cry out a warning to wave of the sea.

He comes! when all gathered the tears in his chalice,
The bride and her jewels, his path followed through,
He shall come, he shall come, oh, beloved, to thy lattice,
And thou shalt be watching, thou chosen and true.
The fearful and faithless shall quiver at their waking,
When High toward its zenith the morning shall mount the red sun,
For the door shall be shut, and proud hearts, slight to forsaking,
Shall glean for the grapes when the vintage is done.

Communications.

THE BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE.

P. G. WILLIAMS.

In Mal. iii. 16, it is written, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and thought upon his name."

If we read the next two verses we shall see that this book will be a book of reference "in that day when I make up my jewels," and there are glorious promises made to them who are accounted worthy to have their thoughts and conversation recorded.

It seems that this will be one test of their worthiness. We know that in matters pertaining to this world's affairs, the things which are of the most importance to us are most talked of. We see that even the thoughts of believers have something to do with this book of remembrance, and could we know the thoughts of a man we could easily tell what he had set his heart upon.

There is good reason to believe that many who say they accept the glorious truths of the gospel of the kingdom will have but a slim record in that day.

Brethren this should not be so. God's books are large enough to receive all the godly thoughts and conversation that may come from the lips and hearts of his waiting children. Nay, a record even of their tears is made. Psa. lvi. 8.

We see by Isa. lxv. 6, that there is another kind of record made—evil thoughts and words.

Brethren, which of these books have we the largest record in? Wherever two or more of God's waiting children meet, they should find time to converse freely with each other concerning the things pertaining to the gospel of the kingdom. There are some who refrain from such conversation because they do not "just exactly agree" upon some point of belief.

Now brethren, those very differences of opinion may be made the subject of godly conversation, if you only have the spirit of Christ. Only think, if two of you should take those difficulties to God, in a true Christian spirit, would he not certainly be pleased to see his children seeking after the truth?

There are abundant Scripture proofs that he is not only pleased, but that he will also assist those who, in the right spirit seek after truth. Above all, let us who have in view the coming of Christ and the glorious restitution, not harbor one against the other, the same feelings that our orthodox(?) neighbors have for us.

If any one believes in and delights to talk about the soon coming of our Lord, and the establishment of his kingdom, we should be slow to set him down for a heathen, even if he does not believe all that we do, or if he believes much more than we do. The closer we cling to the rules laid down in God's word, the nearer we will get to that truth.

Many have not yet given up the method of reasoning made use of by many modern teachers, who say, "Yes, I know, it reads that way, but it means so and so."

Speaking for myself, I cordially agree with the brother in Toronto, in regard to those who say that Ezekiel's temple will never be built, and reject the plainest declarations with regard to the character of the next age.

My rule in studying the Scriptures is this, A thousand "seem sos" cannot overthrow one plain statement from God.

"The soul that sinneth it shall die," needs no explanation. If God only has immortality, that settles the fact that no one else has it. If no man has ascended into heaven but Christ, he it so.

If Paul says "He that is dead is freed from sin," who has authority to contradict it?

Brethren, if we cannot speak often one to another, because of the distance that separates us, we can send our thoughts by the swift messengers of these last days, and be assured they will receive attention by the recording angel, in proportion to their merits. Let us not keep the heavenly watcher waiting long weeks or months, with never a word or thought to put on the record, showing our godly fear of the Lord and love for his Son.

If any do not possess the ability to put their thoughts on paper, let them at least send their old papers or tracts, to such as have not the means to obtain them, and by this we do show that our thoughts are in unison with others of our brethren.

Much good may be done in this way, in proof of which I quote from a letter now before me, written by one who was formerly a strict Adventist:

"I am glad always, to get a copy of THE RESTITUTION to read, and must return thanks for last package, and I feel very grateful to you for many such favors. Had it not been for them I would no doubt yet be in darkness in regard to the future age, which now I greatly delight to contemplate, but I do not understand many things that I would like to.

How is it that my brethren can be so blind to these great truths that stand out so prominent in God's word? I cannot account for it."

This brother also adds, "It is pleasant to have a little talk this way, if we cannot see face to face."

Dear brethren, let each one of us try to incur the gratitude of some searcher after truth, and leave a record on the shining page of God's book.

I see so many expressions of a desire to have some one come and preach in new localities, that I have determined to devote a portion of my time in fulfilling these requests. If brethren in Missouri and Kansas will correspond with me on the subject I will do my best to fulfill their wishes.

My address is Bonita, Johnson Co., Kan.

CHRISTIANITY.

RICHARD CORBALEY.

To be a Christain, it is conceded one must be a follower of Christ. This one admission covers the whole ground of faith, hope, and practice. "The Scriptures which were written aforetime, (before the coming of Christ) were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." In the New Testament we learn how to obtain the glorious things God has promised by the Prophets. Christ has said: "I am the way, the truth and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." John xxiv; 6. "For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." John v; 26. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar: because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his son. He that hath the son hath life; and he that hath not the son of God hath not life." 1 John v: 10-12.

These passages prove most conclusively that God is the source of eternal life—that having conferred it upon his son, we must rely upon him, for it at God's appointed time, which is: "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Collos iii, 4.

If Christ did not put on immortality or receive eternal life from God, his Father, until his resurrection from the dead, after he had proven himself worthy by his faith and works, is it not logical that we should follow him? and that we cannot obtain these boons—immortality and eternal life—until the resurrection of the just is positively proven by the Scriptures. 1. Cor. xv. 51-58. If these things are true, they are what will be met at the judgment, and we will be measured by the standard God has erected.

The following objection is sometimes met: "Those who formed character under the law and the prophets could not believe in the things Christ has done, then how can they be saved." Christ said: "I have done none other things than Moses and the prophets said I should do." They could therefore believe the prophecies concerning him, as we can of those things to be done by him in future which to us are prophetic.

The Fathers made known their faith by their works. We are equally under the solemn obligation of making known our faith by our works. Men do show their faith, if they have any, and it is not a difficult matter to determine whether their faith is of God or of men. If they are following the commandments of men there will be divisions, bitter envying and strife. Such "wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish." James iii. 14-15.

Perhaps a very large majority of professors of religion of the present time, believe that "God has neither body or parts. That Jesus Christ is the eternal God." That in reality God took upon himself humanity while here upon earth. That the center of God is every where. That each man, woman and child have each a part of God, and that at the death of the body these parts of God, which they call immortal souls, go to Heaven or Hell to be rewarded or punished according to the character developed in the body. That at the resurrection these souls will come back to earth and be reunited with their bodies and appear for judgment.

If these propositions were true, what a confused condition God has put himself in to, thus divided out, the good portions of himself to be rewarded with eternal life and pleasures forever more, while the other, and it is said the majority of himself, will have eternal life but kept in eternal torture. Who can believe such a dogma? Yet it is believed, and is in substance taught in some of the creeds and confessions of faith. This system in my judgment simply amounts to putting God on probation. But how can such person have a part of God when it is claimed that God has neither body or parts? I confess my inability to reconcile such contradictory propositions.

If man is sent to receive his reward at death, is not a judgment at that time implied? Then why interrupt him by bringing him out of Heaven or Hell, to be judged again and then to be sent back to remain there forever? Is there danger that mistakes may be made at death, and therefore a rehearing is necessary to correct them?

How many there are who disregard the teachings of the Scriptures, that man will be rewarded upon the earth; and because they desire to go to Heaven, therefore they will go there for their reward. They are not content to wait until the Lord comes to deliver them from death. Many do not appear to realize that it is necessary to believe and do what God has promised and commanded.

It is not enough to simply say: "Lord, Lord," but we must do the will of our Heavenly Father.

CHILD TRAINING.

WILEY JONES.

Since the world was made, it has always been the duty of parents to give religious instruction to their children. Such instruction is to the mind, what cultivation is to the ground; hence, we apply the same term to both, and say, "a cultivated mind" or "a cultivated field." This form of speech is very suggestive. Look at an uncultivated piece of land. It grows up in weeds, briers, and thorns;—a malarious jungle in which poisonous reptiles crawl and serpents hiss. It becomes a dark, dark, forest where wild beasts prowl, and howl, and slay one another. But clear away the jangle, let in the light, and bring it under cultivation, and soon it teems with waving grain, delicious fruits, and beautiful flowers to the glory of God and the benefit of man. Parents, which would you rather your children should resemble, the cultivated or the uncultivated field?

Guard against the fatal mistake of supposing that a merely secular or "school house" education is enough. Restricting one to such an education would be like sharpening the teeth and claws of a tiger without taming his native fierceness,—it would be increasing the power without lessening the inclination for mischief. Religious instruction is therefore absolutely essential to temporal and eternal welfare.

I say that imparting such instruction has always been the duty of parents, because it is expressly enjoined in each of the three great dispensations. In the patriarchal dispensation Abraham was commended for commanding "his children" after him. Gen. xviii, 19. In the Mosaic dispensation the Lord said, "these words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." Deut. vi, 6 7. Ah, yes, to diligently teach our children what we believe is a true sign of heartfelt sincerity. So "the unfeigned faith of Lois and Eunice was diligently taught the child Timothy. 2 Tim. i, 5. In the present dispensation Christains are expressly required to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Ephes. vi, 4.

Some are willing to be religious themselves, but seem to care little for the religion of their children. On the first day of the week they will go off to meeting and leave their daughters at home reading novels, and their sons off hunting, fishing, or desecrating the day in some other way. Others want their families religious, but seem to care little for themselves. Having started the children off to meeting or Sunday School, they content themselves with sleeping or strolling about the streets or farm, the balance of the day. Good old Joshua was like none of these, for he said: "As for me and my house we will serve God." Blissful thought—a whole family, with joined hands, pressing forward to the kingdom of God! A fearful contrast was Eli,—when his sons did wickedly he "restrained them not;" or, as the margin says, "frowned not upon them." Who has not seen the power of a father's frown—a mere look—to restrain mischief in his children? Well, Eli would not even take that much trouble, and the result,—a destroying blight followed the family. 1 Sam. iii. 13. Although the father shall not bear the iniquity of the son," Yet he must diligently reprove it betimes. Exo. xxiii, 29; Prov. xiii, 24.

In the fifth and sixth chapters of Ephesians are specified the relative duties of wives and husbands, children and parents, servants and masters. To break any one of these bonds of the social fabric is an offence against the law of God and the well being of human society. It is as much a father's duty to bring up his children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" as it is a husband's duty to love his wife—the same Bible gives both commands. "Train up (margin, catechise) a child in the way he should go." Proverbs xxii, 6. The Hebrew חנך chanak ("train up") signifies, according to Gesenius, "to give to taste, to imbue one with anything, to initiate, to train." When applied to inanimate objects it signifies "to consecrate, to dedicate," as a house before taking possession. In the latter sense it is used in its four other occurrence in the Bible.—Deut. xx, 5: 1 Kings viii, 63: 2 Chron. vii, 5. We are never told to train up a child in the way he should not go; and hence, we should not encourage him to "sow wild oats" in the days of his youth, for then having launched out into the wild oat business he may take middle age to "harrow them in," and old age to reap the bitter first fruits of the dreadful harvest that must be "gathered in eternity." We may be sure that Samuel sowed no "wild oats," and what a noble manhood was his! See 1 Samuel xii, 1-5.

"A wise son maketh a glad father," but "a foolish son is a grief to his father, and bitterness to her that bare him." Prov. x, 1: xvii, 25. As the twig is bent the tree is inclined. Therefore teach your children while their minds are impressible like the Summer stream that yields with crystal spray to the pressure of a sparrow's wing, and before their hearts are chilled by the frosts of age like the wintry torrent whose icy coat of mail will not yield even to the iron-bound wheel of a loaded wagon.

The fact that children have such retentive memories ought to encourage parents to instruct them. Many very old people can tell you that they have a more distinct recollection of things that occured in their early life than in middle age. On this point Irenaeus who flourished about A. D. 175 gives, according to Eusebius, an interesting testimony. He says, "I have a more vivid recollection of what occurred while I was yet a boy than of recent events; so that I can even describe the place where the blessed Polycarp used to sit and discourse—his going out, too and his coming in—his general mode of life and personal appearance, together with the discourses which he delivered to the people; also how he would speak of his familiar intercourse with John, and with the rest of those who had seen the Lord; and how he would call their words to remembrance. Those things, through God's mercy which was upon me, I then listened to attentively, and treasured them up not on paper, but in my heart; and am continually, by God's grace, revolving these things accurately in my mind."

Some years ago it was reported in the newspapers that a military company had lately returned from an expedition against the Indians and had brought with them a number of released captives that had for years been kept as prisoners among the savages. On arriving at a frontier village the soldiers called upon persons whose children had been carried off to come and claim them. One of the villagers, a bereaved and sorrowing mother whose dear little girl had been carried off by an Indian foray years before, went to the camp in hopes of finding her child there. But among them all she could not recognize her lost child. At last, as a final test, she began to sing a lullaby that she had often sung to her child before it was captured. She had sung but a few notes when a tall girl rushed out of the crowd and threw herself, sobbing, into the singer's arms exclaiming, "my mother!"

Perhaps you may die while your children are young, and they may live to be men and women greatly changed: and who knows but that the first clue by which you will recognize them at the resurrection of the just will be some verse of the Bible or some boy sentiment that you taught them to lisp while boys and girls? May the Lord help us to do our whole duty to the children. Amen.

"ALL IS VANITY."

A. B. WISE.

How often these words force themselves home to our hearts with significant power, laying bare to us the utter weakness of our humanity. We resolve and perform not. We are disturbed, wearied, and even mortified at our want of devotion to the cause of Christ. We charge ourselves with ingratitude and folly, and resolve to set our house in order and go forth to labor for the Lord counting no sacrifice too great for the obtaining of the enduring riches. We get a glimpse of the glory beyond and for the moment lose sight of the cares of the world, but alas, to-morrow finds us loaded again with the burden of vanity, and running after the things that perish, and the bread which sustaineth not. Oh, for a deeper realization of the nature, with its glorious events, upon our minds, that the duties and obligations of life might be constantly stamped upon our hearts with such potency and brightness as to continually provoke us to love and good works. Grant unto us, O our Father, strength to overcome the world; and strength to follow in the steps of the lovely Redeemer. All else is vanity and ends in disappointment. But to earnestly follow after righteousness is to receive persecution indeed in this life; but in the world to come everlasting life and blessedness.

Exegetical.

But we are citizens of heaven; whence indeed we are expecting a deliverer, our Lord Jesus Christ, who will change the vile body of ours into the form of his glorious body, according to that efficacy, by which he is able even to make all things subject to himself. Phil. iii. 20, 21.
Wakefield's Translation.

That the Greek word politeuma—politeuma—should be translated citizenship is according to the opinion of several eminent scholars and critics. Beza thus translates verse 20 into Latin: "Nos autem ut municipes coelorum nos gerimus; unde etiam Servatorem expectamus, Dominum Jesum Christum."

This Anglicised is, "Let us, however conduct ourselves as citizens of heaven; from whence also we are expecting the Deliverer, the Lord Jesus Christ."

Bloomfield says that many modern commentators explain politeuma as meaning citizenship; while some make it mean community, or political society.

Bloomfield also adds: "The two last mentioned senses are most suitable to the context and the doctrine of the New Testament, and, indeed they merge into each other."

Beza translates verse 21 into Latin: "Qui transfiguravit corpus humile, ut conforme fiat ejus corpori glorioso, pro efficacitate qua potest etiam subjicere sibi omnia."

This in English is: "Who will transfigure our humiliated body, that he may make it conformable to his own glorified body by that powerful energy through which he is able to subject even all things to himself."

Through sin the once honorable beautiful human form, as it emanated from the hands of the Creator in its excellency and perfection, has become humiliated, and debased from its pristine dignity in the scale of being.

In the marred and sin-blurred picture, all resemblance to the gloriously modeled image of the Divine Former has become lost. The re-juvenating fruit of the life-giving tree has been withdrawn from earth, and disease-wasting decay finally brings down the shattered form, of what once was little less than angelic, to the corruptions of death and the grave. "It is sown in dishonor." But the bodies of the saints are to be reorganised. In the dissolving crucible of the tomb all the dross is to be consumed, and the now molded forms are to be transformed into the image of the heavenly. The resurrection process glorifies the humiliated.

As an illustration of the deep significancy of the original text, we subjoin the following: "Who shall change our vile body."

It is told of Archbishop Whateley that when he was on his death bed his chaplain tried to comfort him with these words, "Who shall change our vile body." "Read it," said the dying theologian. "as the apostle wrote it." The chaplain read in the Greek where the words are literally, "Who shall change the body of our humiliation." "Ah, that is it," said Dr. Whateley, "that is it! Nothing which God made is vile."

God, who, through the processes of natural law, transfigures the material of the lark, beetle, charcoal into the glorified precious diamond, will transfigure the precious dust of his saints into the indescribably glorious image of his own Son as it appeared, in heavenly splendors, on the Mount, and to the beloved John, in the isle of Patmos, through the processes of the higher spiritual laws of existence.

Selections.

Prophetic Times.

THE ORIGINAL GRANT TO THE JEWS TO BE POSSESSED BY THEM, ACCORDING TO THE COVENANT MADE TO ABRAHAM, ISAAC, AND JACOB.

S. BONHOMME.

The territorial extent of the kingdom promised to Israel, in round numbers, is in breadth 600 miles, which multiplied by its length, 590 miles, gives an area of 200,000 square miles, and is more than that of any kingdom or empire of Europe, Russia alone excepted. The great nations are brought down from their boasting when it is seen that a region half the extent of any of them would need to be added to its size before it would equal in superficial extent that land which the Lord gave to the seed of Israel. It exceeds in the aggregate amount of square miles, the territories of ten kingdoms in Europe, Prussia, Belgium, Bavaria, the Netherlands, Saxony, Hanover, Wurtemberg, Denmark, Sardinia, and Greece, and its relative proportion to Great Britain and Ireland is 309 to 118, or more than two and a half to one. Were the average breadth to be reckoned 500 instead of the medium 600, which, from the inequality of the sides may be nearer the truth, the superficial extent would still exceed that of the largest kingdom of Europe. But Israel, extensive as are its bounds, is not destined to stand alone. His mighty adversaries of old shall be his servants.

No prince but of Israel shall rule in Egypt or Assyria.

The former country will add to Israel's dominion, or subservient domain, an area of 15,000 square miles. The latter including Mesopotamia, stretching beyond the Tigris as far as the mountains of Media, (Gibbon's History, Vol. IV, p. 166.) and from the mountains of Armenia to the Persian Gulf, leaves no region that shall not own immediate fealty to the kingdom of Israel, from the eastern shores of the Mediterranean to the borders of Persia, and the vicinity of the Caspian. Such is the power of the word of God; such the liberality of his gifts to the people whom he chose, were they his own by another covenant than that which they have broken; and such, in topographical relations alone, is the provision that is made, as thus revealed, for the completion of the promise, that Israel shall finally be a blessing in the midst of the earth. Thus saith the Lord, "It shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honor before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them; and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it." Jeremiah xxxiii. 9. Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains and to the hills, to the rivers and to the valleys, to the desolate waters, and to the cities that are forsaken. But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come. Ezekiel xxxvi. 4-8.

The truest help which one can render to a man, who has any of the inevitable burdens of life to carry, is not to take his burden off; but to call out his best strength that he may be able to bear it.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PEARLS. Suitable for Wide Distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 20,000 Baptists, in 1693. 3. Immateriality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 5c., or assorted packages of 100, 33c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 20c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.
The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.
Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the uses of these terms, in wh: the Theological and Bible use.
Human Government a Failure. By A. H. Macgregor.
Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful exposition of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"
Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.
What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.
The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Jaiss.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 35 for 25c.
Is it Essential to Believe in the Reality of Jesus? B. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 12 for 50c.
Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. P. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Immortality Brought to Light. The grand era, ify of redemption. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c. or 25 for $1.
The New Birth. Josiah Peirce.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in Scriptural language and apt Bible quotations.
Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Is it the thing to elevate creature love.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 8 for 30c. or 25 for $1.
Dan Evans, or the Heathen Outcast. Teaches the true nature of Christ's kingdom.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 12 for $1.
Evangelium concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.
The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii, 20.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The est, &c., of the Gospel, about to be harmony with Bible teaching. 64 pages, price 10c.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiii. 36 pages, price 10c.
Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 80 pages, price 15c.
The Infidel Silenced by Its most irrefutable witness. W. H. Wilson. 64 pages, price 30c.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned Ecclesiastics, critics, Lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 44 pages, price 20c.
Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of Infidel charges. Paper 30c.
Discussion on the State of the Dead, between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational Minister, and W. Kelloway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious of existence, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 60c., paper 30c.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 300 pages, cloth $1.25.
The Destiny of Russia, as Foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future governments and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 184 pages, cloth 75c. paper 50c.
Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.00.
God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 278 pages. Plain cloth, binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.25; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post o. fice money order or registered letter, to
WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

Pictorial Description
—OF THE—
Tabernacle in the Wilderness.
ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for it.

YOUNG'S Bible Concordance.

ONLY REVISED AUTHORIZED EDITION.

Containing every word in Alphabetical Order, with the Literal Meaning of Each, and its Pronunciation. Exhibiting about 311,000 References, marking 30,000 various readings in the New Testament. Designed for the simplest reader of the English Bible. By ROBERT YOUNG, LL.D. Printed on heavy paper, with wide margins. One large volume (1,050 pp.). cloth, $6.00. Same bound in sheep, $4.00. Same in French Im. morocco $6.00.

POSTAGE FREE.

SPURGEON says: "Cruden's is child's play compared with this gigantic production."

JOHN HALL, D.D., says: "Dr. Robert Young's Analytical Concordance is worthy the lifetime of labor he has spent upon it. I deeply regret that its natural and just expectation of some return from its sale on this side the ocean is untenable, and I hope the sense of justice to a most painstaking author will lead to the choice by many purchasers of the edition which, for 'every appearance—that of Messrs. I. K. Funk & Co., with whom Dr. Young co-operates in bringing out the best edition."

☞ Beware of buying any copy which has not printed on the title page the words, "Authorized Edition," and "Revised Edition." All others are unauthorized and imperfect. Sole Agents for America, I. K. Funk & Co. 10 & 12 Dey St. N. Y.

Poetry.

THE MEETING PLACE.

HORATIUS BONAR.

Where the faded flower shall freshen,
Freshen never more to fade;
Where the shaded sky shall brighten,
Brighten never more to shade;
Where the sun-blaze never scorches,
Where the star-beams cease to chill,
Where no tempest stirs the arbors
Of the wood, or wave, or hill;
Where the morn shall wake in gladness,
And the even lay prolong;
Where the day-light dies in fragrance
'Mid the burst of holy song—
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest.

Where no shadow shall be builder,
Where life's vain parade is o'er,
Where the sleep of sin is broken,
And the dreamer, dreams no more;
Where the bond is never severed—
Partings, claspings, sobs, no moan,
Mid-night waking, twilight weeping,
Heavy noon-tide, all are done;
Where the child has found its mother,
Where the mother finds her child,
Where dear families are gathered
That were scattered on the wild—
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest.

Where the hidden wound is healed,
Where the blighted life reblooms,
Where the smitten heart the freshness
Of its buoyant youth resumes;
Where the love that here we lavish
On the withering leaves of time,
Shall have fadeless flowers to fix on
In an ever spring-bright clime:
Where we find the joy of loving,
As we never loved before;
Loving on, unwearied, unhindered,
Loving once and evermore—
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest.

Where a blighted world shall brighten
Underneath a bluer sphere,
And a softer, gentler sunshine,
Shed its healing splendor here;
Where earth's barren vales shall blossom,
Putting on their robe of green,
And a purer, fairer Eden
Be where only wastes were seen;
Where a King, in kingly glory,
Such as earth has never known,
Shall assume the righteous sceptre,
Claim and wear the heavenly crown—
Brother, we shall meet and rest
'Mid the holy and the blest.

Communications.

SHORT AND SHARP.

The Theme is Broad, Deep, and Dispensational.

J. B. COOK.

The great question with us all is, How shall a man be just with God? It must be by law or gospel—one or the other.

The law saith, He that doeth these things shall live by them. But as "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God," mercy saith, "The word is nigh thee, the word of faith we preach—if thou shalt believe in Jesus and his resurrection, thou shalt be saved." Rom. x. 5–13.

The revelation of the Law, by Moses, was but the example and shadow of heavenly things. Heb. viii. 6, 6. It saved no soul, but pointed forward to the substance, and reality, in Christ and his kingdom.

Moses, faithful as a servant, made "the Sabbath" the main center of its circle of priestly service. As the hub is essential to its place in the wheel, so "the seventh day" was to the Jewish routine and ritual. The service was due only on that day. Then, all else, even in thought, gave way to its claims from God.

Two lambs extra, besides the two for the daily offering, were of primal importance. Num. xxviii. 9, 10.

Nay, more; Israel's food, the manna, was dispensed or withheld, preserved or corrupted, to enforce the seventh day ritual over eight thousand times. Thus the makeup of that shadow of heavenly things centered in the seventh day.

It was the memorial of creation, and a shadowy finger point toward the millenial sabbath, and all things made new. Heb. iv. 1–9.

Thus "known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." Acts xv. 18.

Hence he adapts his dispensations to the conditions and possibilities of his people.

The Lord's prayer is in the line of the pattern shown to Moses in the Mount. For his will shall yet be done in earth as it is done in heaven. Amen.

Hence, as Adam, Israel, and all, have failed to attain righteousness by law—the law being weak through the flesh—God has sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, to condemn sin in the flesh; and inaugurate the new and living way, back to God.

Therefore it is not now the Sabbath, but Jesus and the resurrection! The righteousness of faith (in what God in Christ has done, and is about to do) unto all and upon all who believe. Rom. iii. 21, etc.

Thus we own the law. It fills its place in the evolution of the ages. It shows our fallen and enfeebled state. But by the gospel law of life in Christ we come to God, by faith in him; by whom alone the law has been fulfilled, and who is made of God unto us who believe, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption; that we may glory only in the Lord. 1 Cor. i. 30.

We are complete in him. Col. ii. 10–17.

Now, who, with one touch of gospel grace, can turn back to that which has always incurred the curse? Gal. iii. 10; Jer. xi. 3.

Is there either law or gospel for turning away from the Son over his own house, back 1000 years to Moses, the servant of a foregoing age? Heb. iii. 5, 6.

Is there a possibility of success in the attempt to put together, what God has put so far asunder?

Did not God forbid divers things—mingled seed, etc., Lev. xix. 19 and do not these prohibitions point to the single eye—the whole heart—for the Lord?

Those who desire to be under law should hear the law! It reduced Israel to the state of Hagar, the bond-woman; and outcast, at that! Nay, more; it condemned to death even Moses, its mediator. Furthermore, it put to death Aaron, its own high priest.

Now, dear brother, can the law, in part and disobeyed, even in that, Num. xxviii. 9, 10, serve you better than it did Moses and Aaron?

Has the sabbatic law a promise for you or me, nay way? Are not all the promises in Christ, yea and amen to the glory of God?

Can you join the Pharisees against Christ as to the Sabbath? in tempting God, and urging the yoke of bondage, from which he, in Christ, came to redeem them? Mat. xii. 1–17; Acts xv. 10–29.

Did not our great apostle repel these Pharisees, as did Jesus, only more so? 1 Thes. ii. 15. Who is on the Lord's side? Who?

The choice lies between forgiveness of sins, by sovereign grace, or the perdition of ungodly men. Acts xiii. 38; 2 Pet. iii. 7

Let us choose life, believe in Jesus' way and work, be baptized in his blessed name, and so be saved with the salvation of God.

REVIEW OF COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

STEPHEN'S CITY, Va.
March 3. 1881.

Brother Chaplin:

As the best method of giving effect to the recommendation of Brother J. T. Smith, of Collinwood, Ohio, I send herewith his letter.

The MS. "Reply etc." is now ready for the press, and makes a pamphlet with cover of about 150 printed pages. From the best data I can get from publishers, about $300 will be needed to publish an edition of 1000 copies—from electrotype plates—each succeeding 1000 will cost $110.

If successful in the sale of the first thousand, subsequent editions can be brought out and will repay the costs and yield some profit.

If it is not too much trespass on your time to make out and publish a list of brethren at prominent points to act as agents to collect and forward the contributions that may be made on or before the 1st of April, I should be greatly obliged.

I do not know a great many brethren personally, but would suggest the names of some, viz:

Geo. W. Cherry, Baltimore, Md.
J. R. Dull and G. F. Work, Philadelphia, Pa.
Brother Hay and Geo. Elton, Cleveland, Ohio.
Dr. J. T. Smith, Collinswood, O.
Jno. Boggs, Washington City.
James Lufford, Richmond, Va.
Editors of the Christian Chiliast, Wilmington, Del.
P. A. Blackwell and W. I. Crockett, Henderson, Ky.
James Forman and Geo. W. Young, Brooklyn, N. Y.
J. C. Woodruff, Newark, N. J.
Wiley Jones, Norfolk, Va.
Lemuel Edwards, Lanesville, Va.
M. S. Driggs, 728 South street, New York.
W. C. Taylor, 80 Chandler street, Boston.

Also all brethren elsewhere who may be willing to act.

You will see I have no names from the west or far south or north. Not being personally known to Brethren Reed, Wilson, Stephenson, Myers, and other prominent brethren out west, and being ignorant of their address, I must ask you to invite their co-operation and help.

Brother Driggins, of your state, should be on the list, and all brethren, without being specially named are requested to act. As I am pleading "a common cause" I may invite their aid.

The work is written in a popular style, free from all bad spirit, simple in language, but direct, forcible and as pointed as I could make, and I think will sell freely, with God's blessing.

Faithfully yours,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

COLLINSWOOD, Ohio,
February 27, 1881.

Dear Brother Magruder:

In the last issue of THE RESTITUTION, I read with pleasure the announcement that you had prepared and had nearly ready for publication, an answer to Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture "What shall I do to be saved?" I do hope the means necessary to publish will be promptly forthcoming. I will try to help a little and you will hear from me again.

In the meantime however, would it not be well to propose, through THE RESTITUTION, some method or plan of operating. Many if solicited to do so would give a small amount, who will not feel like, or will not take the trouble to send that small amount to you.

Now if some one could be named in every locality where there are a considerable number of brethren, to solicit, collect and forward for that locality or district, it would answer. In order that there may be some uniformity of action, a time should be fixed, at which agents acting as above should report the result of their efforts to you.

Perhaps the Editor of THE RESTITUTION, being more widely acquainted than any one else who would feel any interest in the matter, would consent to name some one in each important locality, with the request that they take the matter in hand.

I merely suggest. I am very anxious that the money should be raised, and believe it can be, if the right method is adopted. All good Christians ought to feel it a privilege, and it certainly is a duty, to come to the rescue and defend the Bible against the bold defamer.

I am so glad you have taken the matter in hand. I feel assured it will be well done.

May the Lord preserve you, and bless the effort you are making in behalf of the Truth.

I am most faithfully your friend and brother.

J. T. SMITH.

Selections.

CHICAGO, Mar. 6, 1881.

Dear Bro. Chaplin:

I clip from to-day's Tribune an account of the radical change in Dr. Wilson's views.

It shows that another thinking man has broken the creed power, so far as the nature of man is concerned.

May he go on in the path of honest investigation, which he has bravely chosen, and may other glorious truths find a permanent lodging place in his heart and mind.

Your Sister hoping for life.
LIZZIE A. REED.

THE IMPENITENT'S DESTINY.

THE DOCTRINE OF ANNIHILATION TAUGHT BY A REFORMED EPISCOPAL MINISTER.

Much interest has been excited among the attendants of St. John's Reform Episcopal Church in this city by a series of sermons by the Rector, the Rev. J. D. Wilson, taking bold ground against the doctrine of eternal punishment. Mr. Wilson is recognized as one of the ablest thinkers in the Chicago pulpit, and his expressions on this subject have made some stir among his brother clergymen, some of whom look upon them as heterodox and dangerous, while others admit that they have long privately held similar views. A reporter of The Tribune has obtained from Mr. Wilson the following brief abstract of his argument, which in his sermons was fortified by numerous proofs from Scripture as well as from reason. He was very reluctant to express his views for publication, having a strong dislike to anything like notoriety or sensationalism, but had no hesitation in affirming his convictions. He said:

I hold the view commonly called "conditional immortality,"—i. e., eternal life exists only in union with Jesus Christ. The argument will be from reason and Scripture.

I. Reason—First—There is a difference between right and wrong believers and sin. They ought to be viewed differently by God and treated accordingly.

Second—It is evident that in the present state of things vice is not always punished nor virtue always rewarded. Hence a rectification is to be looked for,—a time of retribution.

Third—In what will that retribution consist? I answer: in such punishment as shall be just and right, ending with extinction. Eternal torment is not just. It is excessive, and a just God cannot inflict it. Moreover, eternal torment implies eternal sinning, and eternal sinning involves a defeat of God. It would make the Devil as powerful as God, and virtually says there are two Gods, one of evil and one of good.

Fourth—All existing life in plants and animals shows that all such life has Possibilities, but the attainment of those possibilities does not always follow. All blossoms are possible fruits, but only some come to fruition. All eggs are possible animals, but only some attain their destiny. So all men are possible immortals, but some fail to reach immortality.

Fifth—We cannot by reason prove man immortal; the best we can do is to prove that he is capable of immortality.

II. Revelation—But reason cannot prove much one way or the other. God knows what is before us, and has told us all we need to know. Hence we are to look to the Bible for satisfactory information.

First—The Bible uniformly promises life only to the righteous.

"This is life eternal to know the only true God and Jesus."

"He that hath the Son hath life."

"He that believeth on the Son hath life."

"Wages of sin is death; gift of God is eternal life." etc., etc.

Second—The doom of the wicked is "destruction," "perdition," "everlasting death," "second death," "to be burned up," "make as though had not been," "to vanish," etc.

No deviation from these distinctions can be found anywhere in the Bible. Some texts however need attention.

Matt. xxv., last verse: "These . . . to everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

Here "punishment" is shown to be just as long as "life,"—i. e., eternal. But the punishment is destruction, which is complete, entire, final, and without remedy.

If it be objected that destruction is not punishment, I answer that the Bible says it is. "They shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," etc.

If it be objected again that destruction cannot be properly called everlasting, I answer the Bible calls it so. "They shall be punished with everlasting destruction." etc.

Mark ix. 42: "Unquenchable fire." This means fire which cannot be put out till it does its work,—vide Isaiah xxxiv. 10; Jer. xvii. 27; Ezek. xx. 47. Rev. xiv. 10. "Smoke going up forever." This refers to some punishment upon the Beast before the Judgment Day, and means total destruction. Rev. xx. 10: "Tormented for ever and ever." This is the Devil, not men.

Revelation xx. 12, and following verses, portrays judgment. All who are not admitted to life are burnt up, ended, destroyed. No sin is left anywhere in God's universe. God becomes all in all.

If it be objected that the soul cannot be destroyed, I answer: "Fear him which can destroy both soul and body in hell."

This is a very brief and very bold statement, but to a diligent student of the Bible, who compares text with text, it will show that from the day that death was threatened to the sinning Adam the Bible is uniform in presenting the truth. John iii. 36: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life."

I think that the notion of the necessary immortality of souls came into the Church from Paganism through Neo-Platonism in the third century.

[Many thanks to Br. Reed for the above.—ED.]

HOW TO BREAK DOWN A CHURCH.

Sinful man needs no instruction in the way of evil, but it is sometimes well to set forth the course of evil in a way of warning. The following are the rules by which many have acted in successfully hindering the work of the Church:

1. Stay away from the ordinances of public worship as frequently as possible. Such a course will be sure to discourage the pastor and not unfrequently be followed by others to follow.

2. Do not go to the prayer meetings. It will be easy to find an excuse for neglecting this duty. Say that your health does not permit, or that your business is urgent, or that the prayer-meeting is very cold and dull, and of no profit to you.

3. Go to other churches frequently, and be sure to tell the members of your own how much better affairs are managed elsewhere. Be enthusiastic about all services except those of your own church.

4. Keep saying how cold and unsocial the members of your own church are. Especially, complain about the spiritual deadness of the church. This will give an appearance of great piety on your part, while it will tend to discourage others. Even if it is not so, others will soon believe it.

5. Always go home finding fault with the sermon. Tear it to pieces while at your dinner. In this way you can influence the minds of the rest of the family, and make them also dissatisfied.

6. Get up a quarrel with the pastor or some of the members. You can easily find occasion for offense.

These rules are all easy to practice. It requires no piety nor any great amount of brains to execute them, but remember in keeping them you are doing the devil's own work.

Youths' Column.

Wide Awake.

Why Little Birds Hop and other Birds Walk.

L. J. BATES.

A little bird sat on a twig of a tree,
As singing and singing as glad as could be,
And shaking his tail, and smoothing his dress,
And having such fun as you never could guess.

And when he had finished his gay little song,
He flew down in the street, and went hopping along.
This way and that way with both little feet,
While his sharp little eyes looked for something to eat.

A little boy said to him: "Little bird, stop!
And tell me the reason you go with a hop.
Why don't you walk, as boys do, and men,
One foot at a time, like a horse or a hen?

How queer it would look if, when you go out,
You should see little boys go jumping about
Like you, little bird! And you don't know what fun
It is to be able to walk and to run."

Then the little bird went with a hop, hop, hop,
As he laughed and he laughed as he never would stop;
And he said: "Little boy, there are some birds that talk,
And some birds that hop, and some birds that walk.

Use your eyes, little boy; watch closely and see
What little birds hop, both feet, just like me.
And what little birds walk, like the duck and the hen,
And when you know that you'll know more than some men.

Every bird that can scratch in the dirt can walk;
Every bird that can wade in the water can walk;
Every bird that has claws to catch prey with can walk;
One foot at a time—that is why they can walk.

But most little birds who can sing you a song
Are so small that their legs are not very strong
To scratch with, or wade with, or catch things—that's why
They hop with both feet.* Little boy, good-bye."

*The exceptions to the above rule are rare. The rule is generally correct, and so simple as to be easily remembered.

Childlike.

"Very often we find true wisdom in the utterances of even the youngest children. You have all noticed or heard of illustrations in your own experience. One little girl six years old was on a visit to her grandfather, who was a New England divine, celebrated for his logical powers. 'Only think, grandpa, what Uncle Robert says!' 'What does he say, my dear?' 'Why, he says the moon is made of green cheese. It isn't at all, is it? 'Well, child, suppose you find out for yourself.' 'How can I, grandpa?' 'Get your Bible, and see what it says.' 'Where shall I begin.' 'Begin at the beginning.' The child sat down to read the Bible. Before she got more than half through the second chapter of Genesis, and had read about the creation of the stars and the animals, she came back to her grandfather, eyes all bright with the excitement of the discovery. 'I've found, granpa! it isn't true; for God made the moon before he made any cows!' She was certainly a 'chip off the old block.'"

The Child-Dyke.

Holland is a beautiful country, full of green fields, with cattle and sheep grazing in the pastures; but there are few trees and no hills to be seen.

The ground is so flat and low that two or three times the sea has rushed in over parts of it, and destroyed whole towns. In one of these floods, about two hundred years ago, more than twenty thousand people were drowned. In some of the towns that were flooded, not a creature survived.

A large part of the water that came in at the time of that flood still remains. It is known as "The Mass," and in one part of it there is a little green island—a part of an old dyke or dam—which is called the "kinder-dyke," or child-dyke, and it got its name in this way:

The waters rushed in over one of the little Friesland villages, and no one had any warning. In one of the houses there lay a child asleep in its cradle—an old fashioned cradle, made tight and strong of good stout wood.

By the side of the cradle lay the old cat, baby's friend, probably purring away as comfortably as possible. In came the waters with a fearful roar. The old cat, in her fright, jumped into the cradle with the baby, who slept through all the turmoil as quietly as ever. The house was torn from its foundations and broken in pieces. But the little cradle floated out on the angry sea in that dark night, bearing safely its precious burden.

When morning came there was nothing to be seen of the village and green meadows. All was water. Hundreds of people were out in boats, trying to save as many lives as possible; and on this little bit of an island what do you think they found? Why, that same old cradle, with the baby asleep in it, and the old cat curled up at her feet, all safe and sound!

Where the little voyagers came from, and to whom they belonged, no one could tell. But, in memory of them, this little island was called "kinder-dyke"—child-dyke—and it goes by that name to this day; and this story is told to thousands of little people all over Holland as a remarkable instance of God's providence.

What became of this little child when it grew up we do not know. It would be interesting, no doubt, to our young readers to know for what it was thus preserved by God's care, but we have no record.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 7.

STORY OF SAUL AND DAVID—ISREAL'S KINGDOM OVERTURNED.

The Israelites lived in the land of Canaan a long time without a King. Joshua judged them until he died, and other judges followed him. When they had no judge, they went to worshiping the idols of the nations around them, and doing many things that displeased the Lord. Then, he would let the wicked Philistines trouble them, take away their cities, and a great deal of their money.

But when they remembered and cried to Him, he would send them another judge and deliver them out of the Enemy's hands.

When they saw that other nations had Kings, they wanted one to. God was their King, but they wanted one that they could see:—an earthly King.

He told them that it would bring sorrow and trouble upon them, but they kept on asking until he gave them Saul—a man head and shoulders taller than any of his fellows. Saul seemed afraid to take such an exalted place for he hid himself among some goods in a tent, but he was brought out and made King.

For a time he did well. Then God told him not to do something, he did it, and when he said "Saul you must kill some wicked people, and all the animals they own," he wouldn't mind. So the Lord rejected him from being King, and a little shepherd boy named David, who wasn't afraid of lions, or bears, nor of the great boasting giant Goliath, was chosen King.

After David had taken the Kingdom the Lord sent His prophet Nathan to tell him that he was going to give him a Son, to sit upon his throne forever, and that his throne and Kingdom should be established forever.

In the Psalms you will find David looking down to the time when this that Nathan had told him would come to pass.

He pictures the Kings of earth setting themselves up against God's anointed King, and God telling them, that this anointed one, was "his Son," that it was he who had set that Son upon his holy hill of Zion, and that in spite of them and all their armies, "the heathen would be given to him for his inheritance," and "the uttermost part of the earth for his possession," that the kingdom was his, and that he would be governor among the nations.

Now do you think we can find out who this Son of David is? Who it is, that is to have David's throne and kingdom forever? Who it is that is to have all the earth for his possession? Who it is that is said to be "God's King" and "his Son?"

It looks a great deal as if it might be the same Son that was promised to Abraham, does it not?

Well, David died, and the Israelites had a great many kings but none of them lived forever, they all died. By and by the people got to be so wicked, that they would not listen to the prophets that God sent to them. He overturned their kingdom, telling them that it should be no more a kingdom, till the king should come, to whom he had promised to give it. It belonged to him, and he only should have it.

The enemies of the Jews carried many of them far away from their beautiful homes. Their cities were desolated, and at last the wicked Romans came and ruled over them, and made them do over so many things that they disliked to do.

But they had read about the child that God had promised to Abraham and to David, to whom their kingdom was to be given forever, and they were looking for him to come.

They thought that if he should come all their dead friends would be made alive,—the good to live forever,—that the cruel Roman governor would be driven away, and David's throne be again set up in its old place. No more to be torn down, that his kingdom would reach and take in all the kingdoms of all other kings, that he would give them eternal life, and that they, with him would reign forever. In our next, we will tell you about the birth of Jesus.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

TO THE YOUTH.

No. 4.

Dear Children:—When Noah had finished building the ark according to the directions God had given him, the beasts and birds and creeping things went into it. Noah and his family went into it also, and God shut them all in, while the wicked people were laughing at them, not believing that God would send a flood upon them. But it soon began to rain, and it rained forty days and forty nights, until the tops of the highest mountains were covered, and all trees, so that there was no place for the wicked to escape, and so they were all drowned. But Noah and his family, who believed God, were safely sailing round in the ark.

When the waters were all dried up and the earth was fit for man to live on, God told Noah to leave the ark.

When he came out he built an altar to the Lord, and offered sacrifice, and thanked God for saving him and his family.

The Lord then told Noah that he would never again send another flood upon the earth to drown every body, and as a sign he gave the beautiful rainbow.

When we look at the rainbow we feel safe, no matter how hard it rains, because we see in it the promise of God that he will not drown the world anymore. How good and loving of God to give us such a token!

Now there were only eight persons in the whole world:—Noah and his three sons—Shem, Ham, and Japheth—and their four wives. From Shem descended Abram, of whom we will next write.

GRANDMA.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH

—REVISED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—BY BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear, word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 924 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an Appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 60c. cloth $0c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885.

—BY M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher, 72 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—BY A. J. EICHANER.—

A new Israel, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combating the enemy. Twenty pages, priced 5c., 10 for 40c., or 30 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—BY J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 12 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

A Letter to a Friend!

—BY MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DUNCGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. R. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
B. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
L. G. ROBERTS.

B. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. SPEDDINGSON, R. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, C. M. MYERS,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Provocatives Article

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 23, 1881. NO. 12.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Pliny's Letter Continued. Trajan's Rescript. Remarks on the Edict. Constantine's Rescript. Its Leading Features--Supplementary Remarks. The Futurist Expositors. The Lord's Day examined--Lord's Day and "Day of the Lord" not the same in meaning.

No. 61.

J. P. WEETHEE.

THE EMPEROR'S RESCRIPT.

"Trajan to Pliny wisheth health and happiness. You have taken the right method, my Pliny, in your proceedings with those who have been brought before you as Christians; for it is impossible to establish any one rule that shall hold universally. They are not to be sought for. If any are brought before you, and are convicted, they ought to be punished. However, he that denies his being a Christian, and makes it evident in fact, that is, by supplicating the gods, though he be suspected to have been so formerly, let him be pardoned upon repentance. But in no case, of any crime whatever, may a bill of information be received without being signed by him who presents it; for that would be a dangerous precedent, and unworthy of my government."

The reader now has in full, the original persecuting edict. He has also in Pliny's letter, his mode of dealing with Christians; also the characters of these early Christians. It must be admitted that their standard of Christian deportment was far higher than that of popular Christianity of the 19th century.

In Trajan's edict there is nothing apparently very cruel, and yet it was a general license of every species of persecution, of every kind of punishment. To say, I am a Christian, was in the opinion of the emperor, and his Pagan subjects, a crime worthy of death. All the question put by Pliny was, Are you a Christian? If you are, then as a necessary consequence, you are not fit to live.

Other edicts were passed, regulating other matters connected with Christianity; still Trajan's rescript was the general law. It did not define the mode nor the duration of punishment; these were left to the various governors of the Roman provinces.

What were some of the punishments that became popular under this law? The following list will give the reader an idea of Christian suffering under the Pagan priesthood:

"They were scourged to death, had their flesh torn off with pincers, and mangled with broken pots; were cast to lions, tigers, and other wild beasts; were burnt, beheaded, crucified, thrown into the sea, torn in pieces by the distorted boughs of trees, roasted by gentle fires, and holes made in their bodies for melted lead to be poured into their bodies."

Some were thrown to wild beasts, then dispatched with the sword.

These terrible persecutions prevented the revelation of the man of sin, since it held in check the Papal hierarchy, or the apostate priesthood. The Roman empire had to become Christian before it could ever become Papal.

The sixth seal has two scenes representing two imperial reigns, quite opposite in character; the one symbolized by a volcanic earthquake; the other by four angels holding the four winds, and by another sealing angel—winding up by a vision of those that had been slain under Pagan persecutions.

Let the edicts of the imperial persecutors be compared with the following rescript from Constantine the Great:

"Having been long since convinced, that the freedom of religion ought not to be restrained, but that leave should be given to every one to follow the sense of his own mind in things of religion, we have ordained, that as well as all others, as the Christians, should adhere to that sect and way of worship which they approve. But because in that rescript where this liberty was granted, many and divers sects are expressly named, some possibly have desisted from such worship. Wherefore when I, Constantine Augustus, and I, Licinius Augustus, happily met at Milan, and we consulted together what might be best and most conducive to the benefit of the public, among other things these following were resolved upon as beneficial to all. And in the first place it was resolved that such constitutions should be ordained as might secure the worship and veneration of the Divine Being; that is, that we should give both to the Christians, and to all others, a free choice to follow that way of worship which they judge best: that so the Godhead, and whatever is Divine and heavenly, may be propitious to us, and to all living under our dominion.

We publish this therefore as our will and pleasure, and agreeable to sound and right reason, that leave shall not be denied to any man whatever to follow and choose the constitution and worship of the Christians: and that leave be given to every one to betake himself to that religion which is most agreeable to him, and so the Divine Being may in all things display his usual favor and benignity towards us. Moreover it is now thought proper to signify to you, that all the restraints concerning the Christians, which were in the former letter to you, should be left out, that whatever is unsuitable to our benignity may be omitted, and that now for the future every one who chooseth to adhere to the Christian religion, may observe it freely without any impediment or molestation.

These things we have thought proper to signify to you, in order to your perceiving, that we have given full and free liberty to these same Christians to follow their own religion. And you may perceive, that as we have granted this full liberty to them, so in like manner we have granted the same liberty to others to observe their own institution and religion; for, as is manifest, this is suitable to the tranquility of our times, that every one should have liberty to choose and follow the worship of that deity which he approves. This we have determined, that it may appear we do not forbid or restrain any religion or way of worship whatever.

And farther, with regard to the Christians we ordain, that the places of worship (concerning which in the letter formerly sent to you there was another rule) in which they had been wont to assemble, that if any of them have been adjudged to our treasury or exchequer, or have been purchased by any, they should be restored to the Christians without price and without delay; and if any by grant have obtained such places, they are to be immediately restored to the Christians; and if any of those who have purchased such places, or have obtained them by grant, are desirous to have an allowance made to them by us, let them apply to the officer who administers justice in the place where they reside, that a proper regard may be had to them according to the benevolence of our disposition.

You are to take care, that all those things be restored to the body of the Christians without failure.

And whereas the same Christians, beside the places where they assemble, are well known to have also other possessions, and such as belong not to particular persons separately, but to the community, you are to take care, that such places also be restored to the body to which they appertain without any subterfuge or delay; upon this condition however, that they who restore these things without price, may expect indemnity from our liberality.

In all these things you are to exert yourself with the utmost care and vigor, in behalf of the aforesaid body of Christians, that our appointment may be performed with all speed; that by this means, agreeably to our gracious intention, provision may be made for the common and public tranquility without delay.

Hereby as before said, the Divine favor, of which we have already had great experience, will be secured to us forever. And that the design of this our law and our gracious indulgence may come to the knowledge of all, you are to take care that this our letter be set up everywhere to public view, that none may be ignorant of this appointment of our gracious indulgence."

Such is Constantine's rescript. It is somewhat lengthy, still, the contrast would not allow us to condense. Read the two edicts together, and we shall readily see that under Constantine the Christians had a "blessed tranquility."

We are now about concluding our expositions of the seals that are designed to illustrate the eventful history of Pagan Rome.

Let the prophetic and secular histories be studied together, and you may fully agree with the views here advanced.

In taking leave of the first six seals we are tempted to add a few

SUPPLEMENTARY REMARKS.

The six seals extend to A. D. 340, and it may be that they cover a few years beyond that date. They describe the civil and ecclesiastical struggles of the empire. No one can read the scenic visions of John without seeing the photograph of Pagan Rome. He sees the civil empire shaken by the attacks of surrounding nations; and convulsed within by conflicting interests of hostile religions. Rome's greatest enemies were in her own bosom. It was a house divided against itself. Three religions under the control of as many priesthoods, whose interests were antagonistic, would not allow the empire any quiet. The Pagan priesthood had the wealth and the civil power. Their temples were the popular resort of the emperors and state officers, as well as of the masses of people. It was a civil offense of the first magnitude; either to speak or do any thing displeasing to their idol gods. Christianity was an uncompromising foe to heathenism. No man could, at the same time, serve Jesus and the Roman idols. There could not in the nature of things, be any peace in the empire. The principles of Christianity continued to spread; no persecutions could quench their flames. After the days of Trajan it became evident that the empire had passed her zenith. She was tending toward dissolution.

THE FUTURIST EXPOSITORS.

This school places the events of the Apocalypse in the future, except the first three chapters.

If these expositors are correct, our application of the seals must be totally at variance with the truth. Before we advance we deem it necessary to urge some objections to that mode of interpretation. We shall not pretend to exhaust the subject, but simply state those objections which involve obvious difficulties.

John says, "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day." Rev. i. 10. The Greek is τῇ κυριακῇ ἡμέρᾳ. It is said that the day kept as the weekly rest is never called Lord's day. It is therefore the day of the Lord, or the judgment day. John was, therefore, carried forward in spirit to the day of judgment.

"The things that must be hereafter," were to transpire after the day of judgment, the position where John was placed.

Hence, according to that view, the seven seals, seven trumpets, and seven vials, would be future from the day of judgment.

To this view we object.

1. Its foundation is quicksand.—Κυριακὴ ἡμέρα and κυριακὸν δεῖπνον is not (to eat) the Lord's supper? 1 Cor. xi. 20. These are parallel in construction and are the only passages of the kind in the New Testament. Κυριακὸν and κυριακὸς are different cases of κυριακὸς (kuriakos) found only in 1 Cor. xi. 20, and Rev. i. 10. It is an adjective, an attribute of day in Rev. i. 10, and of supper in 1 Cor. xi. 20.

Let us now examine the passages translated "day of the Lord." 1 Cor. v. 5, ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ. In the day of the Lord Jesus. ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ. 2 Cor. i. 14. ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ κυρίου. 1 Thess. v. 2. ἡ ἡμέρα κυρίου. 2 Pet. iii. 10. κυρίου is a noun in its meaning, though an adjective in form. The day of the chief (officer understood). It is an attribute of a person —kuriakos qualifies day. There is not the same idea expressed by kuriakos and kurios. In the two examples where kuriakos is used, the attributes are similarly constructed; so are the other four, but the two classes convey distinct ideas. This is, we think, conclusive.

OBEDIENCE.

Faith Made Alive.

No. 2

S. R. WINCE.

We might go on and enumerate many more instances in Bible history, showing that faith is not accounted faith with God, until it moves the heart to submit to his requirements, but we have given enough. Faith is not made alive, until there is obedience. In all the cases cited, he who believed also acted. Faith with them was belief of the word of the Lord, put into practice —lived out.

We come down to the gospel dispensation. Jesus is required to fulfill all righteousness, he believes the Father, but that does not release him from the law of doing that Father's will. The conditions of Son-ship, must be complied with; he must live without sin; he must pass through the ordeal of suffering, must endure the cross and despise the shame. The kingdom could not otherwise be reached, the crown won, nor the ranks of his army filled.

Nor are we made exempt from law. Our salvation is made to hinge upon conditions. We have no sooner become acquainted with the gospel of the kingdom, than we are confronted with an ordinance. That ordinance is, Baptism. It is God's law of induction into the commonwealth of Israel.

The Father has said, "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved;" but, he has said more than this. He has said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not,—and filling out the ellipsis—is not baptized shall be damned."

The mysteries of the kingdom, may have been opened to our understanding, the good seed may have fallen into our hearts, we may know what the covenants of promise mean;—we may believe that Jesus came to fulfill those covenants, that his kingdom is to be here and that it is to endure forever; we may believe that all who come into him by faith and obedience may share in that kingdom and glory, and in the blessing with him of the nations of earth; we may even assent that he died for us and that through his blood we may have the remission of all our sins; but until we come to him in baptism according to the commandment of the Lord, our sins are not blotted out; the sentence of condemnation stands over against us; no reprieve from the second death has been put into our hearts; our names are not in the Book of Life.

Jesus is the door into the Sheepfold. There is no other lawful way by which we can enter. He is made that door, in baptism, because he himself is put into the ordinance. There we come through Christ, to the Father. Baptized into his death, the blood is upon us, and the Father forgives.

We may assent to all the doctrines that the purest in the church believe, we may even have our names upon the roll of a church, we may talk, we may sing, may strive to lead moral and upright lives, but we are only clothed in our own righteousness; we have not put on the righteousness of Christ; we are not in the fold, until we have come in by Christ.

God has not promised to pardon us when we but give the assent of our lips to the truth of his word. He has not promised to pardon the repenting sinner when he but makes in words confession of his sin; he has not promised us remission when we come to him in prayer pleading the merits of his Son. The blood of that Son must first be put upon us.

The test of loyalty in all past times has been Obedience, it is the test still.

Saul carried out a part of the commandment of the Lord. But in rejecting the other part, he was accounted as a traitor. The worship of idols could have been no more sinful; witchcraft was no more terrible crime. The lesson for us is this, that every jot, iota and particular, of God's commands must be carried out. No change will be allowed; no substitution. The one mode of Christ's time that constituted baptism, is the one mode still.

Before the people of this day stand the unrevoked commandments of the Lord—"Believe, repent, and be baptized." He who believes and has repented, has not done all, for "faith without works is dead;" it has not proved itself to be faith, it has not become vitalized. God requires that confession of faith be made in an act that shall symolize that faith. That act is the one baptism—the washing of re-generation.

We want our old man to be crucified with Christ that the body of sin may be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin, and God has set before us the way, it is—that we die with Christ, for he that is dead, is freed from sin.

When we sink under the water, we reckon ourselves dead to sin. In thus beginning to yield obedience to God, we are already leaving the service of sin and becoming the servants of righteousness. "To whom we yield ourselves servants to obey, his servants we are, to whom we obey, whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness.

In sinking under the water as into death, we are becoming God's servants because we are obeying him; and just as soon as we become God's servants, by obedience, we get out from under the dominion of sin. The bands of the evil one are broken, God's law becomes our law; we unclasp ourselves to him in the very act of doing what he commands.

Being buried with Christ, by baptism into death, we crucify our former master, we nail him to the cross. The master is dead to the slave, and the slave is dead to the master. No more complete dissolution of a former relationship, could be made. We are not bound to serve the master that is dead, nor has the master dominion over the dead slave.

Our relationships is entirely new. The bath into which we are plunged is indeed a bath of regeneration—a recreation—a new birth.

Alive from the dead; born of the water to a new life, we henceforth live unto God. We have acknowledged him as our master, and ourselves, his servants. Dead to the old master, we are alive to the new. "Dead unto sin, we are alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. We yield ourselves unto God as alive from the dead." For if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him.

The terrible condemnation to a second death, as the wages of our sins, is taken off, the reprieve has been granted; we are pardoned.

We come up from the bath "to walk in newness of life, to have our fruit unto holiness, and the end, everlasting life." "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." The one is made to depend absolutely upon the other. To be raised as Jesus was raised, to an immortal and incorruptible life, there must first be the planting, without the planting there can be no growth, without the planting, no fruit. The graces of holiness can only spring from the root of obedience. We must first sow before we can reap; must obey before we can get the reward.

There is no other way whereby we can be planted in the likeness of Christ's death, save being buried with him by baptism into death. And until we are thus planted we have no promise of being raised in the likeness of his resurrection,—no promise of being raised to die no more. So that death shall have no more dominion over us.

CHALMERS: Every good principle is more strengthened by its exercise, and every good affection is more strengthened by its indulgence than before. Acts of virtue ripen into habits; and the goodly and permanent result is the formation or establishment of a virtuous character.

God's word is pledged to supply the wants of his children. He does not promise to supply all we desire, but all we need. He supplied the wants of the children of Israel, but did not give them all they desired or clamored for.

WHATELY: Knowledge of our duties is the most useful part of philosophy.

Youths' Column.

A Kiss and A Smile.

Send the children to bed with a kiss and a smile,
Sweet childhood will tarry a brief but a while—
And soon they will pass from the portals of home.
The wilderness ways their life-work to roam.

Yes, tuck them in with a sweet "good night!"
The mantle of shadows is veiling the light—
And may heavenly visions on this sweet little face
May fall deeper shadows in life's weary race.

Yes, say to "God bless my dear children, I pray!"
It may be the last you will say it for aye!
The night may be long, ere you see them again—
And tenderness children may call you in vain.

Drop sweet benedictions on each little head,
And fold them in prayer as they nestle in bed;
A guard of bright angels around them invite;
Their spirits may slip from the moorings to-night.

Review and Herald.

A Noble Revenge.

The coffin was a plain one—a poor, miserable, pine coffin. No flowers on its top, no lining of satin for the pale brow, no smooth ribbons about the coarse shroud. The brown hair was laid decently back, but there was no crimped cap with its neat tie beneath the chin. The sufferer from cruel poverty smiled in her sleep—she had found bread, rest and health.

"I want to see my mother," sobbed a poor little child, as the undertaker screwed down the top.

"You can't; get out of the way; why don't somebody take the boy?"

"Only let me see her one minute," cried the helpless orphan, clutching the side of the box; and, as he gazed into the rough face, agonized tears streamed down the cheek on which a childish bloom never lingered. Oh! it was painful to hear him cry, "Only let me see my mother—only once."

Quickly and brutally the hard-hearted monster struck the child away so that he reeled with the blow.

For a moment the boy stopped, panting with grief and rage, his blue eyes distended, his lips sprung apart, a fire glittering through his tears, as he raised his puny arm, and with a most unchildish voice, cried:

"When I am a man, I will pay you for this."

There was a coffin and a heap of earth between the mother and the poor, forsaken child. A monument much stronger than granite was built in his boy-heart to the memory of the heartless deed.

* * * * * *

The court-house was crowded to suffocation.

"Does any one appear as this man's counsel?" asked the judge.

There was a silence when he had finished, until, with lips tightly pressed together, a look of strange intelligence blended with haughty reserve upon his handsome features, a young man came forward with a firm tread and kindly eyes to plead for the erring and friendless.

He was a stranger, but from his first sentence there was silence. The splendor of his genius entranced—convinced. The man who could not find a friend was acquitted.

"May God bless you sir; for I cannot."

"I want no thanks," replied the stranger.

"I—I believe you are unknown to me."

"Man! I will refresh your memory. Twenty years ago you struck a broken-hearted boy away from his mother's coffin. I was that boy."

The man turned livid.

"Have you rescued me to take my life?"

"No, I have a sweeter revenge. I have saved the life of a man whose brutal deed has rankled in my breast for twenty years. Go, and remember the tears of a friendless child."

The man bowed his head in shame, and went from the presence of magnanimity as grand to him as it was incomprehensible.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 8.

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.

About this time the Lord sent one of his mighty angels down to earth, to say that such a child should soon be born, that his name should be called Jesus, that he would be great, would be called the Son of the Highest, or God's Son, that the Lord God would give him the throne of his father David, that he would reign over the house of Jacob forever, and that of his kingdom there would be no end.

You can find this in the 1st chapter of Luke.

And sure enough, as the angel had predicted, just such a little child was born, and that too in the very town where David had lived, so many hundred years before.

On the night of the day in which he was born, an angel came to some shepherds, who were watching their flocks on the moon-lit-hills near Bethlehem, and said: "Behold, I bring you glad tidings of great joy, that shall be for all people; for there is born this day in the City of David, a Savior, which is Christ, the Lord. You will find the babe, wrapped in swaddling clothes, and lying in a manger."

Soon a great many angels were singing around the shepherds:

"On earth, peace, good will to men!"
"On earth, peace, good will to men!"

When the song was done, and the angels gone, the shepherds forgot all about their sheep and hurried off to Bethlehem to see the dear child for whom they had been waiting such a long time.

They found everything true that the angel had told them about him. Then they were sure he must indeed be Abraham and David's son, and as such, their promised King and Savior, and their hearts were very glad.

I guess God must have told some wise men of the East about it too, for they came to Jerusalem, asking "where they should find the new-born King of the Jews; they had seen his star in Morning-Land and had come to pay him homage."

Herod was then king. He was the king that the Romans had placed over the Jews. What the wise men said troubled him. He thought, if these Jews have really had a king born, of their own royal family, they will not have me to be king much longer, or, if I die, they will take the kingdom from my son. So he called the Scribes, and asked them "where Christ should be born," and they said, "In Bethlehem, because it is so written in the prophets, And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah, for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel."

Herod knew that this was the faith of the Jews, that they were looking for Christ—a King sent forth from God, and that if he had come and was going to do now all that God had said he should do, he might well be afraid. So when he had learned the place of his birth he sent the wise men to find him, and commanded them to come back and tell him just where he was, so that he could go and pay him homage.

The wise men, guided by the star, came to the place rejoicing, and having found him with his mother, knelt before him, and laid great kegs of gold with other priceless gifts, at his feet

Then the angel of the Lord came and told them they must not go back to Herod; he only wanted to know where the young prince was so that he could kill him.

Hearing this they went back to their own country by another road, and God sent the father and mother of Jesus down to Egypt to stay till Herod was dead.

Herod was so angry because the wise men had gone home without pointing Jesus out to him, that he thought, Well, I will have the little king killed any how.

So he sent some cruel soldiers down to Bethlehem, and every little child in Bethlehem and all around the town was killed.

I suppose then that he was sure his throne was safe, that Jesus had been put to death, but God had taken care of his King, as he will take care of all who love and serve him.

Now although we are certain that this little child Jesus is the one promised to Abraham and to David, we will look a little farther and see what more we can learn about it.

In the second chapter of Luke, it says that Joseph, the legal father of Jesus under the Jewish law, went up to Bethlehem to be enrolled because he was of the house and lineage of David.

The 1st verse of the 1st chapter of Matthew reads, "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham."

In the 3d chapter of Luke his genealogy is traced back again to David and to Abraham.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, March 28, 1891.

WE have been too busily engaged to answer some private communications, but hope to respond to all soon.

IT was a matter of regret to find that several typographical errors escaped correction in our last number.

SOME articles are necessarily deferred. One communication for the Youths' Column, from a young writer, contained two grevious historical mistakes, for which reason we must decline its publication.

As four numbers each month, in our enlarged form, is all that our prospective means will warrant, and as this is the fourth number for March, our next issue will be deferred till Wednesday, the sixth of April.

BROTHER W. JONES' little book entitled Early Lessons is now ready, of which a sample copy has come to hand. It is a neat little pamphlet of 32 pages, and is devoted to the consideration of the very subjects concerning which children should obtain a knowledge in early youth, for which purpose these lessons are most admirably adapted. Send to him direct for the book. For address and price see his advertisement in another part of the paper. Do not send to us as we have to forward to him at an expense of postage and time, and a delay to the sender.

BROTHER MAGRUDER says in a card of March 19, "I shall be very willing to furnish copies of the anti-Ingersoll pamphlet when published to the amount that may be now subscribed and paid. I say now paid, for the printers will require payment in full on the delivery of the books. If enough be not raised to pay for its publication, the money will be returned to contributors, or subscribers. For the responses a longer time than April 1 will be required—say to April 15, to take up the collections.—Please say so in THE RESTITUTION." We hope our brethren will send on to Brother Magruder at once. If we can only assist to the amount of one dollar let us do that and as much more as we can. Send to A. B. Magruder, Stephens City, Va.

Exegetical.

For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast.—Eph. ii. 8, 9.

There are two explanations of these verses which have given rise to two different theories in regard to the origin of faith. One takes as its authority the English text only, and makes faith to be the gift of God. The other takes as its authority the original Greek text, and affirms that faith is not the gift of God.

There is apparently a great difference between these two explanations, but the difference is not so great as it seems. When accurate definitions and statements are made on both sides they will be found to harmonize in almost every respect.

It will be evident to every Greek Scholar, by a reference to the original, that our English version does not give an accurate translation, although it may be easily explained so as to express the original. A full rendering of the Greek would be thus; "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it (Salvation) is the gift of God," etc. The word "it" is neuter, while the word "faith" is feminine. The former, therefore, cannot be made to refer to the latter.

In what sense is faith the gift of God? It is the gift of God in the sense that the Spirit shows us the things of God—shows us our sinfulness and need of regeneration—shows us the willingness of God to help us, his love for us and interest in us—shows us Christ the way, and how worthy of our confidence he is; and thus we are led by the Spirit, without any violation of our free moral agency, to have faith in God. Our faith is the natural result of the previous revelation of the things of God.

In what sense is faith not the gift of God? It is not the gift of God in the sense that he bestows upon us a new faculty. We do not recieve it directly from God. As one has expressed it, "Faith is not injected into us."

I have faith in my fellowman when I have proof of his honesty, integrity, etc. In the same way I have faith in God when I see how worthy of confidence he is, and how true to all his promises. —Selected.

For as I said, ver. 5. By the mere favor of God ye Jews and Gentiles are saved through faith; and this salvation is no work of yours; it is the gift of God, who might have suffered the human race to perish. Salvation is the gift of God through faith, and not by works meriting it, ... So that no one can boast that his salvation is of himself meritoriously.—Macknight's Paraphrase.

Communications.

FAITH AND WORKS.

I. C. T.

The words faith and belief are both used in Scripture in regard to nearly the same mental action, but generally, with this difference, The term belief is applied to the impression made on the mind by events which have already transpired, inducing a firm persuasion of the truths of religion, whereas faith is more applicable to that frame of mind in which we are fully persuaded in regard to events yet to occur and are led to an entire reliance on Christ for salvation.

They are both insisted on as of the first importance to the Christian, it being declared that he who believes not shall be damned, and that without faith it is impossible to please God.

When Peter declared his belief that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God, Christ answered him "Upon this rock I will build my church."

When Peter was brought before the rulers and elders, he said to them "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved."

When the eunuch declared "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God," Philip baptized him.

When the jailor asked "What shall I do to be saved?" Paul answered, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

On many occasions, in varied phraseology, Christ declared that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

On one occasion, he asserted that "all things are possible to him that believeth."

John says, "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing, ye might have life through his name."

Paul says, "But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness."

In one place we are distinctly told "we are saved by grace through faith;" and in another it is distinctly stated, "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us."

Everywhere in the Scriptures we find salvation is promised to the believer.

But now let us advance one step further. "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Scrutinize this passage closely. What is the necessary inference? Evidently this, Salvation is one thing, and the kingdom of God is another.

Note, that the kingdom of God is not promised to all who believe and are baptized, it is merely said the kingdom of God cannot be entered without them.

Peter tells us what else is required—Faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity—for if ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

We are nowhere authorized to conclude that a man may be saved by his works.

By virtue of his relation to us as the Author of our being, God not only claims, but exercises, entire control over all our affairs, and is entitled to every moment of our time. Hence, if every day, and every hour, and every moment of our lives were employed in his service, we would only be doing our duty, and could therefore claim no reward.

Nevertheless, he has graciously promised to reward us according to our works, all through the Scriptures, as I read them. I find the same statement —we are saved by faith—and rewarded according to our works. Even the giving of a cup of water is to be rewarded, and those who have been reviled and persecuted, and evil spoken of on Christ's account are to receive a great reward in heaven.

To those who have fed the hungry, given drink to the thirsty, taken in the stranger, clothed the naked, visited the sick, or gone to those in prison of their brethren; the King shall say, Come, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

And for them that love him eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things God hath prepared for them.

But there is another thing in this connection which appears to be quite as important as faith. Christ lays great emphasis on it. He says: "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you."

The same evangelist who has recorded this says: "He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. * * * * * * If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar."

The question of questions, then is—Who is my brother?

Will some one answer?

PURE RELIGION.

L. S. BRONSON.

When we realize that the promise of seeing God in peace is only given to the pure in heart, Matt. v. 8, our mind naturally turns to the question: How shall we become pure in heart? He that receiveth into his heart the wisdom that is from above (which) is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be intreated, full of mercy, and good fruits etc. James iii. 17. He that receiveth in his heart's affections the ingrafted word is thus purified. Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit etc., Pet. i 22. Now that we are cleansed from the filthiness of the flesh, and "our bodies washed in pure water," our hearts thus made pure in the sight of God, being no longer counted as dead in sin but alive to God through "the obedience of faith," how are we to follow on to know the Lord more perfectly, living a life time of pure religion? What is it to live such a life? How may we know when we are thus living? "Pure religion and undefiled before God (not men) and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widow in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James i. 27. In the above words we find James giving a very clear and concise statement as to what constitutes a pure religion. Are those principles easy to be followed and adhered to? When we think those commands and precepts are from our Heavenly Father and given to us through the Holy Spirit to be observed, and when we look forward and see the crown that is to be given as a reward for such a life of self denial, and faithfulness to the God of heaven; we feel to say "I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest," for thy "yoke is easy and thy burden is light."

But when we look into our own carnal nature that each day is waring against the spirit, and the many allurements of the world, that are held out to us by gilded hands to lead us astray, and "with feigned words would make merchandise of us," we feel to say with Paul, "fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life," "Hold fast that which thou hast, that no (other) man take thy crown." We then feel that it is a constant warfare and watchfullness through all the years of this mortal life. Pure and undefiled religion is to visit the widow and the fatherless in their afflictions, and to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. For what purpose are we to visit those afflicted ones? Is it to profit by their misfortunes? or is it to alleviate their wants, bringing joy, gladness and sunshine to their heart and home?

Again, to preserve our religion pure we must keep ourselves, "unspotted from the world." What is it to be spotted by the world? Our garments must be of at least two colors in order to be spotted. If our daily walk and Godly conversation is so mixed with the affairs of the world that our Christian profession is lost to their sight, the world knowing it only by the boasting profession that our own lips utter from time to time, it it possible that our garments are "spotted by the flesh." Should we be so conformed to this world, that we live daily with the motto ever before our minds: "Religion is religion and business is business," these two principles being so far separated by us as to never mingle themselves together, and when Sunday is past, and Monday arrives our religion is so far put aside that no man of the world may deem it financially safe to attempt a worldly transaction with us, we may well question the purity of our garments. Pure religion will separate us from the world, placing our "affections on things above and not on things on the earth." It will cause us to do no ill to our neighbors. It will cloth us "in modest apparel and not with costly array."

It will cause us to bear with brethren the burdens that may fall upon the church, and not allow those things to fall upon the few while we go free.

"Must Simon bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No there's a cross for every one,
And there's a cross for me."

Could each member of the body of Christ feel this truth as they should, how many would be partially relieved, that are now struggling with those things that others should help to support. Yet at the same time enjoying the blessings of church privileges, but are not willing to "move those things with one of their fingers."

Pure religion will cause us to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," although it might not sound as music to the ear of the popular church-going people.

It will give four pecks to the bushel, it will give sixteen ounces to the pound. Twelve inches to the foot. Four quarts to the gallon. It will take us from the ball room, from the billiard hall, from the saloon, from the theatre. It will take us to the house of God where prayer is often made if it be at the "church around the corner" where but few go. God has promised to be there as one of the little number if we meet in his name.

It will take us to the kingdom of heaven. Where we shall go no more out forever, where the pure in heart shall see God.

Brevities.

Some excavations commenced at the distance of a kilometre from the walls of Pompeii, with a view to ascertaining the nature of the surroundings of the city, have led to the discovery, within an area of but a few square metres, of thirty skeletons, ten of which were huddled together in one room of a small suburban villa, and among and upon the bones were found bracelets, necklaces, earrings, and other objects.

An Austrian officer in the service of Persia writes respecting the conflict between the Persians and the Kurds: "Every kind of cruelty was resorted to. Villages were burned; women, old people, and children were killed promiscuously. The writer of this letter passed through sixteen burning villages in a single day. Herds of 1,000 sheep and 500 cows or buffaloes were taken and driven away, and the shepherds either murdered or sent into slavery. The soldiers, being badly clothed and badly paid, felt justified in plundering where they could. The Austrian officers with great difficulty managed to keep their troops in order. The weather, with its rainfalls and snow storms was so very inclement that a great many of the Persian troops succumbed. In the old regiments 100 men died in one week."

The driving storms of a month ago in Nebraska drifted thousands of cattle from the ranges north and west down the Platte valley, and much damage has been done by the half-famished animals eating up hay and fields of corn stalks. Barbed wire fences offered little obstruction to the hungry brutes. The number of cattle upon the valley is estimated at between 15,000 and 20,000 head, scattered from Cozad to Kearney. Owing to the extreme cold it was impossible for a man to remain long out of doors, and for several days the animals had their own way. Farmers and small cattle owners are indignant that the feed they had provided against bad weather should be devoured by the raiding herds from the ranges. The majority of the large stockmen have expressed a willingness to pay for the damage.

Highly interesting experiments with a newly discovered mineral essence took place a few evenings ago at the labratory of the eminent Parisian analytical chemist, M. Wuertz. Having filled a lamp with the liquid in question, and ignited the wick, M. Kordig, the discoverer of the essence, tossed the lighted lamp up against the ceiling, besprinkling the bystanders as well as himself with the flaming fluid, which, however, to the astonishment of all present, proved utterly devoid of heat or burning capacity. He then soaked his pocket handkerchief in the essence and set it on fire; the essence burnt itself out, but the handkerchief remained uninjured, as did his hat after subjection to a similar trial. Then MM. Wuertz, Dumas, and Friedal plunged their hands into a pan filled with the burning liquid, withdrawing them with fingers all alight, like so many thick jets of gas. They experienced no sensation of heat whatsoever upon the skin surface thus apparently in a state of active combustion. Other experiments followed of an equally wonderful nature, conclusively demonstrating that the "Kordig essence" is capable of producing light without heat.

THE VARIORUM BIBLE.

To the almost infinite number of editions of the Bible which have of late years been published, Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode have added one which constitutes a Biblical library in itself, although in size it barely exceeds that of the simple volume of 10 years ago. This edition contains full marginal references, a selection of various readings from the best authorities, and some most valuable "aids to Bible study." The various ancient manuscripts and versions are set forth, a complete concordance is given, besides an index of names and subjects, an epitome of the history of Biblical times, a glossary of English terms, a review of the foreign history of the Jews down to the return from Babylon, written by the Rev. A. H. Sayce, and several other most useful appendices. It is hard to define limits to industry and ingenuity, but the Variorum edition does really appear to be the most complete production of the Bible and its explanation that can be possibly compressed within a single volume.—London Times.

Sententious.

The slander of some people is as great a recommendation as the praise of others.

Friendship is the medicine for all misfortunes; but ingratitude dries up the fountain of all goodness.

The hardest, the severest, the last lesson which man has to learn upon earth, is submission to the will of God.

If some poor wandering child of thine
Have spurned to-day the voice divine
Now Lord, the gracious work begin,
Let him no more lie down in sin

The worst enemies of Christianity are not its open foes, but its weak and cowardly friends.

Show to others how worthy Jesus is of being trusted, by the steadfastness of your own faith in him.

Sun of my soul, thou Savior dear,
It is not night if thou art near
Oh! may no earth-born cloud arise,
To hide thee from thy servant's eyes.

Persevere in simplicity and faith, for he who has not the simplicity of a child sees everything falsely.

It was the priests that narrowed Israel, while the prophets, with a divine universalism, anticipated the time when "All they from Sheba shall come, and show forth the praises of the Lord."

THE UNIVERSE.

An uncreated and eternal universe, we venture to submit, is inconceivable, because matter can neither call itself into existence nor set itself in motion, and to figure it to ourselves as doing either is as impossible as it is to figure to ourselves two straight lines enclosing a space.—Spectator.

There are many more whom riches have made covetous, than covetousness made rich.

The highest ideal of man must ever be, that his soul may reflect the image of his Creator, and this image can only be that of pure, all-embracing love to God and man, for God is love.

No one ever loved as Christ did, nor did anything so truly great and good, as the Bible tells us of him, ever enter into the heart of man. It is a holy form which rises before the poor pilgrim like a star in the night, and satisfies his innermost craving, his most secret yearnings and hopes.

Christ, who was the holiest among the mighty, and the mightiest among the holy, lifted with his pierced hand empires off their hinges and turned the stream of centuries out of its channel, and still governs the ages.

Take the lesson to thyself,
Living heart and true;
Golden years are fleeting by,
Youth is passing too;
Learn to make the most of life.
Lose no happy day;
Time will never bring thee back
Chances swept away.
Leave no tender word unsaid;
Love while life shall last—
"The mill will never grind
With the water that has passed."

N. Y. Times.

THE PLAGUE.

Europe again Scared over Its Reported Reappearance.

The scare about the plague has again appeared in Europe, where it will doubtless cause much concern, particularly in those countries which have many dealings with Armenia and Mesopotamia.

Undoubtedly, the plague ought not to be treated with unconcern or derision, and it has frequently shown its ability to travel over the greater part of the Old World, from its pestilential hotbeds in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates. It is as well, however, to remember that certain parts of Mesopotamia are never entirely free from the plague. In the cold weather it exists languidly and fitfully, but when the hot season sets in it rages more or less in every town, from Mosul and Bagdad down to the Persian Gulf. The cause of the scourge is now tolerably well known. The Tigris and the Euphrates, at the period when the snows at their source begin to melt, cannot have their waters carried off into the Persian Gulf by the Shat-el-Arab, and accordingly they flood the low-lying countries around for distances of fifty and even 100 miles from their banks. When the hot weather sets in the overflow is speedily dried up, but the whole of the previously submerged country becomes a swamp of miasmatic, pestilential vapors. The earth seems to crack and breathe forth miasma. Then follow fevers and the plague among the inhabitants. Villages are annually depopulated, but the surrounding inhabitants have become so accustomed to the visitation that they only move further inland or toward the sea-board for a time, and then return in the cold season to their pastoral occupations around their former homes. The ravages of the plague are augmented by the indescribably filthy condition of the villages and towns in which it appears. Bagdad, for instance, contains within its embankments the remains of filth which have been allowed to accumulate by gigantic populations for century after century. Kerbela, which is in the vicinity of the remains of Babylon, is annually visited by millions of Mohammedans, who go to pay their devotions to the tombs of Hussein and Hassan, the melancholy heroes of the Mohurrum festival, which yearly causes great bloodshed in Asia between the rival Mohammedan sects of Shiahs and Sonnees. Kebela has a collection of festering filth in its vicinity which is appalling. If the Turkish authorities were vigorous in enforcing sanitary regulations in their towns, villages and places of pilgrimage, the world would never, probably be periodically alarmed by plague scares; but so long as Turkish officials are what they are, and no comprehensive plans are adopted to carry off and utilize all the surplus waters of the Tigris and Euphrates, so long will fever and plagues be found in Mesopotamia.

News Items.

NAPLES, March 16.—Another strong shock of earthquake occurred yesterday at Casamicciola. Many houses have fallen.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 18.—As at present arranged, the coronation of the Czar will take place at Moscow on the expiration of the period of deep mourning, the imperial party remaining in Moscow until the end of the year.

Already the Nihilists have warned the new Czar of Russia to beware of his father's fate.

The weavers of Bohemia are in great destitution. In upper Silesia, Prussia, there is no improvement in the impoverished condition of the peasantry. Their situation is summed up thus: "No grain, no potatoes, no food for cattle, no seed for sowing. Snow and cold without, hunger and sickness within." Soup houses and public kitchens have been started in seventeen villages.

Stringent precautions are being taken at Odessa against the importation of the plague from Asiatic ports in the Black Sea. All vessels arriving from those ports will be strictly isolated.

The Irish Disarming bill has passed both houses of the British Parliament and is now a law. The people of Ireland will now have all firearms taken away from them, and be prevented from possessing arms under penalty.

The greater part of the walls of the ruined castle which has dominated over the little borough town of Launceston, in England, the other day fell to the ground without any previous warning. Antiquarians have long speculated as to the date of its construction, and many of them have professed to find in the remains some traces of Roman work. For many generations part of the building was used as a prison, and within its walls were confined some of the enthusiasts whose religious opinions have been obnoxious to the government of the day. Under the Government of the commonwealth George Fox, the Quaker, was subjected to eight months imprisonment in a "noisome den."

A fanatical mob broke into the Protestant church at Marsala, in Italy, on March 4, and, despite the efforts of the police, carried out all the books and furniture, of which they made a bonfire in the Piazza del Duomo. On subsequently entering the cathedral they are said to have received the solemn benediction of the Archbishop and clergy. The Protestant minister, Signor Lettieri, with difficulty escaped. The Prefect of Trapani has telegraphed to the Minister of the Interior expressing the hope that the ringleadors have already been arrested.

VIENNA, March 18.—Three hundred and fifteen houses, including the Custom House and foreign consulates, were burned at Ineboli, a seaport city in Asia Minor, on Thursday. The houseless inhabitants are destitute.

BERLIN, March 18.—A German man-of-war destroyed the habitations of a tribe on the coast of Liberia who plundered a German merchant-ship. Liberia agrees to pay $1,000 compensation for the plundering.

DURBAN, March 22.—The Boers have accepted the British terms, including cessation of the war and the appointment of a royal commission. Peace is regarded as assured.

Diptheria of a very fatal type is prevalent in Thurso village, near Ottawa. During the past week eighteen children have died.

According to advices from Europe a war between Greece and Turkey seems inevitable.

ANARCHY IN ARMENIA.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 21.—Anarchy prevails on the Armenian frontier. The Kurds openly defy the Turks. A priest is traversing the country, preaching rebellion. The popular feeling is so strong that the authorities are afraid to interfere with him. A general outbreak is feared. It is asserted that several Persian tribes, under a Persian General, have crossed the frontier toward Bagdad, and pillaged several villages.

DESTRUCTIVE FROSTS ALMOST UNDER THE EQUATOR.

PANAMA, March 12.—The result of the frost which visited Antigua and the vicinity of Guatemala on the night of Feb. 10 is briefly stated by a correspondent of the Diario de Centro Americano: "The third of the present crop is completely lost. The next crop, which was expected to be particularly heavy, the trees being fruitful, covered with blossoms, owing to the small crop of last year, and particularly to the splendid cultivation of the ground, will be a complete failure. The proprietors of haciendas are ruined for the present, unless some unexpected circumstance occurs to their advantage. A splendid tobacco plantation in the department of Chimaltenango, containing over 300,000 plants in splendid condition, suffered the destruction of the entire crop."

QUESTION.

To Brother J. M. Stephenson:

Will you explain Rev. 3: 21. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Please to accurately show the difference between the two thrones here mentioned and how when and where Christ—who uses this language—has, does, or is to occupy them.

Note particularly the force of the conjunction "as" and the tense of the verb to be—"am"; also the preposition "with" in both limbs of the compound sentence.

INQUIRER.

SUDDEN DEATH.

The family of Mr. Abel Larkin is now mourning the loss of that dearest of earthly companions—a mother, for on the evening of the 8th inst., she was suddenly and without a moment's warning called to the other shore.

Last Tuesday morning Mrs. Larkin arose and went about her work as usual, and seemingly in good health. During the afternoon, while all about the house were out at work, Mrs. L. was sitting by the sewing machine sewing by hand. At five o'clock her son-in-law, James Kerr, went into the house where he found her sitting by the machine with her head resting thereon, her left hand was lying across her lap, her right arm swinging by her side, and between her thumb and finger was the needle and thread with which she was sewing.

When Mr. Kerr came in the children were romping and playing, and they told him that "grandma was asleep."

Alas, too true, for that sleep was the sleep that knows no waking. For some time she had been troubled with heart disease, and this was the cause of her death.

Adaline L. Hadley was born in Portland, Vt., Oct. 9, 1811, and was raised in Alleghany County, N. Y. She moved to Hancock County, this state, in 1833. Was married to Abel Larkin Nov. 15, 1835, and removed to Brown County, residing here until her death. She was the mother of eleven children—five boys and six girls—only four of whom are now living:—Mrs. D. Mitchell, Ferndale, Cal., Mrs. J. House, Mrs. R. J. Ward, and Mrs. Jas. Kerr, of Mt. Sterling.

Mrs. L. was a Universalist in faith, and her funeral was preached by Rev. J. H. Tabor, of New Salem, yesterday afternoon at the late residence of the deceased.

Mrs. L. was a most excellent lady, a splendid neighbor, loving mother, and kind and affectionate wife, and her death has caused a vacancy in that household that cannot be filled. To the sorrowing husband, children, and friends, the sympathy of our community is extended.—Copied from the Illinois Message, of Mar. 11, sent by Brother A. Larkin.

Poetry.

THE WANDERING PILGRIM.

[AIR—PALMS OF VICTORY.]

BY CHARLEY OF JOHN POORE.

I am a wandering pilgrim, and widely I do roam;
I am in a land of strangers far from my happy home.
I cross the broad prairie and face the storm and rain,
To tell poor careless sinners that Christ will come again.

I take the Holy Bible to be my only guide;
I have no other gospel but Jesus crucified;
I have no earthly master to tell me where to go
To preach a risen Saviour to mortals here below.

I fellowship all Christians [illegible] of every name,
Believing fear no danger [illegible] where the cannot
I meet no opposition [illegible] filled with vanity real.
The love of God is precious—it [illegible] I do feel.

But when I am preaching as Jesus gave command,
I meet with opposition and trials on each hand;
Some say that I'm deluded and filled with heresy,
Because I do not publish their mysterious Trinity!

Some say that I am humble, some say that I am proud,
Some say that I am sober, some say that I'm round,
Some do not like my preaching, some say it is heroplain,
Some say they will not hear me, some say I preach for gain.

Although the world despises me and call me poor and mean,
And now do persecute me and call me cruel names,
I trust the precious Savior will help me now to bear
To meekness the reproaches which daily I do hear.

Communications.

MUTUAL EDIFICATION.

J. CAMERON.

This heading describes a usage among certain small groups of professing Christian disciples who find it necessary to separate themselves from the larger religious bodies, and to meet together among themselves. The one feature common to these communities is their dispensing with the services of a paid ministry, depending solely on what is popularly known as lay-preaching. A glance at this variety of church life under its purely ecclesiastical aspect, leaving doctrinal matters out of view may not be without interest to the younger portion of our readers, as a piece of church history, apt, from its comparatively slender proportions, to be overlooked.

Notwithstanding the almost universal prevalence of a professional teaching and preaching body in the professing church, there cannot be a doubt that in addition to the "falling away" from the faith, one flagrant departure from the practice of the early church, is neglecting the duty of mutual edification.

Whatever share of speaking fell to be done by those men who were formally appointed, under the authority of the apostles, to the oversight of any particular church, there must have been scope allowed for the brethren generally to take part in this exercise. It is well known that this practice is far from common at the present day, even among the smaller bodies of Protestants; while it is entirely ignored by the larger bodies, just as it has been for more than 1600 years by the Roman and Greek Catholic denominations. It has existed among many of us for many years, and we have got so accustomed to it that we are apt to lose sight of the evil which the popular system has caused, and of the difficulties that many had to contend with in this endeavor to introduce the more Scriptural system, as well as of our indebtedness to those who have gone before us in showing the importance of it.

It is generally during periods of reformation or revival that a return to the exercise of mutual edification has been attempted among Christians. Accordingly we find some traces of it in the sixteenth century both on the continent of Europe and in our own country. D'Aubigne in his history of the Reformation, speaks of Zuingle passing back over every intervening age till he reached the times of the apostles; and subjecting the church to an entire transformation labored to restore it to its primitive condition: "Luther (he says) was desirous of retaining in the church all that was not expressly contradicted by Scripture,—while Zuingle was intent on abolishing all that could not be proved by Scripture." "The Genevan Reformer wished to remain united to the church of all preceding ages, and sought only to purify it from every thing that was repugnant to the word of God." The people, that is to say the assembly of believers, was according to Zuingle's principles, the highest earthly authority to which an appeal could be made. In many places the houses of the peasants had become schools of Christian instruction in which the Holy Scriptures were constantly read. The idea of one universal priesthood known in such living power to the first Christians had been revived by Luther in the 16th century. But this idea seems then to have dwelt only in theory in the Lutheran church, and was really acted out only among the congregations of the Reform churches. The Lutheran congregations (agreeing in this point with the Anglican church) took it seems, a middle course between the Romish and Reform churches.

Among the Lutherans everything proceeded from the pastor or priest; and nothing was counted valid in the church but what was regularly conveyed through its rulers. But the Reform churches, while they maintained the divine appointment of the ministry,—by some sects denied,—approached nearer to the primitive condition of the apostolical communities. From this time forward they recognized and proclaimed that the flock are not to rest satisfied with receiving what the priest gives out; that, since the Bible is in the hands of every one, the members of the church, as well as those who take the lead, possess the key of that treasury whence the latter derive their instructions; that the gifts of mind the spirit of faith, of wisdom, of consolation, and of knowledge are not imparted to the minister alone; but that each is called upon to employ for the good of all whatever gift he has received; and that it may often happen that some gift needful for the edification of the church may be denied to the pastor, and granted to some member of the flock. Thus the more passive state of the churches was changed into one of general activity; and it was in France especially that this transformation took place. In other countries the Reformers are found almost exclusively among the ministers and doctors; but in France the men who had read or studied had for fellow laborers men of the lowest class. Among God's chosen servants in that country we have a doctor of Sorbonne University and a woolcomber." Regarding this woolcomber D'Aubigne says—"The evangelical Christians of Meaux seeing their pastors dispersed, sought to edify one another. A wool-comber, John Leclere, who had imbibed the true christian doctrine from the instructions of the divines, the readings of the Bible, and some tracts distinguished himself by his zeal, and by his expounding of the Scripture. He was one of those men whom the spirit of God inspires with courage, and places in the foremost rank of a religious movement. The church of Meaux soon came to regard him as its minister."

It may be mentioned that having through his extreme zeal, destroyed the images, etc., in a chapel, Leclere was tried and summarily condemned to death by burning, to be publicly scourged three several days previously, and to have his right hand cut off. He was the first martyr in France.

At an earlier period even than this John Wickliffe in England had been the means of exciting a spirit of independence in regard to religious matters both in England and Scotland. It is recorded that "so widely had this influence spread that as early as 1416 it was enacted at a congregation of St. Andrew's University that all Masters of Arts should swear to resist the adherents of "the sects of the Lollards," (the followers of Wickliffe) and to defend the church against them. The Lollards of Kyle afterwards became a distinguishing appellation. There were about thirty persons who especially bore this name, and they seem to have belonged to the more educated classes of society." In a quaint old poem Davidson gives a graphic view of the state of matters during the early period of Reformation times. He describes one Robert Campbell of the Kinyeancleuch working to spread the new cause:

"He preached in his lodging,
He had baith prayer and preaching;
To fill his friends he na whit dred,
How they had lang been Bibdless led."

In England little more than two hundred years ago the Non-conformists were forced in many cases to resort to the edification system. For example in 1644 the Baptists were charged with "holding their conventicles weekly in our chief cities and suburbs thereof, and there prophesy by turns." The following year an Ordinance of Parliament was published enacting "that no person be permitted to preach, who is not ordained a minister, either in this or some other Reformed church, except such as intending the ministry, shall be allowed for the trial of their gifts by those who shall be appointed thereunto by both Houses of Parliament." Next year the corporations of the city of London presented a memorial to Parliament, in which they prayed "that some strict and speedy course might be taken for the suppressing all separate and private congregations." And in December of the same year a second Parliamentary Ordinance appeared forbidding all unordained persons to "preach or expound the Scriptures in any church or chapel or any other public place." This took place during the commonwealth when the Presbyterian party were in the ascendent. At this time Cromwell's soldiers were allowed to preach in St. Giles', Edin.

At this period we have the record of the Baptist church at Bristol of whom it is said the members met regularly for worship, whether they could obtain the services of a minister or not, the gifted brethren helping by prayer and exhortation.

A century later we find the rise of the Wesleyan societies, as they were called, in England. These originated in private meetings for the study of the New Testament in Greek. Although Wesleyanism developed into a close clerical corporation, it afforded great scope for the lay element in teaching and preaching in the institution of class-leaders, local preachers, etc.

Almost simultaneously with the origin of Wesleyanism, we find in Scotland a much more distinct illustration of mutual edification policy in the rise of the Glassites. Mr. John Glass, a minister of the church of Scotland, was expelled for a design of subverting the national covenant, through his exposition of the text, "My kingdom is not of this world." They maintain a plurality of teaching elders in each church, in the choice of whom want of learning and pursuit of business are no sufficient objection if qualified according to Paul's instructions to Timothy and Titus. The Scotch Baptists, who took their rise about the middle of last century, have also a plurality of elders. This body, as also the Glassites, considered the presence of two elders necessary in every act of discipline, and at the administration of ordinances. This gave rise to a division among the Baptists, a section of whom denied this necessity, and maintained that these acts could be performed equally well in the absence of ordained elders.

At the close of the last century another remarkable movement began in Scotland chiefly by the exertions of the two brothers Robert and James Haldane, retired naval officers, the one of the Royal Navy, the other of the East India company's service. Having very decided religious convictions they devoted both themselves and their fortunes to the cause of religion. Robert had resolved to go to India as a missionary along with several others selected as his coadjutors, and to be maintained at his expense. For this purpose he sold his estate of Airthrey, near Sterling. The East India company, however, refused to sanction the movement, and he threw himself into the field of home missions, which his brother James had been engaged in for some time. In 1797 they instituted a "Society for Propagating the Gospel at home," which a board of directors consisting of twelve laymen, besides Secretary, Treasurer and Clerk. The report of its proceedings from January 1802 to May 1803, states that the number of missionaries sent out "exceeded one hundred," and that the services of the officers of the society were given gratuitously. The missionaries were sent chiefly to places in the north of Scotland. Mr. Robert Haldane expended in twelve years upwards of £70,000 in this home mission movement. He built large places of worship called Tabernacles in the larger towns. Large assemblies were drawn together, and for the most part became what are known as congregationalists. Mr. R. Haldane also established a seminary for the education of preachers. Lay preaching, however, was the means by which this movement was originated. Mr. James Haldane made a number of preaching tours to various parts of Scotland extending as far as Orkney and Shetland. And although there was nothing opposed to the generally received doctrine preached by those layman, their labors excited a large amount of opposition from the professional clergy. The general assembly of 1799 agreed to overtures from the Synod of Aberdeen against vagrant teachers and Sunday schools, and issued a pastoral letter which attacked by name the "Society for propagating the gospel at home," and charged the itinerant teachers with "intruding into parishes without any call," erecting in several places Sunday schools, etc. The procurator (a legal advisor) of the church was also empowered to proceed legally against unauthorized teachers of Sunday schools. The Anti-burgher Synod in 1798, deposed the Rev. George Cowie "for countenancing the ministrations of what are called missionary preachers, by hearing them preach, and in various other ways."

The "intruding into parishes" alluded to, must have been complained of in regard to certain meetings in private houses for reading the Scriptures, praise, prayer, and exhortation, which the missionaries formed among such persons as showed an interest in their preaching. The report of the Society already refered to mentions several instances of this. It also mentions that "people are astonished to find men capable of exhorting one another with propriety who but a few months before could hardly utter a sentence about christianity." Many such meetings were formed all over the country. It is on record that the Messrs. Haldane held that the elder's office was not essential to the organization of a church of Christ; but there is no mention of this in their lives, published by Alex. Peddanie Esq. Possibly the smaller meetings in country districts were conducted without ordained elders, and thus the report may have arisen.

About the same period (the beginning of the present century,) a small community of a similar class of people sprang up in Ireland under rather singular circumstances. They afforded an example of the most pronounced form of what may be termed democratic church government. This party originated with a Mr. John Walker, a clergyman of the established church in Ireland, and a Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin. He renounced his position in the church, and formed a meeting of a number of persons, whom he had converted to certain views of church fellowship he had acquired from reading "letters on Theron and Aspasio" and similar works sent to him by Mr. Wm. Jones a Scotch Baptist in England.

As to Church government he laid it down as a fundamental principle that "even two or three disciples in any place—united together in the faith of the apostolic gospel, and in obedience to the apostolic precept—constitute the church of Christ in that place." As to the essentiality of elders he says: "The opinion that a Christian church cannot exist, or cannot act as a church of Christ, without elders is so grossly inconsistent with every Scriptural view either of a Christian church or of its elders that it cannot long stand examination by the word." A number of small churches were formed in various parts of the United Kingdom on this principle and were termed by Mr. Walker, Separatists, from the circumstance that in the place of meeting a visible line of demarcation was made to separate the members of the church from visitors and other non-members who might be present.

There was thus a remarkable combination of liberty and constraint. The utmost liberty within the charmed circle but the bar of silence on all beyond. A church still exists in Leith.

About fifty years ago a rather zealous religous body took its rise at Plymouth in England. A number of Anglo-Indian officers located there, were in the habit of meeting together by themselves for religious exercises. This gradually grew into a body which adopted the name of "Brethren"—better known by the public as "Plymouth brethren." Their church polity is described by one writer as follows:—"The non-recognition of any specific or authorized ministry is their chief principle in regard to what they call teaching. Every one who himself believed that he possessed those gifts which are fitted to edify the church and whom their assemblies regarded as an acceptable teacher is at liberty to address the church." The church at Plymouth contained from 1200 to 1400 members. There cannot be fewer than from 20,000, to 30,000 in the United Kingdom, besides considerable numbers on the continent of Europe, in the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the Channel Islands, and the West Indies. It is rather singular that like Mr. Walker the founder of the separatists, the leading man among the "Brethren," was a clergyman of the established church in Ireland—Mr. John Nelson Darby. This gentleman has traveled through various parts of the world for the purpose of spreading what he considered to be the teaching of Scripture. In America and the West Indies, and especially in France and Germany, (where he spoke in the native language) he did a great work in the way of proselytizing. The real originator of the "Brethren," however was Mr. A. N. Groves, a gentlemen who was educated for the ministry in the church of England.

It is well known that the "Friends," commonly termed Quakers, belong to the category we are treating of and depend very much on mutual help in the matter of Christian teaching and edification.

In the United States of America, a movement originated more than half a century ago, which gave a great impetus to the church practice of mutual edification. The late Alexander Campbell of Bethany, Virginia, along with Walter Scott and others introduced this usage among the churches commonly known as "The Reformation." This spread throughout the States, Canada, Great Britain and other countries. The late Dr. John Thomas originally belonged to this body, and was the means of giving prominence to the Scripture teaching regarding "the Gospel of the Kingdom of God," and immortality only through Christ. Many churches on this as a faith-basis, were gathered together both in America, and Great Britain, all of which may be said to practice the "edifying of one another" in their church meetings. I presume the same practice is followed in the churches connected with THE RESTITUTION; as well as in those more closely connected with what is known as the "Advent-ist" movement.

It may be of interest to notice here a variety of designations of religious communities, who seem, from their very peculiarity, to belong to the class of meetings we are treating of. In glancing over a list of 121 religious denominations in England whose places of worship certified by the Registrar-general, as at December 31st, 1873, amounted to 19,591, the following may be given as likely to belong to our category. Such for example are "Christian Believers"—"Christian Brethren"—"Church of Christ"—"Church of the People"—"Church of Progress"—"Eclectics"—"Followers of the Lord Jesus Christ"—"Free Christians"—"Free Christian Association"—"Free Gospel and Christian Brethren"—"Free Gospel church"—"Free Union church"—"Glory Road"—"Hallelujah Band"—"Peculiar People"—"Primitive Christians"—"Recreative Religionists"—"Revivalists"—"Revival Band"—"Second Advent Brethren."

I am not aware of the order followed by those termed Mormons, or what position their elders occupy in regard to speaking in their assemblies, but I rather think there is considerable liberty of speech allowed among them.

It must be acknowledged that notwithstanding the freedom of speech implied in the practice under consideration, the general tendency is towards speech and management becoming the monopoly of a few. In some cases one individual has the burden laid upon himself. There are not a few instances, however, in which a different state of matters obtains. In one church numbering about a hundred members, as many as a dozen take part in the speaking, and others in like proportion. This has been owing to special encouragement being given to the cultivation of this department of Christian usefulness.

It would seem that a great difficulty in all church organizations is the securing the two requisites of order on the one hand and liberty on the other. The texts quoted seem to indicate that in the assemblies of the church in the time of the apostles there was some provision for a certain amount of liberty of speech, as well as of "things being done decently and in order."

This requires the members of such a community to keep in mind that any one who exercises the liberty of speech can only do so by the suppression for the time being of the same liberty on the part of every one present. On the other hand when one prefers to remain silent and to enjoy or profit by the speaking of others, he is perhaps by his silence imposing an undue burden upon others, which it may be his duty to share with them.

Some remarks on the Scripture bearings of mutual edification in a future article.

FAITH, HOPE AND LOVE OF TRUTH.

S. G. CLARK.

About the year 1840 my attention was called to the subject of the coming of the same Jesus who was once on this earth, and when I found that the Bible taught this truth of all truths, I fell in love with it, and no more looked on death as the coming of Christ. Upon this glorious truth hangs all the promises in the Bible.

Without this great and grand event the Bible is of no value at all to me. I have never seen the time since I found this pearl of truths, that I did not love it more than all things else.

The fulfillment of all the promises to the church depends upon it.

If I could have my choice of all the crowns and all the riches of earth, and the Lord not to come in my day; or the most abject poverty with the soon coming of the Lord, I would take poverty and pray come Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

O, how my heart would rejoice if I knew the Blessed One would come in 1881. For this I live, for this I pray. Though I love all the Bible truths, the coming of Christ is the grand truth.

I have often asked myself the question, Why is it that so many who believe the Bible do not rejoice in the hope of the soon coming of the Lord? I can understand why the old churches do not have this hope. They believe death is life, and they will go to Christ when they, or the old house they live in appears to die, (I say appears to die) because they do not believe that the body is what is alive, but the body is the house in which the man lives. Then why should they want the Lord to come if they go at the falling down of the old house, to where there is joy and pleasures forever more?

But when I see those who believe the Bible, not wishing for the Lord to come quickly, I ask Why is it?

It may be because some who believe the truth do not love it. Others believe the truth, but think that in death their sleep will be so sound that a thousand years will be to them as no time at all (which is true), therefore it is no matter if he does not come for a thousand years to come.

I believe in the sleep of the dead, but I cry, Come thou Blessed One, come quickly! This I cannot help; I do not want to help it.

Then when I see many professing to believe the truth and say they are too poor to take THE RESTITUTION yet take political papers, and have plenty of money to dress in fashion, and for political meetings, and say THE RESTITUTION costs too much, I ask again. Where is the love of the truth?

O, what is the chaff to the wheat? What is the dross to the gold? Give me the wheat, give me the gold, and others may have the riches of earth and its emoluments.

Letter Drawer.

SEVERANCE, Kan.

Editor Restitution:

We have moved from Nebraska to this place, and expect to remain here some time.

The brethren here seem to be interested in the things pertaining to eternal life.

This winter will long be remembered by many. To-day the snow is falling fast, and everything looks gloomy; but soon the Redeemer will come to Zion, and all will be bright. I hope he will soon come. Now is the time for us to be faithful, for the crown is nearer than when we first believed.

LOT CLOVER.

SALEM, O.

Editor Restitution:

Just at the time I was thinking of writing to renew, I was taken suddenly sick, being confined to my bed two weeks. My affliction renders me entirely dependent, hence my means are limited.

I have always managed to take the paper since I was baptized, and would like to do much more, but cannot. My hope of the kingdom is all the treasure I possess. God grant that I may so live as to inherit eternal life in Christ's glorious and everlasting kingdom.

SARAH BURTON.

BLOOMER, Wis.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find renewal of my paper. I am thankful to you for sending it so long after it should have been paid. I must say it is one of the best of papers, and the only one I am very much interested in. Often the time seems long as I wait for its arrival.

The fulfillment of prophecy and the movements in the east, tell us that the long dark night of waiting is almost over.

Let us keep our armor bright, and watch a little longer, that we may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man.

Yours in hope of the soon coming kingdom.

MRS. N. G. CALKINS.

NORWICH, Ont.

Editor Restitution:

I hope this note will find you in good health. I send a few lines for the paper. I am still endeavoring to do up my work, and to be found among the waiting ones.

I am now laboring in this place. Paul had to complain of a Diotrephes. I have the same, but is he not the Lion of the tribe of Judah.

Scientists tell us that behind all phenomenon there is a force—unknown and unknowable—which produces all the movements which we observe. Nobody ever saw this force—nobody ever weighed it, or put a hand upon it; and yet science cannot dispense with the idea of it.

More by imperative feeling—more by inevitable instinct—than by any logical methods men are led to the belief that beneath this seen universe, which is a compound of fleeting, variable, unsubstantial phenomena, there is an unchangeable reality—an unknown and unknowable power—which science calls force, but which religion calls God.

The Bible—Is it not a wonderful book! Will the world ever outgrow it? If we reject it, then are we without any certain light on the mystery of the great unseen toward which we hasten. God help us all to watch and pray.

If you take this Bible from us, we must make another; for a Bible is a necessity to the moral development of man. But who shall write it? Weary human nature lays its head on the bosom of the Divine Word, or it trembles on the verge of the dark valleys that part the land of the living from the untried hereafter. Take this hand of human tenderness, yet of Godlike strength, or totter into the gloom without prop or stay.

They who look their last upon the loved dead, listen to this voice of soothing and peace.

Brethren and sisters, suffer a word of exhortation from your aged brother, who has been through all the phases of the Advent movement since 1842: cleave close to God's word; call no man master.

There is much error in these last days among us. I will name only a few: No resurrection of the wicked, the Sabbath, and Jesus the son of Joseph.

Let us live out the Bible religion, to be kind to all.

My prayer is, Come Lord Jesus, and take thy tired bride.

ELD. W. DEVEREIL.

ARGOS, Ind.

Editor Restitution:

I desire to say a few words through your paper to the brethren and sisters, concerning the preaching by Brother John Poore, while with us last winter. I was with him at his series of meeting at Argos, and at Antioch, and was pleased with the way he presented on the chart the plan of the ages, and the zeal and ability with which he set it forth.

It was very instructive, and I have talked with some of the brethren and others, and all were well pleased, and wished to hear him more.

Brother Poore is spending his time preaching, and those wishing preaching will do well to send for him. His address is Galesburg, Neosho Co., Kan. He has but little of this world's goods, so wherever he goes to preach, I hope the brethren will remunerate him, so he can go more.

Your Brother in Christ.

HUGH S. BARNHILL.

VICK'S
FLORAL GUIDE!

A beautiful pamphlet of about 100 pages, has come to hand. It gives a full description of a multitude of flowering plants, with elegant illustrations, and full descriptions of the best manner of cultivation, as well as prices of seeds of each individual variety. The vegetable department embraces all valuable varieties for garden and field culture, with prices for seeds in large or small quantities. For a number of years we have obtained our garden seeds from Mr. Vick, and always found them true to name and otherwise reliable.

For the Guide send ten cents to James Vick, Rochester, N. Y., and get a work replete with information for the florist and gardener.

—THE—
QUESTION BOOK.

The Question Book is now ready, and may be had of the writer, at 10c. a copy. Postage stamps taken for amounts under $1. Its full title is "Early Lessons, or Nurture and Admonition arranged in the form of Questions and Answers." One of the brethren in New York, ready to add a good cause, has ordered 300 copies; another, in Baltimore, writes, "our little church desires me to say that we will take two dozen of the Question Books. . . . I am truly glad that such a suggestion was made by that good sister, for it is just what our children need, and many of us older ones also, for most of us are children, only of a larger growth."

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!
—REVISED—
THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT
—BY BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 864 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

A Letter to a Friend!
—BY MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
E. S. DITHMORE.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. R. HARNISH.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, G. M. MYERS,
A. B. MAURER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 6, 1881. NO. 13.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Views of the Futurists Examined. Daniel's visions opposed to that theory. Christ's narration, Matt. xxiv and Luke xxi, does not harmonize with that school. Paul's man of sin conflicts with the sentiments. Seals contain a connected history of events from John's Day.

No. 62.

J. P. WEETHEE.

The expression τῇ μιᾷ τῶν σαββάτων is used by Ignatius (A. D. 107) to distinguish the first day of the week from the seventh; and called by that name as it was the day in which Christ, the Lord, arose from the dead. This was eleven years after John had his visions. It is said of Ignatius, he conversed familiarly with them (the apostles) and was perfectly acquainted with their doctrine; and had the hands of the apostles laid upon him.—St. Chrysostom.

Daniel's visions opposed to that theory.—We take it for granted that Daniel and John's visions are of equal authority, since they both had the same origin, and had views of the same agents so far as they were then future. Daniel's metalic image is a continuous, unbroken history of Gentile domination, to their subversion by the stone. The pure iron, and iron clay mixed represents the fourth or Roman empire in all its forms till the stone strikes the image. The mixture of iron and clay, covers the period of the Christian era; the same period as that occupied (we think) by John's visions. The point established by the metalic image is the continuous history of Gentile rule to a period beyond that which we now occupy. God revealed this to Daniel. The four beasts of Dan. vii. are symbols of the same four empires. The fourth beast is a symbol of the Roman empire. It is identical with the seven-headed and ten-horned beast of Revelation. This identifies the chronology of each history. It is a continuous history till he is slain, and his body consumed.

A literal history of events, beginning with the last three kings of Persia and extending to the resurrection, is found in Dan. xi. and xii. It is a literal chronological history, the Gentile monarchies being in their order. Persia, Grecia, and Rome. The God of Daniel was a God of strict order.

Christ's narration recorded by Matthew (ch xxiv.) and by Luke (ch xxi) is another literal, unbroken chain of history from the ascension to his literal return in his kingdom. These events have been accomplished in a very literal manner, and in the order of the narration. Fearful sights and great signs from heaven; then the fall of Jerusalem; then the long captivity, and tribulation; then the era of signs. We have here a list of events which Christ thought necessary for his disciples to know, while he remained away from them. John was one that Jesus here addressed. He, therefore, had previously heard Christ's literal history of the Gentile age. About 60 years later, Christ again appears to John, in his banishment, and gives him a symbolic history of events, more impressive, since it addresses both the eye and the ear. A literal history would then have been dangerous since it would have added to the persecuting spirit.

Paul's man of sin presents another objection to the view of the Futurist. This is also a literal history of a specialty—the great apostacy, extending from his day in its secret workings, to Christ's return. "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth (hindereth), (will let) until he be taken out of the way. Then shall that wicked man be revealed." Thess. ii. 7-8. That the holding-back power, here named by the apostles, was Pagan Rome, seems very clear. And such was the view of the early Christian fathers. The early Christians prayed for the Roman empire, since, by the words of Paul, it prevented the revelation of the great chief of the apostacy. When the northern barbarians began to invade and to destroy the unity of the empire, the revelation of the man of sin was looked for with much anxiety. The point which we wish to be made the chief argument, is this: The apostacy whose pontifical head was the Papal hierarchy, began its work in the days of the apostles, and continued its work continuously to the present time, and therefore, covers the Christian era, and will work till removed by the coming of the Son of man; that since he speaks of one apostacy only; and that it covers the whole time till Christ's return; and that John speaks of a similar apostacy under a church symbol (woman) which continues only till Christ returns, they must be identical; and if identical, its history is in the past, and not in the future. The whole plot, and scenery of the apocalyptic visions indicates it to be a chart for the Christians during the absence of their Lord and Master. We can discern no other object in the Revelation itself. A blessing is pronounced on the hearers and readers of the book. What Christ is to do after his return, that has no special effect in forming our characters in this age, he will make known to us personally. We are now living under a dispensation of faith, hope, and love. Then, faith and hope will give way to full possession. The seals, we have seen, form a book,—a picture book; it is no ordinary picture book. It is full of living views of the Roman world. Many eminent historians have written of these times. We are interested in following their narrations, as they have attempted to paint the scenes, actors, and actions of those ages by means of words. Now and then a picture helps the immagination; and we strive to give life to the image. But it is not real. We cannot make it live. We have no breathing that will give them life and motion.

John is called to an open door to read, and hear read a history of quite another character; a book of landscapes whose skies, and seas and lands are full of life. He reads with his eyes and ears. Everything is in motion, persons of noted character, ride forth on various colored horses; commands are given. The results are all seen. Commands are heard, and the obedience soon follows. The book is full of these living pictures of the Roman empire. John scrutinizes them with great interest. He simply tells what he saw and heard, he adds no comment. He is simply a pupil and reporter. He was once asked who were certain persons, and whence they came! his reply was, Sir, thou knowest. Such was his great interest in that book, that he wept much, because no one had been found worthy to open the book and to be its reader. One was found,—the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David.

The history of the Roman empire that the evangelist was permitted to read and to examine, is one of its own kind. No human being could have originated such a book composed of sheets, on which were landscapes full of beings, living and acting;—a book of panoramas; a book exhibiting the moving empire in advance. Such appears to be the character of the Apocalypse, God's closing revelation. It is the chart of the Roman empire while struggling with the elements of her dissolution.

Other objections against the interpretations of the Futurists might be urged. (a) The whole book to the 19th, chapter, presents Christ as the officiating High Priest. He is the Lamb of God. And that being his official position, it shows that the events of 18 chapters are to transpire under his priesthood, while he remains in the most holy place. It is, therefore, the history of events to transpire before his return or the resurrection; consequently before the day of judgment.

The fifth seal presents a scene quite unlike those who seem to cluster around the day of the Lord. So likewise, of the drapery and actors of the first four seals. The sealed in Rev. vii. have no crowns, which will be given them when Christ appears. When Christ returns, or, while he occupies his throne of judgment, it will not be under the symbol of a Lamb, the emblem of his priestly office; his name will be called, the word of God. He is a triumphant warrior:—the King of kings, and Lord of Lords. Many expressions in the last three or four chapters of the Apocalypse present Christ in another official position. The first 18 chapters contain the history of Christ's priesthood the remainder is the history of his reign. This must be kept in view during our investigations.

The Apocalypse contains internal evidence that its chronology is that of the decline and fall of the Roman empire. If you compare their agencies, they are quite similiar. No author can write the civil history of the great empire without dwelling more or less on its ecclesiastical history. They are so blended that no human mind can divide them. Gibbon saw the difficulty. To explain the visible changes in civil domination he was forced into church movements. The reason is obvious. Rome had always been religious. The empire, till the days of Constantine, was a worshiper of many gods. It had nationalized all religions except Judaism and Christianity. A powerful priesthood administered daily at the numerous altars of each separate divinity. This entire idol priesthood, had over them a pontifex maximus a high priest, who was also the head of all civil power.

Constantine and six of his successors, though called Christian emperors, were high-priests of Paganism.

The Apocolypse photograps the empire under three different churches, the Pagan, the Christian, and the Papal. The first five seals, present the empire under the Pagan priesthood. The first vision of the sixth seal brings to view the final conflict of Pagan supremacy. The second division when the four winds are restrained, and the sealing takes place, covers the reign of Constantine; a reign of peace and prosperity. One of the medals of Constantine bearing on the reverse "beata tranquillitas", "blessed tranquility," is a confirmation of this testimony. All the historians who have written of these times, also bear witness to the vast numbers both of Jews and of Gentiles who were converted to the Christian religion.—Bagster.

We are about to follow the empire as it throws off the Pagan garb, and puts on the Christian uniform. What is its character? What elements does it carry into the Christian church? To answer these questions fully, is a task that we do not now propose to undertake. This will be attempted under another head of prophecy; for the present, we shall do little else than name the principal elements that, at that time, composed its character.

Its civil and religious elements were very discordant. The border nations were ready to invade the empire so soon as restraint should be taken away. Persia, for half a century, had given the empire much trouble. The tribes issuing from the German hive had been held back with great difficulty. The empire had within its bosom; distributed among wealthy Roman families, more than one million slaves; made such by the adverse fortunes of war:—subjugated, but not converted, ready to rise on any favorable occasion.

The religious elements were exceedingly varied as well as dangerous. Paganism was overpowered, not conquered. Some had become Christian, but the masses were, at heart, Pagan. Christianity, in form only, became popular. The empire, in name, was Christian, in nature, Pagan. It was constitutionally idolatrous. The people so long accustomed to the show of heathen worship, could not be satisfied with the simplicity of the Christian ritual.

The Jewish element created discord. Many become Christian, and consequently sowed the seeds of contention in their synagogues. Without the ability to persecute, they had its nature.

In the bosom of the Christian church were various divisions. From the days of Adrian, an apostate priesthood began to show its rising character and strength. In the days of the apostles it began to work. Christ's priesthood was in heaven; this sprang up in the bosom of the Church on earth. During Pagan supremacy, it was held in check. It was simply an episcopacy. When Pagan Rome was removed, it developed with amazing rapidity.

A great many people—perhaps a third of the population of large towns, and three-fourths of those in small ones—are far more anxious about the concerns of their neighbors than about their own. That is, if we were to judge from what they say.

LOOSE LOGIC.

O. R. L. C.

The gift of reason and of oral and written speech is a blessing of priceless value. on the right use of which depends our success in the gospel. To be careless in speech and argument is to be unfaithful to the truth. We may and do, through charity, excuse it in one another; but a person who allows himself in such a habit defeats himself and often repels his best hearers. I am very sorry to see this—in some of our ablest and most experienced speakers and writers. Haste may be plead in excuse; but we cannot afford to do our work in a hurry; better do less and do it well.

My love for those in whom I see this fault, and my anxiety that their great strength shall be more efficient for the truth, prompt me to write this, and I sincerely hope and pray that it may be received as it is written in the spirit of kindness.

On the last page of THE RESTITUTION, for March 2nd, is an article under this heading:

"Is man saved by Faith alone, or by faith and Works combined?"

In view of the apparent sense of caption and the nature of the article under it, I would respectfully say that it does not state any existing issue. It is a phantom of the writer's own creation; hence in discussing it he only beats the air.

His opening platitudes have no special connection with the subject.

1. He antagonizes the proposition "that faith must be the cause by which works are produced."

Must we understand him as debating against his own caption that "man is saved by faith and works combined?" Does he really believe that works which do not spring from a pre-existing faith will save? Can a man be saved by works who never had faith? He both argues and affirms both for and against this idea, and calls James to his aid. It would doubtless be useful for him to study the harmony between James and Paul on justification.

2. Did he ever know anybody to "predicate Christian character or salvation upon a dead faith?" If not, why does he throw out such language? I have quoted his words.

3. He has a "boat" with two interesting oars about equal in strength, either one of which used alone makes the boat whirl rapidly in a circle, but both used together with well balanced force make the boat move forward in a straight line. Exactly. That is a working faith, and faithful work—both just the kind we believe in. Then, underlying both and inspiring both, is something "better" than either or both. But how about that faith oar? Would a "dead" stick move a boat so lively?

4. He says, "there is no justification in a dead faith." Well, that is not our kind; that belongs to his phantom.

5. He says, "here baptism is coupled with faith by the copulative conjunction and as an equal condition of the promised salvation." Indeed! Terms connected by a copulative conjunction are equal!! In what grammar, lexicon or other book did he find that? I say a man "and" a dog are passing; do I mean that the dog is equal to the man?

6. Again he says, "Abraham's faith was imputed for righteousness, because God knew that he would do right!" Then the saints who will "persevere" are justified by faith. We don't care about the rest; they might as well be justified by works.

7. The quotations from James have really no place in this discussion; ii. 12-26 referring to works of benevolence in the general Christian life, and verses 21 and 22 to Abraham's offering of Isaac about fifty years after Abraham had "by faith obeyed" God. Certainly there is nothing in that act of Abraham at the age of 124 years to show how men are to become Christians now. "Faith wrought with his works," and so it must with ours from beginning to end, else our works have no saving power. Paul gives the credit to faith (Romans) and James does not contradict him.

May I say with all kindness but with all possible earnestness that it is more important to deal fairly with one another, and with one another's views, than that we be on either side of most of the questions which we discuss.

Youths' Column.

What the Birds Teach us.

Oh! little birds, God taught you songs
In many a changeful note to raise;
We hear you in the bush and cliff,
The meadow, and the dusty way.
He taught us, too, and we can sing
A sweeter, nobler psalm of praise.

Oh! little birds, God shaped your wings
To cleave at will the sunny air,
And soaring up o'er field and wood,
To glide in freedom everywhere.
And he has shaped for us our wings—
The winging waft of faith and prayer.

Oh! little birds, God gave you hearts
Of quiet joy o'erflowing full!
You live contented through the days
Of Summer sun or Winter rain.
And He can give us godliness
Mixed with content—our greatest gain.

Oh! little birds, God showed you how
To choose the tree that suits you best.
To weave the twig, and straw, and grass,
To bind the clay into your nest.
And he has shown us how to build
A house in heaven, where we may rest.

Oh! little birds, God grants you gifts
Exhaustless through the changing year.
And in the fields you find your food
Sometimes afar and sometimes near.
And He will give us all we want—
His children never need to fear.

Sunday School Times.

Present Truth.

A little girl was recently waked in the night by a severe thunder-storm. The vivid lightning and the crashing thunder at first frightened her, and she called to her mother in alarm. Then as her mother came to her bedside the child said: "But, mamma, my Sunday school teacher told me that Jesus could take care of me now in a thunder-storm just as easily as he did of the disciples in the boat; so I won't be afraid." And she quieted down to her sleep again. That child's teacher had made a right use of a Bible lesson, applying it practically to every day matters. And the result showed how much of good may come from a wisely spoken word by a loving teacher, even to a child out of a Christian home where the same truth has been often spoken before. The freshness of a teacher's word may give new power to a familiar truth which the parents have by no means ignored.

Well Spring.

Who makes it Rain?

Little Nettie stood by the library window one morning watching the rain as it fell in a steady patter, patter, upon the wet sidewalks. When she turned her face towards her father, who sat in his big chair before the fire, one might have fancied that her cheeks were wet with the rain too, and that her eyes were brimming full of rain-drops.

"O papa," she said with trembling lip, "it has spoiled all my pleasure! Just think of all of us, the nice carriage-load, all going up to the lake on that lovely picnic! and—then—they took it this rain!"

Nettie's tears poured in showers, and she sank upon the sofa, burying her face among the pillows.

Her father, who dearly loved his little girl, went towards the sofa; and gently placing her upon his knees, he talked very kindly to her about her disappointment, and told her that he was very sorry for her; then he said:

"Nettie, who makes the rain?"

"Why, God makes it, you know, papa. No one else can make the rain come."

"Well, Nettie, why does God send the rain? Is it for good, or for evil?"

"For good, I guess; only—only—if he only would not let it rain to-day, I should be very glad."

"But supposing God wanted it to rain to-day, my daughter?" said her papa very seriously.

"Did God really want it to rain to-day, papa?" said Nettie, with wondering eyes. "Then I will not say another word about it. I want it to rain too, just because God knows what is best. Why, papa, I never thought about it before; but it seems to me that it is a wicked thing to fret about the weather whatever it is; for God sends it, and he always does right. I wish I could forget my own wishes when God wants to do anything." And the little girl kneeled upon her knees in her father's lap, and asked God to forgive her for her complaining of the rain, and teach her to love whatever was his holy will, whether it suited her or not, for Jesus Christ's sake.

There was sunshine in that home all the rest of the day, in spite of the pattering rain without; and, better than all, Nettie was never heard to utter a complaint about the weather again.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 9.

JESUS—THE CHILD OF PROMISE A SON OF DAVID, AND OF ABRAHAM.

If one of the little boys, to whom I am talking, were of the house and lineage of Brunswick, or Hanover;—a first-born son of that House, we should know at once what great things were in store for him, if he should live to become a man. We should know, that by and by when the reigning sovereign, Queen Victoria, was dead, that he would be crowned king of the great English Empire.

Well, we have found that Jesus is of the house and lineage of David, that he was really born of the royal race of kings, and is the first-born son of the last of David's family.

Then the throne of David rightly belongs to him, nobody else can take it, because there is no other heir to dispute the right with him.

What was once David's kingdom, must sometime be his kingdom, because God promised David, to give his son, his throne to hold forever.

You see now what the wise men meant when they asked, "where is he that is born king of the Jews?"—and that Herod's fears were not groundless, when he sought to put him to death; do you not?

You have learned from the 3rd chapter of Gal. that whatever was promised to Abraham, was promised to Christ—that when God deeded the land of Canaan to Abraham for an everlasting inheritance, he deeded it to Christ for an everlasting inheritance, and from Genesis that he is sometime to possess the gates of his enemies—or to take all their cities and their power away from them, and rule, where they now rule.

You have learned to, that he is David's son, and so must have David's throne and kingdom forever, and now that you are sure of this much, you are sure too, that God will sometime seat him upon his holy hill of Zion in Jerusalem, according to his promise.

You are sure that his throne will be just where David's throne used to be, and that he will not only reign over David's kingdom that was once overturned, because he is David's son, but that he will also reign over all the earth, because he is God's Son.

You have now taken some of the first steps toward coming to Jesus. You have learned what was promised to him and to us, in the Old Testament Scriptures. You have identified him as the seed, or child of promise. You are sure that he is the one to whom God promised the land of Canaan and all the earth, from what God has said about him in the New.

But you will want to know what good it will do you, now that you have heard, and understand, all about the promises made to Abraham to Isaac and to Jacob, to David, and to Christ? Do you not know that the same promises are made to you, if you will be good, and will mind God?

You may have a place in the kingdom of Jesus. But God says, "you must first believe there is going to be such a kingdom, and then do just as he tells you, before you can get into it.

That is the reason we have been trying to teach you what we have about the kingdom.

God meant there should be such a kingdom in this world, when he first made Adam and Eve, he put everything under Adam's rule, but Adam did not mind God and the great kingdom of earth, was taken out of his hands.

He meant this, when he told the woman "that her seed, or son should one day bruise the serpent's head"—meant that Jesus would sometime overcome and destroy all evil, and reign in its place.

Jesus said, that his Father had covenanted to give him a kingdom,—to give the twelve disciples a kingdom, and that it was also his good pleasure to give the little flock a kingdom.

Jesus preached the Gospel, or good news of a kingdom when he was here on earth, and said that all who believed that Gospel, and were baptized into that faith should be saved.

But you can't believe that of which you know nothing. You must know what God has said about this kingdom before you can believe there will be such a kingdom.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

Sententious.

Hope is like the sun, which as we journey toward it, casts the shadow of our burden behind us.—Samuel Smiles.

In the voyage of life we should imitate the ancient mariners, who, losing sight of the earth, trusted to the heavenly signs for their guidance.

Right habit is like the channel which dictates the course in which the river shall flow, and which grows deeper and deeper with each year.

Be thou with me; the way is dark and dear,
Vouchsafe, O God, to make the pathway clear.
Doubtful and various still my way must be
If thou dost guide me not,—be thou with me.

If the Christian religion were not fully in sympathy with every phase of the world's growing necessity, it would itself ere this have been outgrown.

Happiness is like manna. It is to be gathered in the grains and enjoyed every day; it will not keep; it cannot be accumulated; nor need we go out of ourselves nor into remote places to gather it, since it has rained down from heaven, at our very doors, or rather within them.

Over the mists of the wintry sea,
A message of gladness is sent to me,
And I pass it on to my friends to-night;
This message written in words of light;
Though darkness is the darkness in which we stand,
"The night is far spent, the day is at hand."

CHRIST'S GLORY.

Until he comes, he is the rejected one. His coming is to end the day of his long rejection, and to introduce the day of his acceptance—the day when he shall be owned by Israel, and by the world, as he is now by his saints—the day when he shall be owned on earth, as now he is owned in heaven. As the great Judge of all, his glory is yet to come; as the King of kings, and Lord of lords, his glory is yet to come; as the Last Adam, his glory is yet to come; as the Church's Head and Bride-groom, his glory is yet to come; as Israel's monarch, his glory is yet to come; as Antichrist's destroyer and Satan's dethroner, his glory is yet to come.—H. Bonar.

COMMONPLACE.

A commonplace life, we say, and we sigh;
But why should we sigh as we say?
The commonplaces sun in the commonplace sky
Makes up the commonplace day;
The moon and the stars are commonplace things,
And the flower that blooms, and the bird that sings;
But dark were the world and sad our lot
If the flowers failed and the sun shone not;
And God, who studies each separate soul,
Out of commonplace lives makes his beautiful whole.

"Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake."—Dan. xii. 2.

"A little while, and ye shall not see Me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see Me." John xvi. 19.

Wait awhile, the skies shall brighten,
And the warmer sunshine shall brighten,
O'er green woods, and tuneful meadow-lands.
Wait awhile—the dead long hidden,
By the voice of Jesus bidden,
Shall come forth, and sing and clasp our hands.
—Songs of Heaven and Home.

Carlyle.

"WHAT IS TRUTH?"

Jesting Pilate had not the smallest chance to ascertain what was Truth. He could not have known it, had a God shown it to him. Thick sorcon opacity, thicker than amaurosis, veiled those smiling eyes of his to Truth. He looked at Truth, and discerned her not, there where she stood.

What pleases only for the moment, whether poetry, or oratory, will die with the moment. What looks beyond the moment will live beyond the moment. What speaks to the intelligent few will at last make a conquest of the unintelligent many; what speaks only to the unintelligent many will never reach the intelligent few, and will soon be forgotten by the unintelligent many also.—Dean Stanley.

One of the lessons which young people have to learn from experience is the power, as well as the enduring quality, of deeds and words, and that they cannot talk idly as the wind whistles, or do carelessly as the reeds float, with no effect produced and no impress made.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, April 6, 1881.

For some obituaries and other articles we will endeavor to give place in our next.

SEVERAL names have been added to our list through the efforts of friends to the paper for which they have our thanks.

DISRAELI, the Earl of Beaconsfield, and the celebrated Jewish Statesman, is in a very critical condition. On the morning of April 4, his physicians regarded his recovery as quite doubtful. His career has been one of the most extraordinary in English history.

LET us all take hold at once to help Brother Magruder in bringing out his pamphlet. We have forwarded the little that we can spare in this direction, and urge upon all our brethren to inclose whatever they can spare, more or less, to his address, which is Stephen's City, (formerly Newtown,) Frederick Co. Virginia. Brother Magruder is not set for the defence of the gospel alone; we are all under obligation to uphold the truth.

To those who feel an interest in the forthcoming Revised New Testament the following item may be timely. Our brethren will no doubt be able to obtain a copy of the Authorized Edition at a moderate price when the work is put on sale. "The Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff, who was one of the American Committee on the Revision of the New Testament, says: The changes are so many that scarcely a verse in the New Testament remains unaltered. In many instances, however, the alterations concern punctuation and minor words. The revised New Testament will be on sale in England, Scotland, Ireland, Australia and the United States on the 20th day of May next.'"

FROM the American Publishers, I. K. Funk & Co. we have received a copy of the Analytical Concordance to the Bible, by Robert Young, L. L. D., and find it a work meriting lavish praise. It is truly a splendid monument to the genius of its learned authors as well as pre-eminently a paragon of excellency in this species of literature. We have not the space in this number to set forth its merits as it deserves. We advise all our readers who are at all able to obtain this work. To get the genuine article—the latest revised and authorized Edition—send your orders to the above named firm. See their advertisement in another place.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.

Palestine.

There is no country on earth with which so many fond, varied, and sublime associations are connected as with that land that has become distinguished from all others by the honored appellation—THE HOLY LAND: In this land, though of limited extent, the history of the world has centered. The land of Revelation, where the Patriarch and Prophet, the Psalmist and Apostle, have lived and acted their several parts in the great drama of human life, has been made more wonderful, as the locality where the Divine Creator has manifested himself in sensible visions, and where the Son of the Highest led an earthly pilgrimage among the children of men. As the Eden land it bordered on Paradise of old, that Celestia) garden of God, where the first pair walked in innocency amid the blooming bowers planted by Jehovah himself.

After Eden, the earliest name given to this land, was derived from the youngest son of Ham, and grandson of Noah, from whom it was called "Canaan" or, more frequently, the Land of Canaan. Though, strictly speaking, this name denoted the tract of country west of the Jordan and Dead Sea, and between these waters and the Mediterranean; while the high table land on the east of the Jordan was known as "the land of Gilead," "Land of Israel" and "Land of Promise" are the more general and comprehensive terms that embrace all the territory whether east or west of the Jordan. The land of Canaan, before the Israelites under Joshua effected its conquest, was divided among the eleven sons of Canaan from each of whom there descended a numerous clan or tribe who were subsequently dignified with the name of nations amounting to ten in the days of Abraham, and seven in the latter days of Moses; and these were the nations whom the children of Israel were commissioned to exterminate and possess their land.

The more modern Palestine, or Palestina, was a name derived from the Philistines, who expelled a tribe of aboriginal inhabitants, who were termed the Avim, and who were settled on a fertile plain bordering on the Mediterranean. The Philistines were also the descendents of Ham through Misraim and they seem to have obtained this name from their migrating habits, as Philistine is derived from a Hebrew word that signifies to migrate, and hence Philistines denoted the immigrants.

The situation of Palestine on the map of the world, in its relation to the three great divisions of the earth, as known to the ancients before the discovery of America, was a remarkable one. It was on the extreme western edge of the great continent of Asia, and separated from the mighty empires occupying the immense countries in the remotes East by a broad and almost impassable desert. On the South the arid and inhospital wastes of the upper part of the Sinaitic peninsula were interposed between it and Egypt, while on the North the lofty ranges of Lebanon and anti-Lebanon, and the deep chasm of the Litany, which courses along the feet of these mountains, cut it off from the regions of the upper and north-western Asia. The wide waters of the "Great sea" washed its western outline, and separated the Holy Land from the "Isles of the Gentiles" that embraced the known and unknown maratime regions of the west. In this strip of country, thus isolated from the Great Empires of antiquity, and in size something like the State of Vermont, or the principality of Wales, were enacted the most momentous events in the world's history.

It is sufficiently obvious, from a consideration of all the passages where the term Eden is employed, that it was the name of a very extensive region of country in western Asia, embracing Mesopotamia, Armenia, Syria, the Land of Israel, and Northern Arabia. The trouble with many has been in confounding, Paradise,—the Garden of God—that was eastward in Eden, with the whole district of county that went under this name. The Garden was connected with the Euphrates and Tigris rivers in some part of their course, probably with their confluence near the Persian Gulf. Wherever it may have been located, whether near the sources of these rivers, or at their confluence, Paradise proper was only a garden in the larger country that went by the name of Eden. In the very country where the first man lost the kingdom will be located the throne of the Restorer; though the garden of the first was on the rivers of the East, yet the throne of the second will be on the glorious mountain of the West in that territorial Land of Promise and seat of Divine Universal Empire, that has ever been so dear to God and man.

It is no wonder that the idea of a terrestrial paradise, as the abode of purity and happiness should have found a place in the traditional and legendary lore of all nations. The prophets and poets of Israel sang of it as a home of beauty, whose joys had departed. Other nations speak of a garden of enchanting felicity abounding with trees and flowers of surpassing fragrance and loveliness. Streams from the fountian of immortality meandered among these groves of eternal bloom to water arbors whose branches were clustered with the fruits of life. The traditions of the golden age are but the imperfect and broken echos of a "Paradise Lost." Still "they intimate how in the background of man's visions lay a Paradise of holy Joy,—a Paradise secured from every profanation, and made inaccessible to the guilty; a Paradise full of objects that were calculated to delight the senses and to elevate the mind: a Paradise that granted to its tenant rich and rare immunities, and that fed with its perrennial streams the tree of life and Immortality."

The Eden land of creation will be Immanuel's land in the restitution, and the Paradise of the infant world will re-bloom in the fadeless gorgeousness of the new Paradise of God. Palestine then is a portion of Eden land, and Eden land is the land promised to Abraham, and Eden land is Immanuel's land. Eden land was the fairer and more delectable region of a beautiful world, and Paradise was the Garden of delights—the Holy Elysium of Eden. God made man's first home in East Eden, and Israel's home in West Eden. Paradise and Palestine! The Garden of God, and the City of the Great King! The noble rivers of the East and the Holy mountains of the West! Adam and Jesus! Genesis and regeneesis! Death and redemption! A world lost, a world restored! And Eden land the theater of the great drama!

If sweet and holy memories linger around the enchanting word—Paradise, how intensified is every feeling in humanities' heart of hearts, when all the remembrances, and all the inwoven conceptions of Divine love in the economy of redemption are stirred by the name Palestine! Eden land has lost its pristine loveliness. The glad garden of God no longer blooms on the rivers of the East. But the "glorious holy mountain" of Palestine—Mount Zion—awaits the Heir's enthronement in the Land of Promise. Then Eden will have a king and earth an emperor. In future sketches we hope to describe Palestine in completer detail.

Communications.

Editor Restitution:

In my last article, I think I have proved the certainty of the restoration of the tribes of Israel to the land of Palestine, long since promised to the Fathers of the Jewish nation, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, although in my estimation, it ought not to require proof to any one, who understood the character of Jehovah, who changes not, see Malachi, iii. 6, or who believes his word, which contains scores, if not hundreds of promises upon this subject, and if these promises are not sufficient, it may be seen confirmed by the oath of the great Jehovah himself, see Gen. xxii. 16-17.

I shall now make a few remarks upon the location of the tribes as described to Ezekiel which can easily be seen to be dis-similiar to the arrangement under Joshua, I shall endeavor to throw some light upon this great subject, which has occupied so much of the attention of the Ruler of the universe, and on this account should not fail to engage our deepest meditation and study, promising at the same time, that many of the brethren may be fully acquainted with any ideas which I can set forth on this interesting subject, but knowing also, that many others have not given it all the attention and investigation which so important a subject demands, seeing that the fulfilment of those God-given promises, will change the whole routine of the government of this earth, and introduce the promised glorious period, in which "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Isaiah xi. 9.—It may be observed that the tribes during their former possession of the land, were not systematically situated under Joshua as they will be under the greater than Joshua, in this settlement there was no "holy oblation" set apart, which of course is not surprising, as it was to be only temporary so to speak, as it depended upon their obedience, and good conduct, they would be unable on these conditions to retain it; as these were traits of character which they never very strongly exhibited being murmuring children, nearly from the time of their deliverance from their hard bondage, during a period of many years: Under the approaching arrangement in the near future, a large portion of land is set apart, as an "holy oblation" to be "twenty-five thousand by twenty five thousand," of course we understand these numbers, as so many measures, or reeds, according to the "measuring reed" in the hands of the man who gives Ezekiel his information. Ezek. xl. 3. The length of this reed being somewhat over ten feet, and nine inches, constitutes the "holy oblation" to be about fifty miles square, or perhaps exactly fifty miles, as the Jewish measure as well as Jewish time, differs slightly from ours. This "holy oblation" is to be a site for the city of Jerusalem when rebuilt, which city will be according to the same measuring reed, 4500 measures, or about ten miles square, and also a portion for the Levites, and them that serve the city, and also suburbs, such as we call a common, for other purposes, for the use of the inhabitants. See Ezekiel xxxxviii. 15, to the end.

The northern boundary of the location and the land, is the "entering in of Hamath," with Dan for the northmost tribe, the distance from this boundary to Jerusalem is 213 miles, and the southern boundary of the location, but not of the land, is "Kadesh," with Gad for the southermost tribe. The distance from Jerusalem to Kadesh is 80 miles making the location from north to south 293 miles, there is remaining however, at the south of Gad, a distance of 80 miles, up to the river Sihor or Nile, which is the extreme southern boundary. See Josh. xiii. 1-3-8. Which allows the promised blessing mentioned in Deut. xxxiii. 20. "Blessed be he that enlargeth Gad," according to the distance of each boundary from Jerusalem, 213 80. i. e., 293 miles, we can see that the "holy" oblation," which is nearly in the center, will have a frontage, or seaboard, on the great sea, which is the western boundary of the land, of 50 miles, and each tribe will have a frontage, or seaboard of 20 miles making although 280 miles, with 8 miles yet unoccupied, and it is distinctly stated that each lot is to run from the east side in every case. See Ezekiel xlvii. 2, 3, 4, 5. etc., etc.—the river Euphrates is the eastern boundary of the land, and being 450 miles east of Jerusalem, the lots will be 450 miles long, with an outlet by navigation, at both east and west ends.

But why is this western boundary designated as the "great sea." Jehovah knew wright well, that there were far larger seas, as it regarded area of surface, and volume of water, in this respect the Atlantic, the Pacific, and Indian Ocean are much larger, there must be therefore some other reason, why it should be called the great sea, this sea is now known by all nations, as the Mediterranean Sea, taking its name from bounding the land known as the middle of the earth, or to use the Latin phrase, it would be called Mediterrene, or in our language the middle of the earth, hence the designation Mediterranean Sea, if I take a good map of the world, and a pair of compasses, and stick one point in Jerusalem, as located in the covenanted land, and draw a circle 9 or 12 inches, more, or less, according to the the size of the map. I shall include within such circle, the greater part of Europe, Asia, and Africa, excepting a few outskirts and a few islands, this sea is considered to be the key of the navigation of the world, a ship from the Mediterranean, can pass into any other sea upon the earth, consequently no other country in the world, will possess greater facilities for trade and commerce, than Palestine, with Jerusalem rebuilt as its Metropolis, hence, I consider it no undue stretch of the imagination to consider those future advantages as some of the reasons, why it should be called the "great sea," and also bounding a land, which Jehovah calls "the glory of all lands," as described by the prophet Ezekiel, in chapter xx. 6-15.

This may be further seen by the prophetic language addressed to Zion in Isaiah lx. 3-6,—"Thou shalt see and flow together, and thine heart shall be enlarged, because the abundance of the Sea shall be converted unto thee, and the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee." Evidently the reading of the translation in the text, in this instance, does not convey a fair meaning, the marginal reading is much preferable, as follows, "the noise of the sea shall be turned to the, and the wealth of the Gentiles shall come unto thee." This gives good sense, most likely the navy of the world, will in a short time, consist of those noisy, screaming steam ships, employed for every purpose, and the commerce of the world in them, will be turned to Jerusalem. Steam ships at no very distant period, will supplant the slow, uncertain sail vessels. We have a further account in the same chapter Isaiah lx. of the resort of the Inlands countries bringing from the interior, all the products of those regions, in the following language: "The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah, all they from Sheba shall come, they shall bring gold, and incense, and they shall show forth the praises of the Lord, all these camels, etc., which some writers designate as the ships of the desert, will maintain the inland commerce throughout the countries where there are no navigable waters, all turned to Jerusalem, so that it will be the center of attraction, and the market of the world, at no very distant period of time.

I am aware that large numbers of professors throughout the so-called Christendom, spiritualize these Scriptures, and apply all these promises to the Gentile church, or in other words, they apply all the prophetic promises to the church of the Gentiles past and present, and leave all the threatenings and curses to the Jews! but it is certain that the prophets spake of old Zion, or Jerusalem, and the scattered seed of Jacob, or Israel. I would like to see how they can spiritualize camels, and dromedaries, and many other things which Jehovah has spoken. The facts is that nearly the whole professors of the world, by their spiritualizing process, have spirited away the truth of the things of the kingdom of God and its glorious attendants, so that nothing is left as a foundation, to those who make the foolish choice of following them; but the fancy of some man, or body of men, who may choose to set forth some nonsensical dogma, of their own brains, in opposition to the law and testimony, Ergo, no light in them.

The truth is, if God does not mean what he has spoken, just as it stands, we defy creation, man or angel, to find out what he does mean! of course we do not understand parables, figures, or shadows literally, but wherever, instruction or information, is intended to be conveyed, we take the literal promises to be as true as God himself, knowing that every promise which he has given is supported by language spoken, and repeated to the prophet Ezek. in chapters xvii. 21, 24, chapters xxii. 14, and xxxvi. 36, viz. "I the Lord, have spoken it, and I will do it, so be it.

THOMAS CHURCHILL.

CHRIST OUR PASSOVER.

1 Corinthians v. 7.

JOHN POORE.

Some of the brethren are anxious to know when will be the right time to take bread and wine, to show the Lord's death till he comes.

The breaking of bread and taking wine was instituted at a yearly feast, and we have no knowledge that the Lord has ever changed the time, or Passover.

It was the blood of the paschal lamb, sprinkled on the door posts of the Israelites in Egypt, that secured them against the destroying angel that slew all the first-born; and that blood pointed to the efficacy of the blood of the Lamb of God.

The type found the antitype in the Lord Jesus Christ.

It is now the sacrifice of his life, or blood, that we commemorate at the anniversary of his death. Therefore, a yearly evening feast or remembrance, showing forth his death.

Brethren in case partake of this ordinance on the day of Christ's resurrection to show his death; but if it be done once a week, try and take Thursday evening.

The time of its observance this year is on Friday evening, April 15, after the first full moon after the spring equinox.

The Lord permitting, myself and family will celebrate the event at my house, on Friday evening, April 15, 1881, at eight o'clock. We live three and one-half miles east of Galesburg, Neosho Co., Kan.

Friends of our Redeemer, who find it de irable, will be welcome to unite with us.

DETROIT, Mich.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find two dollars to apply on my subscription.

Last year I had THE RESTITUTION sent to several beside myself; and I hope they have renewed their subscriptions as soon as they ran out—at least I should think they would rather than do without it. I know if we have any desire for the truth we would not be afraid to take great pains to get it.

We are told to buy the truth and sell it not. There must be a willingness on our part, if we expect to be partakers of the heavenly blessings. The Father will not give them unless we ask for them, and if we ask and receive not it is because we ask amiss. The Lord Jesus gave himself a sacrifice for the sins of the whole world, and we as individuals must make our sacrifice if we would inherit eternal life.

Paul said, "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable, unto God, which is your reasonable service; and be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

O, do we realize the importance of first making a sacrifice by giving up all things that offend? Putting on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.

It is no easy matter to do this, but this is a warfare in which we are to fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life. If we strive we must strive lawfully.

Christ said the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant seeking goodly pearls, who when he had found one of great price, went and sold all he had and bought it.

Are we willing to do as much? Are we willing to pluck out our right eye, or cut off our right hand if it offends?

I take it that the Savior meant we must cast away our dearest earthly treasures for the heavenly. We do not expect the world will see as we do in these things, for they are heaping to themselves treasures in earthen vessels.

But we, the little flock, the Bride of Christ, who look for him to appear the second time without sin unto salvation, are we ready to be baptized with the baptism which he was baptized with—death?

We have all, no doubt, obeyed the figure, but are we so well drilled in our profession that we could resist unto blood, striving against sin?

Let us examine ourselves, for the clouds are thickening fast; the wrath of God is about to be poured out upon the earth.

I ask in God's name, can we sacrifice too much for Christ? I can say for one, No. Our time and our means are the Lord's, and we are his, and he careth for us. So let us be about our Master's work if we expect to be rulers and reign with him. We have got something to do this side the change. We are not to fold our hands and say it is enough that we get ourselves ready; but every one has something to do. If we can't talk, we can write, or we can give our mite to help those more fitted than we. Because we have but one talent is no good reason for burying that. God forbid that one who has been begotten by the spirit should have the thought.

Brethren and sisters, let us be diligent, that we may be found of him without spot and blameless. Let us remember he bare our sins and we must bare his righteousness. We must wear the white robe now and keep it free from flesh spots. How are we to do this? Not by our own strength alone.

David said unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had almost dwelt in silence, but the Lord is my defence, and my God is the rock of my refuge.

We need to feel our dependence on God; to feel that we are nothing but poor dependent mortals.

May the Lord help us to be bright and shining lights; a city set on a hill, that cannot be hid. Let us grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; to him be glory both now and forever.

Yours in the blessed hope through Jesus Christ.

MRS. M. A. FINK.

Editor Restitution:

The xii chapter of Isaiah is the most interesting portion of the Scriptures, to those Israelites who are looking for the coming of the Messiah. The language seems to be particularly addressed to Israel in the flesh and is such as those who may be converted, may be expected to use in the day of their final triumph. In that day thou shalt say, "oh Lord I will praise thee." Though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comforted me. This is the beginning of the rapture of a restored people, and from the manifest clearness of the deliverance expressed in the whole chapter preceding this, the tones of triumphant joy expressed in this are natural and such as might be expected to burst forth from a ransomed people. The 3rd verse is peculiarly interesting, it is particularly addressed by the prophet to Israel in the flesh. Therefore shall ye natural Israelites draw water out of the wells of salvation. It might properly be asked who are the wells of salvation. To this question we will try and give an answer at some future day. CHRISTADELPHIAN.

News Items.

SPAIN.

DESTRUCTIVE FLOODS.

LONDON, April 2.—There were severe floods and gales on the Spanish coast of the Mediterranean yesterday, and considerable destruction to property in Andalusia.

GREECE REJECTS THE PORTE'S PROPOSAL.

LONDON, April 1.—A despatch from Athens to the Morning Post says: "Premier Coumoundouros will telegraph to the Greek agents in Europe that Greece cannot accept the Porte's proposals."

THE REBELLION IN HERAT.

LONDON, March 30.—The viceroy of India telegraphs that he has received a telegram from Candahar confirming the report that a rebellion had broken out at Herat, and that the place is besieged; also that a report has been received at Candahar from Farah that Ayoob Khan had been taken prisoner.

PARIS, April 1.—The French troops sent to protect the Algerian tribes from the marauding Koroumi had a sharp fight March 21 with the Tunisps. Several were wounded on both sides.

ALGIERS, April 2.—The last engagement between the French troops and the Tunisian raiders was on Thursday. It was a very serious affair and lasted eleven hours. Six tribes were engaged. Several other tribes are hesitating. It is believed that all those on the frontier are willing to join the aggressors at the first signal. The French troops have been reinforced.

SWITZERLAND is fortifying her mountain passes with the elaborate works that should have been commenced years ago, so as to make her situation more secure than it has been. There are indications threatening the independence and sovereignty of that country, growing out of the increased perils which now surround the heads that wear European crowns.

MADRID, April 3.—A bomb was exploded under the windows of the palace of the Duke of Sontess. No one hurt.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 3.—The Porte agrees to cede Khotour to Persia, as demanded by England and Russia, in accordance with the Treaty of Berlin.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 3.—A military cordon surrounds this city, and nobody is allowed to enter or leave the city without permission.

AFRICA.

ALGIERS, April 2.—Four natives, belonging to Colonel Flatters' party, on a mission of exploration for the Trans Sahara Railway, arrived at Quargla on Monday last, bringing details of the almost complete annihilation of the expedition by the natives.

ROUMANIA.

RECOGNIZED AS A KINGDOM.

BUCHAREST, April 4.—England, Italy and Turkey have recognized the Kingdom of Roumania.

BOUND TO HAVE WAR.

LONDON, April 4.—An Athens correspondent says: Here nobody believes in peace. No anti-war Ministry could remain in office a week.

SCIO.

EARTHQUAKE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 4.—10 a. m.—A strong shock of earthquake at Scio, in the island of that name, yesterday, destroyed many houses, and seriously damaged nearly all that were left standing.

Later details say that many inhabitants were killed, and the remainder are encamped in the fields. Many neighboring villages were destroyed. During the panic which caused the Eastern Telegraph Company's offices were pillaged.

Shocks were also felt in Syria and at Smyrna, but no damage is reported.

ATHENS, April 4.—A Government dispatch has been received concerning the earthquake at Scio, which states that the effects were also felt at Tsesme, and that the number of persons killed and injured are estimated at 3,000. The earthquake was also felt at Cerosto, Enbola, and Tinos.

TROOPS FOR THE GREEK FRONTIER.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 4.—At an important Cabinet council, on Sunday; it was decided to send fifteen battalions of troops to Kossovo and twenty to the province of Thessaly.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

Provoke not your children to wrath, lest they be discouraged. Col. III. 21.

"I Love You."

A tired woman hushed to sleep her nestling babe. Beauty once made her face radiant, perhaps, but all that beauty is gone now. The blue eye is dim and faded—the pale brow covered with lines of care. Perhaps, with that far-off look of hers, she sees three little graves, green with as many Summers. Her home is very humble—all day she has toiled, and the fainting spirit almost surrenders to fatigue, the downcast eyes tremble in tears—she is so weary. And every nerve tingles when the "boys" come hungry from school, some with a tale of sorrow that mother must hear.

And after they were hushed with kisses or chidings, it is time to get supper for seven hungry mouths, and the accustomed, never ending routine of putting away and cleaning up, till the worn-out creature wonders with a sigh if there really will ever come a rest to her—an eternal rest.

At last she can rest her weary limbs in the old corner rocking-chair. The babe, whose eyes close fitfully to a lullaby, lies in his father's lap. He is a plain man, that good father, with an honest face and a great heart, that would take in all the cares and sorrow of the household.

The babe sleeps. With a rude gentleness he lays it on its mother's bosom, and as the ruddy fire-light plays over her care-worn features, he looks upon her with eyes, suddenly grown lustrous and beautiful. He lifts his great hand softly till it rests on her shoulders, as he says:

"I love you, Mary."

How the poor heart leaps into love, light and rest. How vanish the cares that trod upon her very soul. She reflects not now that the pretty babe with pink-flushed cheek against her breast has worn her patience thread-bare with its constant fears and unrest. She forgets that the fire would smoke, the broth burn, that the children teased her, that the clothes-line broke, and that her whole frame ached with fatigue.

What were these in comparison with the stedfast love that has burned for eighteen years and is the sunlight of happiness, through the clouds of despair, when the beauty that made her winning and the freshness of her youth departed forever? What cared she for ought outside her home, though she had many sorrows, while such words thrilled her whole being?

"I love you, Mary."

Ah! you long-married, repining husbands, who exact every attention and duty—how much would it cost to make your home thus beautiful, with all its cares? I tell you, one word will loosen great burdens from the shoulders of the woman you call your wife. Try it. Go home some night and look upon her with the eyes of long ago. For one moment think how great trials she took into her heart when she married you. Then tenderly clasp her hand, and as she looks with wonder-opened eyes say to her in a low and steady voice, not carelessly and operatively, but earnestly:

"I love you."

Trust me, it will be to her and to you both better than diamonds.

Poetry.

"HOW READEST THOU?"

Luke x. 26.

SELECTED BY E. A. MARSH.

'Tis one thing now to read the Bible through,
And another thing to read to learn and do;
'Tis one thing now to read it with delight,
And quite another thing to read it right.

Some read it with design to learn to read,
But to the subject pay but little heed;
Some read it as their duty once a week,
But no instruction from the Bible seek.

Whilst others read it with uncommon ease
With no regard to how they read nor where,
Some read it as a history to know
How people lived three thousand years ago.

Some read to bring themselves into repute,
By showing others how they can dispute;
Whilst others read because their neighbors do,
To see how long 'twill take to read it through.

Some read it for the wonders that are there,
How David killed a lion and a bear;
Whilst others read—or rather lo it look,
Because, perhaps, they have no other book.

Some read the Blessed Book—they don't know why;
It sometimes happens in the way to lie;
Whilst others read it with unwonted care,
But fail to find some contradictions there.

Some read as though it did not speak to them
But to the people at Jerusalem;
One reads it as a book of mysteries,
And won't believe the very thing he sees.

One reads with father's specks upon his head,
And sees the things just as his father did;
Another reads through Campbell or through Scott,
And think it means exactly what they thought.

Whilst others read the Book through Fl. Halon,
And if it cross his track it can't be true;
Some read to prove a pre-adopted creed,
Then understand but little what they read,

For every passage in the Book they bend
To make it suit that all important end.
Some people read as I have often thought
To teach the Book instead of being taught.

And some there are who read it out of spite,
I fear there are but few who read it right,
So many people in these latter days
Have read the Bible in so many ways,
That few can tell which system is the best
For every party contradicts the rest.

Communications.

IS LEAVEN THE SYMBOL OF SIN?

J. B. COOK.

The general answer is yes. This idea of corruption in leaven seems to have been taken for granted.

A few texts are quoted in proof. But do these texts go further than to illustrate the diffusive nature of the principle, which may be for good as well as for evil?

Let us note some facts; not for controversy, but for testimony, and for taking up stumbling blocks out of the path of many.

1. We all know that leaven is diffusive in its nature; and so is sin—moral evil, corruption. Hence the saying, "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." Mat. xvi. 8–12; Mark viii. 15; Luke xii. 1; 1 Cor. v. 2–8; Gal. v. 9.

Note the evil has its distinctive terms in these texts, aside from the leaven.

The unleavened bread was with bitter herbs and haste, to memorialize their state in Egypt. Ex. xii. 8; xiii. 6–9.

It belonged to that people and that age—till Christ. As the spoke in a wheel has its value from its place and relations, so the heavy bread and bitter herbs belonged to them with their priesthood and lamb, their altar and incense.

But to our worship all that is dead, that we may be married to Christ, the Resurrection and Life.

The apostles speak of bread over ten times, yet this question of the Pharisees, who urged the law, was not even named. Acts. xv. 1–20. Christ is the end of law for righteousness. Rom. x. 4.

2. Good principles are diffusive of good; and hence, this fact may go so far as an illustration, to balance the other. "Examples prevail where precepts fail." Unleavened and leavened bread were both ordained; and most appropriate to their end.

3. Divine wisdom grouped leaven in with the sacrifice of thanksgiving, Lev. vii. 13, which is always and altogether good.

The service was in its nature, a rising and uplifting of their affections; as leaven lifts or raises the meal, till the whole is leavened. This is the primal thought.

4. At the Pentecostal feast—a triumphal service of deliverance from Egypt—the wave loaves were baked with leaven. Lev. xxiii. 17.

Let this stand for the facts it records as to God's order to his chosen nation, for unleavened bread, on a great occasion.

Of course such was their Pentecostal bread, and yet it was for good to man and glory to God!

This feast, Acts ii. 42–46, was at their early harvest, and called for gratitude and raised affections. But as this was the first Pentecost, kept in view of their risen Messiah, and the inauguration of the Christian Church, under the power of the Holy Spirit, their affections were raised beyond all precedent! The disciples glorified in the Lord. The good spirit then leavened—raised—that whole lump.

5. The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven—till the whole was leavened. That is, till the whole was raised and pervaded with its own heavenly nature. Matt. xiii. 33; Luke xiii. 21.

Here the wisdom of God forestalls and forbids the notion of leaven as sin or evil. Hence this sustains the doctrine of leaven with thanksgiving. Lev. vii. 13, and their triumphal Pentecost. Lev. xxiii. 17; Acts ii. 1–42.

Nay more; it may show that leaven was noted here for its diffusive uplifting nature.

6. The fact that leaven was forbidden during the Passover—seven days—recognizes its lawful, healthful use in general).

Note.—Did the Holy One forbid leaven (as sinful) seven days, and then allow it? Nay, authorize it in the sacrifice of thanksgiving; and above all, command it at the Pentecost—their memorial of national deliverance and the ever-shadowing glory of their then present God and king? No. No.

The feast of un-leavened bread with loins girt and with bitter herbs, Ex. xii. 8–14, was a national memorial of their haste and terror in Egypt. But to forbid the symbol of sin seven days, and then allow and authorize it, seems monstrous!

7. However the enlightened conscience knows that sin is the transgression of law. 1 John iii. 4. Hence by all law, sin and its symbols are forbidden always and everywhere. By consequence, there is a fundamental mistake in making leaven the symbol of sin. For leaven was commanded and its use was obedience to God! This is the positive view.

The negative is alike decisive. The law of the spirit of life in Christ, makes no demand for unleavened bread and loins girt and bitter herbs. The suggestion seems ritualistic and Pharisaic.

Note.—If the example of obedience to the law at one point binds us, it binds us to the whole. Gal. v. 4. Hence it does not bind us at all. Unleavened bread has no place in these necessary things. Acts xv. 28. Be not entangled with the yoke of bondage.

8. The example of Jesus is authority. Supreme. Divine! But as he was born under law, he magnified it and made it honorable. But he was made both Lord and Christ, for this age and judgment. Acts ii. 29–36.

The voice from the exceeding glory says "Hear ye him." Matthew xvii. 1–5.

His example was obedient even unto death—the curse of the law—to redeem us from it.

Hence, we are under grace; and bound by the bond of love, in the faith of a new life, to hear him, as he spake in person and by his holy apostles. Matt. x. 40.

Christendom has largely assumed the example of Christ at the institution of the Lord's Supper, for far more than the unleavened bread, used at Passover under law. They confine the cup to the official class. Drink ye all of it, is made to say: Ye—the priests—drink the whole!

On that principle of assuming a point to suit a theory, they exclude the body of the church—the women and laity—from the cup.

But no; all such inference is fallacious.

The example and authority of Christ come to us through the Pentecost and the decision of the council, under his authorized apostles and the Holy Ghost, who came in his name.

The law and the prophets were until John. Since then the gospel is preached. This comprehends the new way to righteousness and life. John xiv. 6.

9. Jesus I admire and adore in his example, but I dare not garble the law—take unleavened bread out of its place with bitter herbs, to mar the gospel!

The Lord and Judge said: "Your lamb shall be without blemish . . . eat the flesh—roast with fire—unleavened bread and bitter herbs." True, Jesus, born under law, obeyed its Divine ritual. He set for us an example of obedience to authority then in force, and redeem to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works—the work of faith—labor of love, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Now, this is the work of God, that ye believe and obey him. Then, unleavened bread and bitter herbs are behind us. Thanksgiving is now becoming. We may speak of gospel ordinances, repentance, faith, baptism, and the Lord's supper, omitting the unleavened, as oft as did the apostles. We may break bread, be spiritually minded, have life and peace, and follow Paul as he followed Christ. Let no man trouble you, for with the above facts, the question of leaven seems settled.

It pertained to the Jewish ritual—not to the Christian.

THE CUP AT THE LORD'S SUPPER.

One strong man lately made an objection, aside from unleavened bread, which justified him, he thought, in refusing fellowship.

Christ took "the cup," and so he would have "one unleavened loaf," and only "one cup."

This surprised me, but as others may be so entangled, it may be well to add: "The families of Israel had each "the cup" at the Passover, and this, at times, required tens of thousands to meet the case. The high priest, the king, the just, that is every priest, king or justified one! Num. xxxv. 25; 1 Sam. viii. 11.

Again the bishop, Tit. i. 7, the deceiver, 2 John 7, the whore, Rev. xvii. 15. It takes in every bishop, the many deceivers, and Babylonian prelates.

Observe.—"The bishop," (official charge) becomes plural, "bishops," Acts xx. 28; Phil. i. 1, so I doubt not the "one cup" in Jesus' hand sufficed for his twelve apostles. But for the three thousand converts at the Pentecost, Acts ii., the plural cups would have been convenient.

May the Lord enlarge all our hearts.

A LECTURE.

Has Christianity Failed in its Object?

W. LAING.

In reply to the question: Has Christianity failed in its object? I have to answer, decidedly, No!

The reasons for that reply shall immediately be submitted to you; but before doing so it is necessary to state the grounds on which those who reject the Christian faith affirm that it has failed in its object.

So far as I am aware, the argument for the failure of Christianity is substantially this:

1. It has existed for eighteen centuries, and only a small minority of the world's inhabitants have adopted it.

2. In those countries where it has been generally accepted, it has failed to eradicate those evils which it ostensibly condemns, and seeks to overturn, viz: injustice, war, vice and crime; while unbelief in its claims, and the alleged facts on which it rests, is making rapid progress, not only among the operative classes, but also among men of education and culture.

3. The alleged mission of Christ, is the conversion of all mankind to his sway; and the establishment of a universal era of righteousness and peace. Yet the only result is what has already been stated. Therefore, Christianity has failed in its object.

Now, admitting the premises, which I frankly do, I proceed to show that the conclusion is fallacious. And having fairly, and candidly, stated my opponent's case, I request him to listen, as openly, to a statement of mine. And here I submit that the professions of what the mission of Christ seeks to accomplish should be judged of from his own statements; and the declarations of his apostles, whom he authorized to disseminate his doctrines. Let it be observed, then, that my line of evidence is not affected by any definition of the purpose of Christ's mission given in modern times.

My appeal is to the words of Jesus and his apostles. And surely, my infidel friend cannot object to this. I ask you not, now, to receive these words, as I do, but I ask you to see what they are; I ask you to look at what Jesus and his apostles said would be the effect of the preaching of his doctrines among men; and to judge whether the result agrees with these predictions.

Does this foretell a universal, or even a general, reception of his teaching?

"Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction; and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matthew vii. 13, 14.

Or this:—

"Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves. And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child; and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death. And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake; but he that endureth to the end shall be saved." Mat. x. 16, 21, 22.

In Mat. xxiv. 14, we have it recorded that Jesus foretold that the "Gospel of the kingdom would be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations;" but instead of a general reception of the testimony, he foretold that as his coming the mass of mankind would be as indifferent and incredulous regarding his message as were the contemporaries of Noah, toward his warning of impending destruction.

"But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall the coming of the Son of Man be." Mat. xxiv. 37–39.

On another occasion he exclaimed: "When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke xviii. 8.

The forecast which the apostles gave of the response which mankind would give to the Divine message is described thus:—

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of all that are good; traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. iii. 1–5, 12, 13.

"This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance: that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Savior. Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." 2 Pet. iii. 1–4.

Such is the result which Jesus and his apostles promised regarding the treatment Christ and his doctrine would receive, up till the time of his return.

And now, tell me wherein these predictions have failed? If his doctrine be received by a few only, is that different from what he promised? If unbelief, in various forms, from a soi disant "Rationalism"—to advanced Atheism, is fast spreading over the land; and finding supporters among men of learning and influence—that is precisely what Jesus and his apostles predicted.

Jesus promised that those who did believe, and were baptized, would be saved; and you cannot say that is a failure. You know nothing about it. He foretold that his doctrine would be received by a few; and you cannot deny that.

But did he not compare the kingdom of God to a grain of mustard seed; which though a very small seed, becomes a large tree, in which birds build their nests—a metaphor which manifestly represents immense progress? Mat. xiii. 31, 32.

Yes; but observe, it is "the kingdom of God" which is like that. See also Dan. ii. 34–45.

Throughout the teachings of Christ and his apostles, the kingdom of God is represented as a future thing—a subject of hope; a promised inheritance—to be given by God to those that love him; and to be reached through much tribulation—a kingdom still in the future, still the subject of earnest desire by the disciples of Jesus, who continue to pray, "Thy kingdom come!

But is it not said that, Every knee shall bow to him, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord? Did he not claim to be that promised one who is to establish an era when men shall—

"Hang the trumpet in the hall
And study war no more!"

Yes! most assuredly, yes! But who said these results were to be brought about by the proclamation of the gospel before Christ's return to this earth?

Not Jesus, not his apostles, not the prophets of Israel.

Jesus did claim to be the "son of David, who was to sit on the throne of David; and of whose government and peace there would be no end. His apostles proclaimed him to be that One under whose dominion the knowledge of the Lord would cover the earth, but all this is to be after his return from heaven, in glory and majesty.

He promised to return, and he said that when he came in his glory, then he would sit upon the throne of his glory. Mat. xxv. 31

He had come in humiliation, but he has promised to return, in his glory, and in the glory of the Father and all the holy angels with him.

Once he said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." John xii. 32. The historian tells us that by this he signified what death he should die. But he did not say that this drawing would be accomplished, while the heavens retained him. And herein, my sceptical friend lies the fallacy of your reasonings. The mission of Christ is not completed. If you can show from the words of Jesus or his ambassadors, that he or they taught that the triumphs of Messiah's rule would be effected by preaching; or during his absence from the earth, then you will establish your conclusions, but not as it is.

That elevation on the cross was necessary to his elevation on the throne of God's kingdom over all nations. So wrote the apostle Paul: "He humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow." Phil. ii. 8–10. And at the times of the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of the holy prophets of old, the Father shall send him in glory and power, to subdue the nations to his righteous rule; and enthrone him on Mount Zion. Then unto him shall the gathering of the peoples be. Isa. xi. 10.

On his glorious throne, he will rule the world in righteousness, and all nations shall be blessed by him, and call him blessed. He shall reign till all his enemies be put under his feet, and God be all in all. His mission will be a complete success.

You have no faith in all this, but you must admit now, that it is too soon for you to declare Christ's mission a failure.

If, after his return, the world remain as it is, and has been, then you may fairly say the matter has failed; but not yet.

Perhaps you may here object: "But Christ has failed to return. The dates assigned for his return have run out, and he has not come!"

The dates of his return! Did he or his apostles mention such dates? No, these are his words: "Of that day and hour knoweth no man; no not the angels which are in heaven; neither the Son of Man, but the Father." Mark xiii. 32.

What though men have fancied that they have discovered the date of the Lord's return; and published their supposed discoveries, of which the lapse of time has demonstrated the inaccuracy? That fact only confirms the words of the Christ, that no man or angel knew the day or the hour when the Son of Man cometh. If men, unauthorized by him, profess to be wise beyond what he revealed, you surely are not so unreasonable as to blame Christ for their folly!

The ignorance of the disciples regarding the date of their Master's return, was the reason he gave for their constant watching for it.

"Watch, therefore, for you know not when the time is," are his memorable words. Mark xiii. 33.

Jesus came as had been foretold "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." It pleased God to "make the Captain of our salvation perfect through sufferings;" and being so perfected God raised him from the tomb, to his own right hand, in the heavens, till the time appointed in the counsels of heaven, when he shall appear in glory and majesty, on the scene of his humiliation and rejection.

Then the ungodly and unbelieving shall be forced to confess that Christianity has not been a failure.

I must, however, close my reasoning. I have spoken directly, as to one who thinks Christianity has failed in its object, to give point to my words. I cannot tell whether any such are present, but if they are I beg to assure them that I have spoken in kindness. Convinced in my own mind that those who reject the Christ, and his teachings, are putting away from themselves the most glorious destiny, I would fain persuade them to think again.

You think that Jesus shall never appear on earth again; point to the length of time which has elapsed since he made the promise to return. But, what if he has been waiting on you? Perhaps you have read his parable of the barren fig tree, whose owner ordered the gardener to cut down; because it had yielded no fruit for three years. How the gardener pleaded that it might be spared one year longer, to see whether it would bear fruit; and that if still barren he would cut it down. And maybe the Lord Jesus has been waiting to see whether you would come to him and be saved.

As you are, what a miserable prospect you have before you! A few more years of enjoyment mingled with sorrow, it maybe with suffering, and then—to pass away—to be as though you had not been!

That, according to your own conception, is the only prospect before you, at the best.

Look at it; consider it; then think of the hope set before the believer in Christ Jesus. A life beyond the present; an everlasting life, without sorrow or pain—eternal being, in the effulgence of glory, honor and immortality.

All this, God, in his mercy holds out to you; for he "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life."

Suppose all this turns out to be true, (do you not think it possibly may) suppose this is the truth, and that you discover it too late, what misery you shall have!

Ponder, I beseech you, these words! It is not yet too late. Still God is beseeching men to accept the gift of eternal life through faith in his Son. God is in Christ reconciling the world to himself, not imputing unto men their trespasses. For God hath made him who knew no sin, to be sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

Edinburg, Scotland.

THE ANTI-INGERSOLL PAMPHLET.

Brother Chaplin:

With my grateful thanks for your kindly commendation to the Brethren and friends of truth of the proposed Reply to Ingersoll, I ask a little of your valuable space to report progress so far, considering that the Brethren have a common interest in upholding and defending the truth and in repelling all assaults on the blessed book which is the Rock on which we build our faith and hope.

The cost of one edition, of 1000 copies—of the work, is put at $275 on delivery of the books—one half to be advanced in cash when the manuscript goes into the printers' hands. This is upon the basis of 150 printed pages. If less, there will be some reduction of this rate. The manuscript is all ready, and I am only waiting to see how much of this sum can be contributed to make a payment without delay of the cash installment. So far I have received in cash only $39.30. I am informed from Cleveland, O., that $15 is in hand there, and will be forwarded and perhaps more with it. Adding this we have $54.30, of available cash. The cash required to go to press is one half of $275, i. e. $137.50. This leaves a deficit of $83.20, to make the cash payment and $220.70 to pay the whole of the printers' bill. To pay charges on transportation and sale of the work at various points of the country, will require at least $25. Add this to the publishers' charges and we have the whole cost of the work at $300. For this sum we get 1000 copies of the work in good style, on clear paper and fair type, with printed covers and bound in pamphlet style together with the electrotype plates from which an indefinite number of copies may be worked off for subsequent editions, at the cost of $110 dollars only for each new edition of 1000 copies. These terms are offered by a New York publishing House of high standing, and are the lowest I could get, after correspondence and competition with other Publishers in New York, Boston and Philadelphia, and with one of our Brethren engaged in the printing and publishing business in Chicago. I do not think better terms can be had for the work in fair, good style elsewhere.

I have reasons to think that the cash on hand will be somewhat increased by the 15th inst. but unless enough is advanced or certainly assumed by that date or at furthest by 1st of May, I shall not venture to print, as I do not think it right to go in debt to the publishers for the work, and rely on uncertain sales for means of payment, or indemnity. The publishers have indeed agreed, in reply to my enquiry if they would do so, to wait 60 days after the delivery of the books for the final payment, so as to allow for some receipts, from sales of the work, but all persons of any experience or information on the subject, know how uncertain and precarious that reliance is and I am therefore unwilling, with my own slender means, to take the risk. I give most freely my work and labor in the preparation of the work and do not look for any other reward than that of the woman in Scripture whom the Master commended because "she had done what she could." If others who feel a like interest in the great cause we are pleading before the people, can and will do what remains to be done, the work will be published and ready for use by the 1st, or 15th, of May.

I make this frank and full statement for the information of all concerned.

I have sent receipts in every instance by postal card or by letter for the sums paid and will return the same to all contributors, if I learn by 15th of April, that we cannot afford to print the pamphlet, which is to be entitled. "The Bible defended and Atheism Rebuked: A Reply to Robert G. Ingersoll's Lectures—Entitled: "Mistakes of Moses," "Skulls," "What must we do to be saved," by Allen B. Magruder, Layman and Bible Student; (with the motto) "Let God be true, though every man a liar."—Holy Writ.

Faithfully and Fraternally submitted.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

UNION PRAYER MEETING.

A. BOYNTON.

To all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, in sincerity and in truth.

"Q.—What is the chief end of man? A.—To glorify God, and enjoy him forever." What means are best adapted to this end? God's blessed and Holy Spirit. How are these means made most efficient? By heart-searching and prayer. In view of the great spiritual want now felt by the church, it is therefore suggested that we devote the hour from 7 to 8 of each Tuesday evening in a social or private effort for this end. A few texts explanatory. "Without me ye can do nothing." If I go away I will send the comforter which shall abide with you forever. The water (spirit) which I shall give shall be in you a well of water springing up into everlasting life." "Ask and receive that your joy may be full." "God is light, and in him is no darkness." "And now little children abide in him." For united prayer and its effects, see Mat. xviii. 19, Acts. i. 14; iv. 24-31. "If thou criest after knowledge—then shalt thou understand righteousness and judgment and equity, yea every good path." Prov. ii. 3-9.

'Tis midnight—"blackness of darkness" falls
On all the earth abroad!
Hush—list yet! Is that the trump which calls?
Yes, 'tis the voice of God!
Ye slumbering virgins awake—arise,
With all your lamps now trim,
The Bridegroom is coming in the skies
Go forth to welcome him.

Exegetical.

THE VOICELESS PREACHERS.

The first portion of Psalm xix. is a beautiful instance of the eloquence of nature in celebrating the glory of the Creator. Its beauty is somewhat obscured by the needless supplements in ver. 3, which have the effect of entirely altering the sense. By omitting the words in italics, "there is" and "where," and simply supplying the word yet at the beginning of ver. 4, the full sense of this exquisite passage will be seen:—

1. The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork.

2. Day unto day uttereth speech; and night unto night showeth knowledge.

3. NO SPEECH NOR LANGUAGE: THEIR VOICE IS NOT HEARD.

4. Yet their line is gone out through all the earth; and their words to the end of the world.

5. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the Sun; which as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race. His going forth is from the end of heaven, and his circuit from the ends of it; and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

The silent teachers of that great expanse, are imparting their lessons perpetually—day and night. They have an audience wherever intelligent beings possessed of sight are to be found. Their teachings extend over a sphere only limited by the influence of the heavenly bodies.

The fourth verse furnishes the apostle Paul with a fine illustration of the wide-spread diffusion of the glad tidings in the first century. He says (Rom. x. 16-18), "But they have not all obeyed the gospel; for Isaiah saith, Lord, who have believed our report? So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. But I say, Have they not heard? Yes, verily; their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world." Thus, without supposing that the Psalmist was giving utterance to a direct prediction of the preaching of the gospel, we can see a fine appositeness in the language of the psalm to the fact that "the gospel was preached to every creature which is under heaven."—J. Cameron's Bible Echo

Poetry.

TO-DAY.

HELENA M. HUNT.

O linger bright to-day,
While yet thy memories are fresh to me
I would recall thy fleeting hours, and see
What I have left undone,
What I have lost or won.

Have I denying Thee
My Great Redeemer, Savior, Lord of Life,
Left some weak brother battling in the strife?
And so the hours wore on
And no good work was done.

Had I no loving words
For doubting, trembling hearts that came to me?
Did I forget to bid them trust in Thee,
And cast their doubts away?
Then hasten and to-day.

Or did I seek to cheer
Some weary souls bowed down beneath their care;
Or did I help them, and those sorrows share,
While pointing to the Strong Deliverer nigh?
And so the hours went by.

Yes, linger bright to-day,
The Savior's Name was blest to me to-day,
The Rock of Ages was my strength and stay.
And so the day has gone.
Not lost dear Lord—but won.

Berlin, Mass.

Communications.

OBEDIENCE.

Faith Made Alive.

NO. 3

E. R. WILCOX.

The path of Obedience, must have a beginning,—the doctrine must have a form into which we can be molded; there must be a place and a way, where, and in which we can be born into the new life; where we can become related as a child, to the Father. That path of obedience, begins at baptism. Faith has not proved itself to be faith, until it there acknowledges by its works, that it is alive; until it there casts the disciple into the mold of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. It is the only mold of the doctrine, that God has given to man, "one faith, one hope, one baptism."

I have said that Jesus is the door into the fold. Baptized into him, the way is open to all the rest, we go with him into the path of life, through the baptismal death. We are born of water, that having the mind and spirit of submission,—of obedience,—that was in Christ; we may be born of the spirit, and become children of God, through a resurrection of the dead, and thus enter the Kingdom. John iii. 5; Luke xx. 36. Rom. viii. 11. Col. i. 18.

When we get into Christ, we become heirs with him, to the promised inheritance, because made children of God by adoption. We become of the household of God, princes of the royal line of David, and members of the Israelitish commonwealth. In Christ we are sons of Abraham, and in the bonds of the covenant. We are citizens of Abraham's country, and fit stones for God's temple.

It is impossible to come to the blood of Christ anywhere else; only as we come to it in Baptism,—because we cannot come to his death any where else. We can only show his death by being buried in baptism. When we come to his death, we come to the blood and the atonement is made; hence, the command, "Repent, and be baptized," every one of you for the remission of your sins.

And as in this ordinance, it has pleased God to make "the blood of Christ cleanse from all sin," it is no wonder that the repenting sinner in apostolic days, was in haste to be baptized.

The sorrowing jailor, having heard the word of the Lord and having believed with all his house, went the same hour of the night and was baptized, he and all his straightway. The Eunuch learned of Jesus, and was baptized in the first water that he came to. Paul only waited for the scales to fall from his eyes. The Samaritans were baptized as soon as they believed the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus. The Corinthians heard and were baptized.

But do we yet understand all that baptism is to the repentant believer? Unbaptized, he is, as yet without Christ, and an alien to the commonwealth of Israel. So the foreigner who lands on our soil, is an alien to our government (though believing in, and having respect to all its laws) until his naturalization papers are made out. So is he an alien to the commonwealth of Israel, until, by being baptized into Christ and taking his name, he becomes a fellow-citizen with the saints.

He is, until then, counted as a stranger to the covenants of promise. He has no lawful hope of inheritance in the land of promise. His name, as an heir, is not in the deed. He has not changed his relationship from a stranger to a child, and the stranger has no right to God's property, until, becoming legally a child, by the baptismal law of adoption, he can call God, his Father. "We become the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." You are all made one in him, in that ordinance.

The faith is only made complete in baptism. "By works, faith is made perfect." "By works, a man is purified, and not by faith only."

Becoming Christ's, we become Abraham's children and heirs to the inheritance given by promise to Abraham.

Jesus, is the son of God. Baptized into his name, we become his brothers and sisters, and legally related to the great family of redeemed ones. The name of our God is there put upon us, and until it is thus lawfully put upon us, we cannot by the spirit of adoption cry "Abba, Father!"

"They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God, but the children of the promise, are counted for the seed." We can only become children of the promise by getting into the great Abrahamic family, and we can only get into that family, by getting into Christ, and into Christ by being baptized into him.

As the ark saved Noah, so baptism in a figure now saves us. Christ is here made the ark of refuge that floats above the waters of the second death.

He who refuses to be baptized rejects the word of the Lord. The command is, that we be baptized; we may, like Saul do a part of the work, we may even simulate the ordinance, and act as if we belonged to the household of faith, but until we have filled the whole figure, "been buried in the likeness of his death," our work has not been directed in truth; we have not obeyed the voice of the Lord; we have not come into the fold, have not fulfilled the work of faith.

God is exceedingly jealous of his word. It has been those that kept his word in all past times that have been marked with the seal of his approval, and laid away, as precious stones to find a place in the Great House of Royalty, in the coming ages of glory.

It is not the hearer, but the doer of the work, that is justified. No man can be justified, no man has the testimony of God's word that he is justified, until he is covered with the blood, by coming in baptism, to the death of the Son of God. "Be baptized that your sins may be remitted." Having done the work, the testimony is yours that they are remitted.

The first-born of Israel, would all have been slain, with the first-born of the Egyptians, if the blood of the slain lamb had not been upon them doors. The destroying angel will not pass over those in the day of destruction who have rejected the blood.

In the path of obedience alone is safety; let us walk in it.

We cannot understand this matter too well. There is too much involved, to treat it with lightness or indifference, much less with scoffing.

Salvation is made just as dependent upon baptism, as it is upon belief of the Gospel, and it is important that we who have already obeyed, should sometimes review the subject, that we may be able to impress it in all its value and solemnity, upon those who are striving to find the way of life.

And again, it is important that we who have there been espoused to Christ, should look back, lest we forget the solemn obligations that the ordinance imposed upon us.

"We obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us" and "being then made free from sin, we became the servants of righteousness."

Have we continued "to yield our members the servants of righteousness unto holiness?"

We entered the path of obedience in baptism, are we still walking therein?

Are we doing the things that we have learned and received and heard? It is so easy to get out of the way, there are so many things to make us stumble and forget God.

The path of obedience is so narrow, it is so hedged in by commands, that unless we have the mind that was in Christ, and are constantly looking toward the end of the race and the heavenly country, we shall continually be turned aside.

The days are very evil. The battle must grow more and more fierce. The end of all things is at hand, be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer." Are we sober? watchful? prayerful?

These are all direct commands—all the voice of the Lord, that must be obeyed.

Remember that the test of loyalty is in the doing. We do not want to stand idle, when the time of labor is so near its close. There must be no trifling, no sound of revelry heard in the camp of those who have armed themselves to fight God's battles. They must pray, must watch, must work obedient to the Master's command.

The command is—"that we add all the Christian graces to our faith, that we cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness, in the fear of God."

The conduct must be good. We must be temperate, and patient, and godly, kind to one another and to all men. We must increase in knowledge that we may go right ourselves, and may show others what the will of the Lord is. May we be built up in the most holy faith, be kept in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

"We are near to the dawn of morning,
When the winds will cease to roar.
Watch, for the bridegroom soon is coming.
Then we'll land on Canaan's shore."

"MY GRACE IS SUFFICIENT FOR THEE."

HELENA M. HUNT.

"The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." Matthew xxvi. 41.

When we read these words of our Lord to his disciples in the Garden of Gethsemane, a few hours before the closing scenes of his life, we again behold an instance of the tender love and compassion that prevaded all his actions while dealing with the failings and imperfections of human nature.

Jesus had left his disciples, and pouring out his soul in prayer to the Father, was passing through that bitter agony alone and unsupported by earthly companionship. "Could ye not watch with me one hour" remonstrates the Savior gently, when on his return he found them sleeping, which fact draws from him the words of the following verse: "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak."

How easily we can understand these words, how true it is that the flesh is weak, weak to withstand those daily trials and temptations that are a part of our present probation, weak when we most need strength to run the race that is set before us, and it is when knowing this, that we must sadly realize how little strength we possess within ourselves to resist the power of sin. Known our own individual imperfections so well, how often must we feel discouraged and ready to say with Paul: "The good that I would do, I do not; the evil that I would not, that I do." How is this then? Surely it is because our faith is so small; we do not take hold of these precious promises. "My grace is sufficient for thee." I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. Did we but follow in the steps of our Divine Master sin would have but little power to harm; could we but answer the temptation in whatever shape it appears as the Lord answered, how different it would be with us. It is written "be ye holy as I am holy," it is written, "be ye angry and sin not, let not the sun go down upon your wrath," it is written "be kind to one another," it is written "speak not evil one of another." We know all this, but when it comes down to the practice in every day life—how many are there that do it. The Strong Deliverer who brought the children of Israel safely through the wilderness is not less mighty to save now than he was then, and no matter how strong the temptation, no matter how hard the trial or how deadly the foe, with our trust in the Lord of hosts, we will gain the victory; knowing that our light afflictions, which are but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding weight of glory. As we look forward then, to a realization of those great and precious promises, to that glorious inheritance provided for the faithful who abide in him, can all the changes and troubles of this mortal life have power to drive away?

Never, never as long as we can look up with the eye of faith and say:

"Rock of Ages cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

On the night before her execution, Mary Queen of Scots composed a short prayer, and sang it over by herself because she could not sleep. The words are very musical in the Latin which she used:

"In Domine Deus! speravi in te!
O care mi Jesu! nunc libera me!
In dura catena—in misera pœna—
Desidero te!
Languendo, gemendo, et genu flectendo,
Adoro, imploro, ut libe-es me!"

Here appears to be the passionate wish of a captive to escape. Perhaps it will show its sense better in a free translation into English.

O Lord God Almighty! my hopes in thee!
O Jesus beloved, now liberate me!
In durance the severest, in bonds the severest,
My desire is to thee!
In sighing and sobs, on bended knees lying,
I implore—I implore thou wouldst liberate me!

All amusements of youth to which virtuous women are not admitted, rely on it, are deleterious in their nature. All men who avoid female society have dull perceptions, and are stupid, or have gross tastes, and revolt against what is pure.

Prebities.

GILEAD, MOAB AND JORDAN.—The proposed site of the colony which Sir Moses Montefiro and other philanthropists propose for European Jews, is about twenty miles from Jerusalem. It comprises within its limits the luxuriant pasture-lands of Jaulan, the magnificent forest clad mountains of Gilead, the rich arable plains of Moab, and the fervid, sub-tropical valley of the Jordan.

The Society for the Propagation of the Jewish Faith, the headquarters of which are at Berlin, estimates the number of Jews in the world at from 6,000,000 to 7,000,000—about the same number that is supposed to have existed in the time of David. There are 5,000,000 in Europe, 200,000 in Asia, 800,000 in Africa and nearly 1,000,000 in America. Russia has the highest number of any country in Europe, and France the lowest. There are said to be more Jews in Berlin than all France, and nearly twice as many as in all Palestine.

In Persia they bottle up their tears as of old. This is done in the following manner: As the mourners are sitting around and weeping, the master of ceremonies presents each one with a piece of cotton wool, with which he wipes off his tears. This cotton is afterward squeezed into a bottle, and the tears are preserved as a powerful and efficacious remedy for reviving a dying man after every other means has failed. It is also employed as a charm against evil influence. This custom is probably alluded to in Psalm lvi., verse 8: "Put thou my tears into a bottle." The practice was once universal, as is found by the tear bottles which are found in almost every ancient tomb, for the ancients buried them with their dead as a proof of their affection.

A discovery of much archæological interest has recently been made in the Algerian Sahara. M. Tarry, who has been carrying on work in connection with the proposed Trans-Sahara Railway, having noticed a mound of sand in the neighborhood of Wargla, had the sand dug up, and discovered the top of a spherical dome. This naturally aroused his interest, and getting his Arabs to dig still deeper, he found underneath the dome square tower, then a platform of masonry, and finally a complete mosque. Continuing the excavations, M. Tarry soon unearthed seven houses in perfect preservation, and came upon a subterranean watercourse. At the last news, nine houses had been disinterred, and M. Tarry was getting additional assistance to clear out the precious watercourse, which he describes as sufficient to irrigate a small forest of palms. It is well known that the Sahara was at one time much more populous than it is now, and its trade much more extensive; but no one seems to have supposed that cities had been buried under its sands so recently as since the introduction of Mohammedanism.

The terrible Oriental plague known as the "Black Death," that in former centuries caused such devastation in Europe, and that in 1874 made its reappearance in Tripolis after men had long ceased to fear its visitations, is still alive, and has recently appeared in Armenia and on the borders of the Caspian Sea. In 1876 it showed itself in Mesopotamia. In 1878 it crossed the boundary line of Russia, and cases that were detected in Nishni-Novgorod, Moscow, and other places, spread uneasiness throughout all Europe. Germany and Austria closed their boundaries, and cut off all communication, railway as well as other, with the empire of the Czars. The dread disease did not spread in Russia, and finally disappeared from the European domain, some say on account of the energetic sanitary and quarantine regulations of Loris Melikoff, others because the atmospheric conditions happened to be unfavorable to its extension. But the Black Death has continued its work ever since, and has just given a sign of renewed activity by annihilating a whole party of pilgrims from Mecca, and crossing the Euphrates to show itself once more in Mesopotamia.

Interior.

The negotiations at Constantinople with reference to the Greek frontier, make but little progress toward a solution. The ambassadors of the powers are unweariedly urging upon the Porte the necessity of further concessions, while the Greeks positively refuse to abate a tittle of what they claim the Berlin Conference awarded them. The negotiations, it would seem, are conducted upon a rather novel principle. In order to obtain an identical report upon which the powers may base their communications to one another, and such agreement as they may reach, each ambassador is to interview the representatives of the Porte singly, or in company with one colleague, and urge upon them the desired concessions. These interviews over, the ambassadors will meet in general conference and report the results reached and their impressions as to the intent of the Porte. They will then discuss the results, and draw up an identical report, to be sent by each ambassador to his own government as the basis of its negotiations in the matter. Whatever the results of the conference may be the probability now is that they will be nullified by the attitude of Greece; for whatever may be her weaknesses, a lack of tenacity is not one of them. It is probable however, that the position of two at least of the powers has added not a little to her combativeness. The French circular, predicting that a general European war would follow upon hostilities between Greece and Turkey, was a direct inducement to the Hellenes to persist in their demands. The well-grounded impression that Germany would as soon see war break out as not, and the publication of the German staff report that Turkey has only 80,000 men on the Greek frontier, instead of the 100,000 she has been claiming, is a further incentive in the same direction. Add to this the disturbances in Crete, where all is ready for a determined revolt, and there seems to be no way of avoiding a war, except by conceding to Greece all she demands.

IN MEMORIUM.

DIED—At Philadelphia, on Friday, March 18th, of consumption, brother Justus R. Dull, in the 30th year of his age.—

A noble life is ended. A brave soldier of the cross has fallen with his armor on, and we are left to mourn the loss of a loving husband, a dutiful son, a good father, a faithful friend, and an earnest, active and hospitable Christian brother. It is hard to give him up; yet we "sorrow not as those that have no hope, and although he can work with us no longer in life, the firm and calm trustfulness of his death will be a lesson never to be forgotten.

In his religious associations brother Dull was originally connected with the Moravian church, but when advanced truths were brought to his notice over twenty years ago by Dr. John Thomas and others he eagerly received the word spoken and in spite of the most bitter opposition of kindred and friends, cast in his lot with the little band of believers in the kingdom and age to come. During the intervening years he battled manfully for the cause of Truth, but when the cold blast of Christadelphianism swept over the land he was left almost alone in this great city. When, about ten years ago, Brother Benjamin Wilson visited Philadelphia and established the little society on Fourth Street, Brother Dull joined with them, and was a great help in confirming the Truth in the minds of those with whom he was associated. He was one of the bulwarks of our Church. An earnest and forcible speaker, and a "Workman who needed not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," and withal a man of most kindly disposition, cordial in his friendships, and most generous hospitality.

The close of his life was a glorious example of the triumph of Christian faith. He knew that the end was nigh, and watched the approach of the enemy who would tear him from his loved ones, with fortitude, and with a calm assurance of faith beautiful to behold. He trusted in his Savior, and not a fear or a doubt crossed his mind, for he knew that nothing could separate him from the love of Christ. "Good night, Brother! I will see you in the morning." was his last farewell to the writer a short time before the end—and I can say in response "Good night, brother Dull," your earnest words, and the calm and peaceful look of your countenance as you lay "at rest" will not soon be forgotten.—We will meet in the morning.

We buried him yesterday at Laurel Hill Cemetery, and our brother's hope was told to the assembled brethren and friends, in words of eloquence and beauty by our brother H. V. Reed, who spoke from the text selected by brother Dull.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." May the black night of sorrow soon fade away before the bright beams of the Sun of Righteousness.

"Then we shall meet and part
Mid the holy and the blest."

SAMUEL WILSON.

Philadelphia, Mar. 22, 1881.

Every duty brings on peculiar delight, every denial its appropriate compensation, every thought its recompense, every love its elysium, every cross its crown; pay goes with performance, as effect with cause. Meanness over-reaches itself; vice vitiates whoever indulges in it; the wicked wrong their own souls; generosity greatens, virtue exalts, charity transfigures and holiness is the essence of angelhood.

DISCUSSION.

MACY, Miami County, Ind.
March 3, 1881.

Editor Restitution:

I was at Argos, Ind., the evening of March 3d, and heard one T. W. Drennen, a German Baptist, and in his discourse he offered to discuss the points of difference in faith with any man the brethren might select.

By solicitation of the friends, I agreed to debate the following propositions:

Resolved, That trine immersion, as taught by the German Baptists, is essential to Christian baptism.

T. W. Drennen affirms.
W. J. B. Fenimore denies.

Resolved, That in death all things pertaining to man become unconscious.

W. J. B. Fenimore affirms.
T. W. Drennen denies.

Resolved, That the kingdom of God, spoken of by the prophets, Christ and the apostles, is yet future, and will be set up on earth.

W. J. B. Fenimore affirms.
T. W. Drennen denies.

The discussion to take place at Argos, Ind., commencing April 25, '81, at 10 o'clock, A. M., also that these resolutions be published in THE RESTITUTION. Each proposition to be discussed two days.

W. J. B. FENIMORE.

—THE—

QUESTION BOOK.

The Question Book is now ready, and may be had of the writer, at 10c. a copy. Postage stamps taken for amounts under $1. Its full title is "Early Lessons, or Nurture and Admonition arranged in the form of Questions and Answers." One of the brethren in New York, ready to aid a good cause, has ordered 500 copies; another, in Baltimore, writes. "Our little church desires me to say that we will take two dozen of the Question Books. . . . I am truly glad that such a suggestion was made by that good sister, for it is just what our children need, and many of us older ones also, for most of us are children, only of a larger growth."

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—BY BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christian's have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words have literally translated as to convey the true meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 891 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

A Letter to a Friend!

—BY MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

YOUNG'S Bible Concordance.

ONLY REVISED AUTHORIZED EDITION.

Containing every word in Alphabetical Order, with the Literal Meaning of Each, and its Pronunciation. Exhibiting about 311,000 References, pointing 30,000 various readings in the New Testament. Designed for the simplest reader of the English Bible. By ROBERT YOUNG, LL. D. Printed on heavy paper, with wide margins. One large volume (1,000 pp.), cloth, $4.50. Same bound in sheep, $5.00. Same in French im. morocco $7.00.

POSTAGE FREE.

Bremner says: "Crudens is child's play compared with this gigantic production."

John Hall, D.D., says: "Dr. Robert Young's Analytical Concordance is worthy the lifetime of labor he has spent upon it. I deeply regret that his natural and just expectation of some return from its sale on this side the ocean is not realized; and I hope the sense of justice to a most painstaking author will lead to the choice by many purchasers of the edition which Dr. Young approves—that of Messrs. I. K. Funk & Co., with whom Dr. Young co-operated in bringing out both the first editions."

☞ "Beware of buying any copy which has not printed on the title-page the words, "Authorized Edition," and "Revised Edition." All others are unauthorized and imperfect. Sole Agents for America, I. K. Funk & Co. 10 & 12 Dey St. N. Y.

GOD ESTABLISHED
—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—BY A. J. EICHANER.—

A new book, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in Indiana (within reach of us) can get this book at 10 cts less than the publishing price. Twenty pages, price 5c., 10 for 40c., 50 for $1.50.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL.

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—BY J. H. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or if for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE TRACTS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 2,000 Baptists, in 1865. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 50c., or assorted packages of 100, $2.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
7c for $1.00; 20 for 25c; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible use.

Roman Government a Failure. By A. R. Magruder.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it Proper? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are saints or sinners.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Litch.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or $1 for 60c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? H. V. Reed.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or $1 for 25c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. R. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. S. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; $1 for 15c, or $5 for $1.

The New Birth. Jonah Peters.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiz, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; $ for 10c, or $5 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 12 for $1.

Evangelism concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its original state. Add this to the foregoing catechism. E. Miller. A careful and intelligent examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 48 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xvi. and xvii. also an examination of Luke xix. and xxii. 64 pages, price 10c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 80 pages, price 10c.

The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence. W. H. Wilson. 48 pages, price 20c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 48 pages, price 20c.

Bible Triumphant. Rev. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. G. Beardsley, Congregational minister, and Rev. W. Kellaway, both of Rutland. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. 2. Affirmed by Beardsley. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatsoever, and that they rest in silence, until the resurrection. Cloth 50c., paper 40c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly what it says it is. 80 pages, paper 25c., cloth 50c.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future supremacy and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 112 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.00.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of its leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co. elegant type, good paper, 176 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To those of the publishable work send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—BY JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a new Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker continues in this book the rhythmy of the "Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of appropriate hymns of his own composition, which are worthy of a place in any hymn book. These bring the "Christian Testimonial" up to a much higher standard than before. We would book all we can get this week. Price 40c. each by mail.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL EXEGESIS,
—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters, or the earth from 1881 to 1885.

—BY H. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 96 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
B. F. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. E. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....Editor.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. MIMMACK,
WILEY JONES, C. M. NYES,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Brotherhood Article!

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 13, 1881. NO. 14.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the first "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked: eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for good salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Seventh Seal—Rev. viii. General View. Terms Explained.—Symbols Defined and Real.—Silence.—Seven Angels.—Seven Trumpets.—Another Angel.—His Office.—Cup of Fire, what? —The Results.—Angels Prepare to Sound.

No. 63.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Seventh Seal.—The book or roll which is being opened before John was composed of seven sheets fastened by seven seals. The evangelist had seen six opened by the Lamb, and their contents exhibited. One only remained. When that seal is opened and its scenic visions presented and fully explained, the revelations of the sealed book are completed.

The question that is readily suggested is, What agents and events are included under the seventh seal? Where is the chronological termination of the seventh seal? On the proper answers to these questions rest the correctness of our future expositions.

Seventh.—Does the word seventh include one unit out of a class of seven units? or does it comprehend the remainder of the book? Is it an ordinary unit? or is it the symbol of a perfect number? How is it used in the Apocalypse?

Let us examine the Number seven. What thought or thoughts does the word seven convey? How many Divine thoughts does it convey in the Bible?

Seven, in its ordinary meaning, includes a group of seven units of any kind whatever. Still, it often has a very different thought behind it. It stands for a completed number. Time was divided into sevens. God rested on the seventh day. This is a type of future rest. Heb. iv. 9. The seventh year was a year of rest; also the seven times seventh year was a jubilee. A week of seven days stands for seven years. Dan. ix. 24, 25. Jacob served Laban twice seven years. Pharaoh saw seven fat oxen, and seven lean ones; seven full ears of corn, and seven blasted ones, and was told that these double sevens stood for seven years of plenty, and seven years of famine. There were seven golden candle-sticks, seven times seven priests.

In the Apocalypse occur the following classes or orders of the sevens:—

1. Seven churches.
2. Seven golden candle-sticks.
3. Seven stars.
4. Seven horns.
5. Seven eyes.
6. Seven spirits.
7. Seven seals.
8. Seven angels.
9. Seven trumpets.
10. Seven thunders.
11. Seven heads.
12. Seven crowns.
13. Seven last plagues.
14. Seven golden vials.
15. Seven mountains.
16. Seven kings.

Whether the seventh, as applied to the seal, means one, or a complete number, of one thing we are sure, it is the last of the seals, and the last of the book.

What is the chronology of the seventh seal?

This question is one of very considerable interest, since it involves in a great degree our future expositions. Let us read and examine the Divine records:

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets. And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer (it) with the prayers of saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense (which came) with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast (it) into the earth; and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake." Rev. viii. 1–5.

The opening of the seals follow each other in regular order, without any space between the closing events of the one, and the commencement of its successor. The events of the sixth seal extend to A. D. 340, or it may reach a few years beyond that date; consequently these events must begin at that date.

The number of years covered by the seal will be examined when we examine the events of the seventh trumpet, since all the trumpets belong to the last seal.

The seventh seal consists of two scenes: the one in heaven; the other on the earth. The one in heaven is a temple service, and is connected with the priesthood of Christ; the one on earth consists of various military movements, and belongs to the empire. The seal opens with the Transition Age of the Roman Empire. We call it transition for the reason that the empire passed over from Paganism to Christianity. It doffed the dragonic coat and put on the Christian garb.

Such a national change in its religion is an event, the most noted that the world had ever seen. From a state of bloody persecution and death, Christianity was resurrected as the triumphant conqueror of the empire.

As Christ burst the bands of death, and, breaking the Roman seal on his tomb, showed himself alive and triumphant over his enemies; so, by the same resistless power, did the down-trodden, persecuted followers of Jesus, unlock the Roman tomb and step forth, victors of the empire. The two resurrections are analagous and accomplished by the same Divine agency.

No one can now describe the contrast between Christianity under Diocletian, A. D. 302–7, and under Constantine, A. D. 314–337. Diocletian was so confident that he had put an end to the Christian cause, that monuments, erected to his honor, had engraved upon them the following:

"The name of Christians, who had overthrown the Republic, being destroyed." "That the superstitions of the Christians was everywhere exterpated, and the worship of the gods restored."

Scarcely had the storms washed the dust out of their chisel marks, till it was announced that Constantine the Great, the sole ruler of the Roman world, was a Christian; that Paganism was overthrown, and Christians in possession of their lives, liberty, property, churches, their religious rights, and of the empire itself.

Such was the state of affairs when the seventh seal was opened. What followed? Silence, quiet. "Blessed Tranquility."

The four winds are still kept back. No order yet for their destructive agency to commence. The sealing has been progressing, and the servants of the living God have been marked with the seal; they have taken a public stand. Disputations between the worshipers of idols, and of the true God, are hushed into silence for the present. In the four quarters of the Roman world, there is a blessed tranquility.

John sees the vast empire at rest. The Christian Sabbath sends up its incense of prayer, which by assistant priests, is offered upon the golden altar. Between heaven and earth there is constant intercourse. "Heaven is opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon (through) the Son of Man." John i. 51.

As the Lamb officiates in the most holy, and advocates the cause of his saints, then dwelling under the pleasant skies of the Roman earth, by presenting the merits of his own blood, the Father dispatches his messengers to those on earth, to convey to them his aid and wishes; they return by virtue of the blood of his Son, laded with incense, the prayers of the saints, Rev. v. 8, to be offered upon the golden altar. Rev. viii. 3.

During a short period (half an hour; or a definite period for an indefinite one) there is a blessed tranquility. But it is only a lull before a storm. The pent up winds, restless under restraint, make the earth tremble with their gathering fury. A word of command and they would rush forth as angels of desolation.

TERMS EXPLAINED.

1. Silence in Heaven.—Silence: Greek σιγὴ, stillness of a multitude in an attitude to hear; used in one other place in the New Testament:

"And when he had given him (Paul) license, Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was a great silence (Greek σιγῆς πολλῆς) much silence—a stillness of many persons in heaven—in and around the holy throne and temple. As one act closes and the curtain drops there is a suppressed movement in the audience; when the curtain is again drawn, all is silence and expectation, with open ears and eyes, ready to catch the first sound and sight.

In like manner was it with the swift and obedient messengers in waiting about the throne.

About half an hour, Gr. (ὡς ἡμιώριον) about half an hour—a short, yet indefinite space of time, used in no other passage in the New Testament.

2. Seven Angels.—The scene opens by the appearance of the seven angels. These are a high order of angels, since they stand before God as the swift messengers of his throne. They are distinct from the priesthood; not of the elders, nor of the living creatures. The Jews reckon seven archangels. Whether these seven were of that class is not stated. They appear before the throne to receive each of them a trumpet.

3. Seven Trumpets.—Trumpets are sounded to give notice that the time for any noted event to commence, has arrived. In war they announce the commencement of an attack. These seven angels are about to mark the beginnings of great conflicts. They now receive their trumpets. Their commissions are given them.

Before, however, they enter upon their mission,

4. Another Angel.—This angel belonged to the priesthood, since he was stationed (Gr. ἔστη, Isa. Ind. pass. of ἵστημι) at the altar of incense; having a cup in his hand.

As there was given unto him much incense to offer upon the golden altar, some expositors have called this angel the Son of God; but it was the Lamb that opened the seal. Neither was it the altar for the high priest, it was the golden altar of incense where the high priests ministered continually, in the order of their courses. This angel was stationed at the altar, to receive all the incense brought to him by other assistant priests, which he offered upon the golden altar.

5. His office was that of a chief priest. It is here stated that he offered much incense, with, or added to the prayers of all saints. In Rev. v. 8, the incense is the prayers of saints. Why this distinction? How are the two passages made to harmonize?

Wm. Smith, in his dictionary of the Bible, has the following:

"In Rev. v. 8, it is the golden vials, not the odors or incense, which are said to be the prayers of the saints."

Our learned author adduces no proof, however, for his singular position.

He says on Rev. viii. 3, 4, "The incense is spoken of as something distinct from, though offered with, the prayers of all the saints."

He has the golden vials offered on the altar. Much incense is given or added to the prayers of the saints, and this compound is offered upon the golden altar.

The incense is a symbol of the virtue of Christ's atonement, without which the prayers of the saints would be inodorous, and could never ascend in a cloud before the throne.

In Rev. v. 8, and in Rev. xviii. 18, the word θυμιαμα is odors, so rendered in our translation. Our explanation, therefore, is the following:

The elders and the living creatures, had φιάλας χρυσᾶς, (phialas chrusas) golden vials or cups, full of odors, prayers rendered odorous or effectual by virtue of Christ's blood.

The angel that was stationed by the golden altar, had in his hand λιβανωτὸν χρυσοῦν (libanoton chrusoun) a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense that he should add it (much incense) to the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar.

In plain language, the former were prepared and accepted prayers; the latter, prayers to be compounded and then offered. The prayers were accepted. Rev. viii. 4.

6. Censer of fire.—Part of this burning incense was cast upon the earth. Christ said, I come to send fire on the earth.

Such fires were soon to be kindled in the Christian Church, and throughout the empire. The prayers of the church of this period tended directly to such a result.

7. Such result did follow in a few years; there were voices, thunderings and lightnings, and earthquakes.

Our remarks on the first scene of the seventh seal are now about to close. They have been intended simply to draw the attention to the Christian worship during the age of Constantine.

Read the life of Constantine; also an ecclesiastical history of that period, and compare them with the prophetic history, and you cannot fail to be struck with their close analogy. The priesthood in heaven had a response from every part of the Roman empire.

EXEGESIS OF PSALM 110.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

"The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

1. As far as the exercise of regal power, or reigning is concerned Christ's position, while at the right hand of the Father is a passive one.

2. According to my first article, Christ's work as an active agent is that of an high priest in the heavenly sanctuary. Thus, his entire work is ecclesiastical, and not regal.

3. The adverb until clearly implies that he will remain at the right hand of the Father until his enemies are made his footstool and no longer. Peter represents the heavens as retaining Christ until the times of restitution, when he will return to earth, which is to be the great theater of the restitution.

4. The Father makes the Son's enemies his footstool, and when he returns to earth he will place his feet upon them and trample them in the dust.

5. The Father makes Christ's foes his footstool by investing him with authority to rule over them. Compare Psa. viii. 1–8, with Heb. ii. 8, 7.

"The Lord shall send the rod of his strength out of Zion; rule thou in the midst of thine enemies. Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." Ver. 2, 3.

Before the Lord can send his Son—the rod of his strength—out of Zion he must first send him to Zion. Compare Isa. lix. 20 with Rom. xi. 26, and it will be seen that the Redeemer comes to Zion and deliverance comes out of Zion. He returns to Zion to turn away ungodliness from Jacob, preparatory to their deliverance.

The overthrow of the assembled nations will be necessary to the deliverance of Israel.

1. According to Joel iii. 1–5, all nations will be gathered about Zion when the Lord returns to Zion.

2. The Lord roars out of Zion and utters his voice from Jerusalem.

3. "The Lord is the hope of his people, and the power to deliver the children of Israel."

Thus, as the rod, sceptre, or his delegated power, he will roar, or utter the word of command, out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; or according to the previous chapter he will utter his voice before his army; and all faces will gather blackness. But before he roars or thunders from Zion, and utters his voice from Jerusalem he must return to Zion and be enthroned in Jerusalem.

Then as the sceptred King he will issue his commands from Jerusalem, and rule in the midst of his enemies; and strike through kings in the day of his wrath, and wound the heads (kings) of many countries, and fill the valleys with the dead bodies. Psa. cx. 2, 3, 5.

A corresponding text in Revelation describes the great day of the wrath of Christ, when the kings of the earth shall call for the rocks and mountains to fall upon them and hide them from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne . . . for the great day of his wrath is come. Revelation vi. 15–17.

This whole scene as described by both these prophets is located upon earth during Christ's reign in the midst of his enemies and millions of miles away; and striking through kings in the great day of his wrath.

Then, as the rod of Jehovah's power is going forth in Zion, he will smite the heads or kings of many nations. Psa. ii. 12.

Having been exalted in Zion, he will wield a sceptre of iron to dash in pieces the crowned tyrants of the world, and to bless all loyal judges and kings who will put their trust in him.

Thus, the text and context of Psa. cx. 4, and the corresponding texts represent Christ as the antitype of Melchisedek, as being enthroned in Zion and ruling in the midst of the nations. The analogy between type and antitype is complete.

There is no transition from earth to heaven in the verses before or after verse 4, which records the antitypical priesthood of Melchisedek. But the entire mission of both type and antitype is carried out in Mount Zion and Jerusalem upon earth, and among the nations.

No such transition having been noted, but every plain statement in the context affirming the direct opposite, the theory of officiating in heaven as the antitype of Melchisedek cannot be accepted.

Every text should be interpreted in harmony with all the plain statements relating to the same subject, in its context.

This being admitted, the time and place of Christ's anti-Melchisedek priesthood is settled. This is in perfect accord also with Zech. vi. 12; Jer. xxxiii. 14.

In the light of these references we may reach the following conclusions:

1. That Christ, as the Righteous Branch, will be a priest upon his throne.

2. That he will not be a priestly king until God's oath and covenant with David concerning the restoration of his royal heirs shall be ratified.

3. David never had a royal house in heaven.

4. Christ will then execute judgment and righteousness in all the land.

5. From this time forward David shall never want a man to sit upon his throne; neither shall the priests, the Levites, want a man to offer burnt offerings, and kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifices continually before the Lord.

Thus saith the Lord, If ye can break my covenant of the day and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not want a son to reign upon his throne, and with the Levites, the priests, my ministers. Jer. xv. 22.

David's throne and kingdom are now in ruins; before therefore, they can be given to David's royal son, they must be restored; and before they can be restored the great restorer must return, as taught by Peter.

For eighteen hundred years no king or priest have occupied David's throne or kingdom, or officiated in the priestly office; but when as king and priest David's greater son shall be seated on his throne, as the great antitype of Melchisedek, David will never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel; neither shall the Levites, the priests, want a man before him to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifices continually.

But David has no throne, or man to reign, or priest to offer sacrifice; therefore the eternal reign and perpetual priesthood to which Jeremiah refers in the foregoing quotation, must be future; because once seated on David's throne as a kingly priest, he can never vacate it, for there is to be no interregnum in the exercise of his kingly and priestly functions.

No king has sat upon David's throne or priest has offered sacrifice during the past eighteen hundred years; therefore Christ has not been a priest upon his throne, as he must be as the antitype of Melchisedek.

The Lord's covenant of day and night roll on with unbroken successions, therefore his covenant concerning the everlasting perpetuity of the reign of David's royal son, as a priest upon his throne must yet be future.

Before Christ can be seated on David's throne, never to vacate it he must return to earth. And when he returns to earth and is enthroned in Zion as a king and priest, to reign in Jerusalem and over the house of Jacob forever, he will have fulfilled all the requisites of a perfect type of the Melchisedek priesthood.

This view harmonizes all the prophets, Christ, and the apostles have said or written in reference to the kingly priesthood of Christ, and all the saints who with Christ will reign on the earth.

In my next I will notice the relation of departments of the new covenant.

Selections.

T. V. SEE.

THE FIRST PRINTED BOOK.

A Rare Volume from the Hands of Gutenberg to be Sold in the Brinley Collection.

Bibliophiles the world over are much interested in the approaching sale at auction in this city of the famous Gutenberg Bible, the first book ever printed from movable types, which was published in the city of Mentz in 1450-53 by Joannes Gooesberg. It is thought that the book is worth $10,000. The last copy sold, being printed on vellum, was purchased by the Earl of Ashburnham, in London, for £3,400, the highest price ever paid for a book. The Lenox Library has the only other copy of this rare work in this country. The one now to be sold comes from the library of the late George Brinley of Hartford; and Mr. Joseph Sabin, the bibliopole, who has examined the copy in the British Museum, the two copies in Paris—one of which is upon vellum—and three in noblemen's libraries in England, says that the Brinley copy ranks among the finest in existence, and that none of the paper copies that he has seen exceeds the present copy in general condition. This old volume is most noteworthy, because it illustrates the wonderful excellence of the art of printing in its very first specimen, justifying Mr. Sabin's epigram: "Printing was born a giant and had no babyhood." Unlike other inventions, it leaped to perfection in its first essay. It is agreed that there is but one book in existence which is the superior of this Gutenberg Bible as a specimen of printing, and that is the "Psalmorum Codix," also printed at Mentz in 1457, which is described by printers as "the most magnificently printed book known."

This Brinley copy was purchased in 1873 in London. It had been discovered a few years previously in the Archiv of the Predigerkirche in Erfurt. It is one of the first edition, is in Latin, and has the prologue of St. Jerome. It is printed in Gothic type, with hundreds of illuminated capital letters drawn and painted by hand. Many of the letters are heightened with gold. There are two volumes, and they remain in their original binding of thick oak boards, covered with stamped calf and ornamented with brass corners and centre pieces with bosses. The pages measure 15½ by 11½ inches, and many of the leaves are uncut. The work is without title pages, pagination, or signature. The first volume contains 324 leaves, of which one is in fac-simile and ends with the Psalms, while the second volume has 313 leaves, of which sixteen are in fac-simile. Six hundred and forty-one leaves are printed in double columns, forty-two lines to a full column, showing to connoisseurs that it is undoubtedly one of the earliest copies printed, as some copies known as a second issue have only forty lines to the column on each of the first eight pages.

The paper of this copy is strong and beautiful, and printers must admire the lustre of the ink used and the exactness of the register. The work is astonishingly fresh in its appearance, and is without the least stain, although never subjected to washing. It is believed that this copy was intended for the library of some noble one. The painted initials are each heightened with gold and decorated with arabesques, being the whole volume such exceptional excellence as to bring it ill fortune; for the hellebrast's knife has cut out some of its leaves, doubtless for the sake of the capital letters. By a bit of rare good fortune some sheets of paper were found, like that on which the Bible was reprinted, and the missing leaves were reproduced in photo-lithographic fac-simile, so that it is not easy to distinguish them. A precious feature of the present copy is its uncut pages, many of which, in the extreme upper margins of the leaves, contain the manuscript notes for the rubricator. Gutenberg must have read his proof with great care. Very few errors of the press have been discovered in this, his first edition of the Bible. One is the beginning of Psalm xxx., which is xxxi. of the English Bible, has been corrected in the Brinley copy, probably by the rubricator, by marking a caret in the text and writing the omitted word "speravi" in the margin.

HOPE THAT EVIL WILL HAVE AN END.

We must not, indeed, venture to conclude at once, from our conviction of the divine goodness and power, that evil will ever cease to exist, since we know not how to explain the existence of evil at all. We can only say there is some unknown cause for it; and that is a foolish presumption to think of assigning a limit to the effects of the unknown cause, except revelation guides us. But when we are told that Christ is to "reign till he shall have put all things under his feet," and "that the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death," this does afford some ground for expecting the ultimate extinction of evil and of suffering, by the total destruction of such as are incapable of good and of happiness. If "eternal death" means final death—death without any revival—no one understand what is meant by "Death being the last enemy destroyed," viz.: that none henceforth can be subjected to it. But if "Death" be understood to mean everlasting life in misery, then it would appear that Death is never to be destroyed at all; since, although no one should henceforth be sentenced to it, it would still be going on as a continual infliction, forever.—Whately's Scripture Revelations of a Future State.

Sententions.

The steps of faith always fall on the seeming void, but find the rock beneath.

It is easier to build temples than to be temples to God.

Nature has written a letter of credit on some men's faces which is honored wherever it is presented.

Like threads of silver seen through crystal beads,
Let love through good deeds show.

The beam of the benevolent eye giveth value to the bounty which the hand dispenses.

The things which we enjoy are passing, and we are passing who enjoy them.—Leighton.

It is possible to speak without believing, but it is poor speaking; it is possible to believe without speaking, but it is poor believing.

Govern the lips
As they were palace-doors, the king within;
Tranquil and fair and courteous be all words
Which form that presence win.

If thou wouldst find much favor and peace with God and man, be very low in thine own eyes. Forgive thyself little, and others much.—Leighton.

Seldom can the heart be lonely,
If it seek a lonlier still,
Self-forgetting, seeking only
Simpler cups of love to fill.
—F. R. Havergal.

The springs at the base of the Alpine mountains are fullest and freshest when the summer sun has dried the springs and parched the verdure in the valleys below. The heat that has burned the arid plains has melted mountain glacier and snow, and increased the volume of the mountain streams. Thus, when adversity has dried the springs of earthly comfort and hope, God's great springs of salvation and love flow freshest and fullest to gladden the heart.

Being in doubt, I say:
"Lord, make it plain;
Which is the true, safe way?
Which would be vain?
I am not wise to know,
Nor sure of foot to go.
My blind eyes cannot see
What is so clear to Thee;
Lord, make it clear to me."

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, April 16, 1881.

WE have received and forwarded some money to Brother Magruder, and hope he will succeed in publishing his pamphlet.

WE are entirely out of Lacier's pamphlet on the kingdom. We would say to our friends—Do not order books that are not in our latest list.

THE Bible is the great central fountain of heavenly light, while Religious Papers are only reflectors. If the different papers that are heralding the coming of the Lord, the establishment of his kingdom, and eternal life through the Redeemer, enlighten minds in darkness, is is because they reflect the truth. Let God have all the praise.

OUR readers will find a letter of no ordinary interest from a Cherokee who has carefully studied the Scriptures. We have sent him a Diaglott Testament. We have also sent out some tracts to ministers, too poor to pay, for gratuitous circulation. Our friends must help our relief fund that we may be able to do more of this kind of missionary work. When they read the letter of our Cherokee brother they will see that a little financial aid can be well employed.

FLOODS in the Upper Missouri have done great damage, submerging large tracts of country. The town of Green Island opposite Yankton, has been entirely swept away. In the city of Vermillion, Dakota, the water reached the second story windows of the houses. The occupants were taken to places of safety in boats. Thousands of people have been rendered homeless. Along the east banks of the Missouri cattle are lying dead in heaps, and living ones are skelatons and starving to death. On the continent of Europe gales and heavy rains from the ocean have swept across the south of Spain, causing many shipwrecks and some loss of life. The Guadalquiver inundated four square miles of the town, and forty of the country near its mouth. The floods at last accounts were increasing, threatening the city Sovile. Many houses in Malaga were in danger from destruction by floods, as four had already fallen. Late news is to the effect that the town Szeegdin, on the Theiss, in Austria, was in imminent danger, also, of being submerged. The cold, the storm, the flood, the earthquake and the epidemics—all these are but the beginning of sorrows.

THE COMMISSION.

Βαπτίζοντες αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Πατρὸς, καὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ, καὶ τοῦ ἁγίου Πνεύματος.

"Baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Mat. xxviii. 19.

Does this language mean that by being baptized into the name we come into the relationship of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, as expressed by those relative family terms, on the principle of our being brought into the Heavenly Household, and being thus constituted children of God by our adoption into this Divine relationship expressed by the name we are privileged to wear—or does it mean that we merely symbolize a formulated faith in the Triune Divinity revealed under the related names of Father Son and Holy Spirit, and that this symbolization must be transacted by a trine immersion performed by a dipping once for each name?

We shall try to investigate the meaning of the language in the spirit of fairness and candor, knowing that truth stands upon an immovable foundation from which no forces of error can ever displace her.

The preposition of, which occurs three times in our citation, has no corresponding word in the original, and is only employed in the translation to show that the words before which it stands, in the English version, are in the genitive case in the Greek. A word for word translation would reads Immersing them into the name—the Father's and the Son's and the Holy Spirit's.

After this manner the expression has been translated in the Latin Vulgate, which reads: "Baptizantes eos in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti." A word for word translation is: "Baptizing them in the name—the Father's and the Son's and the Holy Spirit's." Beza, in his Latin version, translates: "Baptizantes eos in nomen Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti." A word for word translation of which into English is: "Baptizing them into the name—the Father's, and the Son's, and the Holy Spirit's."

The only difference between the Vulgate and Beza is that the Vulgate renders the Greek εἰς τὸ ὄνομα by the ablative case—in nomine—in the name—while Beza more correctly renders the same Greek words by the accusative case—in nomen—into the name.

The Greek preposition εἰς denotes transition, motion from place to place, or from state to state. There is a difference between going into a city, and residing in a city. There is also a difference between being adopted into a name, and of being recorded in the name after being adopted.

Now as baptism denotes a transition from one state, or condition, in our relation to the Divine name, to another state or condition, therefore Beza is correct in translating into the Latin, by using the accusative case—in nomen—into the name,—instead of the ablative—in nomine—in the name, as the Vulgate renders the Greek.

The German follows the Vulgate by employing the dative instead of the accusative, but otherwise renders the Greek literally excepting the use of the imperative mood for the participle baptizantes. Its rendering is: "Taufet sie im namen des Vaters, und des Sohnes, und des heiligen Geistes." A word for word rendering into English is: "Baptize them in the name the Father's, and the Son's, and the Holy Spirit's." The Dutch reads thus: "Dezelve doopende in den naam der Vaders, en des Zoons, en des Heiligen Geestes." Of this a word for word translation is—the first word dezelve referring to Volken as an antecedent—i. e., the folks taught, (onderwijst al de volken dezelve)—"The name dipping into the name the Father's, and the Son's, and the Holy Ghost's."

The Swedish version reads: "Döpter dem, i namn Faders, och Sons, och den Heliga Andas." A word for word rendering of this is: "Dip them in name Father's, and Son's and the Holy Spirit's." In this version the article is only used before Holy Spirit.

By printing the word name in small capitals, to make it emphatic, and thus show that it has the article prefixed in the original, as some translators do in this case, the order of the words might be inverted, and the exact sense of the original be apprehended: "Immersing them into the Father's and the Son's and the Holy Spirit's NAME."

But it will still be strenuously contended by many, notwithstanding the decisions of eminent scholars to the contrary, that the phrase is elliptically written, and that it should, in order to be correctly understood, be fully written out, in this manner: "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and in the name of the Son, and in the name of the Holy Ghost;" and that the act of a separate dipping is to be performed for each separate name.

Waiving for the present the consideration that the name of the Father, is not Father, but some distinct name with which the term Father is in relationship or of which the Father is in possession, and the name of the Son is not Son, but some name that the Son possesses, and, therefore, that baptism is not to be into, or in, the names of Father Son and Holy Spirit as separate relative terms, but into the one name that marks not only the Divine relationship of each, but also the privileged relationship of the obedient believer.

The fallacy of supplying the ellipsis as above will best be seen by applying this process to other Greek phrases constructed precisely as the language of the commission is in its grammatical regimen.

Theophilus was bishop of Antioch A. D. 170–180, and is, by Eusebius, placed the sixth in order from the Apostles, and to whom three books addressed to Autolycus are ascribed. He is the first author that uses the word μία τριας, the Greek equivalent to the Latin word trinitas, first used by Tertullian.

From Hagenbach's History of Doctrines, we quote an expression of Theophilus in Greek where he speaks of God and the Logos, or word, and the Wisdom, or Spirit, of God in the same grammatical regimen as obtains in the language of the commission.

The quotation in the original thus reads:—

Αἱ τριαὶ ἡμέραι [πρὸ] τῶν φωστήρων γεγονυῖαι τύπος εἰσὶ τῆς τριάδος τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ λόγου αὐτοῦ καὶ τῆς σοφίας αὐτοῦ.

A closely literal translation of this expression is: "The three days [before] the creating of the luminaries are types of the ternary of the God, and of his Logos, and of his wisdom."

Here, as we have said, he means by Logos the Son, and by Wisdom the Holy Spirit.

Now let us take precisely the same course here as we are directed to take in the language of the commission in supplying an ellipsis. "The three days are types of the ternary of the Deity and of the ternary of his Logos (Son) and of the ternary of his Wisdom (Spirit)."

This would be making three triads, or trinities, in the language where Theophilus only intended to make one, just exactly on the same ungrammatical principle as the word name is three times crowded into the commission where the Great Teacher has only one name. Τριας in Theophilus' language has the same grammatical connection with God, Logos, and Wisdom, that name has with Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Just as God, his Logos, and his Wisdom, are grammatically related to the word trias, in precisely the same manner are Father, Son, and Spirit relatively connected to the one name. The trias embraces God, Logos, and Wisdom; and the name embraces Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

We will now quote a passage from our Lord in another place where precisely the same grammatical arrangement of three words in the genitive case, connected with one which precedes, occurs as in the commission to the apostles.

Ὃς γὰρ ἐὰν ἐπαισχυνθῇ με καὶ τοὺς ἐμοὺς λόγους, τούτον ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπαισχυνθήσεται, ὅταν ἔλθῃ ἐν τῇ δόξῃ αὐτοῦ, καὶ τοῦ πατρὸς, καὶ τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων.

—Luke ix. 16.

"For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory and in his Father's, and of the holy angels."

It is with the latter part of this verse that we have to do as an illustration of the unwarrantableness of supplying an ellipsis in an arbitrary way without regard to grammatical regimen. A word for word translation of the concluding phrase of this verse is: "When he shall come in the glory his own, and the Father's, and the holy angels'." This expression can only mean that the Son of Man is to come in his (own), his Father's and the holy angels' glory.

Now as the coming has the same relation to the words following in the genitive here, that baptizing has in the commission, and, also, as coming and glory are connected together, and with the rest of the sentence here, precisely as baptizing and name are connected in the commission, we can see what would be the result of filling in an ellipsis here as we are instructed we should do there. "The Son of Man shall come in his own glory, and he shall come in his Father's glory, and he shall come in the holy angels' glory."

Now we claim that if baptizing in connection with name is to be repeated three times because name is joined with three terms, then coming in connection with glory is to be repeated three times for the very same reason; as baptizing and coming are acts that stand in the same grammatical regimen with the words following.

To make the meaning of the text clear to the apprehension of every one let us substitute another participle of an active form in the place of βαπτίζοντες—baptizing—and for this purpose we choose the participle ἐπιτιθέντες—adopting—and the Greek thus changed would read:—

ἐπιτιθέντες αὐτοὺς [εἰς τὸν] εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Πατρὸς, καὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ, καὶ τοῦ ἁγίου Πνεύματος.

Translated "Adopting them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Now this changed expression not only exhibits a Bible doctrine, as we expect to show in the sequel, but it also has the same relation to other words in the sentence as the word in the language recorded by the evangelist. Would adopting into the name of some earthly imperial household that embraced a father as emperor, a first-born son as king, and another son as prince, require three distinct acts of adoption—one adoption into the name of the supreme father, another adoption into the name of the kingly son, and a third adoption into the name of the princely brother, in order to make a legal adoption into a relationship to those royal ones? By a human process we can be adopted into the name of earthly kindred, while it is by a Divine process that we must be adopted into the heavenly relationship. In either case we change status, and acquire the privilege of being called under the adopted name.

On this particular point, as well as on some others, we shall more fully expatiate in another article.

It is more than probable that a verb signifying to adopt would require the genitive case of the pronoun instead of the accusative. This question of syntax makes no difference with regard to the propriety or impropriety of the ellipsis.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.—No. 2.

Palestine.

No careful reader of the Scriptures can have failed to notice the frequent allusions to the mountains and mountain scenery of Palestine. It is essentially a mountainous country, although it is not divided up into separated regions by independent mountain chains. Lebanon is a very celebrated range of mountains connected with this country. These ranges were known to the Greeks and Romans by the name of Libanus. Commencing at Sidon this long chain of limestone mountains extends from the northern limits of Palestine in two distinct parallel ranges in nearly a north-eastern direction. The Eastern range, under the ancient name of Anti-Libanus and the modern name of Jebel-es-Shurki, bears off toward Damascus through Syria, while the western range, —the Libanus proper of antiquity and the modern Jebel-Liban,—holds its course at a distance varying from 12 to 24 miles from the coast of the Mediterranean till it joins the continuations of the Taurus mountains of Anatolia near the Gulf of Iskenderoon. The valley between these ranges was anciently called Cœle-Syria, but in modern language El-Bukaa, and is really an inclosed table-land elevated 2300 feet above the sea level, and it is about 100 miles long, varying from 10 to 20 miles in breadth. This valley is remarkable as containing the sources of several important rivers. The Orontes rises in the highest part of this plain, and flows northward to the city of Antioch, where the disciples were first called Christians, thence it flows westward through a deep-cut channel, cleaving the Lebanon range,—into the Sea. The Jordan has its source in the extreme southern limits of this depression and flows southerly to the Dead Sea. The Litany rises far up in this valley and breaks through the western range by a deep gorge into the Sea a few miles north of Tyre. The Barada, supposed to be the scriptural Abana, flows eastward through the Anti-Libanus range by Damascus. Some of the highest peaks of these mountains are covered with snow for six months in the year. Lebanon—the White Mountain—derives its name not from its snow-clad pinnacles, but from its white limestone cliffs. The name is from the Hebrew לבן leban white. From the neighborhood of Sidon and the deep gorge of the Litany the Libanus extends southward through Palestine to the mountains Sinai and Horeb in the Sinaitic Peninsula. The Highland Ridge down through Palestine is more properly a lofty table-land with an average height of 1,500 to 2,600 feet above the Mediterranean. Though when seen from the Sea this elevated range looks like a mighty wall yet there are eminences that break the general monotony of outline. Thus, beginning at the South, Hebron is found to be elevated 3,000 feet above the Mediterranean. Jerusalem, which is emphatically a mountain city, and located in the very heart of the hill country, is situated at an altitude of 2,650 feet above the sea level at the north end of the plateau on which it is built and gradually sloping toward the south to a less elevation. Across the valley of the Kedron the Mount of Olives attains the height of 2,724 feet at the top of the eminence upon which the Church of Ascension is built, and which is 220 feet above the Temple Platform across the valley. Bethel, 20 miles north of Jerusalem where Jacob saw the ladder reaching to heaven, is 2,400 feet above sea level. Ebal and Gerazim the two principal mountains of Samaria rise to the height of 2,700 and 2,000 feet respectively, the former being north, and the latter south of a narrow valley in which the ancient town of Shechem was situated which became the capital of the ten tribes after their revolt from the rest of Israel. Mount Tabor on the North side of the Plain of Esdraelon rises 1000 feet above the plain and 1,000 above the Sea. Mount Carmel, which divides the plain of Sharon on the South from the more inland expanse of Esdraelon or the north, is estimated to be 2,000 feet high by some. This mountain was the scene of important events in the history of Elijah and Elishah. Though Palestine is thus traversed by this lofty broad ridge from North to South accentuated at intervals by these loftier, swelling undulations, yet it is not wholly a mountainous country. Numerous fertile and level tracts are mentioned in the Scriptures under the designation of Plains with their distinguishing proper names. The Philistine plain is in the south-west part of Palestine bordering on the Mediterranean Sea. It was the South part of Shefelah—the low-lands —of the Hebrews.

This plain is said to be about 15 to 16 miles in width, a compound of tracts of a dead level in many parts, and of gently undulating tracts in others. Its fertility is marvelous, being now, as when the Philistines possessed it, one immense grainfield. Going northward the traveler next enters the Plain of Sharon, which is about 10 miles wide, and which is a continuation of the Shefelah or lowlands of the more southern Philistine country. The soil is extremely rich producing enormous crops of weeds, or grain, according as the land is cultivated, or neglected. This plain extends from Joppa to Cæsarea. Next beyond the Carmel range is the great plain of Esdraelon, which extends across Central Palestine from the Mediterranean on the west to the Jordan on the east.

This plain embraces a large triangular tract between the mountain ranges of Carmel and Samaria on the south and the high ridges of Galilee on the north. Its east side from Jenin to the hills below Nazareth is 15 miles: thence along the base of the Hills of Galilee 12 miles; and thence along Carmel and the Samaritan Range about 18 miles. This large expanse has a surface gently undulating, and has a soil of wonderful richness as the gigantic natural growth of weeds and thistles abundantly demonstrates. Like many other parts of Palestine it would teem with harvests of many fold returns for cultivation were the country under the protection of an efficient government.

In the Jordan Valley, directly east from Jerusalem, and about 14 miles distant, is the plain of Jericho, once the most luxuriant spot in Palestine.

It had the climate of Lower Egypt and the vegetation of the tropics. The fertility of the soil was unexampled. On its low warm levels wheat ripened a month earlier than in Galilee. There are some smaller though very pleasant valleys, and some lesser plains nestled among the Hills of Palestine. It will be better to give fuller and more particular descriptions in connection with places, and events of history, that have made them noted.

From the top of some of the loftier eminences the beholder would command the view of both frontiers at the same time—on the East the mountains of Gilead with the Jordan at their feet, on the one side, and on the other the Western Sea, with its beach of white sand, and its blue expanse meeting the sky in the distance.

Indeed, it is one of the most peculiar and interesting characteristics of the Holy Land that such extensive views can be obtained from many commanding points. Perfect panoramas of Bible Scenes may be contemplated from many of the more elevated points in the land west of the Jordan. Travelers have delighted to survey the landscapes, as depicted by nature that have furnished the artistic delineator with his choicest pictures.

The peculiar charm arises from the wide extent, and the number of spots historically remarkable, that are visible at once; owing in part to the transparent clearness of the air, and the exceeding brightness of the light, which seems to bring distant objects comparatively close. There is also the consciousness that in many instances, the feet of the observer may be standing on the same ground, and the eyes contemplating the same spots which have been stood upon and gazed at by the patriarch, prophets, and distinguished characters of all the past eventful periods in the wonderful history of this country. One can, from the heights between Bethel and Hai north of Jerusalem, look down into the Jordan valley as when "Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld all the plain of the Jordan, that it was well watered everywhere, before the Lord destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the Lord," and separated from Abraham to whom the Lord then gave the whole Land of Canaan, and thus fixed the future destiny of the Hebrew people and determined the destiny of the nations of this earth forever.

Again, one can stand upon Tabor, where Deborah and Barak watched the Canaanitish hosts under Sisera marshalling to their doom in the plains of Esdraelon below. From the heights of Carmel, one can stand where Elijah's servant saw the cloud like a man's hand rising out the of Sea, after having scaled the towering rocky pinnacle seven times, and from whence Elishah subsequently looked down on the plains of Esdraelon to see the bereaved mother, as she urged her course over the level before him. These views are a picture in which Palestine can find no rival in any other land, whether we consider the charms of the landscapes, or the wonderful histories connected with all these localities. Every rock, plain, river, and tree bears witness to the minute accuracy of that inspired volume—the Bible.

Mount Baker, in Washington Territory, which has been inactive for nearly twenty years, is in eruption again. A dense volume of smoke is coming from the mountain, while hot cinders, ashes and lava are being thrown from its crater. At night it pours forth streams of fire which illumine the heavens for miles. As yet the flow of lava is not sufficient to indicate any danger. The eruption is said to be a magnificent sight, as the mountain looms up to the height of 12,000 feet and is covered with snow half way down its side.

If you would never have an evil deed spoken of in connection with you, don't do one.

Brevities.

It is said that Prof. Sayce has succeeded in translating the greater portion of the Armenian inscriptions which have so long defied the skill of decipherers.

The British Museum has lately acquired a collection of terra-cotta inscribed cylinders and tablets excavated at Bagdad. Among these are cylinders of Esarhaddon, Assurbanipal and Neriglissar, and tablets of Kinaladanu or Kinneladan-os, Nabonidus, Cambyses and other late Babylonian monarchs.

We learn from The Academy that "Mr. Hormuzd Rassam, who is prosecuting the British Museum archeological researches at Nineveh and Babylon, has discovered quite a new ancient Babylonian city, a short distance from Bagdad, on the renowned ancient canal called Nahr-Malka or Plumen Regum, and has already unearthed a valuable collection of inscriptions both in the cuneiform and hieratic characters."

In the office of the Secretary of New Mexico, at Santa Fe, are deposited the most ancient official documents in the United States, running back nearly a hundred years before the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth. One of these historical treasures is a journal of the conquest of New Mexico in 1694, signed by Diego de Vardas and containing a full account of the campaign.

EXPLORATION OF EASTERN PALESTINE.—Lieutenant Condor, who executed most of the survey of Western Palestine, and Lieutenant Mantell, both of the Royal Engineers, left London for Beyrout on the 15th ult., to prosecute the survey of Eastern Palestine under the auspices of the British Committee. The War Office has granted the services of these officers, who will be assisted by the two non-commissioned officers, Black and Armstrong, who first went out in 1871. They are to commence their work in the North,—the land of Bashan,—and will prosecute it vigorously at the cost of $15,000 a year.

A PERSIAN RABBI'S LONG JOURNEY.—Rabbi Joseph Misrachi, a native of Shushan, Persia, the city of Mordecai and Esther, has come to New York in the course of a trip around the world. He left Shushan nearly eighteen months ago, and has passed through Bagdad, Babylon, Bombay, Melbourne, and San Francisco. He came to New York overland, stopping at various cities on the way, with the intention of taking Steamer here for London, and going thence to Paris, Vienna, Constantinople, and other large cities of Europe. Shushan holds the burial places of Mordecai and Esther, and they have been guarded by the Jews of that city for nearly two thousand years. The graves are covered by a tomb and two pillars that have withstood the lapse of twenty centuries, but at last the stone is beginning to crumble away; and to obtain contributions from his co-religionists of all countries and nations toward restoring this memorial has been the purpose of Rabbi Misrachi's visit. In this object he is said to have succeeded satisfactorily.

CHRIST AS AN OBSERVER.

The Gospels show, throughout, that nothing escaped the eye of Jesus. The lilies and the grass of the field, as he paints them in the Sermon on the Mount; the hen, as it gathers its young in its mother's love, under its wide-spread wings; the birds of the air, as they eat and drink, without care, from the bounty around them; the lambs which run to follow the Shepherd, but sometimes go astray and are lost in the wilderness; the dogs so familiar in eastern cities; the foxes that make their holes in the thickets; the silent plants and flowers, the humble life of the creatures of the woods, the air, the fold, and the street, were all alike noticed, in his early years of preparation. Nor was man neglected. The sports of childhood; the rejoicings of riper life; the bride and the bridegroom; the mourner and the dead; the castles and palaces of princes, and the silken robes of the great; the rich owners of field and vineyard; the steward, the traveling merchant, the beggar, the debtor; the toil of the sower and of the laborer in the vineyard, or of the fisher on the lake; the sweat of the worker; the sigh of those in chains, or in the dungeon, were seen, and heard, and remembered. Nor did he rest merely in superficial observation. The possessions, joys, and suffering of man, their words and acts, their customs, their pride or humility, pretence or sincerity, failings or merits, were treasured as materials from which, one day, to paint them to themselves. He had, moreover, the same keen eye to note the good in those round him as their unworthy striving and planning, their avarice, ambition, passion, or selfishness. It is, indeed, the noblest characteristic in this constant, keen-sightedness, that amidst all the imperfections and faults prevailing, he never failed to evoke the hidden good which he saw in the most hopeless.

OBITUARY.

SISTER MARY ELLEN SHULER fell asleep after a long and sore affliction with cancer, in Alleghany County, Md., March 17, 1881, aged 45 years, 2 months and 16 days.

The readers of THE RESTITUTION, by turning to the report of the Annual Assembly held in Winchester, Va., in August, 1879, can see that then and there she washed to the "Rock that is higher than I," by believing the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and name of Jesus Christ, and was baptized by the writer in the all-saving name for the remission of sins.

Although an intense sufferer, her faith and hope grew stronger and stronger, knowing that if she had to cumbit to the penalty passed on the first Adam, she would soon be released by the second Adam, who has the keys of death and the grave, unlocking the prison house, and bidding the sleeping prisoners to arise, and sing the victor's song: "O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory! Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Sister Shuler was highly esteemed by all her neighbors, and dearly beloved by the church of God, with which she was associated, for the noble manner in which she, during her affliction, imitated her blessed Leader, who in all his sufferings, even unto death, never murmured, but cried out in the agony of his soul to his Father, "Not my will but thine, be done."

I visited her several times, although some distance off, preaching in the neighborhood, and at her house, as it was her chief joy to hear the glad tidings proclaimed to dying men, and in her frequent relations of her sad case, like her great Exampler, she would always close by saying, "Not my will, but thine be done, O Lord."

We kept up a regular correspondence through Brother Shuler, with her, upon the glowing promises made of God unto the fathers, in order to cheer her in her last days, and finally in her expiring moments, she told Brother Shuler to tell all of the one faith, Good by; so we take this method of sending our dear sister's Good by to all of the household of faith. We deeply mourn with her devoted husband, who did all in his power for her recovery, also two sons and a daughter, a large family relation, and many dear friends, the short deprivation, as she believed it would be, of a loving wife, a kind mother, and a bright ornament in the church.

By her special request, I will (D.V.) preach a discourse in respect to the loved one, some time this summer, circumstances preventing it at the time of interment.

N. J. MORGAN.

We went to see her in last June,
For hope was bright her faith in tune.
It was her pleasure all the day
To search for truth and sing and pray.

Though suffering more than tongue could tell,
And yet she always looked so well,
You scarcely heard a groan or sigh,
Or saw a tear start in her eye.

Though now she lies beneath the sod
Her faith and hope was firm in God,
And he'll reward her in that day
When sin and death have passed away.

Sleep on dear sister, take thy rest;
No trouble now shall cross thy breast,
Till Christ, who is our life, shall come
And gather all his jewels home.

S. F. MORGAN.

SISTER FRANCES CURTIS, wife of Brother David Curtis, of consumption, in Miami County, Ohio, aged 60 years.

Sister Curtis was afflicted for several months, but bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude and was anxious to be released and be at rest. She knew that she must die and go down to the grave, yet she feared not death, believing that when Christ comes to wake the sleeping saints she will rise from the tomb to die no more.

The ties that bound her to earth were strong, yet she could say "The Lord's will be done."

She leaves a kind companion who deeply feels his loss. He feels as if he has nothing left to cheer his lonely path through life. May he put his trust in that Savior who stood by her in affliction and forsook her not in death.

She leaves three sons and one daughter to mourn their loss. May they remember her advice and live so that when they die they may be prepared to meet mother where parting will be no more.

She was a firm believer in the soon coming of Christ to reign on the earth, and raise the sleeping dead, and that the saints will get their reward then, and not at death.

May we all be prepared for that glorious day, and be ready to meet the Lord when he comes.

MRS. GEO. SINKS.

Poetry.

The Courant.

BY THE FIRE.

Dead eyes are gazing on her from picture on the wall.
Dead voices in the wailing winds that sweep the uplands pall.
Dead feet seem patterning around her as the rain-drops lash the pane.
Till she stretches hand- of greeting, dumb beside that yearn in vain.

Like or- in fairy legend, like one in dreamland lost,
At every turn by dead man's steps in her onward way is cro-sed.
The very flowers whisper of who plucked them long ago,
The very birds have taught in their trillings soft and low.

The thumb she touches s-marks for her the mesh of the past,
On every page the shadow of old memories is cast,
The "brooding sense of something gone" falls coldness all around,
Making the common perils of life her hushed heart's holy ground.

On the table-ground of nobler life, the skill and dreams hand,
Where, together bent and hot- like the stretch of heaven wand,
She stands alone and listens, all in vain her veiled
In mist,
In front the life- beyond the veil, their outstretched promise kissed.

Sob on, O wind, sigh on, O rain! sunset flame form and die,
There, where amid the covered coals the fairy fancies lie,
For in sleeping as in waking, till she crosses the stream,
The sunshine of her lonely heart from the peopled past must gleam.

Selections.

The Courant.

THE LAND OF GILEAD.

The project of planting a Jewish agricultural colony in Palestine in the Land of Gilead, which Mr Lawrence Oliphant set forth with such show of good reasons, has, as yet, come to nothing; and until the present Sultan can be persuaded to favor it, will not have even a trial. But one good has come of it, and that is a most readable volume by the author, who has recently explored the ancient Land of Gilead, with the purpose of selecting lands that might suit his colony and viewing the country with reference to the construction of railways.

The book has high interest for all students of Old Testament geography. The traveler passed southeast from Sidon, crossing the sources of the Jordan and journeying down to the land of Uz, where Job is supposed to have dwelt, and continued on the east side of the Jordan as far down as the Dead Sea. All this country is full of the most interesting Roman and Saracenic ruins, and offers the explorer the richest results in the identification of ancient Jewish cities, and of the occupation of the predecessors of the Jews. Although the country seems to us as Mr. Oliphant rides over it as rough, stony, full of gorges and more picturesque than arable, he still reports vast quantities of land fertile and capable of sustaining a great population. And the best evidence of its capacity is the ruins of cities and the remains of cultivation which show a flourishing population in old times. He expects to make Akka or Haifa the port of this country by carrying a railway across, which will run north to Damascus and south to the Red Sea. The engineering difficulties seem to us greater than he allows. But there is no doubt that the security of a strong settled government, would give opportunity for very profitable agricultural ventures in this region.

In the course of his travel Mr. Oliphant encountered many curious tribes and sects. One of the latter are the Metawalies, whose wars with the Druses in the Lebanon attracted so much attention years ago. They are unorthodox Moslems, and something like the Persians in belief, who are Shiites. They are supposed to be descendants of the aborigines of Galilee, the Gentiles par excellence. They assign to Ali, the son-in-law of Mahomet, a rank equal if not superior to that of the prophet. Unlike the Moslems, each prays singly. They use little water in performing their ablutions. When they bow to the earth their heads are made to touch a small cake of earth, which they carry with them, and which is from the very spot where their martyr, El Hosain, the son of Ali, was killed. When they pray, all articles of gold and silver are laid aside. They have a form of marriage peculiar to themselves, which, is called a "marriage of privilege." It is a legal and regular engagement, with a gift of dowry, but on the strange condition that it shall continue for a specified time only—say for a year or a month. When the term expires the conjugal relation absolutely ceases, unless it is renewed in the ordinary form. This sort of engagement usually takes place with a widow, it being impossible with a woman whose husband is alive, or with a virgin. They have also a form of nominal marriage which they call the "marriage of interdiction." The proceedings are regular, except the definite stipulation that the husband can have the privilege of only seeing his wife—the design being to gain free access to the woman and her female relatives, to wait upon them or assist them in business, which a stranger could not otherwise obtain. The interdicted wife can marry at any time without divorce or permission of her quondam husband. This relation allows a man and a widow to go together on a pilgrimage or journey.

Another peculiar sect is the Melchites, nominally Christian, schismatics from the orthodox Greek. They celebrate mass in Arabic, administer the sacrament in both kinds, and their priests may be married, though not after ordination. They live in harmony with the Metawali-, but the latter are so careful not to be defiled by contact with these Christians that they will not eat meat or bread or anything damp or drink water that has been touched by a Christian. If a Melchite has a pitcher of water from a Metawali he is not allowed to take it by the handle or to touch the spout to his lips, but takes the vessel by the bottom and pours the water down his throat. Another peculiar and even mystical tribe are the Ansayiyeh, who are thought to be a remnant of the old Canaanitish races, and are despised alike by Druses and by Moslems. Their religion is a mystic heathenism, very difficult to get at. Women are regarded merely as slaves, and are directly bought and sold, held to have no souls, are not instructed in religion, and are valued for the service they can render men.

The author came across several newly arrived colonies of Circassians, who had been transported from Bulgania, and planted in Gilead to till the soil and take care of themselves. He came across also the only Christian sect of whom we know anything who practice polygamy. These he found at Irbid, where the greater portion of the inhabitants are Moslems. The Christians are infected by the example of their neighbors, and it is no uncommon thing for a Christian to have two wives. And the Greek priests perform the second marriage. It is supposed that the priest finds it difficult to make them resist the force of the Moslem examples about them, and so, as the lesser of two evils, when he finds a man living with two wives, he performs the second ceremony, and forgets to report it to the bishop.

In no country in the world have the native races undergone so little change as in the region between the Jordan and the Euphrates, and to this day the descendants of the contemporaries of Job, and possibly his own, inhabit the plains of their ancestors. The author thinks that the extreme veneration attaching to the monastery and Makam, or station of Job, arises from the fact that it was originally a center of Baal-worship, and it only became sacred to the memory of Job when the other cultc passed away. The monastery of Job is built on a mound near the village of Es Sadiyeh. According to Arab authors it was built in A. D., 180. It is now a barrack for Turkish soldiers. The mound on which it stands is supposed to be the dunghill on which Job scraped himself with potsherds.

Job's tomb, a small white-domed building, and his bath and the mound, are greatly resorted to by pilgrims from a distance, especially by woolly-headed negroes from the Soudan, to whom the tomb is a sacred shrine. These pilgrims from Soudan first visit Mecca and Medina and then Damascus, and then the Makam Eyub (Job). Here they remain a month or two washing themselves in Job's bath and praying at the Makam or tomb, and finding congenial society in their African hosts; for this is a great refuge for negro slaves who have escaped from their masters.

The bath of Job is a cleft in the rocks about the size of an ordinary plunge bath, filled with the clearest water. Over it is a building of dolorite stone, bearing marks of extreme antiquity. Clustered about the tomb and the bath are the wretched huts of the negro population; they are in a miserable, squalid condition, ragged and poverty-stricken in the extreme. And they live in the richest and most productive land.

We have not been able, in this short article, to touch upon Mr. Oliphant's identification of Biblical sites, nor his intelligent survey of this interesting land.

Dawn of the Morning.

THE POOL OF SILOAM.

A fac simile copy was recently received by the Palestine exploration fund of a Phœnician inscription from the Pool of Siloam. It was first discovered by their correspondent a few months ago, and consists of six lines—about 150 words in all—enclosed in a tablet, the letters of which it is supposed being almost identical with those on the Moabite stone. It has been anxiously awaited by the experts in this country, and we may soon expect a translation. If not of equal historical value with the monument of Mesha, it cannot fail to prove of great archæological interest. To get at the inscription the water had to be lowered by making a ditch though the Pool, so as to reduce it to its former level, it having become choked up with rubbish in the course of years and its bed accordingly raised. The Pool of Siloam is of very ancient workmanship, and is supposed to be connected with the waterworks made by King Hezekiah, and to be supplied with a spring of living water in the heart of the Temple rock. The cave still exists in its Arabic form in the Kefr Silwan, or village of Siloam—a cluster of dwellings, half hovels, half natural caves, on the opposite side of the valley, whose inhabitants, when not engaged in theft, earn a scanty livelihood by carrying the water of the Pool into the town for sale. No legend remains of the healing power of the Pool, and it would be interesting if the inscription should contain any allusion to sick persons who waited for the angel to trouble the waters. This is not so improbable as may at first sight seem, for the date is certainly not later than the first century of our era, and may be much earlier; while it would appear to be the work of more than one hand, and is just such a record a pilgrim would leave.

Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.

THE SECOND ADVENT AND RAPTURE.

REV. J. T. JONES.

A CATECHISM ON THE SECOND ADVENT.

Q. Is there an apparent contradiction in the Scriptures when describing the period of the Second Advent?

A. There is; for Christ Himself on one occasion compares it to the days of Noah—i. e., "A time of earthly prosperity—eating and drinking, building and planting, marrying and giving in marriage." Matt. xxiv. 37-39. St. Paul likewise speaks of it at a time when they shall cry, "Peace and safety!" while, on the other hand, Christ describes His advent as to take place immediately after the great tribulation of 3½ years—that time of unparalleled distress, the like of which never had been nor ever shall be. Mat. xxiv. 24.

Q. How may these statements be reconciled?

A. The supposed discrepancy will at once disappear if we assign to his advent a twofold stage; the first being his coming into the air; the second stage his coming visibly in the clouds of heaven. At the time of his coming into the air the world will be in its accustomed prosperity and fondly dreaming of its long continuance; but when He appears in the clouds of heaven, the earth will have been desolated by wars and judgments. So the one stage of the Second Advent is as it was in the days of the flood. Its last stage is at the close of the most stupendous troubles.

Q. Why will the Savior, when on his way to our earth, thus pause in the air?

A. This is a deeply interesting inquiry, concerning which the Bible is sufficiently explicit, although it seems to be left out of the popular conception and of modern theology touching the Advent; but we crave your careful attention to the following statements:

1. The Redeemer will pause in the air when on his journey to our earth, in order to gather the saints, both the living and the dead, who are subsequently to descend with him on the clouds of heaven to the Mount of Olives; a sublime arrangement, by which he secures their companionship in the hour of his manifested pomp and glory. "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives. . . . and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." Zech. xiv. 4-5. "To the end he may stablish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." 1 Thess. iii. 13. "And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints." Jude 14.

Reference is made to this in the familiar hymn—

"Lo! He comes in clouds descending,
Once for favored sinners slain:
Thousand, thousand saints attending
Swell the triumph of his train," etc.

2. In order to gather out of the earth his watchful followers, so that they may escape the terrible storms of judgment which are then to burst upon an ungodly world; and thus to fulfil the gracious promises made on the page of the Bible, that they should be hid in the day of the Lord's vengeance.

"Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy door about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his places to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." Isaiah xxvi. 20-21. "Then shall two be in the field: the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left." Matt. xxiv. 40-41. "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke xxi. 36. But the majority of the Church will not be found thus watching and praying that they may escape, one among other reasons being that their theory of the Second Advent postpones his coming till after the thousand years. Further, if they escape who do not so watch, then the injunction to watch loses all its force. 2 There are saints seen in the vision to be on the earth during the process of the tribulation, for they become the martyrs of the Antichrist, and are further represented as coming out of "the tribulation the great," (Greek text), having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Rev. vii. 3. Many are to be converted by the proclamation of the Gospel during the progress of the 3½ latter, the Gospel then being rendered all the more potent by reason of the judgments then abroad in the earth.

News Items.

THE VICTIMS OF THE OHIO EARTHQUAKE.

OHIO, Apr 7—Slight shocks of earthquake continue. Large quantities of blankets, goods, and medicines are shipped from Syra by each steamer. Two hundred soldiers have left Piraus in a gunboat to bury the dead. The number of the killed is estimated at 8,000. The injured are more than twice the number of the killed. Forty thousand persons are without bread.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA EXPERIENCES A SEVERE EARTHQUAKE SHOCK.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., April 11.—A heavy earthquake occurred yesterday morning at 2:15 o'clock, through the central part of the State. No serious damage is reported.

TURKEY.

THE DARDANELLES.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 9.—Hobart Pasha has been ordered to prepare the water defenses in the Dardanelles against vessels creeping in at night.

THE EARTHQUAKE IN OHIO.

ECHO, April 9.—A medical commission is now sitting to consider the expediency of covering the rubbish in the fortress with earth, as there is no hope of saving any lives, and the disinterment of the dead might produce epidemic. It is now believed that throughout the whole island, which contained 70,000 inhabitants, 6,000 or 7,000 were killed and 25 per cent. of the survivors wounded. The French, Italian, United States and Austrian gun vessels in the harbor are doing all in their power to assist the authorities in the work of relief.

Only ten of the inhabitants of Chenne were killed, but many houses are in ruins and 20,000 people are without shelter.

BEACONSFIELD'S HEALTH.

Beaconsfield's condition is very critical, though his physicians have not abandoned all hope.

Says a Constantinople dispatch: "There is great activity in all the Admiralty factories. The Porte is negotiating with a Newcastle firm for the delivery of coals at Chios, Rhodes, Crete, Volo, Salonica, and in the Dardanelles. Another thousand troops have gone to Volo. The total Turkish force on the frontier now is 80,000.

In Europe the threatened war between France and Italy over Tunis is at present overshadowing the frontier controversy between Turkey and Greece as a topic of public interest. It is more than probable that Europe will have two wars on hand before many weeks.

The six persons—four men and two women—who were concerned in the assassination of the Czar, whose trial closed Saturday, were convicted, and five of them sentenced to be hanged. The fate of the sixth—the woman Sophie Ticoffsky, who is of noble birth—remains to be decided by the Czar. Their trial and conviction were merely matters of form, the accused having confessed their guilt.

Communications.

READ THIS.

A Very Interesting Letter.

GALESBURG, Kan.

Editor Restitution:

I feel myself under great obligation to you for your kind indulgence toward me, in favoring me with a continuation of your very highly esteemed paper, which is a bright light, shining with the greatest of all lights, to guide the weary pilgrim to his Father's home.

I prize it very highly indeed, who am but a babe in Christ. I am a Cherokee, born, raised and educated in the Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, was tutored in the popular religion of the day, heard nothing else, believed in no other, because I was not a Bible investigator, until about four years ago, at which time I connected myself with the M. E. Church, remained with them for the space of two years and a half, was popular with that and other orthodox persuasions, but as the apostle Paul remarked, by the grace of God I am what I am.

I confined myself to a very close examination of the blessed word of God, and gradually got out of the quagmires. I heard no man set forth the blessed truths until after God in great mercy had assisted me to remove the cloud from off my eyes, after which I made it too warm for my orthodox brethren.

I was compelled to seek shelter under the canopy of heaven, thinking myself all alone in the faith I had espoused, standing in the world with all eyes upon me; without friends, no guide, no teacher—save God's sweet words of comfort to cheer me on my way. I could yet rejoice that The Old Guide—The Bible—never fails to guide aright.

Thus was I situated until I heard that true and faithful servant of the Lord—Brother John Poore—speak from the same guide sweet words of consolation and comfort to the weary soul, in the winter of 1879, and in Sept. 1880, I and my dear companion put on Christ by baptism, by Brother Poore. May God bless and crown all his labor with success, and give him the crown of eternal life.

Since that time I have been laboring in the Master's vineyard, meeting with opposition on all sides, but God's grace is sufficient to assist me to withstand all the fiery darts of the wicked one.

Excuse me, kind Brother, for I fear I may weary you in this detail of the past.

I herewith send you one dollar on my subscription, and twenty-five cents for tracts. Wish I was able to obtain the Emphatic Diaglott and a chart of the Plan of the Ages.

W. P. PAYNE.

Editor Restitution:

I hereby send you a report of a discussion I have just concluded in the city of Stockton, Kan., with J. T. Locke, a Wesleyan Methodist minister in which we were engaged four nights. We debated the following propositions:

Resolved, that man is wholly mortal and therefore unconscious between death and the resurrection.

I affirmed and Locke denied: two nights; and the last two nights, we debated the proposition in the following form:

Resolved, That man has an immortal soul and therefore maintains a conscious existence between death and the resurrection.

Locke affirmed and I denied, and the whole discussion was conducted before large audiences, and in about the same way and with about the same results that discussions generally are with ministers of the so-called orthodox churches.

I endeavored to show both from reason and revelation that man as he now is, is wholly mortal and dying, as I therefore proved him unconscious between death and the resurrection. While the arguments of my opponent were replete with mis-representations of my position and of expressions; and he would confound and use interchangeably the words soul and spirit in the Scriptures, which was very manifest, to a part of the audience and he tried to make the audience believe that the Jews in the time of Jesus believed in the immortality of the soul; quoting from Josephus; and said that Christ approved the doctrine of the Pharisees who were immortal soulists and condemned the Sadducees who were materialists; which I proved to be false from the Scriptures. He relied mainly upon these texts, viz. Matt. x. 28. Matt. xvii. transfiguration Luke xvi. 16. The thief on the cross, the souls under the altar; and many others of similar import from which he inferred his doctrine, but signally failed to prove it, to at least a minor portion of the audience.

I believe that possibly a few at least have hereby had their eyes opened and will study for themselves in the Scriptures of God. And thus we sow the seed according to the will of God, and ask his blessing and the prayers of his people. Amen.

J. M. FIKE.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will be at More's school house, on Friday, April 22, and continue over Sunday. The first Sunday in May at Bracken, as Brother Gates may appoint. Friday, May 6, in Brother Rouse's neighborhood and continue one week. Friday, May 13, at Kingsbury, Laporte Co., as Brother Clem may appoint, and continue over Sunday. Friday, May 20, at Brother Henry's, north of Walkerton, and continue over Sunday.

J. S. HAGEN.

DISCUSSION.

Macy, Miami County, Ind.
March 6, 1881.

I was at Argos, Ind., the evening of March 3d, and heard one T. W. Drennen, a German Baptist, and in his discourse he offered to discuss the points of difference in faith with any man the brethren might select.

By solicitation of the friends, I agreed to debate the following propositions:

Resolved, That trine immersion, as taught by the German Baptists, is essential to Christian baptism.
T. W. Drennen affirms.
W. J. B. Fenimore denies.

Resolved, That in death all things pertaining to men become unconscious.
W. J. B. Fenimore affirms.
T. W. Drennen denies.

Resolved, That the kingdom of God, spoken of by the prophets, Christ and the apostles, is yet future, and will be set up on earth.
W. J. B. Fenimore affirms.
T. W. Drennen denies.

The discussion to take place at Argos, Ind., commencing April 25, '81, at 10 o'clock, A. M., also that these resolutions be published in THE RESTITUTION. Each proposition to be discussed two days.

W. J. B. FENIMORE.

BUSINESS NOTICE.

Will attend to communications and letters from correspondents as soon as possible, and now also that the reason that dates are not changed faster on the labels is that in getting new type there is some lack of figures enough to make all the changes till some more type is obtained, which will be soon. Then all changes will be promptly made.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

My address is now Lanark, Ill. We are located here now—Brethren please take notice.

G. M. MYERS.

MARRIED.

WEBSTER—RICHARDSON—At the house of Brother Chas. Richardson, in Jamestown, Michigan, March 1, 1881, by E. Hoyt, Mr. Frank Webster and Miss Richardson.

Exegetical.

Loving Christ Sincerely.

"Grace be with them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen." Eph. vi. 24.

"In sincerity," marg. with incorruption. With a pure heart; without dissembling; without hypocrisy. There could be no more appropriate close of the epistle than such a wish; there will be nothing more needed for us, when we come to the close of life, than the consciousness that we love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. To writer and reader may this be equally the inestimable consolation then! Better, far better then will be the evidence of such sincere love, than all the wealth which all can gain, all the honors which the world can bestow—than the most splendid mansion, or the widest fame.—Eutyches.

THE TWO THRONES.

1 Lecture read at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881.

—BY H. V. REED.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mortal may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

2nd the Tuing to Chrolate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send orders to
SAMUEL WILSON,
2018 N. 23d Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Also for sale by
THE RESTITUTION, Peru, Ind.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

REVISED

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—BY BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

Also a literal rendering of various passages in the New Testament and the foundations on which most of the texts of Christians have been built are shown, with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are arranged in the common version to express the correct meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition, on larger paper, 864 pages, cloth $10.00, full calf binding $15.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—BY A. J. EYCHANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every faithful in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting infidelity. Twenty pages, price 5c., 12 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL.

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's letters entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—BY J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 1$ for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—BY JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

About to be issued by the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare collection of music. As an appendix he adds a collection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word." Those having the "Christian Harmonist" and no social book will do well to get this work. Price 50c. each 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1905.

—BY M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. Published as an appendix by the publisher. 24 pages. 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Poetry.

"I WILL NEVER FORSAKE THEE."

W. L. CROCKETT.

Not alone, not alone,
O heart that can trust:
Not alone, not alone,
He's faithful.
God is with thee,
And cometh,
He's here to thee.
Thereth eternity.

Not alone, not alone,
Though all forsake;
Not alone, not alone,
While earth's ties break.
Him dwelleth,
And giveth,
His love to thee,
The life eternity.

Communications.

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY? AND WHAT ATTAINMENT MAKES A MAN A CHRISTIAN?

WM. C. TAYLOR.

"What is Christianity?" and "what attainment makes a man a Christian?" These questions were recently asked in the columns of one of the leading daily newspapers of the country. The following replies were furnished by the writer, but declined by the editor of the journal referred to.

"What is Christianity?" and "what attainment makes a man a Christian?" To the first of these questions we reply that Christianity is the religion of Jesus Christ as revealed in the Scriptures. We freely confess that this is far from being a satisfactory answer since the person and history of Jesus are so variously estimated by thousands who after a fashion so far believe as enable them to be classed within the modern meaning of the term as Christians. The same objection can be sustained against any general answer to the question, "what attainment makes a man a Christian" for it may mean very little or very much according to the shade of Christianity professed. So in giving a reply to so important a question we have based it upon the requirements of the only infallible Christian manual in order that there might be no uncertainty in the sound or doubt about the directions. We say what makes a man a Christian, as the Book gives examples and precepts, is a hearty acceptance of the doctrines taught by Christ and his Apostles, and a hearty faith in what Moses and the prophets have written concerning this Son of God. To this add the obedience of baptism by which the believer is united to Christ, and a complete change of life as symbolized in this ordinance and the result will be a Christian after the Apostolic pattern. This is the old way of becoming Christian and is in contrast to the many new ways, leading us to say that the Christianity of our day is not the same as that inaugurated by Christ and his Apostles 1800 years ago. How the change came it will be unnecessary to explain if we can prove what we have stated, and that the religions which struggle around us have little more than the name to identify them with the Christian religion of the first century. Surely if we find the whole form of doctrine—the faith and hope of primative christianity different from modern, we cannot but conclude that although still bearing the old name the churches of our day lack the essential and distinguishing features of the Apostolic ecclesias.

The first striking difference we notice between the old faith, and so many of the new ones which have taken its place, is that the religion of Jesus in its saving capacity is based upon a true or Biblical psychology which teaches the absolute mortality of man, i. e. every man born into the world comes into it under a law which brings death to him within a limited time. In harmony with this, Christ came into the world to give eternal life to a race loaded down under the sentence of death. Rom. vi. 23; v. 12. In contradistinction to this the christianity of the pulpit is for the most part based upon a false Greek psychology which teaches immortality of the human soul, but if this were true Christ did not come to save man from death, for the immortal cannot die, or to offer life to the dying, for the immortal have no need of life. All Christ could do for such, would be to save their immortal souls from what has been called a living death in hell. This view of the nature of man contradicts the expressed truth that Christ's mission and death was to bring life into the world, and cuts away more than half of the merit of his sacrifice to that end. Happily no such doctrine as this disfigures the pages of the Bible. There the doctrine is life and death. God sent his Son to save a world of mortals from dying, not to save a world of immortals from spending eternity in modern hell. John iii. 16.

Taking it for granted, then that Christ has brought life into our world, let us now enquire by what method this salvation was brought within the reach of the individual, and what rules he had to follow before he could become a Christian. It will be seen that a Christian was one whose faith in this immortal life prompted him to comply with its requirements in order that he might have full hope of it. But how did he hear of this great gift? By preaching, for we read "it hath pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." 1st Cor. i. 21. But what was the preaching about, and what was he to believe? We must find an example of this and will take the first instance we read of the gospel being preached outside the house of Israel. We read Acts viii. 12, that Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. This shows what the preaching was about. Now what did the Samaritans believe? It must have been something closely connected with the subject of the preaching, and so we read that "when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ they were baptized, both men and women." Acts viii. 12. The order we find here is first the preaching of Christ, then the belief in him as implied in the words "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," and last of all baptism into his name for the remission of sins. This was Christ presented, accepted and obeyed as the Savior of men in Apostolic times. The thought arises, Is this the method now? Far from it. Then they believed first and were baptized afterwards. Now the common practice is to have a counterfeit baptism first, and let the belief come after if it will. By counterfeit baptism we mean the substitution of sprinkling for immersion. Baptism is an immersion in water, and nothing short of this fulfills the command of Christ. It would just be as reasonable, and as near the truth to say you could bury a man with a few grains of sand, as to say he could be baptized with a few drops of water. There is a great difference between the old way and the new in this matter. The old church immersed men and women who had faith in certain revealed truths,—the new sprinkles infants incapable of faith in anything.

But there are other differences equally as important as we shall see by considering more closely what is meant by "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." In the first place what does the kingdom of God mean, and what did these Samaritan Christians believe about it?

The words the kingdom of God supply their own meaning and by reference to the Scriptures we find that God's Kingdom was the ancient kingdom of Israel, 1st Chron. xvii. 14. This is the only kingdom God ever had upon this earth. The main facts concerning it are: Its people, the descendants of Abraham, its territory, the land of Palestine, and its capital city, Jerusalem. It was overthrown 600 B. C. and was never fully restored. This at the time we speak of, was all in the past, but the prophets tell of a mighty deliverer and a glorious restoration for their fallen state. These were the things concerning the kingdom which became matters of great moment to the Samaritans. How this could be we will explain.

They had learned from Philip that this Christ which he preached to them was the royal heir to this Kingdom, and that although he had left it in the meantime he would soon come again and restore it. Isa. xiv. 6-7. Acts iii. 20-21. With the promise of life preached through this risen King of the Jews was coupled an inheritance in his kingdom. Nay more—they were invited to be his associate kings and priests, in the administration of its affairs—in short to share with him in all its glories, and in all its honors. James ii. 5; Rev. xx. 4-6. The return of Christ to fulfill these promises, was the hope of the Samaritans, and of all the early churches. It is the true Christian hope.

But in addition to the things of the kingdom these early believers also had faith in the things relating to the name of Jesus Christ. The things of the kingdom pointed to the inheritance the things of the name related to the means by which Christ had brought the inheritance within the reach of everyone, and included his sacrifice for sin, his Priesthood and Lordship. These with the things of the kingdom made the sum of the Christain faith as preached by the Apostles. Acts viii. 12; xxviii. 23-31.

How far such a faith and hope resembles the faith and hope of our time it will be for every professing Christian to decide. For our part, we see a great difference between the faith and hope of the apostles of Christ, and the faith and hope of the religious teachers of our day. Instead of a real kingdom upon the earth, with mortal subjects and immortal rulers, we have a spiritual kingdom in the heavens where the spirits of just men made perfect, dwell in everlasting bliss. Instead of Christ coming to the earth to raise the dead and reward his saints, the souls of the righteous are rewarded at death, and immediately join the redeemed in heaven, while the souls of the wicked are sent to swell the unhappy things in hell. Thus has the early and true faith been replaced by fiction, in face of declared truth that "the dead know not anything." Eccl ix. 5, and that "no man hath ascended up to heaven but he that came down from heaven." John iii. 13.

A time when men would forsake the old truths and believe fables was foretold. 2 Tim. iv. 3. We are living in that time, and in consequence cannot be too careful that we are indeed in the way that leadeth unto life. We have tried to show the old way as taught by the apostles of our Lord in contrast with some of the errors that have so long darkened the way of salvation. May it be that some light has been shed by these remarks upon the happiest of all paths.

Editor Revitution:

Not long since I attended public worship—for I like to go where prayer is wont to be made—at the Railroad Chapel—R.R.-in—These meetings are conducted by laymen and the gentleman who took charge of the meeting on the occasion to which I refer, devotes all his time and energy, to "the service of the Master."

He has labored long, earnestly, and with a very commendable zeal, to induce those among whom he labors—mostly railroad men—to forsake the error of their way and "come to Jesus." He read the parable of the sower and made a few very appropriate remarks at the conclusion of which he deplored the indifference every where so prevalent regarding the subject of religion; and the apathy that seemed to have settled down on the minds of the masses so that they manifest but little interest in subjects that relate to their future and eternal welfare. He stated that this apathy and indifference was not confined to the field in which he labored; that it was wide-spread; that he had conferred with others, who were engaged in the same work as himself and that they had remarked the same state of feelings in the fields in which they labored. And I may add here that one may see by looking over the columns of recent religious papers abundant confirmation of this gentleman's assertions. The last number of the Signs of the Times, has a terse article under the caption "A Chilly State of Things," and another, "Those Church Statistics," which Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler says are absolutely appalling. The official statement shows that to the 5,400 Presbyterian churches in America, only 4,200 new communicants were added in 1880.

The speaker then went on to say that he wondered at, and was at a loss to explain this indifference, he could not account for it. While I listened my mind naturally sought for a reason and I now beg leave to offer an opinion in explanation.

Since the days of John Calvin, down to a time within the memory of men still living, the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, has been proclaimed from the orthodox pulpit as vigorously as it is at the present time; but along with it was proclaimed and as stoutly maintained, the doctrine of endless torment for the finally impenitent. And this torment was represented to be physical suffering, of a character more terrible than anything with which human experience has made us acquainted. People were taught that there was a "hell to shun as well as a heaven to gain." And doubtless it sometimes happened that the preacher, wishing to make a profound impression on his hearers, found it easier to succeed by depicting the horrors of the former, than by dwelling upon the beauties and felicities of the latter, especially as his notions concerning them were rather vague and unsatisfactory. He would dwell with such emphasis upon the sufferings of the damned, as to cause some of his hearers to greatly fear and tremble; and following up his advantage with more blood curdling pictures still; there followed sometimes scenes of wild excitement producing in some a condition bordering on frenzy, ending in rare instances in permanent insanity.

Within the last two or three decades however the views of those who still maintain that man is by nature immortal, have undergone considerable modification regarding the nature of the "eternal punishment" which they still believe to be the fate of the wicked. They still tell us of a "heaven to gain and a hell to shun," but the hell to be shunned is not such a hell as our fathers in their ignorance thought it to be. The pains are not physical but mental, a remorse of conscience or something of that sort. In the opinion of some the worst feature of it is, that one gets into very bad company.

A few years ago one of the secular papers published in the city of Cleveland asked the questions: "What is Hell? and where is it?" And asked the clergymen of the city to reply. Quite a number complied with the request. The opinions advanced differed widely, and were altogether vague and unsatisfactory; but if I remember correctly, the weight of opinion leaned to the view, that the pains are not physical, that they consist in a state of separation from God; remorse of conscience, etc. The joys of Heaven, and the pains of Hell are sometimes so presented, that possibly there may be some who would even prefer the latter to the former inasmuch as—if we may judge from their choosing in this present life—they would be likely to find in the latter associations more congenial to their tastes, than in the former. One thoroughly instructed in the popular theology of this day might reason as follows: I have an immortal soul, I am sure of a future life. If I join the church, love Jesus and be good, I am promised that when I die, I or my spirit will go to Heaven. But what kind of place is Heaven? I only know that God, Jesus, angels and the spirits of the good dwell there, and a very spiritual and etherial soul of existence it must be. If I do not join the church, but follow my own inclination and make the most of this life, I or my spirit may go to hell when I die, but what kind of place is hell? Nobody knows. It is certainly not as hot as it was once supposed to be; that old fire and brimstone idea, has been entirely abandoned. At any rate there is nothing to dread. We may as well enjoy ourselves in this world. God is merciful and good and he will take care of the future.

Is it any wonder that apathy and indifference should result from such teaching; both promises and threatenings are of so vague, indefinite and uncertain a character that they fail to take strong hold upon the minds and hearts of the masses of mankind. Is it any wonder that neither bound to the mast like Ulisius; nor yet, like the followers of Orpheus listening to a diviner music, the siren song of the pleasures of this world, should lure them to destruction. They have made a covenant with death and with hell (the grave) they are at agreement. Is. xxviii. 15. "If" would they abandon the physosophies and speculations of men, and point to God's pure word from which we learn that the wages of sin is death but that the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ, and that they "that sow to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, and they that sow to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting."

Would they point to Jesus as the life giver to whom they must come, if they would have life; for it is he who has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. And the Apostle declares that he that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. Would they proclaim the Gospel of the Kingdom, and point to the promise of his coming to vanquish the adversary and restore all that was lost by the fall as promised to Eve. To bless all the families of the earth as promised to Abraham. To establish forever the throne and kingdom of David as promised to David. To abolish war, to banish famine, pestilence, pain and disease; to wipe the tears from off all faces, to deliver the needy when he cryeth the poor also, and him that hath no helper; to cause the deserts and waste places of the earth, to blossom as the rose; and the wolf to dwell with the lamb, the leopard to lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together.

To destroy death and him that has the power of death, that is the Devil, and to fill the earth with God's glory.

Would they point to the glorious promises, "that every one who seeth the Son and believeth on (into) him may have everlasting life," and I will raise him up at the last day, "that to him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne; that the righteous shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace;" that the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and God with them (R. V.) himself shall be there God. So instructed the mind has something tangible on which to rest. Themes grand and glorious on which to dwell; for a proper understanding of God's dealings with, and his many merciful provisions for the human race, has a tendency to enkindle in the human breast, those ecstatic emotions, which seem so often to have swelled the heart of the sweet Psalmist of Israel, and finding expression through notes of the most beautiful passages in the Psalms, "as the judgments of the Lord are true, and righteous altogether." And that shall again burst forth in song from the lips of those that shall gain the victory over the beast "Great and marvelous are thy works Lord God Almighty, just and true are thy ways thou King of saints.

Themes the contemplation of which gives strength in adversity. "For I reckon," says the apostle Paul, "that the sufferings of this present time, are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us."

Themes the contemplation of which will arouse from apathy and indifference, and inspire confidence to run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith, for whose return from heaven we look and long and wait, fervently praying "thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.

J. T. SMITH.

Youths' Column.

The Seed.

The farmer planted a seed—
A little, dry, black seed:
And all he went to other work—
For the farmer was never known to shirk,
And cared for what he had need.

The night came with its dew—
The cool and silent dew:
The dawn came, and the day;
And the farmer worked away
At labors not a few.

Home from his work one day—
One showing summer day—
His children showed him a perfect flower:
It had burst its bloom in that very hour;
How, I cannot say.

But I know if the smallest seed
In the soil of love be cast,
Both day and night will do their part;
And the power who works with a trusting heart
Will find the flower at last.

Nature.

Animal Reasoning.

A lady, a friend of mine, was at one time Matron of a hospital for poor women and children which was maintained by subscription. One of the inmates was a blind girl who was not there as a patient, but temporarily, till a home could be found for her. She had learned to feed herself, and at meal times a tray containing her dinner was placed on her knees as she sat in a comfortable chair for her special convenience in feeding herself. One day while she was eating, the pet cat of the establishment placed herself before the girl and looked long and earnestly at her, so earnestly that the Matron, fearing the animal meditated some mischief to the girl took her out of the room. Again the next day, at the same hour, the cat entered the room, but this time walked quietly to the girl's side, reared herself on her hind legs, and noiselessly, stealthily reached out her paw to the plate, selected and seized a morsel that pleased her, and, silently as she came, departed to enjoy her stolen meal. The girl never noticed her loss, and when told of it by her companions laughed very heartily. It is evident that the cat, from observation, had entirely satisfied herself that the girl could not see, and by a process of reasoning decided she could steal a good dinner by this practical use of her knowledge.

Early Days.

The Stork.

The stork is a very large bird. It stands nearly four feet high. What strong wings! What long legs! No wonder it needs a good-sized nest to stow away so large a body, especially if two little ones are to be accommodated also. Our Father in heaven taught the stork to be his own architect. He lays the foundation of his "house" upon the branch of a fir-tree, a cedar, or an oak where it starts from the parent stem. He is his own builder, and weaves strong twigs around the branch and the small twigs of the tree, so that the "house" when built is almost a part of the tree. Then the house is properly plastered with turf and earth, and made comfortable with straw, moss and feathers. He also builds his nest on the tops of buildings, often covering a whole chimneytop. They have no fear of man, because each generation is taught to protect and not to injure them. They love human society and will build their nests in the most crowded parts of a city.

The prophet Jeremiah refers to one noticeable thing about the stork and draws a very important lesson from it: "Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times." It is a bird of passage, and when winter is coming on it migrates to a warmer country. The stork knows when to go. He and his relations are found in all the countries of Europe except the British Isles, and throughout Asia as far as Burmah. They have a happy time of it from April to October; then they gather together in large flocks, and a pretty noise they make. They have no cry, and it is doubtful whether they have any voice, but in spite of this deficiency, they make a great noise by rapidly opening and closing their great beaks. One might imagine they were having a great discussion as to where they were to go and how they were to go. They know both how and when. Some evening when the wind begins to blow cold, the leaders return up from the field and give the cue. Ruled by a God given impulse without map or under the pathless heavens and beneath the stars in strict order they are already on their way journey to the Upper Nile or the vast plains of Southern Africa. As rich people do who go to Spain or Italy as the clerk "shut up house" and as certainly as if they put a notice on the fir tree or the tower, "shall be back in six months," they "know their appointed time" for return. They know when to come back and where to return; for it is a well-observed fact that the same pair of birds return to the same nest. Yes; they come back to the old house again. Very good sort of birds, these storks are they not?—so pretty, yet not conceited; so strong, yet so loving; so fitted for travel, yet so fond of home.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 10.

JESUS—AS A SAVIOR.

You believe there is such a country as England, that it is Victoria's Kingdom and the place of her throne. You believe that when the time comes, that throne and kingdom will be given to her first-born son, because he is her heir, and it belongs of right to him.

God has said that the throne and kingdom of David will be given to Jesus. You know that the throne and Kingdom of David were on this earth, so you can be sure that the throne and kingdom of Jesus will be on this earth.

He says that "the meek shall inherit the earth," and that those who are good enough to reign with Jesus, will reign on the earth.

You can believe this, because God tells you that it will be so. This is the faith that God wants you to have. He wants you to believe that there will be such a kingdom, that Jesus will be King, and that it will be on the earth, just where he says it will be.

But you could not get into the kingdom without a Savior. Some way must be found so that you can become heirs. You too must be made first-born sons, of that royal house of David. Then you will have a right to the throne and kingdom of David, with Jesus, and with all the good people who have ever lived. Without Jesus you could never make yourselves good enough, to find a place in that house, because those who become first-born sons of the royal House of David, become also God's sons.

You do a great many things that are wrong. You can never make them right, nor will God forgive you, unless you can find the way to get into his house. Then he will take your sins all away. You will be as white as snow in his sight.

If you should die, there is nobody on earth that can make you live again, and if they could, it would only be to die again. But if you get into God's house, the Savior will wake you up, (though you should die) and give you a life that will never end.

He came into the world, that he might do something to save you. He did everything that his Father told him to do. So he could get what had been promised to him and share it with you.

He died, so that his Father would give him the keys of death, that he might unlock the grave for you. He made himself an offering for sin, so that you might be forgiven when you come to God.

But nobody can come to God unless they come through Jesus. There is no other door into his House, no other way to become all clean and pure in his sight. "Without shedding of blood there is no remission," Jesus shed his blood for you—he died for you. You can come to God through him and ask him to forgive you—and he will take all your sins away, and when they are gone, when you are pardoned, it is like the man in prison, who has done some very wicked thing. His judge has said that he must die. That is the law of the land against which he has sinned. But the man is very sorry for what he has done. He tries to become a good man. he does right, he pleases those who have charge of him, his friends pity him, they become mediators for him, they plead with the great rulers of the land for his life. It is found out that although he has sinned, that he has repented, a pardon is written out, his sin is forgiven, he is free from the condemnation,—he will not be put to death. When his sin was remitted, the sentence of his death was taken off; so it will be with you. God has said, that "the wages of sin is death." That they who do not believe the gospel, and are not baptized, are condemned to die. He does not mean that they are condemned to die the death that everybody dies,—good people pass under that death, but that they, not having a part in the first resurrection, will come up in the second resurrection and die the second time for the sin that they themselves have done.

So when God says "He forgives you, when he says your sins are remitted," he means that the condemnation to that second death is taken away,—that you need no longer dread the wages of sin.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and can be sent postpaid to the Address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of publication price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION.
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE STUDIES. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Second Reproof. In 1 or 2 Numbers. 3. The Kingdom of God. 4. Names of Men and Things for Talkers. 5. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies &c., or assorted packages of ten for 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.
The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.
Life and Death. A concise statement and comparison of the two uses of these terms, free of the theological and Bible use.
Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Magruder.
Resurrection. Austin Cartis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"
Is it Time? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.
What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.
The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Luling.
EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
8c. each, or 65 for $3.
Is it Essential to believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Somes, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, And the Nations.
TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
8c. each, or 12 for 25c.
Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. S. Hope. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of Resurrection. J. B. Cook.
SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
8c. each; 12 for 50c. or 25 for $1.
The New Birth. Josiah Pettes.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Bates, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate anywhere.
TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
7c. each; 8 for 50c. or 20 for $1.
Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.
THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 15 for $1.
Evangelium concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.
The Restitution; by the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 19-21.
BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilton. The exposition throughout to be in harmony with Bible teaching. 36 pages, price 10c.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xii. and xxiii. 64 pages, price 15c.
Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 59 pages, price 10c.
The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence. T. H. Wilton. 48 pages, price 10c.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 44 pages, price 10c.
Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "Nine hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.
Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Dendiman, Congregational minister, and W. Kellaway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Dendiman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 50c., paper 40c.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Fiercely the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.
The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 118 pages, cloth 75c. paper 50c.
Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.10.
God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a ser of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 272 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marble edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

—THE—

QUESTION BOOK.

The Question Book is now ready, and may be had of the writer, at 10c. a copy. Postage stamps taken for amounts under $1. Its full title is "Daily Lessons, or Nurture and Admonition arranged in the form of Questions and Answers." One of the brethren in New York, read, to aid a good cause, has ordered 200 copies; another, in Baltimore, writes, "Our little church desires me to say that we will take two dozen of the Question Books. . . . I am truly glad that such a suggestion was made by that good sister, for it is just what our children need, and many of us older ones also, for most of us are children, only of a larger growth."

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
H. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. R. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
E. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILS-BACK,
J. M. ROBERTS.

E. A. CHAPLIN.....Editor.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, C. M. MYERS.
A. E. VAUGHEE.

The Restitution.

Keep Bro Sweethas Article.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 20, 1881. NO. 15.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a charity belief of the Gospel, repentance, and forsaking of sin, prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Seven Angels Prepare to Sound. First Trumpet. Why designated by Trumpets? Does the Seventh Seal include all the Trumpets? State of the Empire When the First Angel prepares to Sound—Civil Conditions—Ecclesiastical state—Rev. viii. 7—Exact Analysis. Terms Explained. Exposition.

No. 64.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Seven Angels Prepare to Sound.—They had received their trumpets. Each, therefore, had his special commission.

What preparation was necessary? They had to take their stations: each one at the head of his chronological era; for they are the messengers of the living God sent forth to do his will. They move when and where he orders, and sound at his command.

While they are preparing themselves let us survey the field and the work.

The Western Roman empire is the immediate field, and its overthrow the work.

Under Constantine the Great, Constantinople, the ancient Byzantium, was made a new seat of empire; afterwards called the Greek empire. This was called the "New Rome," to distinguish it from "Old Rome," in Italy, the capital of the Western empire. This division will be noticed under another head.

Constantine, in his will, left the empire to his three sons—Constantine II., Constans, and Constantius II. Here the empire was divided into three parts; each part being one third of the Roman earth; first into four parts, then into two parts; and finally into three parts. Constantine II. was slain A. D. 340, and Constans was murdered A. D. 350, leaving Constantius for a time sole emperor.

With the Western third we are now particularly interested. What elements were at work in this field for its overthrow?

Civil Elements.—Rome's greatest enemy during this era, was her barbarian (clay) element. Since the days of Julius Cæsar the empire had been extending its dominion northward. It had waged aggressive war on the North-men—Far-men—Germans—the Northern "Hive" of the modern European nations. The spoils of victories were principally savage men and women. These were sent home, into Italy, as slaves, and were scattered as domestic slaves of the wealthy families of the Italian division of the empire. In the course of three centuries they became very numerous and powerful. So much so, as to threaten the liberties of the empire. They become a powerful element in their armies. Some became emperors, others officers of the state.

First domestic slaves, then allies, peers, and finally emperors. This element weakened the pure iron (Roman). The first effect on these North-men—Germans, when entering the rich plains of sunny Italy, was to exchange their cold forest homes for an abode in this southern Paradise. Swarms continually lit upon the strongholds of the empire. The luxury of the Romans made them an easy prey. They had filled their cup by their persecution, and God had doomed their overthrow by the hardy Germen. God had also another purpose.

Religious Elements.—These were great disturbing forces. Man is called a religious animal. Devotion an original attribute. The union of devotion and selfishness forms a persecuting element.

The empire had gathered into its bosom every variety of religious emotion. It included every variety of devotional thought. Three centuries had evolved mighty religious forces. The great warfare was between God and idols. Michael and his army; and the dragon and his army.

Christ's mission had been clearly seen. "I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword." "I came to send fire on the earth," and "seeing that it will come. I wish it were already kindled."

That fire was kindled the week at the empire by the apostles. It was kept burning by them that fell west them. The empire under the rule of imperial Paganism had made constant efforts for three centuries, by fire, sword, and wild beasts, to put Christianity out of the empire. But their efforts had elevated Christianity to the throne of the empire.

God's signal change in the Roman empire.—Pagan Rome was to be broken down and taken out of the way, to make room for the development of Papal Rome. The Man of Sin. The time had now come when this change was to be accomplished. Was God in this work? Is he not the Supreme Ruler of the nations? How was it with Nebuchadnezzar? Was he not deposed from his kingdom, till he might know "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men." Daniel iv. 17.

God is, therefore, as conspicuous in civil history as in the ecclesiastical world. The Apocalypse is the battle ground between God and idols. God reveals to John through his beloved Son, what he intends to do with the fourth monarchy.

Let us follow his footsteps along the progressive developments of that empire, knowing that God himself shapes the destinies of all human governments.

The Man of Sin, whose workings began in the apostolic age, had to have room for its growth and full development. In the form of an apostate priesthood it was to sit in the temple (church) of God, as God sits.

Such an apostate power could not develop while the Pagan priesthood had imperial domination. Nor could that power fully develop among the eastern nations of the empire; nor could it develop under an imperial head, since it was to exercise imperial domination; it was to be a little horn in its civil power, among its ten fallen horns (kingdoms).

The empire had to be broken up into ten kingdoms. The North-men (Germans) had to form these kingdoms, as clay with the iron. Under Constantine the apostate Christian priesthood had a very rapid growth. Bishops became very powerful; so also with the elders and deacons; they had also great authority. Still Rome was to be the seat of Papal empire; and that was yet under imperial power. The winds that had been held during the sealing time were to rush forth, and enter upon their work of desolation. When the angels sound, and agents go forth, we must keep in view the governing power of the Deity is there to control.

First Trumpet.—"And the first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth; and the third part of the trees were burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up." Rev. viii. 7.

Hail and fire are the destroying agents of this scenic vision. Blood gives cast to their works. They spread desolation around them. We have described an agent and his agency—a cause and its effect. The chief symbol is a hail storm, a tornado, a similar agent and agency in the moral world.

God's death angel is a rushing hailstorm—riding forth, from a tempestuous sky, which for hours has been gathering blackness; and from whose deep cavorne and lofty pillars, have issued lightnings, and thunderings, and increasing sounds of pent up winds. The prophet sees it strike the land. Before it is a smiling Eden. Groves of evergreen, forests of lofty timber; whose waving boughs kiss the gentle zephyrs of a balmy air; rejoicing fields of the golden harvest; luxuriant meadows and green pastures—behind it the picture of desolation.

Follow the track of a tropical storm-wave. In its path no monument of human effort is left standing. Forests, yielding to the violence of their resistless, yet invisible enemy, uprooted, cover the earth with their mangled trunks; fields of ripening grain; extensive meadows and verdant pastures, are beaten into the ground by destructive hailstones. Human life and the lower orders of beings, experience the shock of this desolating scourge of the Almighty.

Such is the character and agency of the symbol. The agent symbolized, and its agency, must resemble it. It must be taken from another but similar class.

The natural and moral worlds are compared. We are more familiar with the physical world and its phenomena than with the moral world. Agents are selected, therefore, from the world of natural objects, to illustrate similar agents in the moral world—the symbol from the natural world, the agent or thing symbolized from the moral world.

This hailstorm, in its chronology, belongs to the fourth century, A. D. 340 to A. D. 410. Representing a similar scene in the Roman empire, with the same chronological dates and duration, we must look for such an agency in the western division of that empire. The imperial head of that empire must be wounded to death; after which its deadly wound must be healed. Rev. xiii. 3. That deadly wound must be inflicted on the imperial head of the monarchy, while it is in its leopard, or Christian garb, A. D. 340, and onward till it puts on its scarlet dress of the Papal hierarchy, when the deadly wound is healed. (A. D. 800.) That imperial head receives four deadly wounds denoted by the first four trumpets.

The Pagan empire is removed to room for the Christian empire, which is superseded by the Papal empire. The order is; Pagan, or dragonic; leopard, or Christian; Papal, or scarlet.

We have described the symbolic agent of the first trumpet, and have noted the character of its agency. An Eden was before it; and behind it the track of desolation. We have found its chronology—A.D. 340 to A.D. 410. Let us now turn to profane history of that date, and identify the agent symbolized by the destructive tornado.

The term "third part" is clearly understood to mean one civil division of the three divisions of the empire made by Constantine the Great, for his three sons. The western division, whose capital was ancient Rome, is here intended.

SUPPLEMENTARY.

Before we enter upon the examination of profane history of the seven trumpets, allow me to call your attention to a peculiar feature of the introduction, the casting of a censer full of fire (burning incense) into the earth, and its effects. The priesthood is in heaven; its workings are on the earth. How can there be such a distance between the chief engine (the priesthood) and its operative work? the one in heaven, the other on earth? Why not approximate them after the style of Papal priesthood? God's field of operation is not circumscribed. His agency is equally powerful, whether remote or near.

1. Christ's high priesthood could not be on earth, since the Aaronic priesthood, its type, was here. The pattern priesthood, which Moses and David followed, was in heaven.

2. God is no respecter of distances in the radiation of his power. The rays of the sun (one of his creatures) traverse immensity of space before reaching the fields of productive labor. The telegraphic wires are silent under seas and oceans; it is only when they reach the abodes of man that they begin to talk. The telephone has no message for persons along the way. Angels traverse, in solitude, immensity of space, between earth and the throne of the Deity. God provides abundant space. There are vacant fields and fields of life and activity.

Let us present an illustration more at length:—a national illustration. One of the many wonders of the Centennial was the Corlis Engine. In an open space, surrounded by acres of machinery, stood this embodiment of human intellect:—a mechanical wonder. Its location was distinct and solitary. To the spectator, it had no visible relationship to the complicated mechanisms in its immediate vicinity. It was an engine of superior construction, of perfect finish, and of great power; it was the prince of engines. Its surroundings were peculiarly attractive, not only for the infinite variety of machinery, but for the mystery of their motive power. This king of engines was their life. It breathed into them the spirit of "lives." By shafts, and wheels, and belts, and by other gearing it was connected with the whole field of machinery. Through the connectives it diffused its power to the complicated machinery.

In that engine (the Corlis) "They lived, and moved, and had their being." If was their all. When it moved they could move; when it withdrew its power their action ceased.

It was interesting, in early dawn, to visit that location, for the purpose of seeing the Corlis wake up the mechanism, as one after another was geared with its sovereign; and how soon they ceased to move when thrown out of gear.

Such a "Corlis" has the universe. Its kingdoms—mineral, vegetable, and animal, are subordinated to a power, as much superior to the Corlis of the Centennial, as that engine was to the most simple mechanism under its control. It moves the complicated machinery of the universe, from the infusoria to the planetary systems that fill immensity; it is the life of all organisms, the source of all intelligence.

A plan is devised to restore the earth to a higher state of perfection than when fitted up as the home of the first Adam; and to people it with man in his highest type of perfection. The Divine Being (the Celestial Corlis) becomes so interested in the scheme, that he spares his only Son to engineer this special department. The Son volunteers his noble services; disrobes himself; puts not on the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham; becomes obedient unto death, even the death of the cross; was buried, rose again on the third day; and after giving all necessary instruction to his disciples during forty days, ascends into heaven, to enter upon the work of his priesthood. Such was Christ's position when John was called up to the "open door."

High on a throne sits the Almighty. Twenty-four lesser thrones in the semi-circular front occupied by as many elders, engaged in Divine worship, led by four living creatures. Innumerable angels wait round the throne. All the connecting shafts, wheels, and belts are put in order. Angels fly to and fro receiving messages and carrying them. A seal is opened, and the work progresses.

Such is but a glance at the machinery of the priesthood of God's beloved Son as seen by the evangelist. Seven spirits, the Divine motive power, go forth. They are the breathings of the Almighty—symbols of his power radiated from the throne through all parts of the Roman world, infusing life and health into its moral system. Man throws himself out of gear, and is severed from his moral life; his functions of moral nature cease to do their work, and death, moral death, soon follows.

God infuses life into the moral world, as in the physical; when it is withdrawn life ceases.

Such is the Christian priesthood, and such is the nature of our connection with its motive power. God commands the winds as his swift messengers to do his will. Sun, moon, heat, light, electricity—all natural elements, are his angels of mercy or of wrath. Such is he in the scheme of redemption.

Stand where John stood; View the throne with its occupant; see that vast machinery, devised for man's recovery; angels, living creatures, elders, the Lamb; yea, God himself, working the mechanism—the world of mind, through its golden chains that bind all in one great moving whole, for the recovery of a fallen world and its unfortunate inhabitants.

John is shown another priesthood—the apostacy; a machinery, similar in its construction, but under another head, and quite different, in location, in its workings, and in its spirit.

The one is located in heaven; the other on the earth. The one has God and the Lamb as its motive power; the other has God's pretended Vicar and Satan as their officiating priesthood. These two priesthoods are rivals; a deadly feud has long existed between them.

Into their struggles we are about to enter. The sounding of the first trumpet marks the onset. We shall follow the contest between the priest in the Vatican, and the priest that officiates in the Celestial Tabernacle. The development of the apostacy will be carefully noted. The conflicts between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent shall be outlined, as shown to the evangelist. This apostate priesthood controlled the power of the Roman empire against Christ's priesthood for twelve and one-half centuries. It still exercises great power over the people of God. But the Divine promise gives us the assurance, that it shall be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. Even so: Come, Lord Jesus.

ASSEMBLE YOURSELVES TOGETHER.

JOHN L. WINCE.

"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." Heb. x. 25.

This injunction is put negatively, and implies that we are under obligations to assemble ourselves together.

It has all the force of a direct command and bears upon its face the sentence of condemnation against that class of believers who neglect or disregard their duty in this respect. No divine obligation can be habitually disregarded without working serious consequences to the character of the Christian, for it is acting himself in opposition to the will of God, and to such extent is in rebellion against the divine government. The importance of obeying the first part of this command grows out of the fact that it is necessary in order to obey the second part, to exhort one another. To exhort one another as we are occasionally thrown together in our business avocations does not fulfill the conditions of the command, for the exhortation is to be given in the assembled capacity of believers, and in this capacity many other things are to be done, which makes the coming together all the more important. Show me a number of believers conveniently near enough to meet at stated times, but who neglect to do so, and I will show you that such believers are practically unbelievers, destitute of the love of the truth and of the love of one another, and are doing nothing for the cause of the Master to whom they have sworn fealty. An isolated individual might remain a believer and a Christian if the temper of his mind is such that he sighs and prays for the sympathy and love, the mutual aid and comfort, and the sweet communion and goodly fellowship of the saints. He feels the want, and values at their real worth the blessings which circumstances have denied him. But how is it with those who are so fortunately and favorably situated, that, with two or three miles of travel they can meet together, and yet refuse to obey the command? Is it not fitting that they should lose all desire for the worship of God, that the spirit of praise should die out of them, that all the springs of heavenly joy should be dried up, and that they come finally to be like the world, hard-hearted, close-fisted, worshipers of the God of this world? When a Christian begins to love the society of the godless, to listen with a keen zest to their conversation, interlarded, as it often is, with profanity, low jokes and obscenity; to praise, and glory in some favorite candidate for office, but utters not a word for Jesus and his truth; to prefer the meeting of the political club to the assembly of the saints for prayer and exhortation; to put himself to great trouble and expense to attend to grand party demonstrations but is too tired and sleepy to harness his team, and travel a distance of three or four miles to hear the message of life proclaimed by one of God's servants, it is high time for him to take warning, for the current is rapidly bearing him on to destruction. He better seek the company, communion and fellowship of the saints, in whose hearts the love of God is still shed abroad, on whose altars the fires of faith and devotion are brightly burning, and whose prayers are continually rising like sweet incense to the throne of the Father. No one can be a Christian while living in habitual neglect of Christian duty. The heart must be in the great work of saving ourselves and others. God demands it. We must be aggressive and progressive.

Youths' Column.

The Hebrew Child.

I'll tell you a story, Rex,
If you will be very still,
About a beautiful baby boy,
Whom bad men tried to kill.
And his mamma hid him by day and night,
Out of their wicked, cruel sight.

But her heart was filled with fear,
As she heard the people say,
"That Hebrew woman over there,
Hath hidden her babe away;"
And another plan she sought to try,
For how could she see her darling die?

She secretly made for him
A cradle, pretty and light,
All woven with rushes, long and slim,
And she made it water-tight—
Then quick to the river's edge she flew,
And laid him down where the wild flags grew.

For she knew that every day,
A princess, tall and grand,
With her maidens fair, would come that way,
And the rest was in God's hand—
If weal or woe, she could not tell,
And she bade his sister guard him well.

So when the maidens fair
With the lovely lady came,
The little boat lay safely there,
Watched by Marian
And the princess said, "What is that I see?
Go fetch it, I pray thee, unto me."

Now when from his tiny hed
To take him the maiden tried—
"Twas a Hebrew child, they whispering said,
And the little baby cried.
Then the princess lovingly on him smiled,
And made him her own adopted child.
By God's own finger led.

Care For Sparrows.

A little girl, seeing the servant throw the crumbs into the fire, said, "Don't you know that God takes care of the sparrows?"

"If God takes care of them, we need not trouble ourselves about them," was the careless reply.

"But," said the little girl, "I would rather be like God, and help him take care of the little birds, than scatter or waste the food that He gives us."

So she carefully collected what was left of the crumbs, and threw them out of the window. In a short time several little birds flew eagerly to the spot and picked up the crumbs she had scattered. After this she every day collected in a little basket the crumbs and bits of bread that had fallen around the table, and threw them under the window for the birds; and during all the winter those little creatures came regularly after each meal to partake of the food thus provided for their support.

How beautiful it was to see this little girl trying "to help God," as she said, and thus early learning to be kind to the helpless of God's creatures!

The Praying Child.

"My children," said a poor widow to her five little ones, "I have no food for you this morning, as all the bread in the house is gone, and I have no money to buy more. Pray to the good God to supply our need, for he has said, "Call upon me in the day of trouble."

Little Christian, one of the widow's children, who was not more than six years of age, went on his way to school sad and hungry.

But as he passed the door of the church he saw that it was open, and determined to enter in and pray there; for his mother's dwelling was so small and crowded that he was never able to say his prayers quite alone. So he went into the church, not knowing that any one was there; he knelt down in the middle aisle and said the following prayer:

"Dear Father in heaven, we children have nothing left to eat. Our mother has no food in the house for us, and without thy help we must all starve. O Lord, help us. Thou art rich and powerful, and to thee it is an easy thing to help us. Thou hast promised to do so, therefore now fulfill thy word."

So prayed Christian with childlike simplicity, and then went to school. On his return home he saw the cloth laid for dinner; and bread, meat, eggs, and rice temptingly spread upon the table.

"Thank God!" said little Christian, when he saw it, "He has heard my prayer: mother, did a beautiful angel bring these things for us?"

"No," replied the widow, "but God has sent them in answer to your prayer. When you were in church you thought no one saw you but God: but there was a lady sitting in one of the pews, and she heard you pray, and saw you through the lattice-work on the side of the pew. She sent us our food: she is the angel whom God raised up to help us. Now let us ask his blessing on our meal, and never forget, my children, those sweet lines:—

"Trust the Lord and wait his hour,
He will aid in love and power."

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 11.

BAPTISM—A PICTURE OF YOUR FAITH.

You would not like to come up from the dead only to die again; would you? You would not like to come up and have all the naughty things you have ever done stand out before you to condemn you?

Everybody would know you then. They would know that you had not minded God when he had told you what to do, so that you could live forever. They would know that you had by your own fault, lost your chance go by.

How bad you would feel—your name in the Book of Death! and no time in which to try again, nobody to save you,—all lost, and lost forever!

Once, you might have come to God. Once there was a pleading Savior waiting to be gracious, but you wouldn't come, you wanted to live in sin, and the wages are yours. "It is too dreadful" you say, even to think about. But if you do not think about it now, you must think then. You will know then just what you have lost, and why you have lost it.

You better think now. God has promised to give you eternal life, if you will believe on Jesus. I have shown you what it is to believe on him. You believe on him when you believe, that the promises made to the fathers, were made to him. You believe on him when you believe that the throne and kingdom of David will be given to him, and that the uttermost part of the earth are to be his. You believe on him, when you believe the story of his birth, believe what he taught during his life of the kingdom, and of what people must do to get into it—how he died, rose from the dead, went to heaven and is coming again, to crown and reward the good.

God has promised to forgive your sins if you will believe these things, and take the name of Jesus by being baptized into his name. But you must first believe that Jesus died, and that he died for you.

You have all read how he was put to death on the cross,—just think, and keep thinking that it was for you—that you might be saved by his death. He loved you, and gave his life a ransom for you.

He was buried in the new tomb of Joseph; he rose the third day. For forty days he talked with his disciples and was then taken up into heaven, while angels stood by and said, "That same Jesus shall come again in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

Now you believe all this. You believe that he is alive to die no more, and that he will come again to raise the dead, to establish his kingdom, to make all the earth like Eden, to bless all the people of the earth, and to give all the good the things God has promised to give them.

You want to tell people that you believe it. You feel just as if you would like to act out your faith in a picture. God has told you how you can do this. You believe that Jesus died, you can die—or picture death—by being put under the water. You would die, if you were to stay under water. You believe that Jesus was buried—you are in a picture grave when in the waters of baptism. You believe that Jesus came out of the death state, to die no more, and that you will be raised to die no more if you do right—you picture this when you come up out of the water. "Without shedding of blood there is no remission." You are commanded to be baptized for the remission of your sins. When you picture the death of Jesus, by being baptized, God promises to forgive you. His blood cleanses you then. There is no other place where God has promised that the blood of Jesus shall reach you. His blood was shed for you, when he died; when you picture that death, it touches you, and God forgives, when he says "I will forgive you if you are baptized," and you go and are baptized you know that he has forgiven you, because he always does just as he says he will do.

I know when you learn all you can about Jesus, and think how much he has done for you, that you cannot help feeling sorry that you have ever done wrong. If God has loved you so much as to give his own Son to die for you, you will want to do something to please him.

Then give him yourselves, you can give him no more precious gift.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, April 20, 1881.

SOME articles are deferred—for if published we shall have to copy them.

BE careful in sending Postal Orders to the Treasurer to insert the name, S. A. Chaplin, just as it is in the paper. The best way to save mistakes is to make them payable to THE RESTITUTION.

THE following accounts of the earthquake at Chios, and of the floods in Spain, will show the extent of these calamities. Floods in the west of our own country have caused great loss and suffering:

AN earthquake desolated Chios, the Capital of the island of Chios, or Scio in the Greek Archipelago, on Sunday, April 10. It is feared that over eight thousand persons were killed, and more than seven thousand seriously injured. The island is thirty-two miles long, and eighteen at its greatest breadth, with an area of about 500 square miles. It is one of the richest and most beautiful islands in the Greek Archipelago, producing wine, oranges, figs, and other fruit. The town is built of stone and defended by a castle. It possesses manufactures of velvet, and carries on a large export trade. The town is described as looking as if it had been terribly bombarded. Hundreds of houses are transformed into shapeless mass of ruins, under which lie an unknown number of victims. A majority of the remaining houses are cracked and roofless, and may fall at any moment. The inhabitants wander about anxious to search for missing relatives or lost property, but are afraid to risk their lives in clearing away the rubbish. Forty thousand persons are reported to be in need of immediate relief.

NEWS of a disastrous inundation at Seville is cabled from Madrid. The Guadalquiver River has swollen and overflowed its banks, covering four square miles of Seville and forty miles of the country around its mouth. The suburbs and streets have from one to twenty-seven feet of water in them. The people are living in upper stories. The police are taking food and provisions by boat. All the valley and country beyond seems an immense lake. The tops of trees, churches and roofs appear just above the waters, which sweep along cattle and crops, and the river is rushing over gardens and quays, entering the lovely St. Elmo Palace. The authorities already estimate the loss at Seville to be over $1,000,000, and in the country districts it is impossible to make any estimate at present. King Alfonso has sent royal engineers to superintend repairs to the embankments, and has placed his own private purse at the disposal of the authorities to relieve the sufferers.

THE COMMISSION.

Βαπτίζοντες αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Πατρὸς, καὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ, καὶ τοῦ ἁγίου Πνεύματος.

"Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Mat. xxviii. 19.

To ascertain what is to be understood by being baptized, or adopted into a name, we must let the Scriptures explain the design of redemption. In Acts xv. 14, the design of the gospel dispensation is stated in a very few words: "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name."

Now connect with this declaration another from Eph. iii. 8-14, where Paul is speaking of a mystery that had not been known in other ages—which he explains to be "That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel," and that this participation was according to God's eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord, and then follow on to the distinguishing honor resulting from this fellowship, as stated in verses 14, 15, and we have the same grand object of preaching the gospel among the Gentiles stated in equally explicit language: "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named."

The Greek word πατρια—patria—rendered family, is etymologically derived from πατὴρ—pater-father—which determines the antecedent to be "Father," and not "Lord Jesus Christ." This antecedent relationship is preserved in the Vulgate where paternitas sustains the same relation to pater that the Greek words do, and where paternitas means, as the Greek word πατρια does, lineage, posterity, hereditary descent from a paternal ancestor. Indeed family lineage is always named from the father, which rule also holds good when a child by adoption comes into the possession of a new name.

This purpose of God had been expressed in language so definite in a former part of this epistle as to leave no room for mistake.

In chapter i. 3-6, we have this revealed mystery of Paul's preaching expressed in the clearest manner: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places [things] in Christ; according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will."

From this we learn that God has predestinated a class of the human family to the adoption—Gr. υἱοθεσια—sonship—by Jesus Christ to HIMSELF.

We will now bring a Scriptural quotation where God, his Son, and the Spirit are represented as each related to this adoption. "When the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption—Gr. υἱοθεσια—of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father."

Here God sends his Son, to redeem men that they may receive the adoption of sons, i. e., sonship: and when in the sonship, or sons, he sends the Spirit of his Son into their hearts, crying, Father, Father. The Spirit's agency is more fully brought to view in another place. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption—υἱοθεσια—sonship—whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."

In another verse the apostle points out what our relation to Christ is when we come into the the same relation to the Divine Name that distinguishes him in honor above the angels themselves: "For whom he did foreknow he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren."

We can never be accounted brethren of the Son of God till we come into the same filial relation to God: i.e., till his Father's name in like manner be named on us, and we too be called the sons of God." Our change of state and relation can best be seen by contrast, and this contrast is best expressed in the apostle's own language: "Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world; but now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometime were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. * * * For through him we both have access by one spirit unto the Father. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."

Now as the commission authorized the apostles to preach the gospel to all nations—the Gentiles—every creature—who were without God, without Christ, and without hope; and as these apostles have positively declared that this gospel dispensation is that God might visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name; and as Paul instructed us that these Godless, Christless, hopeless aliens are to be brought nigh by the blood of Christ, that it is through the Spirit that we all have access—Gr. προσαγωγὴν—admittance,—into the household of God, and that the family embraced in this household is named from, or of, the Father, does it not conclusively follow that the one name that God takes out a people from the Gentiles for, and the paternal name named upon the whole family in heaven and earth which is, of, or from, God is the one name into which the commission authorized the apostles to baptize? It is by baptism, as the consummating act, after we have been instructed, and believe the gospel, that we are brought out of our state of alienship from God, into the relationship of sonship to God; we become sons of God, and thus we are named of the Father's name; this name of sonship that allies us paternally to God the Father of the household, also allies us fraternally to the Son, who is Son of God in the most pre-eminent sense of this word, being the only begotten and first-born; and it also relates us to the Holy Spirit as the Spirit of adoption—Gr. υἱοθεσια—filiation—sonship—in whom—Gr. ἐν ᾧ—we cry Abba, Father, and which bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God.

But it may be urged that these conclusions are not legitimately to be deduced from the commission. It may be claimed that baptizing into the name is not designed at all to express this relative alliance to the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; but that baptism into the name as the Father's is not expressive of his Fatherhood, as God, but of his adorable Sovereignty as Jehovah, and that baptism into the name as the Son's is not to express anything like fraternity, but as a formal acknowledgement of his Lordship over the household of faith, and that baptism into this same Divine name as the Holy Spirit's is not into the filiation as sealed upon us and witnessed by the Spirit, but is rather an open profession that we take the Holy Spirit as our teacher and leader in all Divine things, and that, therefore, the baptism into the name is not designed to express the relationship that Father, Son, and Holy Spirit have to this name under these appellative terms, nor of our coming into connection with this name as children by our baptism into these co-relative words, but that we must regard these appellatives as of a more personal character, and that our baptism into the name as connected with the Father expresses our faith in him as God the Supreme object of our veneration, and into the name as connected with the Holy Spirit is taking the Spirit as our guide and instructor into truth and righteousness, would all this, if admitted, help the matter any so far as immersion into each appellative is concerned? Let us remember that it was not into three appellatives nor into three personal designations that the apostles were authorized to baptize, but into the name—one name—connected in some manner or relation with the three appellatives.

But happily we have as complete a distribution of the persons, as any partisan could claim here, in another place, and we are also informed just how many times immersion is to be performed.

In the same epistle to the Ephesian church where we are instructed regarding the Sonship, the Household, and the naming of the family from God the Father, we have this separated distribution of the personalities, and here is the very place where baptism into each separate personality should have been enjoined if required by the commission to the eleven apostles, as Paul was called to the apostleship by our Lord after his ascension, and received his commission directly from the Son of God enthroned at the right hand of the Majesty on high.

In this personal distribution how many immersions does he, the great apostle of the Gentiles enjoin? Let him answer.

"There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of us all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Eph. iv. 4-6.

The Greek has ἓν βάπτισμα—hen baptisma—one immersion—the German, eine taufe—the Dutch, een doop—and the Swedish, ett dop—all three languages signifying one dip.

This apostle in another place says: "I certify, you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after men, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Gal. i. 11, 12.

Now if he was taught by the revelation of Jesus Christ, and if he has not shunned to declare all the counsel of God, he has taught us where these names are spoken of separately and also as significant of the divinity of each personality that only one immersion is required. We might as well claim that there are three bodies, three Spirits, three Lords, three faiths, and three Gods, as to claim that the apostle enjoins three baptisms—or if a threefold baptism, then a threefold Spirit, a threefold faith, etc.

If the connection of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit to the name into which we are baptized be not in the etymological sense of these family terms but in the sense of Divinity of nature, authority of rulership, and rightful objects of veneration and worship, or in some other manner, still the appellative terms have some consistent relation to the one name into which the apostles were directed to baptize, and our baptism brings us also into some relationship to this one name whether, as children, subjects, disciples, worshipers, or all combined. The appellative words in the commission are relatively connected with sonship, and if this be not intended, let those utterly disclaiming any such idea as far-fetched and fanciful, point out what the relation of the appellative terms Father, Son, and Holy Spirit is to the one name and also what the particular relation is by which we are brought by baptism into this same one name.

We do not aim to be dogmatical, but to suggest. Our illustration of being adopted into a family name was not intended as giving the certain meaning of the commission, but as an expression that might be used when adoption was the theme spoken of, when some one was thus brought into any family connection; that baptism was no more required into each several name in the commission, than adoption would be into every individual name of a family connection.

Whether the privilege of being called the children of God is what is definitely intended by the peculiar relative names connected with the baptismal formula or not, still the Scriptures do teach that it was in connection with baptism that Jesus Christ was made manifest to Israel as the Son of God, and that our manifestation as children is connected also with our baptism.

We leave these for future consideration.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.

No. 3.

Palestine.

Palestine has a climate that is greatly varied by situation and locality. The Scriptures note the three main features of the surface physiognomy of the Holy Land "the valley, and the plain, and the mountain of Israel." The climate and productions vary as these diversities of locality and elevation obtain. "The region about Jordan" denotes the level country on both sides of that river. In the low valley, through which this celebrated river flows, the climate is extremly hot. The Jordan valley is one of the most wonderful depressions in the world. It is properly a continuation of the Bukaa valley between the Lebanon Ranges to which allusion has already been made, and which was anciently called Coelo-Syria. From its fountain heads in the Great Lebanon Valley to the Dead Sea, the Jordan rushes down a continuous inclined plane, broken in many places by rapids and precipitous falls. According to computations made by the American Explorer, Lieutenant Lynch, the average descent of the river was 11.8 feet to the mile. The lake of Tiberias has been found to be 682 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, and that of the Dead Sea 1316.7 feet below the Great Sea. The Jordan is so crooked that in a strait line of about 65 miles, the distance between these two inland Seas. Its tortuous course measure a fully 200 miles. The sources of the Jordan are traced through some minor streams to mountain springs and these streams meet and flow through the marshes north of Lake Huleh (the waters of Merom) from which Lake, in a united stream, the Jordan enters the sea of Tiberias, or Sea of Galilee, distant about 9-12 miles from Lake Huleh.

The little Lake Huleh is a triangular body of water with its base to the north and its apex to the South, and is in length about four miles with a width of about three miles. The district of country for ten miles north along both sides of the Jordan is an almost impenetrable reedy marsh, and submerged with water during the rainy seasons. The water of this lake is clear and sweet, and is covered in parts by a broad-leaved plant, and it is the resort of numerous waterfowl. After leaving this lake the next halt of the Jordan is at the hallowed Lake of Galilee, which it enters in a stream of about 70 feet wide, after flowing through a narrow ravine, shut in by high precipitous banks. The Sea of Gennesaret as this body of water is sometimes named in the Gospels, is if an oval shape and about 13 miles long and six miles broad. On the East the banks rise into the dark Gaulonitish hills to the height of more than 2000 feet, resembling a mountain range, but indeed forming the supporting wall of the table land of the province of Gaulanitis. On the western shore the land rises in a succession of plateaus of different altitudes. The water of the lake is cool, sweet and transparent, of a beautiful sparkling look as it laves its pebbly rimmed margin. After leaving this lake the Jordan rushes down the tilted incline, in countless twistings and surgings, till it finally mingles the crystal waters of its sources in Mountain Springs with the salt bitter waters of the Dead Sea. The enormous depth of this lake is as remarkable as its unique depression below the ordinary sea level. Its greatest depth is near the north and where its soundings are 1308 feet, and close along the Moab Shore the depth is 900 feet. At the south end of the lake the water is shallow. Geologists claim that the deep chasm through which the Jordan flows is a cleft figure in the earth's crust caused by volcanic upheavals and subsidences of the earth's surface in the prehistoric ages of this world's formation. Lynch has remarked that "there are evidently two terraces to the Jordan, and through the lower one the river runs its serpentine course. From the stream, above the immediate banks, there is on each side, a singular terrace of low hills, like truncated cones, which is the bluff terminus of an extended table-land, reaching quite to the Mountains of Hauran on the east, and the high hills on the west side." It is now with the climate and productions of this remarkable rent in the earth's surface, and noted feature of the land of Palestine that we have to do. Commencing with the country bordering on Lake Gennesaret, it is stated that "the great depression makes the climate of the shores almost tropical. This is very sensibly felt by the traveler in going down from the plains of Galilee. In Summer the heat is intense, and even in early spring the air has something of an Egyptian balminess. Snow very rarely falls, and though it often whitens the neighboring mountains, it never lies here. The vegetation is almost of a tropical character." Speaking of the country bordering upon the sea of Tiberias as it appeared in the days of Christ another author says: "All the splendor of nature in southern lands was poured on its shores. Culture, which left no spot unproductive, encircled the blue waters, even yet so enchanting a contrast to the yellow chalk hills that mostly fringe them. The western shore is still bright with many-colored vegetation, while on the east, the steep hills that sink to the water's edge are bare and gloomy rocks. The richest spot on the lake is the plain of Gennesareth, where, in our Lord's day, all the fruits of Palestine abounded. Even the hills were then covered with trees. Cypresses, oaks, almonds, firs, figs, cedars, citrons, olives, myrtles, palms, and balsams are enumerated by a cotemporary of Jesus as adorning the valleys or hills. The now bare landscape was then a splendid garden. Oleander bushes, with flowers of the loveliest colors, figs, vines, grain-fields, and soft meadows fringed the banks, and, while fruit-trees and olives covered the hills, the shores were dotted with waving palms."

With regard to the valley of the upper Jordan in its climate and productions in our own times, we must trust the reports of modern travellers. On the eastern bank of Lake Huleh the land was found, by a recent explorer, to be cultivated almost down to the shore. Large crops of wheat, barley, maize, sesame, and rice were growing to reward the labors of the husbandman. Horses, cattle and sheep were ranging the rich pastures, and herds of black buffalo, were luxuriating in the streams and marsh lands to which allusion has already been made. These wild herds are with reason supposed to be the lineal descendants of the "fat bulls of Bashan" that formerly ranged among the oaken forests once the pride of that eastern land, and that remain the staple trees of those regions. Reaching the country bordering on Lake Gennesaret, that we described as it appeared in the days of Christ, it remains that we give the appearances of this locality in our own days. "Cornfields wave round Gennesareth on the west, and the palm and vine, fig and pomegranate, are still to be seen here and there. Melons grown on its shores are of great size and much esteemed. Pink oleanders, and a rose-colored species of hollyhock, in great profusion, wait upon every approach to a rill or spring."

We leave a description of the lower Jordan, where all the flowery gems of nature re-appear in all the gorgeousness of tropical coloring, for another paper.

* For a counterpart of this supposed future solemn event in the past, consult Zech. xiv. 4-10, regarding the great earthquake that will take place when the Lord descends to the Mount of Olives, causing great geological changes in the future.

Letter Drawer.

STEPHENS CITY, VA.
April 14, 1881.

Editor Restitution:

I am glad to say that since you so kindly drew the attention of the brethren to the subject, the contributions have been coming in quite freely, and in such amounts as to justify the hope and belief that the requisite amount will be raised to defray the expense of publication.

I have obtained, too, some reduction in the terms by the publishers, who report that the printed pages will not reach 160, so that already more than half the whole amount needed is in hand or available, and a dear Christian Brother, whose means are NOT large but whose heart is, writes that there must be no failure, and if after his own contribution (which is generous) and others are reckoned up to May 1, and any deficiency remains, he will send more and will be one of three persons to pay the balance needed at 60 days time, as offered by the publishers.

This, I think, effectually secures the publication, even if the current receipts still coming in, should prove insufficient.

Under the blessing of him "whose eyes are upon the truth," and who "giveth liberally and upbraideth not," for it all comes from him, for the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," it will not be necessary to allow our liberal-hearted brother and his colleagues to assume any heavier burden.

I will be able to report the result, if the Lord will, in your first issue of THE RESTITUTION in May, for the information of the brethren

Faithfully yours,
A. D. MARTHER.

NORTH WINDHAM, CT.
April 4, 1881.

Editor Restitution:

In your issue of March 23, I see an article on Faith and Works, by I. C. T. On love to the brethren, he quoted 1 John iv. 20, "If a man say I love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar." He then says "The question of questions is, Who is my brother? Will some one answer."

Jesus, the Elder Brother of all true believers says, "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father who is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother," and also "By this we may know that we love the children of God."

Believers, brethren, when we love God and keep his commandments, or do his will we are brothers.

Jesus calls wicked men tares, goats, children of the devil, and they are to be gathered and cast into the fire and burned; but believers are compared to wheat and sheep, children of God, brethren.

We certainly cannot love the devil's children and their wicked works. But are not to injure them, but leave it to him who judgeth righteously. Both are to grow together until the harvest. So I understand it. I hope some of our ready scribes will take it up and write on the subject.

L. B. CHAMBERLAIN.

LAPAZ, Ind.

Editor Restitution:

I wish to say to all the brethren and sisters in the Lord: Let us lift up our heads and rejoice, for we surely are nearing our immortal home.

A few more days of sorrow and suffering, a few more trials and troubles, and we shall hear Jesus says: "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Oh, blessed Church of God, as we realize that we are upon the crumbling verge of this closing age, almost upon the threshold of the glorious restitution, when the heavens shall depart as a scroll, and expose to view the coming of the Son of God.

May every individual member of the mystical body of Jesus, become aroused to the great responsibility that rests upon them.

Then dear brethren and sisters, let us live each day in such a manner as will be well pleasing in the sight of God—bear all our hardships with patience, our persecutions with meekness and all long-suffering—the scorn and scoffs of the world with an eye single to the glory of God.

Although, like the beloved apostle, we may have continued sorrow in our hearts for those who may be dear to us by nature's ties who still stand aloof from Jesus, still there is a peace that passeth all knowledge.

Oh, how I would that the word, which is the sword of the Spirit, might penetrate the heart that by faith they might behold the Son of God, who the night he was betrayed, in the Garden of Gethsemane, three times fell upon his face and prayed the Father if possible to have the bitter cup removed, but as there was no other name under heaven whereby they might be saved, God so loved us that he suffered his well-beloved Son to be pierced through with many sorrows.

Would that by faith they could behold that blessed Jesus fall beneath the heavy cross as he carried it up the mount to his place of execution. Can you look upon him as he hangs between heaven and earth by spikes that have been driven through his hands and feet, and behold the blood that he shed for the remission of sins, and still reject him.

Oh, dear sinner, seek an interest in that blood before it is forever too late. Careless backslider, return with all thy heart before the death dews gather on thy brow, that you may meet with the redeemed in the world to come.

Fathers and mothers get ready to meet God in peace, for the tempest clouds of his just wrath are rapidly gathering over this sin-polluted world.

Pray for me that when Jesus comes again, I may be sheltered in the rifted Rock.

WILLIS LOGAN

MALVERN, Ark.

Editor Restitution:

In answer to numerous inquiries made by private correspondence as to this part of the state in varied respects, I will endeavor to give a brief description. And to begin I will state, that Malvern is a growing place of 1500 inhabitants. The site of Hot Springs Co. at the Junction of the Hot Springs R. R., with the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern, 20 miles from the noted health resort, above mentioned. We have good society made up of people from nearly every state North and South; who are Law-abiding and anxious for sturdy industrious laborers to come and make their home among us. We have good free schools organized, not alone in our town but in every part of the country, and the people are alive to the importance of education. Almost every religious denomination is represented, but those of the one faith who are waiting for the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth with the Christ as King of kings are but few, and have no organized church at this place, but there is one about fifteen miles from here, and we hope soon to organize here.

The soil of the country is varied, and chiefly adapted to corn and cotton. Fruit and strawberries grow to perfection. There is but little small grain raised, most of garden vegtables do well.

Water is abundant, mostly freestone supplied by unceasing springs throughout the season. This is altogether a timbered country consisting of pine, hickory, ash, oak, walnut and cherry. Granite is abundant. Arrangements both public and individually are so liberal that homes can be had to suit all circumstances from the public domain of the U. S., free of cost, to the well improved farm which can be had at prices to suit. Good farm hands are in great demand in every neighborhood, wages range from twelve to eighteen dollars per month with board.

The land department of the St. L. I. M., & S. R. R. has at great expense erected at this place a large and convenient house for the benefit of people seeking homes here, the use of which is free until they have time to procure a home. If the resources of the state were as well known as others, it is said there would not be room for the emigration to Arkansas. For further information write for The Malvern Meteor, edited by Col J. P. Henderson, at this place. Yours in the one faith,

THO. J. SALLEY.

OBITUARY.

On Wednesday morning, March 30, 1881, at 1:40 o'clock, our dear mother passed away, after an illness of but a few weeks. She fell asleep in Jesus. Her faith in her Redeemer never wavered. She trusted implicitly in the glorious promises given by her Savior to those who cast their burden on him. She passed away full of years and honor; not such as comes from following worldly interests, but the honor that comes from a master's work well done.

Our mother was born nearly three-quarters of a century ago. Very early in life she gave her heart to the Lord, and to make her separation from the world complete, joined the Lutheran Church.

She moved to Cordova, Ill., in 1856, and soon after connected herself with the Advent Church. She believed firmly in the Bible doctrine of the immortality that is to come. At a later period in life she embraced with great zeal the views entertained by so many eminent persons regarding the restitution. She sought for light wherever it was to be found, and when found no child of God could be more thankful for favors granted.

Christ was her refuge at all times when weary of life and its ills. When her frame was tortured by the pangs of sickness no murmurings escaped her lips. Looking onward beyond the grave she saw the fulfillment of the things God has promised. Often would she repeat the words: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." And when tossing in pain she would be heard to repeat those lines that send a thrill of joy to the heart of every child of God:

"Asleep in Jesus," etc.

Yes, our mother sleeps in Jesus. Blessed thought! We mourn not as those who have no hope. If we keep sacred the sayings of our mother we shall see her again, where pain and sickness, sorrow and death, shall not be present to mar an eternity of happiness.

Mother closed her eyes surrounded and cheered by her children, who had gathered from different parts of the country in the hope of tenderly nursing her back to health, but God had ordered otherwise, and at the ripe old age of three score and fourteen gathered her to her fathers.

The funeral sermon was preached from the text she so often quoted in her last illness: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

Weep not for dear mother, though dead
The life-seed of the Lord,
Hath in her bosom ye trees?
And he at peace with God.

MRS. MARY C. BRYAN.

Poetry.

THE RESTITUTION.

HELENA M. HUNT.

The desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose.—Isa. xxxv. 1.

After this worlds toils are over,
Pain and parting—all are done,
When our hearts shall throb no longer,
Pride is quelled—victory won;
When a newer, happier dawning,
Shall upon this dark world shine,
When a fairer, brighter morning
Rises never to decline;
When the wilderness shall blossom
Rare in beauty like the rose,
And the pine tree and the olive
All around in gladness grows;
When the fir tree and the cedar,
On the myrtle's sweet pale flowers
Or the—in glowing purple
Crowned those shining towers;
Or the cross and the fountains
Make the fields break forth and sing,
And the wilderness rejoice
Filled with many a water spring;
And the happy tribes of Jordan
Dressed in nature's living green,
Carmel's lilies, Sharon's roses
Fragrant all about are seen.
Then the sun in golden splendor
Sheds its beams no more to fade,
No more nights of weary darkness,
Misty twilight's deepening shade,
While the music of glad voices
Rise in many a joyous strain,
In the joy of happy meetings,
Never more to part again.
And in robes of royal beauty
All the saints immortal shine,
Nothing now to cast their brightness
On to dim their light divine,
When the sound of war's commotion
Hushed from farthest shore to shore,
And the King returned in triumph
Reigns in glory evermore.

Brother, Rest.

Selections.

The Rainbow.

IMMUTABILITY OF DIVINE DESIGNS.

The purpose of God involves the subserviency of evil to good; whilst the character of the former, and the consequent accountability of those who commit sin, remains unchanged, the proposition is indirectly anticipated that the eternal design will certainly be accomplished. For if evil be made, as a dark contrast, to exhibit more evidently the intense light of that system of redemption against which it is apparently set; if its opposition be reduced to the mere negative position of hostile will without inherent power; and if all the havoc it has made in the earth be but the exposition of its innate malice against the righteous authority of the infinitely wise and gracious God, then there remains nothing to defeat the eternal purpose of "His good pleasure which He hath purposed in himself." Whatever changes may take place upon the face of society, the invisible hand which conducts all processes to the great purposed end, is continually at work. There is neither retrocession nor intermission in his great work. If he appear to allow the wicked to triumph at their will, it is but to make manifest the inherent wickedness that is in man.

The lashing waves of human passion will neither wear the surface nor change the position of the Rock of Ages.

Rebellion may erect its insurrectionary standards on many a shore; but the government of God is secure as the pillars of his throne; its foundations are more lasting than the eternal hills; and the ultimate vindication of his claims to universal loyalty is one of the immutable purposes of his mind. He will be his own apologist. He will plead his own cause. If he seem to delay the execution threatened against unrighteousness, or to postpone the fulfilment of his promises to the Church, neither the one nor the other is to be interpreted into forgetfulness. The former is the proof of forbearance, as he is not willing that any should perish; the latter is a trial of faith, that patience may have her perfect work. But there is no delay in consequence of unforeseen difficulties; for there are none. There is no waiting to ascertain the issue of an experiment; for he makes no experiments.

There is no change of plan in consequence of actual occurrences; for he is of one mind. And though we often speak of time protracted, and dwell with emphasis on the duration of an age, it is to be remembered that before him "It is nothing." Uninterrupted as the perennial spring, and sure as the polar influence, the majestic plan of redemption proceeds towards its wonderful issue. "He stilleth the noise of the seas, the noise of their waves, and the tumults of the people." Those who have faith in him need not therefore fear, "though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, and though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." It is theirs to take up the song:

"We have a strong city:
Salvation shall God appoint for walls and bulwarks.
Open ye the gates and let the righteous nation enter;
Constant in the truth, stayed in mind:
Thou shalt preserve them in perpetual peace,
Because they have trusted in Thee."

And the utterance of his gracious purpose towards his people, together with his challenge to all opposing powers, may be expressed in the inspired words;

"In that day shall Jehovah punish with his sword,
His well tempered, and great, and strong sword;
Leviathan, that dart serpent,
Even Leviathan, the winding serpent:
Yea, He will slay the monster that is in the sea.
In that day sing unto the vineyard a pleasant thing.
I, Jehovah am its keeper;
Every moment I water it;
Least any one should invade it,
Day and night do I guard it.
I will be angry with it no more.
Did fir and brier reach the briers and thorns.
And I will go against them in battle.
And I will burn them up together."

The wall may be built in troublous times, but its completion is certain. Every kind of opposition was foreseen. Provision was made against all that the world calls contingency. The strength of every adversary was measured from eternity. And though nothing has been done to check the free agency of man, or to suspend the connection between cause and effect, either to set aside the accountability attaching to voluntary action, or to change the essential nature of guilt, yet as the light rushes from its source irrespective of the body on which it may fall, and as the stream flows from its fountain irrespective of the substance over which it may roll in its course, so has the eternal purpose of the God of Salvation been unfolding itself through the ages and the generations that are past, and so will it continue until all oppositions shall be merged into compliance, or bound into chains, that it may "deceive the nations no more!"

Against innumerable enemies has Christianity maintained its position, and thus far made its way. Persecution, open, undisguised, and professedly hostile to the very name of Jesus of Nazareth, has brought forth its resources, plied its strength, grown weary of its toil, and failed. Heresy, poisonous, serpent-like, has coiled and trailed amongst the trees of the garden of life, until its very existence has become a burden to itself. Antichrists in many a form have urged their doctrines on the attention of men, but the evangelic code still claims pre-eminence, and brings forth in many a spot the vouchers for its claim in its Divine spirituality and purity. Popery—that monstrous composition of paganism, worldliness, and Christianity—has for many ages usurped the name of the Church, spread its veil over the nations, and multiplied its abominations by the aid of secular governments; but even it has had to withdraw its pretensions when the Word of the Lord had free course, and to quail before a light too intense for its earthly eye. And the literal Antichrist, the man of sin—the wicked one—the son of perdition—for whose manifestation this fell apostasy has been preparing the way through dreary centuries, has yet to appear on the earth, the most fearful enemy that ever has confronted, or ever will confront the glorious Christ. But even he—though the concentration of all apostasies, and the incarnation of Satan—shall come in contact with a power that will ensure his speedy and signal overthrow. For it is he "whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of His mouth, and shall DESTROY WITH THE BRIGHTNESS OF HIS COMING."

But we may not pass from the past to the future without noticing the intermediate present. To a mind deeply imbued with Christian principle, and moved by the benevolence which the Gospel inspires, the present state of the world and of the Church presents much that is suggestive, much that is painful, and, but for firm faith in the accomplishment of God's purposes, much that is alarming. There are few spots on which the eye can look with unmingled complacency, few redeeming points in the general derangement, and few places on which the sole of the foot can securely rest. And were it not that change, religious indifference, intellectual scepticism, national revolutions, famines and pestilence, are the predicted heralds of the second coming of the Great Healer and Restorer, the believer in the Gospel and the earnest friend of man might sit in sackcloth and ashes, with folded hands and downcast eye.

What are the facts? The world is fearfully agitated. It rocks from its centre. Commotion is universal. There is no visible check. "The wisdom of the ancients" is gone. It commands no attention, it stills no tempest, it arrests no car, it sheathes no sword. Experience has been recorded in vain. Her admonitions are like curling smoke, her folios are piled dust, her philosophy is "vain jangling," her oracles are impracticable enigmas. Politics have ceased to be a science. The ancient landmarks are lost. The polar star is quenched. Precedent is forgotten in the passion for change; or, if named, it is but to awake the banter and provoke the sneer of political scepticism. This passion for change is universal; and it has its reward!" It unsettles everything, and composes nothing. It undermines the ancient structures, and rapidly raises others in their places, to be undermined with equal rapidity. Its work of yesterday it destroys to-day. It builds heavens on the sand, which the next tide of its own passion engulfs. It proclaims constitutions, which, ere the ink be dry upon the parchment, it tears to shreds. It denounces tyranny, and sets the despot. It condemns war, and unsheathes the sword. It proclaims fraternity, and secures the most tender ties of brotherhood. It preaches kindness, and practices oppression. It professes superstition, and cherishes the apostasy. It pretends to reconstruct society, but its work is that of the destroyer. It points to a new disposition of the materials of society, which shall be harmonious as the colors of the covenant-bow, but judging from the specimens it has exhibited, the most indulgent spectator of its experiment is compelled to say, "The old is better!"

Are we the apologists of hereditary despotism, of crowned injustice, or sceptered tyranny? believers in the infallibility of ancestral wisdom? vouchers for the perfection of human thrones? keepers over the destiny of fugitive absolutism? enemies of the people, or foes of liberty? No! We would not thus apostatize from principles which draw their vitality from a holier spring than ever welled from beneath an earthly throne! But there is no theory propounded in these statements. Is the brief description—purposely and necessarily very brief—of the actual state of things correct?

Is the state of philosophy better? Shall we obtain relief from the learned, and quaff repose from the streams of literature? Shall we sit at the feet of sages, and find a refuge from the storm and tempest? "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" As surely as in the days of Paul! Philosophy has spread out no covering for the exposed, has paved no highway for the pilgrim, has arched no bridge across the yawning chasm. She is not "a guide of the Blind," for she herself is confessedly lost in the mazes of doubt and uncertainty. Her voice is many-tongued; her directions are contradictory; her theorems are guesses; her facts hypothetical. Her inductions of yesterday are set aside to-day, and those of to-day will be exploded to-morrow. Her labor is in the fire, and the light she yields, whilst discolored and unsteady, is effectual only to the extent of making darkness visible. She has evidently received no new commission, except it be once again to certify to humanity that she cannot help it. Her first principles require antecedents. Her deepest researches scratch but the surface of the soil which is supposed to conceal the remedy for human woe. Her experiments tend only to irritate the sufferer. Her prescriptions, couched in modern phrase, are but the ancient compounds which partially conceal the symptoms, whilst they undermine the system. Her mental worship is but the avatar of an old idolatry. And her modern pantheism is but the resurrection of rabble deities which have been buried in oblivion for two thousand years; a resurrection which would not have taken place but for the groanings of humanity for something which it has not yet learned to name, to soothe its anguish, and to alleviate its woe. But still "creation travails in pain," and philosophy can work no deliverance in the earth! It abounds in societies. It has no common centre. Every new candidate for its honors brings a new light destined to be eclipsed by that of his immediate successor. Its transcendentalism is impalpable, its doctrines incoherent, its precepts impracticable. We may admire its industry, and allow the excellence of its motives, and place upon its brow the laurel of ability; but here we stop; for it has not justified its pretensions. It has not infused new life into a paralyzed world; it has not redeemed mind from either ignorance or superstition; it has not removed the huge deformities of society; it has not cemented the rents and fissures of the social fabric; it has not healed the breach, nor leaped into the gulf, nor stayed the plague; and we are sure it never can. As a commentator upon existing phenomena, it has done some service; as a teacher its office is at an end! When it enters into the temple, and offers sacrifice with strange fire, and chooses the place of the shekinah, prescribes laws for inspiration, and casts doubt upon miracle, and questions the appositeness of Christian doctrine to "the advanced state" of humanity, it is time to protest, and cry, "Take it hence!" It neither understands nor can it meet the case of man. His complaint baffles its resources. He needs inspection by the eye, and redemption by the hand, that were employed in his creation. Knowledge less complete cannot determine his disease; inferior power cannot effect his cure!

The state of the churches must be overlooked. At home there are few conversions; abroad, little progress. The most serious and earnest spirits are the most anxious. Men are wondering what is coming on the earth. In established and dissenting churches alike, a crisis is deemed at hand. Great changes are expected, but their character, shape, and form, no one ventures to prophesy. The general belief, or more properly the general hope, is that these commotions will issue in the long-promised period of universal Christianity; the rapid extension of the Gospel over the whole earth; the destruction of idolatry. Both in its pagan and nominally Christian forms; the dawning of the world's jubilee, the evening-time of light, the sabbatic year, the blessed millennium. That such will be the issue is certain as "the sure word of prophecy" can make it; but, with great deference to those who think otherwise, we submit that it does not appear to us to be the doctrine of Scripture, that the earth will be "filled with the knowledge of the Lord" until after his second coming to our world, "without sin unto salvation,"—"to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe."

All Christians believe in the second advent of their Redeemer. The only question that divides them on this subject is, When? Will his return be pre-millennial or post-millennial? Will he come to judge the world, as that term is generally understood, to wind up the affairs of time, to put an end to the mediatorial system, and then return to heaven? or will he come to set up his glorious kingdom, to claim the earth as his possession, to redeem creation from its groanings, to banish the curse which sin introduced, and to restore Paradise to more than its primitive glory as the dwelling-place of his saints for a period sufficiently long to vindicate all his claims, and to fulfil all those glowing promises to his Church which confessedly have this earth as the scene of their fulfilment? These are the questions. It will be admitted that, instead of a series of argument as to the comparative advantages or disadvantages of these opinions respectively, the duty of every Christian is to ascertain what is written, and to bow implicitly to that. Without entering, therefore, on a vindication of the conclusion to which the study of the subject has brought us, we may state in a few words that the thick veil which is purposely cast over the "day and hour" of his return, together with "the signs" which are to precede it, many of which are remarkably similar to those characteristics of the present state of the world and the Church which have just been noted, and the fact that the sublime things which are spoken of the latter day seem dependent upon his return, while in no case are they introduced among the preceding signs, have led us to the conclusion that that wonderful event may take place at no very distant day. May it be so!

Correspondence of the New York Observer.

ROME.

Haunts of the Inquisition.

MADAME SOFIA BOMPIANI.

MONTE VECCHIO.

Near a small public square in Rome called the Piazza de Monte Vecchio, on a narrow, dark and gloomy street, is the ancient Palace of the Inquisition. Although it has not been used for the imprisonment of victims for two hundred years, it is yet a house to inspire terror. Its gloomy cellars, where not a ray of light then penetrated, its thick walls and vaulted ceilings, remain as they were in those fearful days of persecution. The people about there, if you inquire for the Palace of the Inquisition, will tell you: "That is it! It is molto antica."* The building is four stories high, and the heavy stones of its facade are grimed with age and neglect. A curse seems on the very street, and this palace, with the adjacent one—formerly the pawnbroker's shop of Rome—sent a chill through me when passing, even before I knew them as ancient abodes of misery.

The "Monte Vecchio" was once a name of terror to the heretics and Jews of Rome and Italy. "Leave all hope, O ye who enter here!" might well have been written over the arched portal of this building.

In the darkness of a silent night armed guards possessed themselves of their victim and brought him to those gloomy, cavernous dungeons, where, without a word or a sign of love from without, he was tortured, languished and died. Now, shorn of its terror, the old Palace is inhabited by many families of poor people. The court is damp with the continual drippings from buckets that draw water from the well, and there is a large fountain where women are constantly washing clothes. An innocent-looking old porter, as unlike as may be to the ancient guardians of that terrible house, lit a penny candle and offered to show us the dungeons. We saw the hall on the ground floor where the martyrs were examined and tortured before being consigned to the depths below, and then descended nineteen steps to the prisons. This staircase has a gleam of light, but the steps are worn with age, and the faithful guide constantly warned us to descend with care.

Here are seven or eight rooms, not all of which, however, are now shown. One has two large iron rings in the roof about ten feet apart, through which ropes were passed, attached to the waist and to the feet of the victim, who was thus raised and lowered over a slow fire. A cavity about four feet square, in a thick wall, showed where they were immured and left to die alone in darkness and with hunger.

A large room adjacent to this, the guide said, was found thirty years ago, when he went there, full of bones, and the earth was evidently the remains of human bodies. These piteous relics were gathered together and transported from their dark resting-places to the sunny and green slopes of Campo Varano. "Erano birboni allora,"† said our guide, and we agreed with him that it is impossible to conceive of greater cruelty and wickedness than were represented there. Oh! if those walls could tell the woful tale of all they have seen and heard! What agony, what faith, what constancy have they not witnessed! How many tried souls in those Plutonic dungeons have rejoiced when they felt the vital powers of life failing, and there in that darkness have beheld the light of Heaven! "The spot whereon thou standest is holy ground," seemed whispered to my soul. For if humanity here showed its most ferocious aspect, it here also rose to its utmost capacity of courage and of faith. The rulers of that day are now judged and the condemned are declared innocent. The proud is debased and the victim glorified.

No spot in Rome is invested with greater interest than this. The records of the Inquisition were taken to the library of the Convent of the Minerva at the time that this Palace was abandoned, and they may still be found there. The name and history, the opinions and broken expressions of the sufferers when tortured by the cord, the rack, the wheel, were all carefully recorded, as a secretary seated at a table near wrote down every word the victim uttered.

CONVENT OF THE MINERVA.

Other places in Rome once occupied by the Inquisition have changed character as much as this. The great hall in the Convent of the Minerva, where heretics were examined before the white-robed Dominican Friars, is now used by the Committee of Public Instruction for its meetings. There Galileo was repeatedly examined in regard to his astronomical theories and threatened with torture if he would not renounce them. There probably Giordano Bruno, the philosopher, was examined before being consigned to the prison and led to the stake.

It is related of a Protestant who, together with a number of others, was brought before the Inquisitors, the prelates and bishops assembled there in state, that he waited patiently to be examined, holding the candle in his hand like other penitents and giving no sign of his intention to speak. Suddenly he flung the candle on the floor and addressed the assembly with such eloquent and convincing arguments that all remained silent and transfixed, and the brave orator was only silenced when dragged from the hall.

---

*"Very Ancient."

†"There were clamorous beggars there"—alluding to the spasmodic imploringe for mercy on the part of the sufferers.

THE SUPERNATURAL.

It is the delightful assurance of science that the star and the star are equally embraced in an infinite scheme, and that one law regulates the phyllotactic arrangement of leaves upon stems and the vast revolutions of the planets in the heavens. In like manner it is our privilege to feel that the humblest life, which has intellect and will in it, is associated intimately with unreached cycles surpassing thought, to which it has organic relation. Under the full assurance of this fundamental scheme of the universe has rested hitherto, the philosopher's enthusiasm, the martyr's faith and the hero's consecration. On this affirmative and solid impression has securely been builded whatever it delights us to retain from the past. Only that which shall make the same conviction as firm and sustaining in the centuries to come, will give to them true power and beauty, æsthetic grace, intellectual vision, moral wisdom. It is for us, then, practically to live in the radiant apprehension of that unmeasured ever-world, the shadow of whose glory fell not on Hebrew hills alone, but on Grecian, Persian, Indian heights; some echoes of whose magisterial harmonies have been heard in all superior spirits, and the touch of whose far-shining prediction on any pure mind makes hope elate and purpose high. It is the supremest human office, in whatever relations and whatever position, rising above the investing physical forces and laws, discerning the intensity and the boundlessness of life with which the spirit in man is allied, to make them also inspiring to others: that thus, through us, may be transfused a glory from them into the minds which we affect; that we may cast from our few years something of this transfiguring light upon the life of coming times; that we may honor as we ought that secret and masterful intellectual spirit, whose power and love bear in themselves immortal presage; that we may honor in whose unseen unfolding life the universe rests,

"And make our branches lift a golden fruit
Into the bloom of heaven."

—From a discourse by R. N. Stearns.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT SCIO.

A despatch from Pera, April 9th, says:—The catastrophe at Chios has surpassed all conception. The number of killed and wounded is more than 10,000. There are 40,000 famished sufferers who require immediate assistance. The Central Committee here implores you to open subscription in your office for their relief and begs you to send the amount collected through Baring Brothers to the Ottoman Bank, London."

A despatch to the London Times says:

"The first shock was felt on Sunday the 3d, at about half-past one o'clock. Immediately houses began to fall. Wild shrieks were heard on every side. Then followed an awful stillness of some minutes. The terrified survivors gradually ventured into the narrow lanes and reached the open spaces. Shortly after another terrible shock completed the devastation. Then it remained quiet until sunset, when it again began to shake the island throughout as severely as before. All night the shocks succeeded each other at short intervals and each one was preceded by dull sounds like subterranean explosions. Since that frequent shocks have been felt. A few minutes ago, while writing the present despatch, I distinctly heard an explosion-like sound and felt the earth tremble, but as I am under canvas I have nothing to fear. The old Genoese Fortress, containing about four hundred houses inhabited by Mussulmans and Jews, suffered more than the rest of the town. The ground there sank about half a metre, and nearly all the houses were immediately destroyed, and several hundred persons must have perished. It is known that about thirty Mussulman women were assembled in one of the houses, not one of whom escaped."

News Items.

POPULAR DISCONTENT IN GREECE.

ATHENS, April 15.—No popular manifestations have yet been made against the recent acceptance by Greece of the proposals regarding the frontier. The surprise and revulsion of feeling are too great, but there is great and possibly dangerous bitterness.

EXPLODED AT THE DOOR OF A CHURCH.

MADRID, April 16.—A large petard was exploded at the door of the Church of Santa Maria, yesterday, while the edifice was full of worshippers. The door was damaged, but nobody was hurt.

LONDON, April 13.—The whole of Northern Albania is in insurrection, and 15,000 men are marching against Dervish Pasha at Scutari.

Sheik Obeidullah has invited a number of Kurdish chiefs to be ready to invade Persia next month. The Porte is taking steps to prevent the invasion.

Thirteen ocean steamers and ninety-two sailing vessels were lost during February; missing, two steamers and thirteen sailing vessels.

SOLO, April 18.—The latest returns state that 8,000 persons were killed and 10,000 injured by the earthquake. At Nevita 1,200 were killed.

The violent shock of Monday caused the ground to subside a meter. A great number of the inhabitants are emigrating.

Five of the condemned assassins of the Czar—four men and one woman, the latter being Sophie Pieoffsky—were hanged at St. Petersburg this morning, Apr. 15th, in the presence of an immense assemblage of spectators. The other—the woman Helfman—will be hanged after the birth of her child.

THE PLAGUE IN ASIA.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—A letter received by the National Board of Health, dated Constantinople, March 25, says: "The plague in Irak is of the most virulent character, and if allowed to pass the military lines drawn around it will spread far and wide with great rapidity. Ali Meshed is a sanctuary of great holiness to the Shecites, the Mohammedan sect to which the Persians belong, and they annually send great numbers of corpses there to be interred in the belief that it secures to the souls of the dead a favored place in heaven. A large pit is opened to receive their remains, and the emanations from this receptacle have almost invariably been followed by an epidemic of typhus. The bodies, which come in hundreds at a time, are wrapped in cloths and placed in rows in the vault, without being covered with earth. The Ottoman Government has asked the Persian authorities to discontinue the practice of sending the bodies in a state of decomposition, but to keep them until they are reduced to skeletons. This ghastly trade is a source of much revenue to the caravans."

HURRICANE IN AUSTRALIA.

A disastrous hurricane was experienced on Jan. 6 and 7 at Ashburton River, on the northwest coast of Australia. Three Europeans and several natives are known to be drowned, and the casualties among the pearling fleet in that neighborhood are terrible. Twelve vessels were either hopelessly shattered and cast upon the beach, or lifted bodily up the mangrove creeks. Upward of £6,000 worth of pearls and shells were lost. It is supposed that a tidal wave accompanied the storm, as an immense body of water washed over the coast a long distance, throwing up fish and turtle, and completely changing the conformation of the country.

One of the most severe hurricanes that have ever visited the Fiji group was experienced at Levuka on the 2d of February, and caused a vast amount of destruction on shore and much damage in Levuka harbor. It commenced at the east, but blew the fiercest from the north, and finally abated at northwest on the morning of the 3d, at 2 o'clock. Numbers of residences in the town were unroofed, among them the children's school house. The destruction to banana and cocoanut trees was very great.

Exegetical.

Many Shall Run To and Fro.—Daniel xii. 4.

The word shot, rendered "run to and fro," implies locomotion.

1. It is used of the people going about to gather the manna. Num. xi. 8.

2. By Satan, Job i. 7: ii. 2, "from going to and fro the earth."

3. In Zech. xxiii. 5, "the inhabitants . . . from were thy mariners"—literally, "thy runners to and fro."

4. Of running to and fro the streets of Jerusalem. Jer. v. 1.

5. In Amos viii. 12, "they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east they shall run to and fro."

In all these uses of the word, the dominant idea is locomotion.—B. B. Wale's Closing Days of Christendom.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 12 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness,

ITS RITES AND OFFERINGS.

—By JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Poetry.

CONTRASTED CREEDS.

JOHN L. WINGE.

We are not left alone to guess
Our pathway through this wilderness;
A light beneath and overhead,
Illumes the weary path we tread.
We ask no heathen Socrates,
About this self, that thinks and is;
A Darwin no sure answer brings,
To satisfy our questionings.

We know in truth, from whence we came,
Our mortal being's end and aim;
We learned it from a Book we love,
Whose author else enthroned above.
A Book, which, rebelliously rage they Styles "bread of a childish age:"
Impostors, which designing men,
Composed in distant ages, when
The sun of science had not shed
Its light upon the human head.
But our sure confidence is stayed,
On what the Hebrew prophets said.

We put the question—"What of Man?
Is it a vain and hopeless strife?
Its destiny, an endless sleep,
In oblivion, dark and deep?"
From dust we came, to dust we turn:
But from the ashes of the urn,
A glorious form shall yet arise,
To bloom again in Paradise.

As pledge of this, our living head
Arose triumphant from the dead.
The thrilling fact, that he arose,
Was testified by friends and foes.
Then why reject the blessed hope,
"Whose range of view has endless scope?"
That, in the ages yet to be,
The good shall taste, and hear and see,
The wondrous stores of joy and bliss,
In a better world than this?

To love indeed is happiness,
But love has power on earth to bless,
But only as it flows in deeds,
To meet the cry of human needs,
Be this the rule and this the test,
Then put the question—Who Loves Best?
Both saint and infidel, I ween,
Would give reply—The Nazarene!
Against whose name no sin is set,
From Bethlehem to Olivet,
For here to love exemplified,
In life and in the death he died.

He satisfies our deepest quest,
Concerning the eternal rest:
And what the life beyond the tomb,
Beyond the silence and the gloom.
No solace in the sceptic's creed,
Can bind the wounded hearts that bleed.
Nor smooth the thorny way to death,
Down to the last expiring breath;
Nor comfort give to weeping friend,
Who shall above the dying bend:
Like word of Christ, so grand and sweet,
That death-dispersed friends shall meet,
Where palms and gushing streams are more,
On Canaan's fair and deathless shore.

Communications.

A FEW WORDS ON THE GENUINENESS AND INSPIRATION OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

WILEY JONES.

If we were to argue the matter, the proofs of the genuineness and inspiration of the Scriptures would be found overwhelming and incontestible. Unbelief was first advocated by an irrational creature—a serpent—and has ever since been bearing "fruit after his kind." Sin is a self-inflicted madness; hence, as soon as the prodigal "came to himself" he said, "I will arise and go to my father." Religion only is "our reasonable service." Rom. xii. 1.

Without claiming entire originality on a subject so frequently and ably treated of by other writers, I would mention just a few reasons proving the genuineness and inspiration of the Scriptures.

That the Books comprising the Bible were written by those whose names they bear we have a thousand times better reasons for believing than that the histories which we have under the names of Herodotus, Xenophon, Tacitus, etc., were written by those authors. By the wise, moral, and best of the human race the Bible has for ages been received, revered, and cherished as the word of God. That it was written by various writers, at different periods, and under different circumstances and situations, is proved by the different styles of writing, idiomatic expressions, foreign words, and many such waymarks of time, place, and individuality:—"At sundry times, and in divers manners." Heb. i. 1.

Now this diversity of authorship makes each writer bear his part of evidence to the truth of the whole. Thus "we are compassed about with a cloud of witnesses." Heb. xii. 1. And the fact that throughout all this diversity there pervades a perfect harmony, demonstrates that under the same infallible source—the one omniscient God—they all "spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." 2 Peter i. 21. This wonderful harmony of the writers of the Bible (so entirely different from modern contemporary writers and speakers) proves them inspired. They succeeded each other during nearly 1600 years, yet every part of the whole volume, like the stones in an arch, supports and receives support from the rest, they unitedly constitute one harmonious whole.

While they wrote according to their different talents and habits, and the idioms of those to whom they wrote, yet they were but the voice, the Holy Spirit was the speaker. And that inspiring Spirit so entirely superintended their writing as to exclude every error; so that what they wrote was expressed "not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Spirit teacheth." 1 Cor. ii. 13.

An additional proof of their inspiration is the fact that no human intelligence could have devised so pure a system of morals, or so perfect a plan of redemption, or so glorious a hope of the future. Such things had "not entered into the heart of man," but in the written word "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." 1 Cor. ii. 9-10. In no other way than by that inspiring Spirit could they have been discovered. Even the most polished heathen, through their ignorance of divine revelation, have execrable morals; and their notions of a future state are too ridiculous to be worthy of mention. The best ideas among them are but the pilfered drippings of that sanctuary, the Bible. This is conspicuously the case in the Koran of Mohammed. Never has the finest human genius pictured to mankind so dazzling awe-inspiring, perfect, and sublime a character as that possessed by the Savior, and described so vividly by the unsophisticated and honest-hearted Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Nor could those evangelists ever have described such a character unless it had truly existed. It would be very absurd to think that a babe in its mother's lap could sculpture out of shapeless rock a statue more symmetrical and expressive than any ever chiseled by angels, but far more absurd to think that human genius could have described such a Being as the Savior, unless he had really existed.

The history, laws, morality, and prophecy of the Bible are inseparably interwoven with and attested by great monumental and commemorative ordinances more imperishable than pyramids of stone or pillars of brass. These monumental ordinances, to the church in ancient times, were 1. The seventh day of the week, commemorating the creation of the world, and the sabbatism that succeeded. 2. Circumcision, the seal of the covenant made with Abraham, and commemorating that event. 3. The Passover, commemorating the deliverance from Egypt, and all the mighty signs attending that deliverance. 4. The feast of Pentecost, commemorating the giving of the law at Sinai, and the awful majesty attending that solemn transaction. 5. The Feast of Tabernacles, keeping in mind the sojourn of Israel forty years in the wilderness. To the church under the gospel dispensation the record of these ordinances is still preserved on the sacred page to be contemplated as instructive typology; while for our actual observance we have Baptism "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." This monumental ordinance commemorates the perpetual faith which Christians (as distinguished from Jews, Pagans, and Mohammedans) are required to cherish in Father, Son, and Spirit, and in the revelation given us by them. It also expresses our faith in the remission of sins, and in the new life to which the gospel calls us. Also in the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, and in our own future resurrection to an eternal inheritance in his kingdom. Moreover, we have the Lord's Supper, commemorating, "till he come," his sacrificial death, his glorious resurrection, and the promise of his future advent. In addition to these we have "the first day of the week," a sacred festival kept in commemoration of that great event on which the validity of our faith depends—the resurrection of Christ. (Paul says, "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." 1 Cor. xv. 17.) This monumental day observed, though not with the strictness of the ancient Sabbath, by Christians of every nation, proves as clearly that the event on which it is based actually occurred, as the observance of the 4th of July proves the American Declaration of Independence was made on that day of the month, many years ago.

The fulfilled and fulfilling prophecies form a perpetual and ever lengthening chain of thrilling miracles in proof of the inspiration of the Bible. Surely the raising of a dead person cannot be more miraculous than the prediction of events hundreds and thousands of years before their occurrence, and afterwards overruling or controlling all the forces of nature and the affairs of men so as to bring those events to pass. This thought helps us to more fully appreciate those words of the Lord Jesus, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." Luke xvi. 31. Therefore if a dear relative, long buried, were to arise from the grave and say to you with most awful impressiveness that a time is coming when the wicked shall be "cast into a furnace of fire" (Matt. xiii. 42,) and that "except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John iii. 5), those words from the lips of the risen dead ought not to have more startling and persuasive force than from the lips of that Great Prophet whose prediction have never yet failed, in one jot or tittle. Here, too, we see that the ordinances and moral precepts of Scripture are miraculously enforced, being inseparably interwoven with that perpetual miracle called fulfilling prophecy, for some of the greatest prophets have been the greatest lawgivers, reformers of morals, exhorters to virtue, and reprovers of vice. The authority, therefore, for practising the virtues and shunning their opposite vices is based on a foundation infinitely stronger than any Gibraltar, for an earthquake may swallow a Gibraltar, but it cannot falsify a prophecy.

Speaking of Daniel and John, bishop Newton says, "They exhibit a series and succession of the most important events from the first of the four great empires to the consummation of all things. Their prophecies may really be said to be a summary of the history of the world, and the history of the world is the best comment upon their prophecies. I must confess it was my application to history that first struck me, without thinking of it, with the amazing justness of the Scripture prophecies. I observed the predictions all along to be verified in the course of events: and the more you know of ancient and modern times, and the farther you search into the truth of history, the more you will be satisfied of the truth of prophecy. They are only pretenders to learning and knowledge who are patrons of infidelity. . . . You are therefore reduced to this necessity, that you must either renounce your senses, and deny what you read in your Bibles, together with what you may see and observe in the world; or else you must acknowledge the truth of prophecy, and in consequence of that the truth of divine revelation."

The Bible is a blessing of inestimable value to any nation. Paul accounted it the chief "advantage" enjoyed by the Hebrews that "unto them were committed the oracles of God." Rom. iii. 3. It is related that an East Indian prince in a personal interview with Queen Victoria, desired to be told the secret of her greatness. In answer to which request she brought him a Bible, saying that was the secret of it all.

Never can we be too thankful for such a Book, for the glory of God blazes round about it and his voice is heard out of the midst thereof. O then, as Moses turned and hearkened at the burning bust, let the sinner turn and hearken to the words of that Holy Book for counsel and guidance.

Chrysostom, bishop of Constantinople about A. D. 398, says: (as quoted by Watson.) "An intimate acquaintance with the Holy Scriptures is a secure haven, and an impregnable bulwark, and an immovable tower, and imperishable glory, and impenetrable armor, and unfading joy, and perpetual delight. To which I would add,—provided that to the "intimate acquaintance" we unite child-like obedience, for "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." John xiii. 17.

THE LAW AND THE TESTIMONY.

A. B. MAHURDER.

"To the Law and to the Testimony—if any man speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in him." Isa. viii. 20.

"To the Law and to the Testimony—if any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God."

"The wise of this generation" have a saying that the servants of God may profit by. They tell us "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." So we may say that same vigilance is necessary to keep us in the truth after we have found the narrow path that leads unto life. It is written:—"Be not deceived—be vigilant, because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion walketh about, seeking whom he may devour—whom resist, steadfast in the faith."

These reflections were suggested by reading the article in THE RESTITUTION of the 6th inst., communicated by Bro. John Foore, titled "Christ, our Passover," in which the writer tells us that "the breaking of bread and taking wine was instituted at a yearly feast and we have no knowledge that the Lord has ever changed the time, or Passover," and hence he contends we ought to commemorate it "at the anniversary of his death" and thence proceeds to argue that "a yearly evening feast or remembrance shewing forth his death" should be observed and exhorts the Brethren, "not to partake of this ordinance on the day of Christ's resurrection to show his death, but if it be done once a week, try and take Thursday evening." And closes by inviting "the friends of our Redeemer near Galesburg, Kan., to unite with us on Friday evening, April 15th, at eight o'clock.," etc.

Let me ask, in all kindness of Bro. Foore, (whose name and good service as an earnest and able advocate of the gospel of the kingdom is known to all readers of THE RESTITUTION) if this is not a new and wide departure from Bible precept and usage, for which, we think, he can find no Divine warrant? Scarcely any subject is presented with more abundant Bible testimony than as to the time and manner of partaking of the Lord's Supper. There is no room for conjecture or invention with respect to it.

It was first commemorated, after the resurrection of our Lord—on the day of Pentecost. Acts ii. 41-47. "They continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and in breaking of bread, etc., etc." The day of Pentecost was the first day of the week, for it was the day after the expiration of seven full weeks, from Sabbath to Sabbath, and as the week ended on the Sabbath (our Saturday) the next day, the fiftieth, would be the first day of the week (our Sunday). That this breaking of bread was the Lord's Supper, and not a common meal, is proved from its association with the religious acts of prayer, apostolic doctrine, fellowship, etc., and also from the recorded fact in verse 46 that in their common meals they "broke bread and ate their meat from house to house." 2. It is written in Acts xx. 7, that "upon the first day of the week when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, etc." Besides, it is evident from the frequent allusions in Acts to Paul's stopping with the brethren and abiding certain days to meet with them and as at Troas after the breaking of bread departing from them and pursuing his journey, that it was their custom to meet on that day to break bread, etc. 3. The references to this custom of the Corinthians, brethren also, and their meeting on the first day of the week, as contained in 1 Cor. x. 16-17—xi. 18-23 and xvi. 1-2, read together, strongly support this conclusion.

4. And Paul said "As oft as ye eat this bread, etc., you show the Lord's death till he come." And the words of Jesus, "This do as oft ye drink it in remembrance of me," and as we have seen on Pentecost, it is recorded "they continued steadfastly in the breaking of bread" etc., not occasionally—not annually. Could they have "continued steadfastly" to observe an institution—which was to take place only once a year before the year had expired?

These incontestible facts taken with the profound silence of the Scriptures as to the Communion's being administered on any other day than the first day of the week—which commemorated the resurrection of the Lord—and with no mention of any other day or any aniversary occasion, surely proves beyond dispute the Scriptural propriety of our partaking of it steadfastly on the first day of the week and only on that day.

Let us then, pursue "the old paths" and the "more excellent way" of our only safe guide the Book of Life.

Brevities.

Most of the heathen temples in Siam are going to decay, and there are only one-fourth as many Buddhist priests in Bangkok, the capital, as there were thirty years ago.

The entire Bible has been translated into the language of the New Hebrides, a group of islands in the Pacific Ocean, and the natives have paid the whole expense of printing it.

A private writer from the Sandwich Islands describes Mauna Loa in operation, and says that a stream of molten lava five or six miles wide and ten miles long was pouring from the crater. Mr. Frenenux, of Boston, was painting views of the volcano.

Mrs. Miller, who resides at Nineteenth and Tasker street, Philadelphia, claims to be 105 years of age, and delights in telling how she cooked the breakfast for George Washington, and put bread and butter in his satchel as he left the house and went off to fight, and gained the day. She also says that the same morning she saw him kneeling behind a thorn-bush, with his open Bible before him, praying.

Dr. Crosby has for thirty years occupied himself with a study of the nationality of street beggars in New York, and has during all that time failed to discover among them a native American. He says that he once devoted a whole month to inquiries of this character, personally hunted up hundreds of cases and found the petitioner in each case "allaran and a foreigner."

PALESTINE EXPLORATION.

Lieut. Conder, R. E., accompanied by Lieut. Mantell, R. E., recently started for Beyrout in order to commence the survey of Eastern Palestine, the preparations for which are now completed. He will have with him the two non-commissioned officers of Engineers who were in the survey of Western Palestine from 1871 to 1875, namely, Sergeants Black and Armstrong, both of whom have now left the service and are pensioners. Lieut. Conder proposes after a little preliminary work in Galilee, to begin the survey in the north. It is estimated that the work will take five years to accomplish.

Miss Abigail B. Judson, of Plymouth, Mass., lately passed her 80th birthday. She is a sister of the late Admiram Judson, the famous missionary to Burmah, and lives alone in the house once occupied by him. The Boston Courier says that its front door has never been opened since his body was carried through, and Miss Judson orders that it shall remain shut until her own funeral takes place.

Mr. Jay Cooke's seat, Ogontz, is still unsold, and is likely to remain so until he buys it again, as he does not intend any one else to have it, and has always taken measures to prevent it passing into other hands. At one time a Roman Catholic institution desired to get it, but the neighbors and Mr. Cooke adopted measures to frustrate the scheme. It was named Ogontz after an old Indian chief with whom Mr. Cooke was well acquainted in his childhood at Sandusky, Ohio.

The first Indian Grammar.—Among a rich collection of books recently sold at auction in New York was the "Grammar of the Indian language," printed by John Eliot, translator of the first American Bible. The imprint of the book is "Cambridge, 1666," and there are not more than three copies of the work in existence. The buyer was a Mr. Trumbull, of Hartford, Ct., the only man in the country, it is said, who understands the language. One of the two remaining copies is owned by the Massachusetts historical society, and the other is believed to be in some of the great libraries of Europe.

The unusual meteorological phenomena of the past Winter and this Spring are attracting much attention among scientific men. The season mentioned is remarkable for heavy floods in the northern hemisphere and for severe earthquakes and volcanic eruptions. The monthly notices of the Royal Astronomical Society for March mention the great number of sun spots recently visible. These spots make unusual activity in the sun and the theory is that there has been a general meteorological disturbance. The increased solar energy is believed to have licked up more than the usual quantity of water in the southern seas to be precipitated in our hemisphere. There have also been great magnetic disturbances, which have been attributed by some to solar influences. Some students of earthquakes believe that they depend to a great degree upon magnetic changes induced by solar changes. In all this speculation the weight of opinion makes the sun the great disturber, while little effect is attributed to the planets approaching perihelion. Their effect may possibly be indirect through planetary influence on the sun.

Sententious.

Many preserve themselves by humbling themselves; the bullet flies over him that stoops.

To bring forward the bad actions of others to excuse one's own, is like washing ourselves in mud.

There is a transcendent mood of the spirit, wherein the meanest flower that blows awakens thoughts too deep for tears, to which the grass blade is oracular, and the common bush seems 'afire with God,' before which the splendors of closing day repeat the flash of jasper and beryl.

For the cultivation of the spiritual life nothing equals living near to Jesus Christ. It is good to live near to something great—a great mountain—the great ocean—but it is better still to live near the greatest of the great.

To live is to do
What must be done;
To work and be true,
For work is soon done.

'Tis living for others,
To lighten their load;
'Tis helping your brothers,
And toasting in God.

No mind that only observes facts, that forms its inductions only from facts, and that traces causation to its origin, can fail to believe in the miraculous in creation, and in the supernatural in Providence, as truly as he believes in the natural and preternatural in the world and in man.

All common things, each day's events,
That with the hour begin and end,
Our pleasures and our discontents,
Are sounds by which we may ascend.
—H. W. Longfellow.

There is a power in the soul, quite separate from the intellect, by which God is felt. Faith stands serenely far above the reach of the atheism of science. It does not rest on the wonderful, but on the eternal wisdom and goodness of God. The revelation of the Son was to proclaim a Father, not a mystery. No science can sweep away the everlasting love which the heart feels, and which the intellect does not even pretend to judge or recognize.—F. W. Robertson.

Muses with his Decalogue could never accomplish what has been achieved by Christ and his Cross. The bonds of the old morality could, like green withes, be easily broken, but the ties of this new morality are strong just because they are tender.—John Cunningham.

Till religion becomes the desire of our hearts, it will not become the business of our lives. Most of the beatitudes which infinite compassion pronounced have the sorrows of earth for their subject, but the joys of heaven for their completion.

This a good thing sometimes to be alone,
Sit calmly down and look self in the face,
Ransack the heart, search every secret place,
Pry carefully up root the baneful seeds there sown,
Pluck out the weeds ere the full crop is grown,
Gird up the loins afresh to run the race,
Enter an inner sanctum, cast out the base,
Thrust forth the bad, and make the good your own.
Who has this courage thus to look within,
Keep faithful watch and ward with inner eyes,
The foe may harass, but can ne'er surprise,
Or over Slanderdom command win.
Oh! doubt it not, if thou wouldst wear the crown,
Self, baser self, must first be trampled down.
—John Addison.

A Victim of Tobacco.—The case of Maurice O'Connell, the Fair Haven groceryman who was taken to the almshouse a few days ago, is a sad one. He is only twenty-eight years old, and has a wife and two children. When he came to this country he was the owner of property to the value of some ten thousand dollars, which had been left to him as his share of his father's estate. He became an habitual and inveterate smoker, and his nervous system became so affected that his brain was injured, and insanity followed. Dr. Francis Bacon and other physicians warned him of the danger of smoking too much, but he failed to give up the habit. He was sent to the Middletown Asylum, and there, deprived of the means of gratifying his appetite, improved and was discharged as cured. But once out he again resorted to narcotic stimulants, and again became insane. This is the second time he has been sent to the almshouse. The bulk of his property, it is said, is gone.

THE
TWO THRONES.

A Letter delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 2, 1881.

—BY H. V. REED.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send orders to
SAMUEL WILSON,
2018 N. 21st Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by
THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

GOD ESTABLISHED
—AND—
The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—BY A. J. EYCHANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in Infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 10 for 30c., or 25 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker contributes to this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 60c.

NOW SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,
—OR—
STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885.

—By M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher 72 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST,

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PLEASE, suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Oscar Baptista. In 1000. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of Gods. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution &c. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies &c., or assorted packages of 100, 25c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, both in Theological and Bible use.

Roman Government a Failure. By A. D. Mageneer.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Test Verses. H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is to Pay? H. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Forgotten Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Luther.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
8c. each, or 25 for 50c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? H. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Boyar, of Scotland.

The Soldering and Sobbing. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
20 each, or 12 for 75c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. F. Hess. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand Reality of Redemption. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c. or $3 for $1.

The New Birth. Joseph Priest.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seitz, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing by a Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 8 for 25c. or 20 for $1.

Has Evangelicism an Hitchen Omitted. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled, or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS
10c. each, or 12 for $1.

Evangelism; concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition is sought to be in harmony with Bible teaching. 56 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxix. 56 pages, price 10c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, as the Gospel set forth by the early fathers, in a small compass. 64 pages, price 10c.

The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidences. W. H. Wilson. 96 pages, price 20c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 44 pages, price 25c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "Some hasty and self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Dash. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead, Between the Rev. W. C. Beardman, Congregational minister, and W. Kellaway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Beardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 60c., paper 40c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Durk. Exactly the book for the times. 144 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 116 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.00.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 208 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.25, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

—THE—
QUESTION BOOK.

The Question Book is now ready, and may be had of the writer, at 10c. a copy. Postage stamps taken for amounts under $1. Its full title is "Early Lessons, or Narrative and Admonition arranged in the form of Questions and Answers." One of the Brethren in New York, ready to old a good cause, has ordered 200 copies; another, in Baltimore, writes, "Our little church desires me to say that we will take two dozen of the Question Books. . . . I am truly glad that such a suggestion was made, by that good sister, for it is just what our children need, and many of us older ones also, for most of us are children, only of a larger growth."

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!
—ENTITLED—
THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament, and the foundations on which most of the sects of Christendom have been built up; with this book each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are rightly rendered in the common version so as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 981 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY THE—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
W. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
D. M. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. H. STEPHENSON, B. WILSON,
J. F. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, E. M. MYERS,
A. R. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Bro. Smith's article

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 27, 1881. NO. 16.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the dual "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy people since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the Immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations—the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked—are real life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. First Trumpet. Who is the Chief Agent? Note his Agency as given in history. Compare his Acts, recorded in Prophetic History with his Real Life. Notice the conditions of the Priesthood at the Close of the Sounding of the First Trumpet. State of the Empire.

No. 65.

J. F. WEETHEE.

First Trumpet.—We have already given the prophetic history of the first trumpet. It now remains that we bring to view its profane history, if it has any. If no history can be found that will fill the conditions, the legitimate conclusion is that the events are still in the future.

Profane history.—The following are the facts gathered from history:

As in the physical world, the storm elements, moving toward a common center, to be assimilated and prepared for their work, are held there by the various and opposing forces, till the giving way of one resisting will gives motion and direction to the tempest; so in the political world, is it with the invaded (the empire) and the invader (barbarians).

For sixty years the storm elements had been gathering, and the field of their fated agency had been in the school of preparation. The three sons of Constantine, Julian the apostate, Jovian, Valentinian, Valens, Gratian, Valentinian II., Theodosius the Great, Arcadius and Honorius were the royal workers.

By them the empire is weakened, changed and put in readiness for the invasions of the great Northern chiefs. During that period the German hive was sending forth its swarms to light upon the Roman clover fields. The Goths, Alemanni, Vandals, Suevi, Burgundians, the Almani; indeed, all the north men were either within the Roman territory, or in motion for a more southern climate.

Some tribes were driven from their northern homes by the Huns, who had emigrated from the borders of China.

The empire was invaded on the east by the Persians. Insurrections were in Egypt, Africa, and Britain. The winds were let loose against the empire.

Alaric, the Chieftain of the First Trumpet.—The commotions and gatherings of the northern barbarians, were under the control of Alaric, the Visigoth. Of his early youth we have no history. His primary education in the school of war, was under the very noted Chief, Fritigorn, the Visigoth. He was instructed in Roman tactics by the great Theodosius. Under Arcadius he was master-general of Eastern Illyricum, and "the Gothic emperor was received as a lawful magistrate, in the cities which he had so lately besieged. The fathers, whose sons he had massacred; the husbands, whose wives he had violated, were subject to his authority; and the success of his rebellion encouraged the ambition of every leader of the foreign mercenaries.

The use to which Alaric applied his new command, distinguishes the firm and judicious character of his policy. He issued his orders to the four magazines and manufactures of offensive and defensive armor Margus, Ratiaria, Naissus, and Thessalonica, to provide his troops with an extraordinary supply of shields, helmets, swords, and spears; the unhappy provincials were compelled to forge the instruments of their own destruction."—Gibbon.

His first noted march of desolation was from the Danube, through Thrace, Dacia, Macedonia, and Thessaly, into Achia.

In Greece he was opposed by Stilicho, the general of Honorius, emperor of the western division of the Roman empire, who obliged him to beat a retreat.

Alaric now resolved to invade the western empire, with a large army, composed of the most warlike nations of Germany, he marched from Thessaly, through the hostile country of Panonia to the foot of the Julian Alps. Over these strongly guarded, he passed into Northern Italy, took the fortified city of Aquileia, the provinces Istria and Venetia.

Passing the Adige, the Mincius, the Oglio, and the Adda with great facility, it being a dry season, he suddenly appeared before Milan. Alaric was gratified with the sight of a Roman emperor fleeing before him.

The emperor, Honorius, was pursued by the Gothic cavalry and besieged in Asta, a small town of Piemont. When about to surrender he was saved by the timely approach of Stilicho, with a numerous army. Alarico retreated before Stilicho; and, uttering the expression, "That he would find in Italy a kingdom or a grave," he pitched his camp in the vicinity of Pllentia.

He was attacked by Stilicho, while celebrating the festival of Easter (Alaric and his army were Christians by profession). A severe battle followed, and Alaric, by permission, and by the offer of a pention, again retreated and crossed the Po to invade Gaul.

His plans of conquest were betrayed to Stilicho, who surrounded him in the Rhaetian Alps. A bloody action followed, and Alaric's defeat was equal to that of Pollentia. His retreat was again purchased, and Italy from A. D. 403 to A. D. 410, was delivered from its sworn, and most deadly enemy.

Honorius, fearing the approach of another barbarian tempest, and consulting nothing so much as his own safety, cast his eye over the empire for some safe shelter from the future storm.

Such a retreat was offered in Ravenna, so noted in after years as a residence of popes, that a sketch of its natural advantages as a secure location, seems to be demanded.

Ravenna, afterwards the capital of the Exarchate, was founded by a colony from Thessaly, and dates back to a high antiquity. It was bounded on the north, east, and south, by the waters of the Adriatic, and on the west by almost impassable swamps. Augustus added to it a safe and ample harbor. A canal was built by Augustus, extending from the southern of the seven mouths of the river Po, twelve miles to Ravenna, to supply fresh water. It was extended to the sea.

From the deep ditch that surrounded the walls, were cut lesser canals, one thousand in number, which conveyed the water into all parts of the city, thus dividing the city into islands. Communication was had by boats and bridges, as in Venice. The buildings were on wooden piles.

Ravenna was connected with the mainland by a causeway. Through the swamps were some vineyards, so that wine was said to be more plenty than pure water.

Ravenna was well fortified by art as well as by nature.

In after years this city was occupied by Gothic kings and exarchs; and till the middle of the eighth century, was the capital of Italy.

Within its gloomy walls, Honorius, at the age of twenty, shut himself, where he remained, while the Gothic tempests sweeping over Italy, laid desolate its gardens of Eden.

It was nearly seven years before the second storm under Alaric rushed down from the Alps upon the plains of Italy.

This interval, however, was not one of sunshine to the sinking empire. Radagaisus, gathering the German nations, that dwelt near the Baltic Sea, the Vandals, Suevi, Burgundians, the Goths, and many other tribes, to the number of 200,000 fighting men, besides women and children, in all 400,000, marched south to invade the empire.

The storm-cloud that gathered near the Baltic, soon rushed down the Alpine slopes into northern Italy. Desolation followed his track, till he was met and overthrown by Stilicho. This overthrow was attributed by St. Augustine and other Christians, to the direct interposition of God, since it was accomplished without the loss (as they say) of a single Christian. Those of his army that escaped were sold as slaves, at the price of one piece of gold per man, less than two dollars. It was evident that God had reserved the overthrow of the empire for a different agent.

"Alaric was a Christian and a soldier; the leader of a disciplined army, who understood the laws of war; who respected the sanctity of treaties, and who had familiarly conversed with the subjects of the empire in the same camps and the same churches.

The savage Radagaisus was a stranger in the manners, the religion, and even the language, of the civilized nations of the south. The fierceness of his temper was exasperated by the cruel superstition; and it was universally believed, that he had bound himself, by a solemn vow, to reduce the city (Rome) into a heap of stones and ashes, and to sacrifice the most illustrious of the Roman senators on the altars of those gods who were appeased by human blood."—Gibbon.

It is very evident that such an agent would have brought results unlike those named in the Apocalypse as belonging to the first trumpet; and while his agency was confined to lessening the resources of the empire it was permitted to continue; but restrained when about passing beyond its defined limits.

"Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further; and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." Job xxxviii. 11.

God is evidently Supreme Ruler among the nations, to plant, build, and to uproot; still, he makes use of men as his visible agents. The aggressive and the restraining agents are equally his servants. Without such aggressive and restraining power, no prophecy would be in any manner reliable. Such a hand we see in all the movements for or against the empire.

John, in his numerous visions, had Divine delineations of the empire. Man can write past history; God only can draw a map of the future. This, however, is based only on his Supreme Authority over the future.

This is fully demonstrated in two opposing chieftains: Alaric and Stilicho.

Alaric was a Goth, a Christian by profession, familiar with the empire east and west, was a Roman officer, master-general of Eastern Illyricum under Arcadius, and of the Roman armies of Illyricum.

Stilicho, who so long commanded the armies of the western empire under Honorius, was descended from the savage and perfidious race of the Vandals, called by the historian Orosius, a semi-barbarian.

They were great generals under imperial brothers: Arcadius and Honorius. They were employed by Jehovah to fill different spheres in the empire. Alaric was the agent of subversion; Stilicho was the restraining agent. He restrained Alaric in Greece; defeated him in his first invasion of Italy; and overthrew the savage hosts of Radagaisus; but when the fulness of time had come for the first deadly thrust of the western imperial head by the second invasion of Alaric, Stilicho was assassinated by the order of Honorius. Stilicho was connected with the royal family, having married Serena, the neice of Theodosius the Great, father of Honorius.

In his fall the western empire lost its chief pillar of support. He was a man (according to Claudian, his bard) of lofty stature, and great physical power, and surpassed the measure of the demigods of antiquity; and that whenever he moved, with lofty steps, through the streets of the capital, the astonished crowd made room for the stranger, who displayed, in a private condition, the awful majesty of a hero.

That Honorius should, under the circumstances of his tried abilities, his unwavering fidelity for many years; and in view of another impending invasion, be guilty of his death, is truly wonderful; but his work was done, and he was permitted to be removed. Till that time he was invulnerable; neither could any human power stand before him.

We have now traced the gathering of this northern storm. Twice have we seen the tempest discharge its angry contents upon northern Italy. Between each rush of its elements of desolation there has been a brief interval of repose; a repose such as marks a day of furious tempests, when as one discharges its fearful contents on the earth, another more furious and threatening is seen gathering behind it.

We are forced to the conclusion, while reading the history of those times (A. D. 404) that God rode upon those winds, and directed the storm. His people are in that empire, struggling with adverse winds; serving his beloved Son while a priesthood, more powerful than Paganism, and more persecuting than Judaism, is making use of every method to exalt itself to the throne of the western Cæsars.

On their workings we must keep a watchful eye as we follow the progressive openings of the Apocalypse.

A SOLEMN DUTY.

WILEY JONES.

In our noble and zealous contention for "the faith once delivered to the saints" have we not, as a people, somewhat overlooked another duty which is also plainly enjoined in Scripture,—that of imparting religious instruction to the children, both in the Sunday School and the family circle? Now it is our Heavenly Father's will that we "walk in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord, blameless." Luke i. 6; that we "may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God." Colos. iv., 12; that we "come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. i. 7; and that "when we shall have done all those things which are commanded," we should say, "We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do" Luke xvii. 10. Why not then, as a society of believers, add to our other attainments this grace of child-training, and put forth systematic efforts to "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord?" Although no modern arrangement should be regarded as a substitute for home-teaching, yet experience has abundantly proven that much good can be accomplished by that auxiliary of home-teaching—the Sunday School. It frequently brings under the influence of the gospel such children as have non-professing parents, and would, but for such a public institution, be entirely destitute of religious teaching. The waifs of society that would, perhaps, become its plagues, criminals, and scourges, but for the salutary influence of the Sunday School.

It may emphasize our duty concerning children to consider several other relative duties enjoined in Ephesians v. and vi; Colossians iii. and iv. To begin with the humblest, it is required of the "servant" or employee (or "help," as some, euphemistically, would say), that in whatever capacity of innocent occupation he may serve whether as wood-chopper, harvest-reaper, or chief book-keeper in a great banking-house, he shall honestly and conscientiously discharge his duties, "not purloining, but showing all good fidelity; that he may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things. . . Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart; fearing God." Titus ii. 10. Col. iii. 22. If all servants in this nation, whether in governments' "civil service," or the humblest domestic service were to fully discharge this duty what a noble and respect-commanding class they would be! Perhaps it is thought by some that "servant" is only applicable to that political night-mare and bone of contention called "slavery", that was abolished in this country nearly twenty years ago. But this is a mistake, for if "servant" only means a person in that sort of slavery, would not "bond-servant" be a tautology and "hired-servant" a contradiction? Then too the many exhortations to "masters and servants" would be precepts for which it would be difficult to find application among most of the civilized nations of the present day. Webster's High School Dictionary, 1860, defines "servant" simply as "one who serves or labors for another," and it is, of course, in this sense that I am using the word. (To "slave" Webster gives quite another definition.) Hence, wherever are found those who "serve or labor for others" there are found masters and servants, and there are to be applied the precepts given for the guidance of all such.

It is to be carefully observed that the duties of employers or servants call for corresponding duties from their employers or "masters." The latter class must not grind the faces of the poor servants, in order to "heap up treasure" and live in luxury by cruel reductions of wages, and "keeping back the hire" of the laborers. Isa. iii. 15; Malachi iii. 5; Jas. v. 3-5; but must "give unto them that which is just and equal," remembering that "the laborer is worthy of his hire," and that "there is no respect of persons with God." Colos. iv. 1. Luke x. 7; Ephes. vi. 9. If all the employers in this nation were to faithfully discharge this relative duty, the gulf would not be so wide between the rich and the poor. On the one hand there would not be such exorbitant salaries, so many illgotten and colossal fortunes, so many grasping and oppressive monopolies, nor so much wallowing in the mire of luxury, pride, idleness, and the resultant vices—the iniquity of Sodom was "pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness." Eze. xvi. 49. Nor, on the other hand, would there be such poverty, ignorance, misery, crime, envy, nor so many communistic mutterings. But there would be a happier distribution of wealth, more general contentment, and better opportunities for studying the Bible and securing the rewards of a blissful eternity; these results being obtained not on the vile and atheistic plan of communism, socialism, and the like, but on the principle of honest, well-rewarded, and properly respected labor.

Ascending a step higher in the scale of relative duties, and showing the importance of each as we go, we come to those of "children." These are required to obey their parents "in the Lord," a limitation that excuses disobedience only where the parent commands the child to do something wrong. To this command the Lord has affixed a promise that it shall be "well" with those who keep it, and observation testifies that it is usually ill with all who do not keep it. Much therefore, pertaining to the welfare and happiness of families and the good of society at large, depends on the performance of this duty. And the performance of this depends, to a great extent, on the faithful discharge of the corresponding obligations laid upon parents,—"provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Shall we blame the children for not performing their part more than the parent for not performing his? Does not the neglect of either duty—that of the child or that of the parent—displease the Lord, and produce innumerable evils among men?

Then, still higher in the scale, we come to the relative duties of wives and husbands; and every thoughtful person must appreciate the vast importance of these also,—but I may leave this for the reader's own meditation, as my main point in the present writing is concerning parents and children. My allusions to the other relationship (in this and a former article on the same subject) were but illustrative of this point, being brought in to show the important context in which parental duties are placed.

In some seasons it would be dangerous and cruel to send little children through the inclement weather to Sunday School. In such cases, must they go untaught? By no means; but the father or mother must then do the teaching, for after all, from no other mortal lips are the beautiful and sacred words of Scripture likely to fall on the child's ear with such memorable impressiveness. If a personal allusion will be excused, I speak from actual experience in this matter, having by a loving father been taught many lessons on the Gospel of the Kingdom and its related truths, when I was but thirteen years old. "The father to the children shall make known thy truth." Isaiah xxxviii. 19.

Ought we not, beloved brethren and sisters, to fully arouse ourselves and attend without delay to a duty of such vast importance? If this exhortation shall, under the Lord's blessing, be instrumental in causing even one little neglected girl or boy to be brought under religious instruction resulting in an eternal inheritance in the kingdom of God, my efforts will be amply rewarded.

Youths' Column.

"Some Day."

S. ROXANA WINCE.

Little child, beside the stream,
What has pierced in by dream?
Floating down the tide of time
To that watery way of chaos,
Has it left in fancy there
Half a wreath—in the air?

Ah! "some day" thy love will fade,
Sadness cast thy vision shade;
Time will bleach thy golden hair,
Touch thy brow with wrinkled care,
Breaking every golden tie,
Friends will [illegible]

And sweeping, in thick current,
Will the fleeting pulses beat,
Causing what to the childish flies
As the youthful fantasies,
Weeping, over the cherished dead,
Graves of Hope, thy feet will tread.

"Dream no longer, little one!
Life hath much that must be done,
And thy cup of happiness
God will fill, when with [illegible]
Better wishes give to thee,
Wiser, more grateful [illegible] be.

Let thy wooden castles fall,
Learn that God is all in all;
Deserve for Heaven a better name,
In the worship of his name:
Take life's prime and love to-day,
Let the evil ones away!

Wes. Sun. Leaf.

Dayton, Ohio, Missionary Visitor.

RUINED BOYS.

We know of one city that has three murderers under sentence of death, and they are less than twenty years of age. Is it not shocking to see so many boys going to ruin! One of these murderers is hardly more than seventeen; and he was once a Sunday-school scholar. Think of this—from the Sunday School to the gallows! Think of three broken hearted mothers, besides many other grieved and dishonored friends! Worse than all this is the thought of the judgment that comes after death. The sentence that God pronounces upon the murderer is still heavier to bear than the sentence of our civil law. We allluded, in part, to this matter before; but we can not forbear giving the dear boys of our homes and Sunday School another warning to keep from bad books, bad company, and bad habits. They are sure to lead to a bad end. There is no safety but in a true Christian life.

Child's Magazine.

THE MAN WHO WANTED TO SEE JESUS.

The Lord Jesus used to walk about upon this earth and live among men, so that they could see him with their bodily eyes. You know he is still here, only we cannot see him now, as they could then. We shall have to wait till we get to the heavenly country before we can do that. But we know that he is still with us here, and we have only to whisper to him and he will hear us.

There was once, in those days we have been speaking of, a man who wanted to see Jesus very much, and he was a very rich man. But all his money could not help him to get to see Jesus. You know there are some things which money cannot do, and this is one of them: money cannot help us to get to the heavenly country and to get near Jesus and near God. So this man, who was named Zacchæus, could not get near Jesus, because there was such a crowd of people pressing around him. He could not get into the thick crowd, and he could not see over the heads of the people, because he was a little man; he was not tall enough to look over the others. But he wanted to see Jesus so much that at last he ran on and climed up into a tree, and waited there till the Lord Jesus got up to the place.

And then Jesus saw him—he always sees those who really want him—and he stopped and called to him to come down out of the tree. The Lord never passed by any one who was wanting him.

So he stood now, and perhaps he pointed to Zacchæus up in the tree, or perhaps he only looked at him with that sweet yet piercing look of his which once made Peter weep, it was so full of meaning, and then called to him and said, "Zacchæus, be quick and come down, for to-day I must stay at your house."

So Zacchæus made haste and came down out of the tree very quickly, and he was so very glad to take the Lord Jesus into his house.

But the people were not pleased, they did not like it at all. They said Zacchæus was a bad man, and they grumbled because our Lord went to stay at his house.

But Jesus said he had come to seek and to save that which was lost. He had just come down to this world on purpose to save the poor men, women and children who had lost their way to heaven, and he was seeking them out; so when he found one that wanted to be put right, he did not mind what people said, he just went and saved that one.

Well, the people were vexed, but Zacchæus was very glad, and he stood and said like this, "Look, Lord! I'll give half my goods to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any one which I ought not to have done, I will give him four times as much back again."

And Jesus said that man was saved, that he was now in the right way; and he was in the right way, for he was so glad that the Lord Jesus had visited him, and shown him how he had come down to die that he might be forgiven, that he made up his mind he would now show him by his acts, that is by what he did, how very much he thanked him for saving him.

You see he believed Jesus,—that is, he felt quite sure he would save him,—and then he could not help loving him, and then, when he loved him, he could not help trying to please him. When we love people we always try to please them.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 12.

BAPTISM—A PRAYER FOR PARDON THROUGH THE SINLESS ONE.

You may be sure that God wants you to be saved, so that you will not perish or he would not have given that dear and only Son to die for you. He has chosen that blood shall make atonement for sin. But there must be no spot, no blemish, in the offering. The precious Savior did nothing wrong. He always minded God. If he had sinned, if he had refused to obey God, it would not have been possible for him to have obtained forgiveness for you. No sin must be in him who offers himself for sin. If there were any wrong, any stain upon the character of Jesus, we could not come to God through him. God would not have accepted him, as an offering. We could not plead to be forgiven, because of the righteousness of Jesus, if he had not been righteous.

But now you can say—"I am not worthy, but Jesus is worthy. I have nothing to give, nothing with which to buy salvation and all the beautiful things in the Kingdom, but he has given himself for me; accept the offering, and accepting it, accept me." "In offering himself, he has secured eternal redemption for me. I come, that I may have it." "Look upon him, and forgive me." "Take all my sins away, for his sake. Put his righteousness over me. Wash me all white and clean in his blood. Let me be pure in thy sight because he did no sin."

You say all this, when you are baptized. Baptism is not only a picture of your faith in the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus, and of your faith in your own future resurrection through him, but it is also a picture of your death to sin and of the death of sin to you. It is a prayer for pardon. Sin has been your Master, you have minded it, you have served it, like a slave runs on and climed up into a tree, and waited there till the Lord Jesus got up to the place.

And then Jesus saw him—he always sees those who really want him—and he stopped and called to him to come down out of the tree. The Lord never passed by any one who was wanting him.

So he stood now, and perhaps he pointed to Zacchæus up in the tree, or perhaps he only looked at him with that sweet yet piercing look of his which once made Peter weep, it was so full of meaning, and then called to him and said, "Zacchæus, be quick and come down, for to-day I must stay at your house."

So Zacchæus made haste and came down out of the tree very quickly, and he was so very glad to take the Lord Jesus into his house.

But the people were not pleased, they did not like it at all. They said Zacchæus was a bad man, and they Remember, if you are baptized, that you are in that very act, praying God to forgive you, and to take the dreadful penalty of sin away.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, April 21, 1891.

BROTHER H. V. REED writes from Philadelphia, Pa.:—"I am well; have been preaching here sometime; very excellent prospects for a good congregation." Our readers will be glad to learn that Brother Reed is still in the great gospel field. May God's blessing attend his labors in the city of "Brotherly Love." His discourse in that city on March 27, 1891, on "THE TWO THRONES," was taken by a reporter, and is published in a neat pamphlet, and is offered for sale in Philadelphia, by the Millenarian Association, at ten cents a copy. It is also for sale at this office at the same price by mail. We hardly need to add, that it is a well-timed and lucid exhibition of one of the most important themes of Divine revelation, and set forth in the happy style of the author.

WE have received a pamphlet from its author, Brother Daniel Howard, of Beaver Dam, Wis., entitled—"A Letter to a Baptist Minister on the literality of the Kingdom of Heaven, the Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the Throne of David and Kingdom of Israel," which we can heartily commend to all our readers. Like Brother Reed's pamphlet, it would be a capital little work to circulate among those who are anxiously seeking for the truth regarding these intensely interesting questions. The themes discussed in both these pamphlets are concerning matters that are soon to affect the history of the world, and change the entire course of human events. The price of Brother Howard's pamphlet is eleven cents single copy, or one dollar a dozen. Address him at Beaver Dam, Wis.

ORIENTAL SKETCHES.

Palestine.

No. 4.

One of the most remarkable plains in Palestine in very many respects is the plain of Jericho that borders on the mountains of Moab on the east, and the famous Jebel Quarantania on the west. In a sunken channel the Jordan divides this plain. This plain had the climate of Lower Egypt and the vegetation of tropical regions. When it snowed at Jerusalem the inhabitants of this plain wore linen garments. The fertility of the soil was unexampled, and its luxuriant crops of wheat ripened a month earlier than in Galilee. Groves of palm and balsam trees made its groves pre-eminently famous. The balsam tree was cultivated for its precious aromatic distillations. The true balsam tree was a shrub that attained the height of only a few feet, spreading out into many small crooked branches, with diminutive bright green leaves, and small white flowers growing on separate footstalks. The balsam-juice was obtained by making an incision into the bark at the time of year when the sap was circulating most freely. The juice oozing through the wound was received into small earthen bottles, and from these transferred into those of a larger size, and carefully corked, as the smell fresh from the tree was extremely fragrant, which quality it soon lost if exposed to the atmosphere. A tree yields only about 60 drops in a day, so that the value of this most precious opobalsamum is sufficiently obvious. Over this plain Moses looked from the top of Pisgah, a mountain range on the other side of Jordan, and surveyed "the plain of the valley of Jericho the city of palm trees unto Zoar." Deut xxxiv. 3.

The rich palm groves of Jericho, so notable a feature in the time of Moses, distinguished this district in later times, as they were renowned in the time of the Gospel and Josephus. This historian speaks of these groves:—"This city has a very happy situation, and very fit for producing palm-trees and balsam." Again speaking of Jericho he says:—"Now here is the most fruitful country of Judea, which bears a vast number of palm-trees, besides the balsam-tree, whose sprouts they cut with sharp stones, and at the incisions they gather the juice, which drops down like tears." In still another place he says:—"This country bears that balsam, which is the most precious drug that is there, and grows there alone. The place bears also palm-trees, both many in number, and those excellent in their kind."

"The crops of dates were a proverb, and its fig-trees pre-eminently famous" expresses the exuberant fruitfulness of the renowned groves of this fertile plain. The rose plants and the many aromatic flowers and plants which filled the air with fragrance made a landscape enchantingly beautiful. But all is changed. A few years ago there was just one palm tree at Jericho, but this is now gone. A large part of the plain for the bank that makes the upper channel of the river till near the site of Old Jericho, is a barren land interspersed with only a few copses of thorn-trees, and other diminutive shrubs. "At length, says a writer, "we come upon a few scattered prickly jujube-bushes, then upon a rude fence of boughs thrown lightly on the ground, but impenetrable from the sharp recurved thorns with which every twig is studded. An artificial rill of water nurtures the crop, and we are within the slovenly farmed oasis of Jericho. We ride through a varied wilderness of indescribably luxuriance, the little spots of corn, melons, or tobacco interspersed among a dense tangle of false balsam-tree or zukkum, ugnus castii, and dom-tree, not to omit the apple of Sodom, with its potato-blossom and bright red or yellow fruit. Yet among all these there are the trees from which Jericho of old obtained its name, its fame, and its wealth—the palm? Not one remains. There are no stragglers in that wild and thorny tangle which have survived from the destruction of the gardens of Cleopatra: not one zorghum stem springs by the water side as a relic of the plantations which yielded such vast revenues to the Knights of Jerusalem; no balsam-tree lingers in the maze of shrubbery; and, above all, the last palm is gone, and its graceful feathery crown waves no more over the plain, which once gave to Jericho its name of the City of Palm-trees." It is said that the palm-tree is now comparatively rare in any part of the country once possessed by Israel. It seems that its history has been almost emblematical of the people whose home was once in that land. On one side of the well-known coin of Vespasian is the figure of a mourning woman seated under a palm-tree bewailing the overthrow of the Holy City and the captivity of Zion. Near the site of the Ancient city, or Old Jericho, is the Prophet's Fountain, now called Ain-es-Sultan, which is shaded by a fine fig-tree, and which still breaks forth in an immense volume of clear water from the foot of a mound which has every appearance of being artificial, as it is full of the fragments of pottery, and other remnants in broken and buried ruin, that tell of an ancient population that has perished forever. This fountain has a most remarkable history. We read that Elishah the prophet returned to Jericho after Elijah was taken up into heaven, "and the men of the city said unto Elishah Behold, I pray thee, the situation of this city is pleasant, as my lord seeth, but the water is naught, and the ground barren." Of these connected circumstances a late writer remarks:—"No one who has visited the site of Jericho can forget how prominent a feature in the scene are the two perennial springs which, rising at the base of the steep hills behind the town, send their streams across the plain towards the Jordan, scattering, even at the hottest season, the richest and most grateful vegetation over what would otherwise be a bare tract of sandy soil. At the time in question part at least of this charm was wanting. One of the springs was noxious—had some properties which rendered it unfit for drinking, and also prejudicial to the land. At the request of the men of Jericho Elisha remedied this evil. He took salt in a new vessel, and cast it into the water at its source in the name of Jehovah. From the time of Josephus the tradition of the cure has been attached to the large spring N. W. of the present town, and which now bears, probably in reference to some later event, the name of Ain-es-Sultan." The following incidents are taken from Laurence Oliphant's Book—The Land of Gilead. The author has quite recently returned from an extensive exploring tour which was made with the view of selecting a territory for colonization on the east side of the Jordan. After having crossed the plains on the east side of the river he says:—"Scrambling through the dense thicket which fringes the river, we found it boiling down in a turbid yellow flood, but were relieved to find that our call brought forth a ready response from the ferrymen on the other side, and that they showed no hesitation in manning the ferry-boat. Notwithstanding considerable difficulty in embarking and disembarking our loaded animals, one of whom fell back into the river, we were soon all safe on the other side, and made a most futile attempt to bathe in a back water of mud, for the torrent was too fierce to admit of our venturing out into the stream. Then we pressed on up the steep, slippery slope on the right bank, and rapidly traversing the intervening plain, arrived a little before sunset at Jericho. Here we once more came in contact with the signs and evidences of civilization. A party of Americans, with the star-spangled banner floating over their tents, were encamped above the Ain-es-Sultan; and some tourists, under the escort of a swaggering young Arab Shaik from Jerusalem, had pitched their tent in the back garden of the modest hostelry in which we sought accommodation." The site of the ancient Jericho, the old city of Joshua soon after crossing the Jordan, is placed in the immediate neighborhood of this fountain of Elisha. In the times of the Crusaders a few huts were clustered round the fort built here for the protection of pilgrims. The plains had not then ceased to be prolific, and were extensively cultivated and laid out into vineyards and gardens by the monks. A late description runs thus:—"A square tower is the only architectural feature of the wretched village, and this is dignified by the name of the house of Zacheus. It is occupied by a few Turkish soldiers. The huts round it are built of the remains of older buildings, and the inhabitants are a peculiar degraded and most degenerate race, very dark, and quite distinct from either Bedouin or the fellahin of the upper country. We feel inclined, as we look at them, to agree with the Jewish belief that they are the descendants of the old Canaanites, degenerated by the oppressive climate and the vices of the Ghor. They are the only people who reside during the whole year in the Jordan valley. The fellahin higher up only come down in autumn and winter to cultivate, and the Bedouin in spring to pasture. The chief resource of the population now in the backsheesh obtained from travellers for the performance of their Zikkare, or native dances. Near the gardens and plots round the villages may be noticed many of the tropical plants which are the most striking natural features of the district. Not only the two kinds of Zizyphus-trees, the dom and the nubk, the false balsam, the oleaster, and the gum-arabic acacia, but the gorgeous Loranthus imbricus, a scarlet parasite of striking beauty, is abundant on the trees, and the apple of Sodom abounds everywhere, while there are occasional plants of the curious Nubian asclepiad, the 'Osher' with its hollow puff balls filled with silky cotton fibre, and used for their matchlocks by the Bedouin." This last, and one other quotation are from Picturesque Palestine, which is now being issued by Messrs. Appletun & Co., in numbers.

Selections.

The Rainbow.

THE END OF ALL EVIL.

WILLIAM LEASK, D. D. . .

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."—Rev. xxi. 4.

Let me call your attention to the opening chapter of all history, the beginning of the Mosaic cosmography, the revelation which God gave to Moses in order that he might give it to the world. You must have observed that almost every successive act of creative power is followed by this verdict: "And God saw that it was good." Six times that verdict is given; and then the seventh includes them all, thus: "And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good."

Now, a thinking man must make something out of that. Is it possible, let us ask, before turning to our Scriptural proofs, is it possible that the Almighty an Omniscient Creator could have borne such testimony to his own creative acts separately, and then as an emphatic approval to his creative acts collectively, if he had seen (and he could not but see), that this world which pleased him so exceedingly, should be the scene of interminable woe—that man, the grand monarch of all other creatures in the world, should be an immortal sufferer and an immortal sinner? Could he build such a house, knowing that such would be the issue throughout the countless ages of eternity?

Brethren, the question is one of profound importance, and carries its logical issues through the whole thing from beginning to end. Could he see that that splendid dwelling-place, created purposely for the human race, should be the cradle of woe, the home of grief, the sport of devils, the prison-house of endless agony? Could he have made man if he intended that the vast majority of the race should be black and bad as the very Satan that spoiled the Paradise where our first parents were placed? I, for one, cannot entertain the thought for a single moment; to my mind it amounts to open blasphemy. "Very good," and yet the devil to triumph, man to be a follower of Satan, law to be a mockery, the Gospel to be rejected, and Christ crucified!

"Christ!" Here we arrive at the grand remedy, this is the name of the glorious One who was to take up this "very good" world and make it really better, who was to lay hold of the heart of man and bring him into subjection to the authority of God, and bye-and-bye so work out his scheme that one of his apostles in vision should say, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth." All tears wiped away, death destroyed, absence of all sorrow, no crying, neither pain forever. Why? "For the former things are passed away." The intermediate times have gone; the preparatory processes have been completed, and now the issue is before us. There have been two worlds: there will be a third. The first world was that before the flood, the material remaining as it was, leaving marks of the great cataclysm which we find in thousands of spots upon the surface and in the crust of this earth to this day. This in which we now dwell, therefore, is the second world; and this world is kept in store for the action of purifying fires—probably only over the surface, so as to purify it—and then there will be the new world. The heavens and the earth which are now kept in store for the purifying process, and we look for new heavens and a new earth characterized by this marvellous change: "wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Let me now call your attention to some very important Scriptural facts.

First of all, I should wish you to refer to Matt. xxv. 46, as I have something to say about it which I hope you will ponder well before you reject it. It is a description of what the translators are pleased to call the last judgment; instead of which it is a description of the first judgment, that is to say, the judgment in the commencement of the next dispensation. There have been many days of judgment in the world which are long past, which wound up the then circumstances of the nations or individuals that were involved in them. There was the judgment of the flood, of which men had 120 years previous warning; that judgment swept away all but one family from the face of the earth, finally doing away with them. And then we have had the judgment of Sodom and Gomorrah; their day of judgment is past, long past. We have had the judgments of Babylon and a number of empires and places; these are all past. But this is the first judgment under the present dispensation, or, rather, it takes place at the close of the present dispensation. And what are we told about it? "These shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal."

This passage has been quoted ten thousand times in support of the horrible theory of everlasting conscious suffering; it has also been quoted in support of the dogma of universal restoration. Now I shall endeavor to put before you the utter impossibility of either of these things being true.

The Greek words translated "everlasting punishment" are aionon kolasin. What do these words mean? I shall tell you presently. But, first of all, let me put before you the great fact that the doctrine of restoration or universalism cannot be based upon this passage, because it has to do only with mortal men, and not men in resurrection life. The King sits upon his throne of glory, and deals judgment to the nations; you know he is expected as King; he shall come as King, and in this parable of the sheep and goats he calls before him all nations and separates the righteous from the unrighteous; and the righteous shall enter into his glory, and the unrighteous shall enter into punishment. Is there anything analogous to this in the history of the world? Have you ever read of a conqueror calling before him the tribes and the nations that he had conquered and dealing with them thus—bringing the obedient and submissive under his sceptre and putting the rebels to fire and sword? I need not send you back through the world's history for instances of this, for they have been furnished in very recent times. Well, that is the idea; they are going into punishment. What does this word kolasin mean? It means pruning, punishing. Now the universalists have said that as this word means pruning as well as punishing, these people are to be pruned and thus restored. Just take one of your flowerpots to-morrow and cut off a branch from the plant; what will take place? The branch will die. What will be the effect upon the flower? It will improve it. This process is cutting off the rebellious ones who will not submit to the sceptre of King Messiah; and a double result ensues. First cut off, punish, kill, destroy; and the effect of that is everlasting. The second result is that the loyal nations are vastly improved when they have got rid of those corrupt branches which are doing all the mischief; the pruning, instead of being hurtful, cuts off the rebel and benefits the loyal subject; and that is what King Christ will do when he comes in glory to exercise judgment. Never again have the idea of resurrection in connection with this passage, which refers entirely to the King coming to his throne, a proof that he will pacify the world and bring in a rule of peace, of glorious peace, a reign of victory and conquest and the putting down of evil.

Now let me refer you to 2 Thess. i. 9 and we will go back to the 6th verse —"Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire" —when the Lord held his court on Sinai long ago, you know, he was attended by myriads of angels, unhappily translated "myriads of saints," and many people think they are the souls of departed men; but the word was angels, as we learn elsewhere, angels in ranks; when he returns he will have those ranks of angels—"taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Here we have olethron aionion. Destruction, ruin, death: these are the definitions of the term used in 2 Thess.; not life, but death.

2 Peter iii. 7—"But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men." This word apoleias signifies to kill, to destroy, to perish utterly. Now the men to whom we are indebted for our Greek lexicons had no peculiar doctrine to substantiate; they had as scholars to give the proper literal definitions of the terms. So that here in Peter and Thessalonians the meaning is absolute literal destruction of the person and of his life. "But," you say, "do not the Scriptures teach that the finally impenitent are to be tormented?" Let us see. I do find men tormented in the Book of Revelation (ix. 4-6), but I also find the fact that they are alive and in the flesh, and wish to die to escape the torment, and death flees from them. There is no case in the Book of God of disembodied souls subjected to torment. Now I want you to consider this. All the dealings of God in this matter are with men upon the earth, and not at all with "disembodied souls" —words unknown to Scripture. "And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads. And to them it was given that they should not kill them,"—which means that the torments would cease as soon as death took place—"but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man. And in those days shall men seek death," —death is deliverance from torment, of course—"and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them." Now how is this reconcilable with the invisible post-mortem hell about which men speak? The thing will have a reality—a dread reality—but it will be the last, the end of being to them, the second death.

Then we have in Rev. xiv. 9-11 also a dread picture of torments. "If any man,"—of those living upon the earth at that time—"worship the beast, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, . . . and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever." This is all very awful; but the great fact is that Christ will be present, and will be visible, and his holy angels, executing judgment upon the earth; and those rebels who worship the beast instead of Christ will be tormented. You remember the plagues of Egypt; the plagues of the Apocalypse are of the same character upon a vastly greater scale. The plagues of the Apocalypse have their root and initial meaning in the plagues of Egypt, just as Pharaoh was a type of this wilful King the beast. "And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever." Ascendeth up to the ages, as an undying memorial; just as the ruins of ancient Babylon prove that it was burnt, and as the Dead Sea marks the site of Sodom and Gomorrah, which were destroyed by fire and brimstone: the memorial of the judgment will last unto the ages.

And now mark: "And they have no rest day or night." What does that mean? Eternity? No. You do not speak of day and night when speaking of eternity. They have no rest day nor night on earth. They worship the beast, and as long as they do this rest will be impossible; for it is the day of Judgment, and the Lord is the judge, and He will reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet.

"Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth." You will find this on many a gravestone, but it is misapprehended. The persecutions of the Antichrist, the suffering of the Christians of those days who were not ready when the Lord came, will be so fearful, that the statement is true, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth," for they escape the torment of those who worship the Beast, and they rest from their labors, and their works follow them. They would not, they will not, worship the Beast. Death flees from the rebels that do this; but comes as a blessed deliverance to the loyal servants of Jesus Christ.

One passage more, brethren; a passage of extreme importance, as it embraces the whole of this doctrine about life and death. 2 Cor. ii. 14-16, "Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place. For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved and in them that perish: to the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life." Literally, "To these it is the odor of death unto death; to those the odor of life unto life." Life given in Christ to all who receive him; and in the case of those who will receive him, death. In this passage, as in multitudes of others, we have this thing: life bestowed by him who only hath immortality, upon mortal beings; for the root of all the mischief that has for ages cast its black shadow upon the bright character of our Father is the Pagan notion that man as such has an immortal soul. There is only one Being in the universe that can say, "I live for ever," and that is God; and Christ has God's life in him, and he imparts this life to believers, and that constitutes the hope of the Christian—the hope of immortality in his immortal head; that is the doctrine of Scripture, and God was justified in saying that his creation was "very good" because He meant it to be the theatre of a splendid redemption, which, in its issues, was to put an end to evil, an end to sin, to pain, to tears, to sorrow, to death for ever.

A cleansed universe, dear brethren, is to me a splendid, a wonderful idea. God said "Very good," and he will say it again when he looks down from his heavenly throne upon a restored world, handed back to him by his glorious Son, a world-wide empire brought into subjection to holiness and truth.

Age after age men have sinned and suffered, although with our sufferings there are mingled multitudes of mercies which call for thanksgiving; age after age tempest, war, pestilence, and famine have come and gone; the earth has drunk the blood of its inhabitants through countless generations. Shall these things last for ever? God's character says no; Christ's work says no: the nature of man, who is only mortal except he be in Christ, says no; the whole arrangement of this Book declares no; and one looks forward with exceeding joy to the time when the former things with their tears and sorrow and sin and suffering and death shall be done away to make room for the new heavens and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Now just look at the text for a moment. Mark it well. God is seen wiping away tears from the eyes of men. He loves them, then. They are his children. He is kind, compassionate. Tears are the sign of sorrow and grief. God wipes away tears, that is to say, by having put an end to all grief and all sorrow. No tears, means no cause for tears, nothing to be sorry for.

And there shall be no more death. "O death, I will be thy destruction." The destruction of death enters into the arrangement of Christ's redemption. What does that mean? It means the bestowal of immortality, of his own sinless immortality: for you may rely upon it that such a thing as an immortal sinner is entirely out of the question; it would be a monster in God's creation.

"Neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." Now let me remark that any being who is capable of pain is by that fact proved to be mortal; he who suffers has in that suffering a proof that he must go down to the dust some day. Nothing can be immortal but that which is perfectly sinless; and this brings us back to the fact that Christ Jesus came to give "life." Again and again the Gospel puts this truth in this condensed form. I have heard men say: "We have this immortal soul and we cannot get rid of it; God himself cannot destroy it if he would." This is gross blasphemy, and a thorough misunderstanding of the Divine meaning of redemption. You have been told that Christ came to give us happiness, and to take away sufferings and sorrow; he came to redeem men, and so make them fit for a blessed heaven. But, brethren, we must take God's words to mean what they say; the interpretations of commentators under the influence of traditional theology will lead you astray; but if you accept what is set before you in this Book you will not mistake.

The Lord Jesus came that we mortals might have life in him. This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. That this includes blessedness is certain; for eternal life in misery is unknown to the Bible.

Let me explain my meaning in a few words. It is not the belief of certain truths to which I am referring. It is the reception of life. The gift to us of an immortal soul? Not that. It is the in-breathing of Christ's nature, Christ's life into us, that constitutes the Christian. The spirit of life (the life of Christ given to a man) makes him one with Christ, and there is the basis of immortality, of incorruptibility, for that is the word. Not an immortal man, but a man made incorruptible in the image of Christ: a thorough man, a man after the image of Christ, who is the image of God; that is God's idea of perfect manhood.

Well now, finally, if this view be correct, you see why God insists upon human belief of his truth; why such stress is laid on faith in the Scripture: God intends to make us his sons, and the sons of the resurrection; and then we can die no more; just as in his case, who is our Leader, who says, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore."

It just comes to this. We are asked to believe in the Son because we have sinned, and stumbled, and fallen, and are unable to escape from the mire and pollution into which we have fallen; we have dishonored our Creator, and he graciously wishes to remedy the evil by a new creation. Our strength is weakness; our boasted deathlessness is the old lie of the devil, who said to our first parents, "Ye shall not surely die." Our only immortality is in Christ; may God in his infinite grace grant that we may all meet bye-and-bye at the right hand of the Life-giver, when the Church shall be glorified at his second coming, and then there will be an end of all evil! Amen.

News Items.

GREEK BOUNDARY QUESTION.

LONDON, Apr. 25.—An Athens correspondent says: Either the government is playing a deep game with its own people or Greece is on the brink of war. The main points in the Greek note which will be presented this week, will be its calling the attention of the Powers to the fact that they had not replied to the reservation contained in the Greek note of the 7th instant.

A correspondent at Constantinople says: The Porte's reply to the note of the Powers will probably reflect, more or less clearly, the unsatisfactory feeling produced by the Greek note. The chief aim of the Porte in sacrificing territory is not merely to avert war at present, but to establish permanent friendly relations with Athens and permanent tranquility in the Greek provinces in Turkey. As the Greek note offers little prospect of this being realized, some guarantee will be asked for the future as compensation for the proposed sacrifice.

QUINCY, Ill., April 25.—The Bay levee broke at 6 o'clock this morning about two miles north of East Hannibal. The water is rushing through with an immense force. The trains from here to Hannibal, via the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, are abandoned, the track between Fall Creek and East Hannibal, inside the levee, being under water.

Your correspondent finds that the estimate of 30,000 acres inside the levee, which is now a total loss, is below the mark. There are nearer 40,000 acres planted in Fall wheat. The yield heretofore has averaged thirty bushels to the acre. This season it stood finer than ever before. The loss on wheat alone may be placed at $1,000,000.

The river is still slowly rising, and has now about reached the highest point of last year.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

My address is now Lanark, Ill. We are located here now.—Brethren please take notice. G. M. MYERS.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—BY JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

Poetry.

WAITING FOR HIS COMING.

SELECTED BY L. T. C.

I am waiting and I'm watching for the glorious time to come,
When Christ will come again and take his children home;
I am waiting for his coming, and my heart is sad and lone;
I am waiting for his coming to take his people home

I am waiting for his coming. He has said he'll come again,
And he has told us in his word all will be joyful then.
I long to see the morning when the bright and heavenly ray
Shall betoken of the coming of the glad eternal day.

He has promised our home with all the holy ones in light:
He will it and dress it up in glorious beauty bright.
He has said he'll come again and conduct us to our home,
Where in immortal glory we shall ever cease to mourn.

I am waiting and I'm longing for the bright and better day,
When the deceiving foes of God shall chase all clouds away;
When the clouds are driven away, and in His presence stand,
Then we shall hear the Savior say "Come sit at my right hand."

I long to see the time when this wicked age shall end;
To see the glorious time when God his Son shall send;
When the curse of death shall roll from off our sin-cursed land,
When the earth shall be restored as Eden by a pure and heavenly hand.

I am waiting and I am anxious for the happy time to come,
When the sword, no longer needed, into ploughshares they will turn;
When we shall plant the vine and eat the precious fruit,
And praise the God of heaven and earth for his goodness, love and truth.

His children from all nations to Mount Zion he will bring,
And Jerusalem shall become the city of the King,
While from the hills and valleys the whole creation sing,
Christ is the King of all the earth, bond let his praises ring.

In the bright eternal city Christ shall wipe all tears away,
All is life and light and glory, and one eternal day.
The land we see by promise where we will never sin nor sorrow,
Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly, come and take us to our home.

Communications.

A SHORT BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH
—OF THE—
Lives and Experiences of Newell and Mary Bond.

BY NEWELL BOND.

It will be difficult to find two whose faith and experience is more identical than ours. Of the same age within a few days, (born in 1798), both in early life belonged to the Methodist Church; remained in that body till 1836, and withdrew our membership on account of their avowed advocacy and fellowship with slavery.

This was a severe trial as we had almost come to the belief that the M. E. Church was infallible. At that time it required nerve and backbone to leave a popular and influential church, and identify ourselves with the Abolitionists. Yes, it always has, and always will require firmness and decision to espouse the cause of the oppressed. When this step is taken in honesty and sincerity, it is an entering wedge to a future, the reward of which cannot be estimated. It is a crucifying process, which after a life of fourscore years, we most positively attest too.

The churches in the main took sides with the oppressor, not daring or caring to go ahead of public opinion, and had to be forced by the logic of events, into the support of the government to crush the rebellion, which resulted in the freedom of the slave.

Here we took a long farewell to all the creeds, covenants, and books of discipline put forth by fallible men to govern the church of God; planting our feet squarely and firmly on the Word of God. In all these things my wife was with me, and a help-meet indeed.

Our next forward movement was to embrace the unpopular doctrine of the Second Coming of Christ. This we did most heartily and sincerely, and were baptized without knowing but very little about what we were baptized for. We were told on coming up out of the water we would never have any more trouble about baptism, but it did not prove true, for upon a careful examination of the subject of baptism, we both found that our faith and our intelligence as to the requirements of the word were at fault, hence our works were imperfect.

Here was a heavy cross. It could not be got around. It had to be taken up, which was done heartily and cheerfully.

My dear wife was scrupulously honest, gave the subject a thorough investigation, and when it was over felt sure the foundation was laid upon the solid rock.

We have greatly wondered at the careless and loose manner in which some lay the foundation of their Christian superstructure. Oh, how much better to answer a good conscience than to try and climb up some other way, and after all have to take a lower seat, that will be humiliating, if not fearfully dangerous. Pilate and Herod were made friends, after the preaching of the one Lord, the one faith, and one baptism. All the warring elements were joined against the new heresy—the age to come. The reign of Christ in Millennial glory, the return of Israel, with many other Bible truths were then denounced with unmeasured terms.

The introduction of Bible truth, and establishing of the Church of God in the city of Cleveland, where we lived for forty years, were attended with many pleasant reflections, and as is always the case, some not so pleasant, which we pass over with a single remark: ignorance, egotism and jealousy are poor material to weave into the web of Christian character.

Several things press upon our attention as we recount our experience in church history. Where is the authority for one individual to lay his hand upon another individual and set him apart for the ministry? Where is the authority for church organization, with a plank above its level for the minister to stand on? One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren. Are the members of the church clear of sin when they deal in contraband goods that have not had the duty paid on them? Are they clear of sin when they violate Christ's golden rule, and overreach a brother in trade? Mr. Wesley would not allow these things; shall we be less exacting than the Methodists?

Our experience teaches us that the apostacy has, through Gentile practice, put a blunt edge, with many, on the plain, sharp blade of Divine truth. For example, when a professed Bible believer affirms, I am bound to make all the money I can out of the property I have, without regard to the law of God, there is something rotten in Denmark.

These themes were often discussed between us, and frequently with our neighbors, who would listen with marked attention.

After forty years' sojourn in the city of Cleveland, we journeyed to the sunny south. The ten years' pilgrimage in the mountains of western North Carolina will be fresh in our memory till the end of our journey.

From early life we have been a careful observer of men and things, especially that of the slave question. We confess we were but poorly posted as to its results. The half was never told us. Its blighting curse on the whole body politic, is as visible as that pronounced on man and the planet he inhabits, for the greater transgression. For a while we were greatly cast down, and but for a sick daughter, should have gone back without delay. The habits and manner of living, especially their sharp practices, will vie with anything this side of Texas. No difference between Gentiles and church members. The one who gets the longest end of the stick is the best fellow. Thereare honorable exceptions.

Preach the Bible and enforce its principles, and you will have to run the gauntlet for sure. We are tolerably pert, as the saying is, in learning the make-up of such a people. We were not long in getting notoriety; among our first discourses we made the statement that we took no stock in any man's religion who did not speak the truth always, pay his honest debts, and keep his word of honor. One observed more of that kind of preaching would be good for the people.

The leaven soon begun to work; gossip and slander, headed by the Baptist ministers, went like wild-fire. We needed no other advertising. Soon sides were taken; the opposition was formidible. It was evident that if anything was to be done to spread the truth, it would be by hard labor.

The sequel showed our conclusions to be correct. Persecution followed close upon the heel of slander and defamation of character, which resulted in our arrest by the sheriff of the county, upon a warrant sworn out by certain vagabonds, as in Paul's day, whom the court told they had lied and were liable to the state prison for perjury. We were honorably discharged by the court, there being no evidence advanced to prove we were guilty of a misdemeanor.

The seed sown fell into good ground, and we have good reason for believing it will bring forth fruit unto eternal life.

We give a specimen of the labor required.

We (my wife and I) rode seventeen miles over a rough road, spoke an hour and a half, took our lunch, got home at sunset.

To do this kind of work for a decade without fee or reward, requires faith, nerve and endurance. If we had had the help of certain ones who made loud professions, a little of their hoarded treasure to print tracts and pay Brother A and others for their hard labor, the result would have been far better. We rejoice that so many have embraced the truth in the love of it. Five preachers, and three organized churches, all strong in the faith, in hope of eternal life.

After ten years of hard labor in the way spoken of, being eighty-three years old, and infirm, we felt that we could not long act the part of missionaries, and that God would accept the offering, and reward us according as our work has been done, after much prayer and repeated consultation with my dear wife, we concluded to leave the mountains of North Carolina, and pitch our tent in Washington City, D. C.

We arrived here Nov. 24, strangers among strangers. The weather was cold and all looked dark and forbiding. Our goods were detained on the road for three weeks, which added to our unpleasant condition.

Jan. 3d, my dear wife was stricken down with paralysis, and died on Jan. 16.

Thus ended the life and labors of one of the best women that has ever lived in this or any other age. She with the writer indulged for forty years in the hope that we should live to see the King in his Beauty, and not have to grapple with the king of terrors, but God has otherwise ordered it, and we yield to his holy will.

We had lived together fifty-three years and nine months, and shared mutually the weals and woes of human life. She has fallen asleep and quietly rests, where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the righteous quietly await the summons of the archangel's trump to call them forth to immortality and eternal life.

The parting was painful, and we mourn, but with a blessed hope of soon meeting again in full fruition.

I am eighty-three years old to-day—April 20, 1881.

The Family Circle.

N. Y. Witness.

FAMILY TRAINING.—CHILDREN'S READING.

BY A CHRISTIAN MERCHANT.

There has been a great change in the past two generations in the manner of imparting instruction to young children. Formerly parents were obliged to tell their children what they desired them to know, and books for the young were confined to a few standard school primers or readers, with a few editions of nursery rhymes and fairy tales. Now, children early learn to read, and in the multitude of publications for the young there is very much that is pernicious and calculated to fill the young mind with false impressions of life and its responsibilities.

I remember once, when I was a boy, reading a pirate story that was loaned me by a companion. I knew my parents would not allow me to read it, but my boy friend prized the book so highly that I looked into it and then borrowed it.

When the book was once commenced I could not rest until it was finished; so, in order to complete it, I feigned an excuse for remaining away from church and Sunday School, and devoured the exciting and demoralizing trash that I have a thousand times wished I could obliterate from my memory, but which is before my mental vision to-day with more distinctness than books far more useful and instructive that I read twenty years later in life.

We parents should remember that the young mind is like a blank page, and that every day lasting impressions are imprinted upon it that make and determine the future character of our children, whether we would so desire it or no.

Next to the injury inflicted upon society by alcoholic stimulants, I would place the harm now resulting from exciting and stimulating the young brain by improbable stories and romances, which the young drink in with as much relish and crave with as strong an appetite as does the drunkard the strong drink that is hurling him to perdition.

My experience and observation teach me that the harm resulting from novel reading and unhealthy literature is beyond computation. Some of the smartest and most talented young persons I have ever met, and who I know were great readers of novels and fictitious literature, have become listless and good-for nothing creatures.

Life to them became a burden and a failure, because of the false views of life and expectations of improbable circumstances that they derived from the brain of some romancer, whose only object in writing was to put the exciting product of his imagination in print, so it would bring him the largest remuneration.

I know by experience that after reading an exciting romance the most valuable and instructive literature becomes insipid and uninteresting, and I have not read many works of fiction of genuine merit, because of the great damage that novel-reading caused to my mental nature when I was a youth, and which I fear would more or less so affect and influence me now if I indulged in gratifying my imagination as formerly.

I feel assured that Christian parents who desire to see their children grow up useful members of society, should allow them to read no book that is not approved by themselves, and we should see to it that the minds of our little ones are not unduly excited by stories, nor, on the other hand, overtaxed by study.

The best stories for children to read are found among those taken from the Bible, and all wise parents will see that "dime novels," or weekly, continued stories, that are written by persons of unknown religious character, are kept beyond the reach of their children.

I know it is hard to watch everything a child does, or where it goes; but I feel assured that no care or labor will pay larger returns in the future happiness of both child and parent, than for the parent to watch that nothing is instilled by reading into the child's mind, but what is in all respects healthy and moral in its tendencies and influences.

TOO SUPERSTITIOUS.

Deacon Barnes' Sunday.

"Beautiful, beautiful," mentally ejaculated Deacon Barnes, at the close of a sermon on heaven. "Those are my ideas exactly."

And so enrapt was he with his thoughts, as he passed out of the church, that he forgot to ask lame old Mrs. Howe to ride home with him, as was his custom.

"Perhaps it is just as well," he thought. "for she is a worldly old woman, and would very probably have drawn my thoughts away from heaven."

At the dinner table his son exclaimed, "Oh, father, I have a situation at last."

"Have you forgotten that it is Sunday, John?" asked his father, sternly. "Don't let me hear any more such talk."

John ate his dinner in silence. How could his situation be a wrong thing to speak about on Sunday! He was so thankful for it that it seemed to come from the hand of God. God knew all about the restless months in which he had answered an advertisement every day.

When the minister gave thanks in church for all the mercies of the past week, John's heart gave a grateful throb, and he then determined anew to henceforth acknowledge God in all his ways.

John ate his dinner in silence, while his father thought about heaven.

In the afternoon Mr. Barnes' nephew, a stranger in the place, came over from his boarding place opposite, and sat down on the piazza, talking with John.

"I can't allow this, Tom," said Mr. Barnes, coming to the door with the Bible in his hand. "You must not sit here breaking the Sabbath. Go back to your boarding house, and read some good book."

Tom started up angrily, and spent the afternoon fishing and bathing with an old colored man, his only other acquaintance in the place, while Deacon Barnes sat in a large rocker on the piazza, with a handkerchief over his face, and though about heaven.

Presently his two little granddaughters came out on the piazza with a large picture book, and sat down near him. There was a flutter of leaves, and a great deal of hussing as the two little yellow heads bent over the picture book, and finally they laughed outright.

"Children, where is your mother?" demanded Deacon Barnes, springing to his feet.

"Up stairs, putting baby to sleep," they answered.

Deacon Barnes strode into the hall.

"Ellen! Ellen!" he shouted, "I think you might keep the children quiet on the Sabbath. They won't allow me to think."

Ellen had been awake all night with a fretful baby. She had hushed him, and had just fallen asleep when her father's voice aroused her, and awoke baby.

"Please send them up stairs," she said, wearily.

And all the sultry afternoon she amused the three children in a close upper room, while her father rocked and fanned himself, and thought about heaven.

Selections.

Correspondence of the New York Observer.

ROME.

Hauntsof the Inquisition—No. 2.

MADAME SOFIA BOMPIANI.

CAMPO DEI FIORI.

Campo dei Fiori, a large open square, was the spot where the Inquisitors burned heretics and Jews at the stake. Here Giordano Bruno was burned, and some students of the University have collected a sum of money to erect a statue in his honor on the very spot. As yet, however, the City Council has not given permission to erect it and the money is awaiting a more favorable decision.

The Jews, many of whom in those gloomy centuries no doubt were burned here, have already received the compensation of time. This is their special hunting ground, as the prairies of the West are to the wandering Indian. Here every Wednesday morning they bring a nondescript variety of articles and hold a fair which attracts high-born ladies, professors, music-lovers, and artists, as well as the poor man, who seeks an old coat to protect him from the cold.

Here are rare books and engravings, old silver, bronze and copper coins, bits of fresco from the excavations, seals, the owners of which are long since dead, cameos and gems of all kinds. Perhaps the miniature of some lovely woman painted exquisitely on ivory will smile upon you from the midst of a table covered with old brass and iron.

And there every Wednesday may be seen an angelic woman, now missionary to the Jews of Rome. Mrs. Sonnenot Bartchaci, whose husband died two years ago in Jerusalem. They all know her, and never reject the book which she leaves upon their stalls. A great change has come over the Jews of Rome, for while they once derided the name of Jesus and his Word, they now receive it without displeasure and sometimes with interest.

TOR DI NONA.

The ancient tower called Tor di Nona, once used as a prison, has vanished, and the spot is occupied by the Apollo Theatre. In the dungeons of that tower were imprisoned Aonio Paleario and Pietro Carnesecchi. The one was a distinguished Professor of Sienna, who adopted the ideas of the Reformation, and was burned for his opinions at Campo dei Fiori. The other was a statesman, and attached to the Court of Cosmo de Medici, and after a long imprisonment for his religious opinions, he was decapitated near the Bridge of Saint Angelo.

PALACE OF THE INQUISITION.

The chief stronghold of the Inquisition, however, was the enormous palace built by Pius V. in a street behind the colonnades to the left of the Vatican. Monte Vecchio was found by that cruel Pontiff too small for the great number of heretics that the Reformation had made in Italy. In the subterranean prisons of that awful house near the Vatican they were subjected to unimaginable tortures, to cold, hunger and death. When this building fell into the hands of the Roman Republic in 1849, the long corridors, flanked with cells, the deep, hollow walls, the treacherous pits, were thrown open to the public, and detailed accounts of what was seen there were written. But as soon as Pius IX. returned from exile the Inquisition was re-established there. The Government of Italy took possession of it in 1870, and a part of it is now occupied as barracks for soldiers. The building is of a light yellow color, and high on the corner wall is the name of Pius V. A sentinel in the blue uniform of Italy is stationed at the arched entrance, and the large, square court is generally filled with other soldiers. The priests still occupy an upper story for some of their offices. The most impressive part of the outside of the building is the high wall on the Vicolo dell' Inquisitore. It is the whole length and height of the edifice, but without a single loophole or window. That blank wall repels the mind, and is wonderfully emblematic of the secrecy and terror of the interior.

THE COLUMN OF HENRY IV.

Pius V and the Massacre of Saint Bartholomew, which he instigated, have recently been discussed in Rome with more freedom and truth than ever before. It was in connection with an old stone column erected by Clement VIII. to celebrate the second abjuration of Henry IV. of France.

Through ignorance of history, or purposely, some maintained that this column was erected in honor of the first abjuration made by Henry IV. on the night of Saint Bartholomew, which he did to save his life. The mistake was corrected, but in the meantime the history of that monarch and of that terrible period had been thoroughly examined and discussed. Henry of Navarre, the Huguenot leader, was engaged to marry Margaret of Valois the sister of Charles IX. He abjured his faith on the night of Saint Bartholomew, but afterwards returned to it, and was captain of the Huguenots in two hundred battles. Twenty-three years after Saint Bartholomew, in the year 1595, he abjured again to secure the crown of France, saying "that a kingdom was well worth the hearing of a mass."

It was to this event that the column which stood until a few years ago before the church of Saint Anthony, in the new quarter, was erected. It was taken down for the widening of the street "Carlo Alberto," and the proposal to erect it again near its old place caused all the excitement. It was called the "infamous" column, and objections were made to replacing it. But, like the Palaces of the Inquisition, the Colosseum, the Palatine, and the Arch of Titus, this ugly old column is a part of the history of Rome, and however infamous may be the memories it recalls, it should be kept. The modern Roman and the traveller from other lands, while gazing at these monuments of past barbarity, may rejoice that happier days and clearer light have dawned upon the world, and that he feels their grateful and delicious warmth.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At St. Joseph, Mo., on Friday morning, April 10, 1881, of consumption, SISTER M. ROCK, in the 63d year of her age.

One more saint has fallen asleep in Christ. One more faithful witness to the truth is laid in the silent tomb with the fullest assurance that her sleep will not be long.

Here was the hope of the gospel, lived out in a practical Christian life. As a sister she had all the qualities of mind and heart that bind in love's closest union. As a professed Christian, her walk was most exemplary, even in the eyes of the world, and as a friend she was highly esteemed for her superior judgment, her unwavering fortitude, and for her high sense of honor.

Sister Rock was a widow for more than eleven years. For over five she was a sufferer from that fatal disease. During all these years she was a member of our family, and as my best loved sister, I watched over her with great solicitude, constantly dreading the fatal issue that left a vacancy in our household which can never be filled. Death has taken our fondest treasure.

She greatly desired to see the Master come, for she looked on death as our worst enemy, and as we talked from time to time of the signs of his coming—how they multiply, she would sometimes say "Perhaps I may live to see him come."

As the end approached she felt that all was well, and often said to me, "The dying bed is no time to prepare for the future. We die as we live." So, truly it was with her. She lived the Christian and she died the Christian, without a fear, without a doubt.

She was very anxious to celebrate the last Supper before her death, and I had written to a good brother to come on the 14th and break bread with us. For days she counted them as they passed, and as it came very near the time, she said to me, "If I can only live till the 14th, and commemorate my dying Master's last Supper, I can say as Simeon of old, 'Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace.'"

She was disappointed, as sickness in the brother's family prevented his coming, and meekly said, "The will of the Lord be done."

On that evening I read for her the institution of the Supper, the betrayal, etc., of our Lord, and by faith we looked forward to the time as not far distant when we will drink the fruit of the vine in our Father's kingdom. Blessed thought! it comforts my heart. We shall meet there (though not as sisters, for all family ties are here dissolved) yet we will be all one family in Christ. The former things will have passed away.

Brother Lot Clover, of Severance, Kan., conducted the funeral services and preached a Bible discourse from Job: "If a man die shall he live again?"

Never before in this city has the Bible doctrine of man's nature been set forth at the funeral of a saint at rest. I know the truth grated harshly on some Orthodox ears, but if they find fault it must be with the Bible, as the truths spoken were clearly deduced therefrom. World to God that even her death and life might be the means of opening the eyes of some to the importance of believing and obeying the truth.

To the little ones in the "Youths' Column" let me say, "GRANDMA" will write no more for you. Her pen is laid down forever; her hand can move no more. She always loved children—loved them to the end. Try to be good, learn God's will and do it, and you too may have part in the first resurrection, when we may triumphantly say, "O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory!"

CARRIE WILLIAMS.

DIED—Of erysipelas upon the brain, MRS. ELLEN FANCHER, aged twenty-nine years.

She was the wife of Charles W. Fancher, and daughter of Brother and Sister H. M. Briscoe. She was taken ill on Monday, April 4, and died Tuesday, April 7.

Brother Briscoe and family were awakened at night by a messenger with a dispatch giving notice of her sudden death; they not having heard of her illness.

She was brought from Audubon, her home, to the home of her parents in Polk County, where a large number of friends met on Sunday, the 10th, at which time words of comfort were spoken by the writer on the work of the Seed—Jesus and the resurrection.

She leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss.

J. W. BISHOP.

Avon, Iowa.

MISSPRINTS.

In the sixth paragraph of my article in THE RESTITUTION of April 20th, for "chiseled by angels," read "chiseled by Angelo."

In eighth paragraph for "prediction" read "predictions."

I eleventh paragraph for "hast" read "hush."

WILEY JONES.

ERRATUM.

In Sister Shuler's obituary notice in THE RESTITUTION of April 13, 1881, instead of "washed" read was led to the rock that is higher than I.

The sentiment was used by the writer on account of its applicability to the dear sufferer. "Hear my cry, O God; attend unto my prayer. From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee, when my heart is overwhelmed; lead me to the rock that is higher than I." Psa. lxi.

N. J. MORGAN.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will be at Moro's school house, on Friday, April 22, and continue over Sunday. The first Sunday in May at Bracken, as Brother Griffin may appoint. Friday, May 6, in Brother Reese's neighborhood and continue one week. Friday, May 13, at Kingsbury, Laporte Co., as Brother Clem may appoint, and continue over Sunday. Friday, May 20, at Brother Henry's, north of Walkerton, and continue over Sunday.

J. S. HATCH.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture on titled "Mistakes of Moses."

—BY J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. five cents each, or 15 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881.

—BY H. V. REED.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send for lots to
SAMUEL WILSON,
918 N. 2nd Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by
THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

Poetry.

A LITTLE WHILE.

Oh for the peace that floweth like a river,
Making life's desert places bloom and smile!
Oh for the faith to grasp heaven's bright "forever,"
Amid the shadows of earth's "little while."

"A little while," for patient vigil-keeping,
To face the storm, to wrestle with the shroud;
"A little while" to sow the seed with weeping,
Then blud the sheaves, and sing the harvest song.

"A little while" to wear the robes of sadness,
To toil, with weary step, through rocky ways;
Then to pour forth the fragrant oil of gladness,
And clasp the girdle round the robe of praise.

"A little while" amidst shadow and illusion,
To suffer, by faith, love's mysteries to spell;
Then read each dark enigma's bright solution;
Then hail sight's verdict: "He doeth all things well."

"A little while" the earthen pitcher taking
To wayside brooks, from far off fountains fed,
Then the cool lip its thirst forever slaking
Beside the fulness of the Fountain-head.

"A little while" to keep the oil from failing:
"A little while," faith's flickering lamp to trim;
And then, the Bridegroom's coming footsteps hailing,
To haste to meet him with the bridal hymn.

And He, who is Himself the Gift and Giver,
The future glory and the present smile,
With the bright promise of the glad "forever,"
Will light the shadows of the "little while."

Communications.

BAPTIZING IN THE NAME.

D. V. REED.

The Commission as given in Matthew, involves a question of great importance. Many theories have been set in motion as to the true import of this great commission of our Lord. We find a form of words given which do not occur elsewhere in the whole New Testament. Baptizing "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit."

The reader will find by a close reading of the Acts of the Apostles that the form of words used by Matthew does not occur during the ministry of the Ambassadors of Christ.

Why did they ignore the formula, if indeed it is a formula? We shall call the reader's attention to a few points of real interest and vitality so.

1. The apostles never baptized in the names of the "Father, and of the Son, and the Holy Ghost." Please read the Acts through carefully and you will find the above statement strictly true.

2. The apostles uniformly used the name of Christ as the only saving name. In giving commandments, in ordaining men for sacred purposes, in preaching and in performing miracles, all was done in the all-saving name of Christ.

3. The Holy Spirit was sent forth to do its work in the name of Jesus, and never, under any form did it assume its own name or use its own name, as a sign of power. It came in the name of Jesus—"whom the Father will send in my name!" "HE SHALL NOT SPEAK OF HIMSELF," etc. Please see John 14th, 15th, and 16th chapters.

To baptize, therefore, in the name of the Holy Ghost, is to do what the Spirit could not do for itself.

4. The reader will ask, Why then is the name of Holy Spirit used in the commission? Our answer is that the text in Matthew, is, in all probability, spurious. It belongs to the apostacy, and will some day be expunged from the Sacred Canon. Indeed, it is not found in some of the most ancient MSS. The Parisian MS. which is one of the three oldest and most valuable, omits it entirely. Many critics discard it wholly.

W. R. Gregg, in his Creeds of Christendom, has shown that such an idea was not embraced in the original commission, and that the text is spurious.

The Improved Version of the New Testament, has a note on this text which throws doubt upon it.

Joseph Priestley, in his Critical Notes to the New Testament, shows that the Catholic Church has this formula attached to seven sacraments of their church, and one of the seven is baptism.

The conclusion, therefore is, that the formula is not to be used in the ordinance of baptism. The apostles did not use it. Why should we? If it were used it meant no more than is embraced in the name of Jesus, else the apostles never obeyed their instructions.

Let us follow the example of the apostles, and use only such words as they used, which must embody all that was intended in Matthew, even if the text is genuine.

THE APPROACHING TRANSLATION OF CHRISTIANS.

WM. H. SNAPP.

I see no reason why we who are now living should not ourselves be in the number who shall be alive and remain at the coming of the Lord, when the first resurrection takes place. 1 Thess. iv. 16: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the cloud, to meet the Lord in the air."

Soon like the dewdrops on the grass, God's saints will be found rising from every spot—from the well-remembered tomb and the broad ocean—all in an instant glorious. We shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; not by slow degrees, but suddenly will that translation take place. How complete the change!

We cannot enter into the Lord's presence without being made meet for it. When that day arrives we shall be made like him, for we shall see him as he is. Our body so full of sin, infirmity, helplessness and corruption, will be changed into the likeness of the Son of Man.

This is the thought that may cheer the heart of many a patient sufferer. Your weak body may be a burden and constant hindrance to you now, but it will be made like his own glorious body, according to the mighty working whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself.

As particles of steel fly toward a lodestone, so will Christians who are ready when Christ comes, ascend to meet him in the air. All their suffering, temptation, and sorrow will then be over, and they will be taken while others will be left. Then how all-important to have the heart so touched by the Holy Ghost as to be attracted to Christ. To all his faithful followers Christ is the supreme object of attraction, the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley; the bright and morning star, the King of many thousands. Our resurrected and changed bodies, will like our Lord's glorious body, be capable of ascension.

By faith Enoch was translated that he might not see death; also Elijah ascended to heaven in a fiery chariot without dying. Our Lord himself rose in the air from the sight of earthly people. It appears that his glorified saints will do the same.

Watch! It is the command of Jesus himself. Watch! For though the particular day of his coming is unknown, there are such signs that assure us it is not far off, and we need to use all vigilance to keep our garments, and maintain our constancy.

Perilous times are at hand. Hours of darkness are approaching. But the expectation of Christ's glorious advent will be to his watching people like a bright and shining star.

Editor Restitution:

Not being able in my last article, to bring my remarks upon the location of the tribes to a conclusion, without too great an extension, and trespassing upon your space, a fault in some of your correspondents, of which you sometimes complain, and in my own case with as much reason as in any other, but as I have to pay two rates of postage for every communication I send you, the temptation becomes strong, to send as much as I can, i. e., if my ideas are according to the "law and the testimony" which in my own estimation I think they are, whether they are so to the brethren, or not, is the next question. However, once in the columns of THE RESTITUTION, they become liable to the criticism of any brother, who considers that he can show a more excellent way, as I believe truth is the object of all your correspondents, according to the best information they are able to obtain.

In my last paper I mentioned from memory that Ezekiel's reed was something more than ten feet and nine inches in length, but upon positive examination, I find it to be ten feet and eleven inches, which will constitute the squares of the "holy oblation," and of the city, fully the number of miles mentioned, i. e., 50, and 10, respectively, whether the Jewish, English, or Roman mile is intended, or adopted, in each case. Of course in rear of the holy oblation there will be a large extent of unoccupied territory, but it is only reasonable to conclude, that under the peaceful, happy reign of Jesus, the city and suburbs will increase in population, so as ultimately to require all of the unoccupied land which may be contagious to or adjoining it.

We are told by the prophet Zechariah, that at the coming of the Lord, "His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave to the midst thereof, toward the east, and toward the west; and there shall be a very great valley, and half of the Mountain shall move toward the north, and half of it toward the south, and ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains, for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal; yea, ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, King of Judah, and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with him." Zech. xiv. 4-5.

Here we have an account of a precipitous flight, and not without a very good reason, the cleft in the Mount of Olives will be from east to west, and the Mount being only one and a half miles east of Jerusalem, and the Great Sea, or Mediterranean being the western boundary of the land, the waters of this Sea, which is some thirteen hundred and ten or twelve feet higher than the valley of the Jordan and Dead Sea will come pouring in through the cleft, and fill up the valley down to the Dead Sea, or Sea of Sodom, which is thirty miles south-east of Jerusalem, and the valley being enclosed between high rocky banks on the east side, will be filled with water, to the depth of many feet, down to Engedi, which is thirty-seven miles south-east of Jerusalem, on the same line as the valley of the Jordan and Dead Sea, "and the fishers shall stand upon it from Engedi, to En-eglaim," which is seventy miles south-east of Jerusalem also—"and their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the Great Sea." See Zechariah xlvii. 10. Showing that the waters rushing out of the "Great Sea" will bring out multitudes of its fish also.

I am aware, however, that these waters and fishes are spiritualized by thousands of professors and their teachers, and made to mean immense numbers of the human species, and great crowds of converts (fishes). If this could be proved, it would go a good length to prove friend Darwin's system of evolution to be correct, but my own private opinion is, that the prophet is here speaking of veritable waters, and real fishes, as now found in the Great Sea, or Mediterranean? How can fishermen or fishermen's nets, be made to symbolize with the teachers of the people, or any other machinery now employed for the purpose of snaring converts? Jesus told some of the disciples that they should henceforth "catch men," and "become fishers of men." See Matt. iv. 19, and Luke v. 10. But in each case, the parties were veritable men. Jesus taught his disciples and his people generally plain truths, and easy to be understood, but to outsiders and others he spoke in parables; the reason, "to you it is given etc," to others in parables.

My information as to the measurement and distances now given, I derive from the "table of distances from Jerusalem" as given in the Polyglott Bible, published in Boston 1833, which I suppose to be quite correct. The location of Benjamin is stated to be next to the "holy oblation," on the south side, and the same authority as above mentioned, places the Mount of Olives in the portion of Benjamin, thus showing that the cleft in the Mount of Olives will take place between the holy oblation, and the portion of Benjamin, and the water flowing in will form a large harbor of some thirty miles long by something about two miles wide, and the portions of the Mount moving north and south, will form a wharf, or landing place close to the city, as such a necessity exists in all commercial cities, and thus a very large, safe, and commodious southern harbor will be formed, sufficiently safe and large to accommodate the commercial navy of the world, and at the same time occupy the three unoccupied miles mentioned in my last paper, thus occupying the whole breadth of the locations from north to south, of two hundred and ninety-three miles, i. e., the holy oblation 50 miles, 12 tribes 20 miles each 240, and the harbor and wharf or landing place 3 miles.

I am satisfied in my own mind, that all these arrangements so minutely described are not given down by Jehovah, to become a dead letter! all objectors and gainsayers, to the contrary notwithstanding. There are not nine consecutive chapters given in the book as a description of any other subject, and in addition to these, so many other portions of the word, bearing more or less upon the same subject, which will occupy, and run through, not merely an age, or a period, but "ages to come" See Ephesians ii. 7, when such glory shall be revealed, the view of which in our present state of existence we should be totally unfitted for, and unable to bear, Any one realising the great amount of solicitude, taken by Jehovah in the affairs of men, is astonished.

Let it not be supposed for a moment, that any thing which I have stated in this and my last paper, should imply the idea, that the Bride of Jesus, would be engaged in the pursuits of commerce and industry which I have been endeavoring to describe. A higher sphere of action awaits her; she will be rather the directress, and overseer of the affairs of men in future ages! as the true, and obedient followers of Jesus, "who cry day and night unto him" for support and assistance will be his witnesses, both here and hereafter, so they will be his assistants in the future, to bring all his adversaries into subjection, and keep them so, until the last of them, who will be engaged in the last great rebellion, will be "devoured," and destroyed from the earth. See Rev. xx. 9. And as the rulers of the affairs of men under Jesus the King of all the earth, both the obedient and disobedient, the latter class, they will rule with a rod of iron by the power conferred on them by the King. This is plainly stated in Rev. ii. 26-27. Unto him every knee must bow, peaceably if they will, forcibly if he must.

The people which he is now taking out of the Gentiles for his name will bye and bye, bear his name, his nature, and his power, but only in a subordinate degree; they will be the one with him, just as described by the prophet Zechariah as follows: "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one." Zech. xiv. 9. that will they take his name on the day of the marriage, just as all other brides take the name of their husbands on the day of their espousals.

Therefore seeing that we have this hope, "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God,—and seeing that ye look for such things be diligent that ye may be found of Him in peace without spot and blameless." So be it, may God thus keep all his dear people, unto the coming and Kingdom of Jesus. THOMAS CHICKERELL.

Exegetical.

And the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing. Isa. x. 27.

This expression has been explained in a variety of ways. By one it is supposed that Hezekiah is intended, as both he and his capital were miraculously preserved from destruction when his land was subsequently invaded by the King of Assyria. Another solves the difficulty by a conjectural reading substituting the word shoulder for anointing, understanding that the yoke of servitude should be removed from the shoulder of an oppressed nation. Another thinks that the word means fatness, and concludes that the Assyrian invader is intended, who would be corrupted and destroyed by the amassing of wealth acquired by the plunder of conquest. While the Rabbins are represented as saying that the deliverance was wrought in consequence of the great amount of oil Hezekiah caused to be consumed in the synagogues for the study of the law. Barnes says:—"I confess that none of these explanations seem to me satisfactory, and that I do not know the meaning of the expression."

The prophecies of Isaiah, as recorded in the preceding chapters, foretell the invasion, conquest, and final captivity of the ten tribes, which then constituted the Kingdom of Israel in contra-distinction to the Kingdom of Judah, by the King of Assyria. He likewise predicts the invasion of the Kingdom of Judah by the same power by which it would be greatly wasted, but, nevertheless, that the ruling monarch and his capital should be preserved from destruction. The Kings of Judah were of the royal line of David, who was anointed King over the chosen nation by God's prophet Samuel under the direction of God himself. The inspired Psalmist represents the Lord as saying:—"I have laid help upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one chosen out of the people; I have found David my servant: with my holy oil I have anointed him—my covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me." Nathan is sent to David, and he delivers a message from the Lord to him closing with these words:—"And thy house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee: thy throne shall be established forever." David himself says in his confidence of the eternal continuance of royalty in his lineage: "I will give thanks unto thee, O Lord, among the heathen, and I will sing praises to thy name. He is the tower of salvation for his King: and showeth mercy to his anointed, unto David, and to his seed forevermore."

Interspersed among the prophecies of conquest, subjugation, and captivity, are remarkable predictions concerning the pre-eminently royal heir of David's princely lineage. Speaking under the Spirit's influence of things future, as though present, Isaiah says:—"Unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful. Counsellor. The Mighty God. The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his Kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with justice, from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Now David was of the tribe of Judah, and the preservation of that tribe was absolutely necessary in order to the continuation of the royal lineage in its direct line of descent till Messiah, the Anointed, and God's predetermined and chosen heir to the throne of the everlasting kingdom should be born.

If Judah had been carried away into the same long hopeless captivity as the ten tribes were, and had the royal anointed line of David's descendents been destroyed, as the Israelitish princely line was destroyed, the promises to David concerning the endless perpetuity of his throne and kingdom would have failed of fulfillment. God preserved the kingdom of Judah from the fate of the ten tribes because the Messiah—the Anointed was to come from that tribe. Judah was saved from destruction, that the anointed lineage of David might be preserved till that Divine Personage should be born who, though the Son of God according to the Spirit of holiness, was of the seed of David according to the flesh, of whom God says:—"Thy throne, O God is forever and ever: the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre. Thou lovest righteousness and hatest wickedness; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Hence the yoke of subjugation, and ceaseless, hopeless captivity was destroyed from Judah because of the anointing—because of the Princely Messianic lineage.

Brevities.

It is feared that the new treaty between Russia and China will permit Russia to make a descent on Corea. She has now a large naval force in Chinese waters, and has need of a Pacific port not closed by ice like Vladivostock. Corea can expect no sympathy, for she has received all European visitors with shot, and refused assistance to every shipwrecked vessel. Japan and England would not like to see Russia establish herself there, but the former can do nothing to prevent it.

A volume of smoke rises constantly from the midst of a densely wooded morass in Wakulla County, Florida, and has for at least fifty years been a mystery to the people of that region. The spot is five miles from the nearest point to which any person has ever penetrated. The negroes believe it is an entrance to hell, and regard it with awe. Some of the whites accept the theory of a volcano. Judge White of Tallahassee lately organized an expedition to explore the swamp, but failed to make a way into the tangle of rank growth.

The city of Durango, in Mexico, has a hill in its vicinity that is almost pure iron. It is two miles long, one mile wide, and 700 feet high. On its surface, uncovered and visible, are, according to estimate, two hundred millions of tons of iron ready to be placed in the smelting ovens that is proposed to be put up at the foot of the hill. A large part of the ore yields from 70 to 90 per cent. pure metal, and is easily worked and converted into steel. Wood for fuel in unlimited abundance is to be had near by, and good water is accessible. Altogether, there seems to be no reason why Durango should not be a Pittsburg or Birmingham in the near future, or even cast those cities of iron and flame entirely into the shade.

A change of climate.—Scientific men say that the mild climate of England and France is due to the heated waters of the Gulf Stream, which add several degrees to the average temperature, compared with the same latitudes on the eastern shore of America. If the course of the Gulf Stream should be changed, so the scientists say, these countries would have long and dreary winters. They enforce their theory by reference to Greenland. The climate of that country was once mild, its summers delightful, and its surface covered with a rich verdure, from which its name was derived. But it is now covered with huge glaciers, and is almost uninhabitable. The change, they think, has been occasioned by change in the current of the Gulf Stream. It once flowed near the coast, and diffused a general warmth. But, by the formation of the coral reefs on the Florida shores, the waters of the Gulf Stream were deflected from the Greenland coast, and its climate became Arctic. A similar change may happen to England from a similar cause.

The revised edition of the New Testament to appear next month, is being introduced to the press through specimen pages by Thomas Nelson & Sons, of New York, through whom what is known as the Oxford edition will be issued. There will be five different styles according to size and type, the prices ranging from 15 cents to $16. The cheapest print will be in nonpareil type and paper covers, the most expensive in plea type bound in Levant morocco, divinity circuit, kid lined, silk sewed. The 8fo volume will be royal octavo ten and three-sixteenths of an inch long, seven and one-sixteenth inches wide and two and a quarter inches thick. The brevier and nonpareil volumes will be printed in two columns on a page, the other sizes being single head columns, like ordinary books. The present versification is done away in it, but the verses of the present version are indicated by numbers in the margin.

A RAGING VOLCANO IN THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Private advices from the Sandwich Islands report that the famous volcano Mauna Loa is still in eruption and has been continuously so since the early part of October. The inhabitants say that the present eruption exceeds in grandeur, extent and activity any that they can remember or of which there is any record. The American residents say that the spectacle is magnificent, and well worth a voyage thither. The principal crater is some 16,000 feet long, and 9,000 feet wide, is constantly belching forth smoke, steam and flame, and occasionally throws up vast rocks, while lava pours down the mountain, nearly 14,000 feet high, in broad streams. Some of the eruptions have lasted thirteen months, and it is likely the present one will be fully as long, for it has steadily augmented from the outset. It has been compared with the eruption of 1859, when three craters opened on the side of the mountain, the highest being 10,000 feet above sea level, though the two lower were more violent. From one of these rose a column of liquid fire 600 feet high. There are now six craters alive, and it is said that the chief one throws out occasionally a mass of flame 600 feet high. Several of the rivers of lava are five or six miles wide, and these actually form cascades, and in some instances are so voluminous as to run up hill. The lava has also forced its way through subterranean outlets, and tumbled with a hissing, roaring sound into the sea. Mauna Loa has been far more energetic of late years than it used to be, and is now distinguishing itself unenvitingly. Some of the lava beds are enormous. The lava streams frequently cool on top, and when new lava is added the crust breaks with loud explosions. Considerable uneasiness is felt among the residents of Honolulu lest their dwellings be destroyed, and the opinion is generally expressed that in no volcano on the globe have finer natural pyrotechnics been seen than now and there.

A Letter to a Friend!

—BY MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED
—AND—
The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—BY A. J. EYCHANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 15 for 50c., or $3 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARNER.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns," whose music is as a household word. Those loving the "Christian Psalmodist" and do music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 80c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,
—OR—
STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1900.

—BY M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 70 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. All orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

FIVE PAGE TRACTS.

DEACE PEARLS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by which Baptism is Into. 3. Immersion. 4. What is Repentance? 5. The Kingdom of God. 6. Nature of Man and Thorough for Thinkers. 8. The Two Advents. 9. What is Religion. 10. The Restitution. 11. Destiny of the Wicked. 12. Dogmatism. Ten copies for 25c. or assorted packages of 100 30c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 25c; 50 for 50c; 100 for 90c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, both the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Metzler.

Resurrection. Acts 24:15. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of the answer as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Baptism? H. V. Reed. An extract of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Lehr.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

25 cents, or 2 for 5c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? D. V. Reed.

Name of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contains the Latter-Day Programme of the Scattering of the Jewish Israel, and the Address.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

25 cents, or 15 for 25c.

Christ's Coming. Joel A. Sinnock.

Hope of Israel and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoe. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand destiny of redemption. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

25 cents; 12 for 25c; 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Josiah Litch.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Sinnock.

The Living Sou of Man. Rev. John Cox, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

What is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in the sky.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Sinnock. The promises made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently alluded to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate on a visit.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 cents; 12 for 50c; or 25 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches (German). Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Sinnock.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.

10c. each; or 15 for $1.

Examinations concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 40 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiii. 64 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 240 pages, price 25c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 44 pages, price 25c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "Nine Reasons and forty four objections to the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of baseless charges. Paper 50c.

Hades; or the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Beauchamp, Congregational minister, and W. Kellaway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Beauchamp. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and incapable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 25c., paper 20c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Durh. Exactly the book for the times. 330 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the former movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of Europe and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 168 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Hades; or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.50.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 278 pages. Plain cloth, binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

—THE—
QUESTION BOOK.

The Question Book is now ready, and may be had of the writer, at 10c. a copy. Postage stamps taken for amounts under $1. Its full title is "Early Lessons, or Nurture and Admonition arranged in the form of Questions and Answers." One of the brethren in New York, ready to aid a good cause, has ordered 300 copies; another, in Baltimore, writes, "Our little church desires me to say that we will take two dozen of the Question Books. . . . I am truly glad that such a suggestion was made by that good sister, for it is just what our children need, and many of us older ones also, for most of us are children, only of a larger growth."

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!
—REVISED—
THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—BY BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of ancient critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christendom have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 984 pages, cloth $4.50, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. K. HARNISH.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
I. C. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
M. STEPHENSON, E. WILSON,
J. P. WESTHEIMER, J. A. SHOOK,
WILEY JONES, D. M. MYER,
A. D. JAMESON.

The Restitution.

Keep Pro Weethees Articles.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 4, 1881. NO. 17.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the Immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations, the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING SOON.

Its Proximity. First Trumpet. Its History Continued. Alaric prepares for his First Campaign. His Orgies. Portents for the Invasion. The First Campaign. Second Campaign. Fall of Rome. Death of Alaric. Application of the history to the prophecy.

No. 66.

J. P. WESTHEIM.

Alaric prepares for his first invasion.—The force of Alaric drew to his military standard the bravest of the barbarian warriors, who extended from the Rhine to the Euxine.

Plunder was their device and watchword.

An apparent friendship arose between Alaric and Stilicho which so excited the jealousy and hatred of Honorius against his great general as to cause him to be put to death. This sad event was much to the advantage of the hostile designs of Alaric. Stilicho was the wall of defence to the western empire, since he had formerly defeated the Gothic monarch in every battle. His removal, therefore, opened the empire to his contemplated invasion.

Alaric, as master-general of the Roman armies throughout Illyricum, which office he obtained by a treaty with Honorius, claimed a support from the emperor, for himself and army. The amount was 4,000 pounds of gold, "given as a subsidy, to secure the peace of Italy, and to conciliate the friendship of Alaric, the King of the Goths."

The failure of Honorius to pay this subsidy was used as the pretext of invasion. An indiscriminate slaughter of the Gothic servants throughout Italy, added fuel to the rising flames, and hastened Alaric's revenge.

Under the pretence also, of avenging the death of Stilicho, his friend and ally, as he called himself, multitudes gathered to his standard.

Such was the fatal blindness of Honorius and his senate in their impregnable fortress of Ravenna, that they refused to negotiate a treaty or raise an army.

Expecting the barbarians to encounter Italy, or rather its northern confines, they were suddenly alarmed by the intelligence that Alaric, with a numerous army, had ascended the Alps, crossed the Po, and was within a few miles of their city. All the fortified cities of northern Italy, Ravenna excepted, were taken and pillaged, without having met an enemy.

Moving southward he was joined by 30,000 auxiliaries. He extended his ravages along the coast of the Adriatic, and meditated the conquest of Rome, the ancient mistress of the world.

On his march toward Rome he was met by a hermit who denounced the curses of heaven upon the barbarian conqueror.

Alaric's reply showed that he was fully persuaded of the nature of his mission: "I feel a secret and supernatural impulse, which directs, and even compells my march to the gates of Rome."

Such an inspiration was necessary to infuse into his army, to remove the superstitious reverence of the nations for the majesty of the Roman name.

Following the Flaminian way, and occupying the unguarded passes of the Apponine, they descended into the luxuriant fields of Umbria; "and, as they lay encamped on the banks of the Clitumnus, might wantonly slaughter and devour the milk-white oxen, which had been so long reserved for the use of Roman triumphs.

A lofty situation and a seasonable tempest of thunder and lightning, preserved the little city of Narni; but the king of the Goths, despising the ignoble prey, still advanced with unabated vigor; and after he had passed through the stately arches, adorned with spoils of barbaric victories, he pitched his camp under the walls of Rome."—Gibbon.

This barbarian host, under Alaric, was the first foreign enemy seen by Rome for six hundred and nineteen years. The citizens had now wholly lost their ancient character. The city was full of luxury, wealth, and idleness, joined with arts and amusements. It had attracted the vices of the universe, and the measure of the most opposite actions. The intemperance of the Gauls, and cruelty and levity of the Greeks, the savage obstinacy of the Egyptians and Jews, the servile temper of the Asiatics, and the dissolute, effeminate prostitution of the Syrians, were mingled in the various multitude which, under the proud and false denomination of Romans, presumed to despise their fellow-subjects, and even their sovereigns, who dwelt beyond the precincts of the ETERNAL CITY.—Gibbon.

Alaric agreed to raise the siege, on payment by the Romans, of 5,000 pounds of gold, 30,000 pounds of silver, 4,000 vases of silk, 3,000 pieces of fine scarlet cloth, and 3,000 pounds weight of pepper. These terms being accepted, Alaric retired, for winter quarters, into the fair and fruitful province of Tuscany. Here he was joined by forty thousand barbarian slaves, who had escaped from the servitude of their Roman masters; also by an army under Adolphus.

Though surrounded by such a formidable army he offered peace to the Romans on favorable terms; spent the winter in making overtures, and in protestations of friendship; but some strange infatuation seized upon Honorius and his senate, which suspended the payment of the subsidies, and caused them to reject every condition of peace.

A very insulting letter from the Roman emperor fell into the hands of Alaric.

The king of the Goths, with his army of soldiers eager of devastation, fire and plunder, marched back to Rome. Taking possession of all their granaries, the city was called upon to surrender. The gates were thrown open to the Goths; and Attalus, Perfect of the City, was declared emperor. Attalus proving himself unworthy of the elevated position, was publicly despoiled, by Alaric of the diadem and the purple.

Having received further insults from Honorius, he appears, the third time, before the gates of the city of Rome.

"At the hour of midnight the Salian gate was opened to Alaric, by some slaves and domestics, and the citizens were awakened by the tremendous sound of the Gothic trumpet.

Eleven hundred and sixty-three years after the foundation of Rome, the Imperial City, which had subdued and civilized so considerable a part of mankind, was delivered to the licentious fury of the tribes of Germany and Sythia."—Gibbon.

The Sack of Rome.—This was attended with so many very remarkable features, so striking, that we cannot read their history without seeing the hand of the Almighty shaping their events.

Some persons take interest only in persons and things in the present, and in the future; they ignore the dead past. Where we can discern foot-prints of the Deity, we are interested in what he has done, as well as what he is doing and will do; it is too selfish to be otherwise.

Rome was full of Christians (by name) whose interests were involved in the fate of the city. The whole country, where the hosts of the barbarians were quartered, and through which for years they had been marching, were Christian provinces, that, before the invasions, had smiled in the beauties of Eden.

Alaric, and a large percentage of his army, were Christians also; why then, should we not take a deep interest in God's dealings with that age, and with the people of that great empire?

Eighteen and one-half centuries of Christ's high priesthood have their record in history. They are full of Christian suffering. The blood of martyrs colors every century. We cannot pass them without offering sad tribute to their memory.

But let us follow Alaric and his army into Rome. The Vatican (the church of St. Paul and St. Peter) was spared; and Alaric commanded all the consecrated plate (of gold and silver) and ornaments, belonging to the churches, to be carried to the Vatican for safety, which was accomplished by his own soldiers, amid their shouts and songs and psalmody of Christians.

Five days was the city devoted to plunder, fire and sword; on the sixth, Alaric drawing off his army, moved toward the south. Fire and devastation marked his progress. Ruined fields, and smoking towns and cities gave evidence that the fury of the tempest was not fully expended. The Gothic hosts extended their ravages to the extreme of southern Italy.

The conqueror then meditated the conquest of Spain. The first division of his fleet was destroyed by a terrible storm; and before he could repair the loss death terminated his fatal career.

The funeral of Alaric was quite remarkable. "By the labor of a captive multitude, they forcibly diverted the course of the Busentinus, a small river that washes the walls of Consentia. The royal sepulchre, adorned with the splendid spoils and trophies of Rome, was constructed in the vacant bed; the waters were then restored to their natural channel, and the secret spot where the remains of Alaric had been deposited was forever concealed by the inhuman massacre of the prisoners who had been employed to execute the work."—Gibbon.

Four years were occupied by the terrible invasion, and seven years were expended by the Romans in repairing its damages. Its results on the empire we have reveeled to John, it was a deadly thrust at the imperial head, to be followed by three others of similar nature.

Application.—1. The symbol has been examined; we have sketched events, which are claimed to constitute its history. Is the analogy sufficiently clear to constitute a fulfillment? So it appears, according to the judgment of many learned expositors. Alaric did to the western empire what a storm would accomplish, in a populous, well-cultivated country.

2. The invasion began, progressed, and terminated as storms generally do. It gathered its elements from all the Germanic nations, and took the southern course as storms do that make in the Alps. When it had finished its mission it wholly ceased. So it was with the invasion and death of Alaric. Adolphus, his successor, strove to heal the wounds of the empire made by Alaric. He said, "In the full confidence of valor and victory, I once aspired to change the face of the universe; to obliterate the name of Rome, to erect on its ruins the dominion of the Goths; and to acquire, like Augustus, the immortal fame of the founder of a new empire. By repeated experiments I was gradually convinced, that laws are essentially necessary to maintain and regulate a well-constituted state; and that the fierce, untractable humor of the Goths was incapable of bearing the salutary yoke of laws and civil government.

From that moment I proposed to myself a different object of glory and ambition; and it is now my sincere wish that the gratitude of future ages should acknowledge the merit of a stranger, who employed the sword of the Goths, not to subvert, but to restore and maintain, the prosperity of the Roman empire."—St. Jerome, by Gibbon.

3. In our application we extend the preparation of the first trumpet back to A. D. 340 and onward to A. D. 412. This will include the period of the gathering of the storm elements.

4. It is reasonable to suppose that God would deal with the Roman empire while his people, the Christians, were in its bosom, as he did with the Babalonian, Mede-Persian, and the Grecian empires when holding his ancient people.

It was once said by an angel, "Fear not Daniel, . . . I am come for thy words. But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me twenty-one days; but, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia." Dan. x. 12, 13. "And now I will return to fight with the kings of Persia." Dan. x. 20.

Angels were God's messengers through the Roman empire, also.

Idleness is the dead sea that swallows all virtues, and the self-made sepulchre of a living man.

FORBEARING ONE ANOTHER.

HELENA M. KENT.

"Who art thou that judgest another?"—James 5. 12.

There are one Christians (and that they are excellent people I do not wish to doubt) who seem to find that one of their special duties is to find fault with others. I am often inclined to think that they do not because they cannot help it; it does not appear to be a matter of much interest to them whether the fault is great or small, whether committed voluntarily or involuntarily or what the circumstances connected with it might be, in their eyes it was a fault, and that was sufficient.

These worthy people are also very particular indeed about the creed of their fellow-Christians. To their mind the views held by some are too wide, by others too narrow, and they feel bound to settle what ought to be believed and accepted, and then, woe to the unfortunate beings who do not hold the same ground as themselves, apparently, and we thank God it is only apparently, there is no hope of salvation, no blessing, no promise for them.

Now how grateful we ought to be that we know the gospel is built on a broader basis than this; that we shall not be judged by man's standard, but by One who knows them that are his, and acknowledges them notwithstanding all human efforts to withhold fellowship.

I often think that we shall see a good many in the kingdom, if we remain faithful, that we never expected to see there; and there may be quite a number excluded then, who are so very anxious to exclude others now.

I would like to add a few words on the importance of forbearing one another in little things.

We are not all of the same temperament or disposition. What may be a real trial and hardship to some of us, may not cause others the least annoyance. Therefore we do well in looking to ourselves before we are to eager to condemn.

Jesus says, "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" Why not look for the best in every one, and be slow to see the evil. We must look upon another as hopelessly bad, when we cannot give one word of encouragement; is it possible ever to be happy or hope to do any good when possessing this disposition of continual fault-finding? I think not.

It would indeed be a terrible thing for any of us if a time in our lives should come, when a brother or sister were beyond our reach to be too good to, when we had to look back and say, "There once in Christ and full of hope, fell away from the truth. I scarcely ever said one kind or encouraging word to them."

How should we stand in the great day of his appearing?

Boston, Mass.

Youths' Column.

Rural New Yorker.

The Golden Rule.

Our Savior, when he was on earth,
Laid down a blessed rule,
That every little child should keep,
At home, at play, at school.

Do unto others as you would,
That they should do to you;
This is the rule our Savior made
And left for me and you.

If you would hear no angry words
You ne'er should be unkind,
But keep the blessed golden rule
Forever in your mind.

How very pleasant it would be
If harsh words were unknown!
Then let us each resolve to speak,
Our kindest words alone.

And when our angry thoughts are stirred,
Let this our prompting be,
I'll do to others as I would
That they should do to me.

A Boy's Victory.

A dozen boys stood on the green by the school house, careless and jolly, just from a game of ball. A boy came round the corner of the school house with an old cloth cap on his head, and wearing a loosely-fitting garment of some coarse cloth. In his hands were an iron stove-shovel and a hod of ashes.

"O, here comes old Dust and Ashes," shouted one of the group, springing forward and giving the coat a jerk.

"Hullo! what's the price of sack cloth?"

The boy's cheek flushed in an instant. The shovel rang on the gravel walk, and his fingers clinched; but as quickly his cheek paled again, and clenching his teeth, as with a great effort to keep back something, he turned a little and muttered the word "mother."

"Oh-h-h!" shouted the other. "The baby's sick, and wants to see his mother."

The boy in the coarse frock turned away, and rapidly disappeared behind the old barn; then, breaking into a run, he fled swiftly down the path to the maple woods, his faithful Hunter bounding and racing by his side.

Most graciously stood the maples all russet and crimson and yellow, bathed in the yellow haze of the still October afternoon. In among their shadows he sprang, his feet rustling the already fallen leaves, and flinging himself in a little hollow, he buried his face in his hands. Poor Hunter stood by wondering why his master, any more than himself, could possibly think of anything but birds and squirrels at such a time. Then the boy, seizing his only playmate in his arms, cried:

"Oh, nobody loves me, nobody loves me in the world but you, Hunter! Oh, mother, mother, why did you die?"

And the sobs came fast and thick, and tears flowed like rain. Long did the motherless boy wail and cry, till from very weariness he could weep no longer. Tears brought relief, and the holy quiet of the grand old woods filled him with solemn and holy thoughts—thoughts of his dead mother.

Only one year ago she had died and he remembered his agony and loneliness, and the year of toil as the ward of a cruel uncle. He remembered his eagerness to go to school, his trying to pay his way by working about the school room, and the unfeeling gibes and jeers his humble station and coarse clothing had earned him. Again the angry, rebellious thoughts came up, and his eyes fell on his coarse coat, and the quivering sobs returned, but with them came the words of that mother, and how her poor fingers had toiled to make that coat, the best she could give him. Though coarse in texture, every thread was hallowed by a mother's love. He took from his vest pocket the well-worn Bible, her Bible, and read the precious promise to the widow and orphan again and again. New and strange thoughts came to him, and there, in the grand old forest, with the Autumn sunset shimmering the golden maple leaves, was a new purpose born in his soul. He had begun to conquer himself. Henceforth there was no hesitation for him. Body and soul he devoted himself to God. Companions might jeer, but Jesus reigned in his heart.

The years went on, and the boy became a man, but the purpose formed in the maple grove burned in his bosom yet; and now his feet tread the deck of an Indian steamer, hearing him swiftly to the chosen scene of his toil, for these words are in his heart: "I must be about my Master's business."

N. Y. Observer.

Birds of the Bible.

BY GEORGIANA KRINGLE.

NO. I.—DOVES.

Of all birds mentioned in God's book—the Bible—none are referred to so frequently as the dove.

After the birth of our Savior, when Mary, his mother, took him for the first time to the temple, she was not rich enough to take a lamb for sacrifice, as mothers did who were better off in worldly goods, but she took a pair of doves—gentle, loving, beautiful birds; what more fitting gift could she ever have offered for the holy Child Jesus?

At the baptism of Jesus, the Spirit of God descended upon him, in the form of a dove, and the dove became forever the symbol of holiness and love.

When the waters had covered the earth, and Noah sent out a bird, after many days, to see if the dry ground was appearing, he chose the dove, which went forth over the waters, and returned to his window with an olive branch: then the dove and the olive branch became to us the symbol of peace between God and man.

Of our Savior it is said, "His eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of waters;" and to us those eyes became the emblem of tenderness and beauty.

If the eye is the medium through which we catch glimpses of the soul within, what beauty, holiness, tenderness, must have dwelt in the eyes of Jesus. The times of trial, when we seem to be for a season deprived of the presence of God, are compared to winter, and the return of happier seasons, to the spring. "Lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds has come, and the voice of the turtle [dove] is heard in our land." The Church is represented as being tender toward us as doves toward one another, and we all know their love and devotion to their little mates, causing them to mourn pitifully when separated from each other, with such intense grief that death often ensues.

When the Psalmist wished to describe the purity of the heart made clean by our Father's forgiveness, he refers to the purity and beauty of doves' wings: "Though ye have lain among the pots, ye shall be as the wings of a dove covered with silver and her feathers with yellow gold." The dove, then is an emblem of purity. In another place, the Psalmist, in thinking of heaven, and longing for its peace, sighs: "O, that I had wings like a dove, for then would I flee away and be at rest;" this he saith, remembering that the dove, when longing for the sweet influences of milder climes, migrates from time to time, going and returning with the inspiration of the changing seasons.

Hezekiah compares his deep sorrow to that of a dove mourning for its mate: "I did mourn as a dove," he says, in thinking of his grief; and the Prophet Isaiah, also in representing the grief of sinners, compares their sorrows to that of mourning doves. Nahum, too, alludes to this loving trait when he refers to the desolations of Nineveh, and the passing of its inhabitants into captivity, and says: "As with the voice of doves tabering upon their breasts." The loving spirit of the dove has endeared its name to men in all generations, and, as God is love, we do not wonder that the dove should appear in the great Letter which he has sent. There are passages in the Prophets which seem to contradict the usual character of this gentle bird, representing it as fierce and cruel, as in the following from Jeremiah: "The land is desolate because of the fierceness of the dove;" but, to understand this passage, it is only necessary to remember that the nation at war with the Jews bore a dove on their ensigns; thus the dove, to the Jews, represented a fierce enemy. To us the tenderness of their eyes, the loveliness of their feathers, are suggestions dear not only for their own loveliness, and the thoughts to which they give rise are only those of holiness, peace, purity and love.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 13.

HOW TO GET INTO THE COMMONWEALTH OF ISRAEL.

I wonder if the children can tell me what Commonwealth means? It means a popular government, a realm. We often speak of our Commonwealth, meaning not only the government, but all that it takes to make up these United States.

God has but one Commonwealth. It is made up of the good people of all times. He chooses these to rule his kingdom when Jesus comes.

They will have crowns. Thrones will be given to them, and all the nations of earth will obey their laws. They will be kings, but Jesus will be king over them, because it is said that "He is King of kings and Lord of lords."

God's Commonwealth is a Commonwealth of kings, elected to rule the world.

It is called the Commonwealth of Israel. You can read the first chapter of Ephesians. See, everybody who refuses to believe and obey God is an alien to the Commonwealth of Israel. He can have no part in the government of God's kingdom.

If one of the boys who are reading these papers was grown, and should go to another republic to live, the people would not look upon him as one of them until he had made himself a citizen of their country according to law. Then he would belong to their government, and could take part in making and executing their laws.

So, until you comply with God's law for making yourself a citizen of his Commonwealth, you do not belong to his country nor government; you have no right to a place in the kingdom, and God will not permit you to enter into it.

You would like then to know how to become citizens of that Commonwealth wouldn't you? You are far off now, but you are made nigh by the blood of Christ. Again, he is the only door. You already know how to come to the blood, and when you have come to that by being baptized, you belong to the Commonwealth of Israel—you are a prince of the royal house of David.

Now the covenants of promise can only be claimed by members of that Commonwealth. You are strangers to all that was promised to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob until you come into Christ. You must take Christ's name before you can have any portion in the inheritance that God has promised.

You must become God's children by being adopted into his family.

If some great man was going to make you his children, you would have to take his name according to law. You would then be counted of his household, or family, and would share in the inheritance, that would be covenanted to his children in his will.

You would believe him when he said he would make you his heirs if you would take his name, and do in all other things as he commanded you to do. You would believe him when he told you where you would find your inheritance. You wouldn't dishonor his word by looking for it in another place.

Nor though you should take his name, and become obedient to the laws of his household, would you expect to get anything named in the great man's will until after his death.

Well, Paul says, "If you have been baptized into Christ, you have put on Christ, and if you are Christ's then are you Abraham's children, and heirs according to the promise."

God gave the inheritance to Abraham by promise, and if you have taken Christ's name for your name, if you are Christ's, then you belong to that family; you are the children of Abraham, and as his children, what was promised to him was promised to you—your names will be found with his in the will or deed, that gives God's land to the meek.

You are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, and as God's children, you have a right to God's land. You have faith in Christ Jesus, because you believe all that God has said about him and his kingdom, and because you are going to obey him, to get all that he has promised to give you.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

As that prisoner whom the French Revolution liberated from the Bastile, and who hung up his fetters in his English home, that looking on them he might bless the bitter discipline that taught him the sweetness of liberty; so we, looking down and back on the quarries where we were hewn and sculptured, thank God for every wound, and bless him for the sharp tools and stern blows that cut from us those coarse, selfish incrustations of the life of sense.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will be at More's school house, on Friday, April 22, and continue over Sunday. The first Sunday in May at Bracken, as Brother Griffin may appoint. Friday, May 6, in Brother Roose's neighborhood and continue one week. Friday, May 13, at Kingsbury, Laporte Co., as Brother Clem may appoint, and continue over Sunday. Friday, May 20, at Brother Henry's, north of Walkerton, and continue over Sunday.

J. S. HATCH.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 4, 1881.

FROM a communication from Brother Magruder, our brethren will be pleased to learn that his pamphlet is in the printer's hands and will be ready at a no distant date for distribution among the community at large. We hope this anti-infidel missionary will soon be in the field, and may God bless it in counteracting the poisonous and corrupting influences that are so rife in our day.

WE hope to resume our Oriental Sketches and articles on Baptism soon. We want to apprehend the design of this holy institution as revealed in the Scriptures. This ordinance is more important than many suppose. Our object is not controversy, but to learn what God requires of us as testing our obedience. We shall endeavor to write in a candid Christian spirit and try to avoid wounding the conscientious feelings of those from whom we are compelled to differ.

IN accordance with the expressed desire of several of our subscribers, we have published Dr. J. H. Thomas' Lecture delivered before the Liberal League in Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881, Entitled—MAN AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE—in pamphlet form. We hope our brethren will give this tract a most general circulation. It is a well-written and lucid exhibition of the subject that the author selected as the theme of his address on the occasion when it was delivered, and is well calculated in its present printed form to interest and instruct all who may read its pages. Let this tract and Brother Reed's new pamphlet on the Two Thrones be at once put into the hands of the inquiring multitudes. Send to this office—See Advertisement.

NO. VI. of the Hebrew of Tafel's Interlinear, Translation of the Sacred Scriptures is published. It contains the concluding pages of Numbers and the whole book of Deuteronomy. This number completes the Pentateuch, and accordingly contains the title for this division of Holy Writ designed to form Vol. I. of the entire work. The Epistles of the New Testament will be published next in order. A delay in the issue of this important work has been caused by want of means. Address all communications to Rev. L. H. Tafel, 635 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa. The venerable head of this undertaking—Dr. Leonard Tafel died recently at the advanced age of 81. He ranked as one of the ablest philologists in this country.

News Items.

ANTI-JEWISH RIOT.

BERLIN, April 29.—A popular movement against the Jews has broken out at Argenau, west Prussia. A mob led by a school teacher has wrecked the houses of some Jews and maltreated the inmates.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 29.—Serious disturbances, originating in the superstition of the peasantry regarding the Jewish Passover rites, have occurred at Elizabethgrad, in the Government at Kherson. A mob destroyed the synagogue. Many rioters were killed by the troops, which were summoned to repress the riot.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 30.—Belvidere Castle, at Warsaw, Poland, is being prepared for the Czar, who will make a lengthened stay there.

Of 183 arrests of suspected Nihilists, thirty-five remain in custody.

The Russian ship Novgorod, with 350 exiled Nihilists, on board, has passed the Bosphorus en route for Saghalien.

At Elizabethgrad a hundred Jewish houses were pillaged and destroyed, the walls and roofs only standing.

The greater part of Krasnoyarsk, the second important town in Siberia, was destroyed by fire.

LONDON, May 1.—Bizerta, the most northern town of Africa and a fortified seaport of Tunis, was captured on Sunday by four French iron-clads. It has a population of 10,000, and is defended by two castles.

PARIS, May 1.—A terrible epidemic, somewhat akin to typhus, is making great havoc among horses in this city. The Paris Omnibus Company is said have lost 75,000 francs, and the Campagnie Des Petites Voitures over a million.

The latest foreign papers are full of bills of mortality. Typhoid fever is raging in St. Petersburg, small-pox in Vienna and Paris, diptheria in Berlin and throughout Prussia, the small-pox has gained fresh strength in London, typhoid and malarial fevers were doing good service for their grisly master in the seaport towns of Great Britain, while the plague has appeared in its old hunting-ground, Bagdad.

THE LOSS ALONG THE MISSOURI RIVER ESTIMATED AT $4,000,000.

CHICAGO, April 29.—The total loss of property by the flood on the Missouri river and its tributaries, between Sioux City and Bismarck, is estimated at $2,500,000. Below Sioux City, including the damage done at Omaha, Council Bluffs, Kansas City, and the great overflows on both sides of the Missouri, between these cities and St. Louis, the amount of loss is computed at $1,500,000.

Seven thousand people have lost their houses and all their means of subsistence in the Upper Missouri valley, in Dakota Territory, in consequence of the disastrous overflows of the river. Vast tracts of country have been submerged and swept by the flood. Appeals are made to the country at large for immediate help in money, food and clothing.

Selections.

Earthquakes in divers places.—MARK xiii. 8.

EARTHQUAKE IN SCIO.

Scenes of Desolation and Horror. A Vivid Description of the Calamity sent from the Ruined Island.

[A Letter from Scio to the London Times.]

The temperature on the 31 was heavy and oppressive, and the horizon was broken by broad flashes of light that seemed to denote a coming storm. In all this atmospheric disturbance, however, the inhabitants saw nothing extraordinary, and were far from being alarmed by what they fancied would result in a thunder-storm.

At 10 minutes to 2 in the afternoon a terrific shock was felt, bringing three-fourths of the houses in the town to the ground like so many packs of cards, and burying 1,000 persons under the falling ruins. Then commenced a fearful scene of horror. The ground rocked and danced, kneading the ruin already formed into an unrecognizable mass of stone. The survivors ran hither and thither, not knowing where to flee to escape the horrible fate that menaced them, and were tossed and flung about by the heaving earth, like feathers in a breeze. On every side the sinister rumblings of the earth, the noise of falling buildings, the tearing asunder of the walls of houses, and the shrieks of the wounded, lent a fearful horror to the scene. All sought to leave the town and get into the plains, in order to avoid being buried under the falling buildings, but even those who gained the open country were by no means safe. The earthquake attacked not only the towns and villages, but worked its ravages in the hills and mountains of the island. Enormous masses of rock and earth came rushing down the hillsides, carrying all before them, bounding far into the plains, and tearing roads in the solid rocks of the mountain such as might have been formed by a torrent 1,000 years old.

Some time elapsed before any of the survivors recovered from the terror caused by the shock sufficiently to be able to comprehend the extent of the catastrophe, or to think of looking for friends or relatives still perhaps alive beneath the ruins.

The town presented a pitiable spectacle. Great fissures and crevices yawned in the streets, walls were falling with a crashing report, and entire buildings crumbled in fragments to the ground. In many places whole streets had disappeared, and it was hard to say where the different well-known buildings had stood. No one knew where to look for family or friends. The ground still heaved and tossed, bringing fresh buildings to the ground at every moment, and hurrying innumerable victims to destruction. The people seeking to escape were caught in the staircases of their houses by falling walls, or were crushed by the entire house falling in on them as they crossed the threshold. It is impossible to say what the number of victims would have been if a second shock had not displaced the ruins formed by the first and thus permitted thousands to escape or to be rescued by others from the horrible imprisonment to which they had been condemned. In the town the victims have been very numerous. The quarters most damaged are the citadel, the Atzikios quarter, and the industrial quarter. Beneath the ruins of the citadel alone 600 victims at least must be buried. Among others there were forty Turkish women who were engaged in prayer in an oratory situated in the court of the castle. The Government palace and buildings, the telegraph office, and the mosques, are little better than tottering ruins. Hardly a minaret in the town remains upright. The Frank quarter may be said to have suffered the least of any, but even here there is not a house the walls of which do not exhibit one or more ominous-looking crevices. All the fissures and crevices run from east to west. In the industrial quarter hardly a house remains standing, and whole families of from ten to fifteen persons have perished, or must perish, beneath the ruins.

In the country the effects of the horrible upheaval have been even more terrible than in the town. Here the victims may be counted by thousands instead of by hundreds. The monastery of Neomoni is completely razed to the ground, and sixty monks lie buried beneath its walls. The site of the village of Nenita presents the appearance of a disused stone-quarry. Not a trace of a building remains. The inhabitants have disappeared. It is thought that the number of victims in three villages (Calimassia, Thimiana and Neochori) is over 3,000. The total population of the three districts is between 6,000 and 7,000 souls. I have just visited Cardamala, Pythios and Pavenona, which are entirely destroyed. The number of victims is unknown, but is very considerable. At Tchesme 1,000 houses, half of the town, have been destroyed. Five dead and fifty wounded have been discovered at Kato Panayi. Every house and there are 900, is in ruins. Twenty-three dead and 150 wounded have been found hitherto. The aspect of the plain of Vounaki is heartrending. Between forty and fifty thousand persons of all ages and both sexes are camped there, on the open ground, and there are as yet but few tents to shelter them, and old and young, sick and well, the dead even in some places, are scattered indiscriminately about the plain. Parents wander from group to group in the crowd seeking their children, and endeavoring to persuade themselves that their darlings will be found among the living. Not a single baking-house in the whole island is left standing, and the entire population was thus without food until aid could arrive from the exterior. At one moment an entire village, built in the form of an amphitheater on the side of a hill, broke bodily away from the parent rock, and rushed crashing down into the plain.

The shocks are now diminishing. In all we have counted 250 since the first three awful upheavels which destroyed the greater part of the island. Of these 250 shocks at least forty were capable of overthrowing a solidly-built house. The work of excavation has been commenced, but how few of the buried victims shall we be able to extricate from their living tombs? The scene is sickening. Here a hand makes feeble signs through a crevice, while the unfortunate wretch to whom it belongs is buried beneath thousands of tons of masonry. Here, again, a voice calls for aid from underground. A daughter sobbing endeavors to encourage her father, who is imprisoned deep below the surface; and at every turn of the spade or pick some horrible mutilated corpse is brought to light. Numbers of dead are unburied, and in isolated places the dogs are disputing the possession of their mangled corpses.

The earthquake in Italy, at Ischia, on March 5th, occupying half a minute, destroyed four hundred and forty houses inhabited by 2,200 people, and killed about 130 people, chiefly women and children. As it was at mid-day the men were mostly out of doors. The little island of Ischia, off the Bay of Naples, is one of the most favored spots, for its vineyards and olive groves, its orchards and corn-fields, present a picture of wonderful fertility. The entire island slopes to the sea from a central mountain called Epomeo, now an extinct volcano, but whose eruptions are mentioned by Strabo and Pliny. In the year 1301 Epomo broke forth again with great fury, since which time it has remained quiescent. But on March 5th an earthquake overthrew the town of Casamicciola, which lies at the foot of the mountain on the shore, and is noted for its sulphur and other mineral springs. These attract to the island many summer visitors, for the benefit they derive from the medicinal virtues of the waters. Earthquakes certainly seem to be happening in divers places. There were two shocks in Switzerland last week, and also some at Agram. Alarming news comes from St. Michael's Azores, where no fewer than thirty-six successive shocks of earthquake have been experienced. The church and two houses fell in, and several people were killed.

The Sunday-school Times.

THE OLD-FASHIONED LANGUAGE OF THE ENGLISH BIBLE.

TALBOT W. CHAMBERS, D. D.

Since the common version, so long and justly dear to thousands and millions of believers, has an antiquated garb, shall a new revision utterly cast off this feature and make the style as modern as if the book were a production of the present quarter of the nineteenth century? We answer unhesitatingly, no. It is true that the progress of the language must be regarded, and words which have in the course of time become reversed or greatly altered in meaning, should give place to others not liable to be misunderstood. Otherwise the translation ceases to be a translation. But, apart from cases of this kind, the archaic form of the English Bible, so far from being a loss or a hindrance, is an unmeasurable advantage.

1. It emphasizes the great distinguishing feature of the Scripture, that by which it is separated from all other books, namely, its divine origin and character. Even on the lowest theory of inspiration, the volume bears this stamp. Other books may lead to God; this one comes directly from God. It has a double authorship, being on one hand distinctly and unequivocally a work of man, and on the other with equal certainty a work of God. The two elements are completely interfused, nor can any scientific statement of the truth be simpler, clearer, or more satisfactory than its own words, "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." It is not simply a collection of religious treatises, or a record of venerable traditions, or one among a number of sacred books of similar interest and authority, but it records the sole written revelation which the living God has made of himself and his will. Here it stands absolutely and forever alone. This being the case, it is a matter of devout thankfulness that there is a peculiarity in the form of our English Bible which at once suggests this fact to the most superficial reader. The archaisms do not diminish the force of the utterance, but rather enhance it, reminding the reader at every turn that the book he holds in his hand comes to him with far higher authority than the greatest uninspired writings, and that its value lies not so much in what it says, important as that is, as in the character of Him who says it.

2. Antiquity of style corresponds with the actual facts in the case. The Bible is a very old book. Its latest portion comes to us with the tone of eighteen centuries upon it. It preceded almost every characteristic feature of our present civilization. There is, therefore, a marked and palpable fitness in those forms of expression which are called archaic. They suggest the ancient origin of the book without in the least invalidating its modern applications. Nay, the contrast between the outward form and the inward freshness gives the greater prominence to the latter. This is not merely a matter of esthetics, a question of literary taste. The real power of the word is brought out with more force as the reader sees this venerable heirloom of the past revealing and meeting the most pressing emergencies of the present. He is reminded that it is neither old and obsolete nor new and temporary, but both old and new; old as the stars of light and yet new in its undimmed radiance.

3. Any change not called for by imperative necessity must needs be a loss. Dr. Cosby only repeats what many have said before him when he describes King James' Bible as "a model of literary beauty and sublimity which compares most favorably with the versions of all other tongues." It was made at the best period of our language, when it had been enriched by the brilliant geniuses of the Elizabethan era, and it struck the happy medium between colloquial vulgarity and refined affectation. It united simplicity and dignity, strength and beauty. No finer specimen of English prose has ever been seen. This is not merely an individual opinion. On the contrary, it unites the suffrages of all modern masters of English with scarcely an exception. How, then, can any change not called for by necessity be an improvement? It is true that the learned chancellor speaks of what he calls "the stiff uncouthness of a Tudor style," but this is just what does not appear in the English Bible. This book is simply marvelous for its easy and rhythmic flow—a feature in which it has not been excelled by any of the numerous attempts to supersede it. Its authors, in addition to many other qualifications, seem to have been endowed with a fine ear and a large affluence of expression. Nor does any play of Shakespeare exhibit the richness and power and grace of our tongue more fully than the Job, Psalms, and Isaiah of the authorized version. Of course the idiom and vocabulary can be "modernized" and still be good English; but where would be the gain? It is a mere assertion to say that such a modernized version would more readily touch the heart and renew the life. The facts of every-day experience are just to the contrary. The "Pilgrim's Progress," which is based upon the Bible, and incorporates a large part of its phraseology, is as attractive and effective to-day, after two centuries have elapsed, as it was when first issued from the press.

4. Once more, there is good reason for the desire that the Bible should continue to discharge the same literary functions which it has confessedly done since the days of King James, that is, of furnishing a standard of the language, a norm by which aberrations are detected and measured. A living language is subject to constant change, and this change may be upward or downward. It may be in the way of an appropriate development, absorbing and assimilating new materials; or it may be by degradation, vulgarizing and impoverishing both idiom and vocabulary. Now, nothing is better fitted to control and direct all linguistic changes than the possession of one volume of wide and permanent circulation, which is generally recognized as a true memorial of the language as it existed in its very best estate. Such a book exerts a quiet but mighty influence. And such a book is the English Bible. It is read in every cottage and quoted in every workshop, as well as studied by the scholar and expounded by the preacher. It secures attention from all ranks and classes. It is reverenced by all denominations of Christians save one. And its circulation enlarges by millions of copies every year. And thus it has become, and continues to be, with some exceptions, the one recognized standard. As Mr. Marsh has said, "It is the central sun around which the English language revolves in its orbit. From this sacred center the language cannot wander far, for the centripetal attraction governs."

Having, then, this standard, let us keep it. To do this requires no edict of any kind, or from any source, but simply to preserve the old book, with merely such changes as correctness or perspicuity demand. All else may safely be left undisturbed in the future, as in the past. Archaic words and phrases, if intelligible, will serve a useful purpose in keeping alive the knowledge of the original character of the language, and indicating the lines in which change should be allowed or encouraged. It may be said, therefore, that something more than mere esthetic taste is involved in the preservation of "the majesty of holiness" which belongs to the authorized version. It is a matter touching upon that reverence for language which is the mark of a high culture, and regards words as next in importance to the thoughts of which they are the vehicle. "We think by words, and, therefore, thought and words cannot but act and react upon each other. As a man speaks, so he thinks; and as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Brevities.

A remarkable conjunction of the larger planets of the solar system occurred last week for the first time in centuries. On Friday Apr. 22, a straight line drawn from the centre of the earth to the centre of the sun, and thence continued to the centre of Neptune, at the outer limit of the system, would have passed through Jupiter and Saturn.

A few miles inland, in a deep gorge on the island of Scio, amid grand scenery, until the recent earthquake, stood the wealthy Monastery of Nenmoning, founded, according to tradition, by Constantine the Great. Its stones now lie scattered below the cliff. Only six monks were inside at the time of catastrophe, and were killed; the other seventy-four, who were in the fields, saw their homes shattered before their eyes.

In the course of the excavations necessary for the reconstruction of the baths at Durkheim, in the Rhenish Palatinate, the workmen came upon an enormous iron chest containing the celebrated treasure of the Abbey of Limburg, which disappeared after the siege of the abbey in 1504. The treasure is supposed to have been put in safety by the Abbot out of fear of an attack. It is composed of a large number of vases and other objects of gold and silver, of precious stones, and coins of the fifteenth century.

The death of Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, occurred April 19th, in London. He had rallied to a considerable degree from the worst features of his disease, but a relapse occurred on Monday, and he gradually sank into a state of coma, from which he had only a few intervals of sensibility, and died peacefully about five o'clock the next morning. By his death one of the most remarkable men of this century is removed from the world of politics. He was born in a comparatively obscure position in 1805; his father was a Jew of the noble governing line of the Sephardin, and the boy was admitted into the covenant of Abraham on the eight day from his birth, according to the Jewish law. He died the leader of the most exclusive of British parties—a party remarkable for its reverence for aristocratic birth and territorial possessions—the premier of Great Britain, and the trusted friend and adviser of the Queen. Such a career as Lord Beaconsfield's has few parallels in history, and is full of interest.

An Italian writer on the recent catastrophe on the island of Ischia mentions those prognostics of an earthquake which are derived from animals. They were observed in every place where the shocks were such as to be generally perceptible. Some minutes before they were felt, the oxen and cows began to bellow, the sheep and goats bleated, and rushing in confusion one on the other, tried to break the wicker work of the folds; the dogs howled terribly, the geese and fowl were alarmed, and made much noise; the horses which were fastened in their stalls were greatly agitated, leaped up and tried to break the halters with which they were attached to the mangers; those which were proceeding on the roads suddenly stopped, and snorted in a very strange way. The cats were frightened, and tried to conceal themselves, or their hair bristled up wildly. Rabbits and moles were seen to leave their holes; birds rose, as if scared, from the places on which they had alighted; and fish left the bottom of the sea and approached the shores, where at some places great numbers were taken. Even ants and reptiles abandoned, in clear daylight, their subterranean holes in great disorder, many hours before the shocks were felt. Some dogs, a few minutes before the first shock took place, awoke their sleeping masters by barking and pulling them, as if they wished to warn them of the impending danger, and several persons were thus enabled to save themselves.

Dr. Lenz, in a recent lecture at Paris on his journey from Morocco to Timbuctoo, has been correcting some of the generally received notions as to the condition of the Sahara. It really forms a great plateau, about 1,100 feet above the level of the Atlantic. In no part of this plateau is their to be found that depression below the level of the ocean which is shown on the maps of certain geographers, and which has led to wild schemes of converting the Sahara into a great inland sea. Moreover, the Sahara is not one dead sandy level, but is really greatly varied in its aspect. Rocks are succeeded by sandy plains, here and there are oases covered with alfa grass, and stagnant shallow sheets of water. The fresh water fossils, which are met with in many parts, show that the Sahara is not the bottom of a dried up sea. Again, the temperature is not nearly so hot as might be expected. In short, the Sahara is not so bad as it has been called; wild beasts are rare, and the most formidable enemies to be met with are the Touareg tribes, who, according to report, recently massacred the French Trans-Saharan Expedition. As to Timbuctoo, Dr. Lenz found he had to traverse a great space covered with ruins before he could reach the inhabited part. There are now only 20,000 inhabitants, but many schools and rich libraries.

Sententious.

It is the peculiar business of "Faith" to see in the dark.

A religion without an atonement, may be a religion of humanity, but it is not a religion for humanity.

Would you understand the Bible? Then like Hezekiah take the letter before the Lord.

The design of the gospel is to make us of good cheer. This world indeed is a vale of tears, but the Man of Sorrows visited it to turn it into a mount of rejoicing.

I said it in the mountain path,
I say it on the mountain stairs,—
The best things any mortal hath
Are those which every mortal shares.

The grass is softer to my tread,
For rest it yields unnumbered feet,
Sweeter to me the wild rose red,
Because it makes me whose world sweet.
—Lucy Larcom.

The trial is father to the triumph, and the song owes its paternity to the sigh. He who loves and trusts God can count his distresses and his deliverances at the same time, for the number of the one is the number of the other.

CORRECTION.

In our paper of April 20, it was stated in a brevity, which at first appeared in a leading Journal of the day, that the body of Adoniram Judson was carried out through the door of a house now occupied by an aged sister of this celebrated missionary, and that this door had never since been opened. Now the truth is, that Adoniram Judson died on a voyage from Maulmain to the Isle of Bourbon, and was buried in the Ocean. His death took place April 12, 1850. We will be careful in the future not to let an error so palpable as this find a place in THE RESTITUTION.

THE PROPOSED REPLY TO R. G. INGERSOLL'S LECTURES.

Editor Restitution:

I am glad to state for the information of the brethren, and other friends of truth, especially of those of them who have contributed of their means for the purpose, that I have received enough money to justify me in putting to press my Reply to Ingersoll's lectures, at least for the first edition, and that the manuscript is now in the hands of the printers in New York, who engage that it shall be ready some time in the month of May.

It is true the subsequent addition of a chapter on "The Morals of Atheism, and Mr. Ingersoll's sympathy with the Nihilists," and one on the "Bible Doctrine of Life, Death, and Immortality," written since the publisher's last estimate of cost of pamphlet electrotyped (about $175) was made, will make the cost now somewhat higher, but as the receipts all told up to this date (April 28) amount to $240.50, and some other amounts daily coming in, will make the sum somewhat more than the present receipts. I do but "walk in faith" in believing that he whose eyes are, according to his servant David, "always on the truth," will, through his people, supply all the necessary means to meet the emergency.

I accept this gratifying result as especially due to the Divine blessing from him who, through our Divine and loving Mediator, has put it into the hearts of his servants to come up to the help of the truth against the mighty host who dare to oppose it. May he condescend to accept our humble services, and make the offering tributary to confirming the faith of his people and opening the eyes of the ignorant and blind, that they may glorify his truth and bless his holy name.

Gratefully submitted,

ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

P.S.—I have I believe, sent receipts to ALL contributors, and kept an account of all names, P. O. address, and amounts received. If any have been accidentally omitted, I hope such will notify me.

A. B. M.

Editor Restitution:

THE RESTITUTION of April 27, is just at hand, and is as usual full of good things. I write this to endorse most fully Brother H. V. Reed's excellent article on your fourth page, on "Baptizing in the name." It is sound and incontrovertible, and has long been my opinion. The triune God, triune or "trine" immersion, and triune name to be baptized into, with many other triplet tables, fall together.

The article giving Brother and Sister Bond's experience for a half century calls to my mind many incidents which allies my experiences to theirs in the days of yore. Sister Bond was one of the most honest, consistent and lovable of her sex—a bright star in the firmament of humanity. Brother Bond is a firm friend, tried and true. He is prolific in experience, sound in faith, and true of heart. It is with much pleasure I read his practical articles.

Yours, etc.

THOMAS G. NEWMAN.

DIED.

On Oct 30, 1881, our beloved brother, THOMAS JEFFERSON HOSKINS, of Amelia county, Va., in his 75th year—"in a good old age, an old man, and full of years."

For a great part of his life he had been a firm and consistent believer of the gospel of the kingdom, exemplifying his faith by his works. His intense suffering for months before his death were endured with unmurmuring patience and resignation; and so he came to his grave "like as a shock of corn cometh in his season."

May the influence of his good example be long and deeply felt by those who knew him, and may "the God of all comfort" console the bereaved family with the cheering hope of a happy reunion "at the resurrection of the just."

WILEY JONES.

--- MAN ---

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE,

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 26, inst, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 12 for 50c., or 40 for $1.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Poetry.

FAITH AND WORKS.

DAVID LAWSON.

You see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only.—James.

Two gentlemen once in a ferry-boat
Contended with each other like two Turks.
One said that men are saved by faith alone,
And one that men were saved by naught but works.

At length the ferry man supposed that he Might also in the matter dip his oar;
And, "Gentlemen," respectfully he said,
"I'm really much afraid you both are wrong."

"See to this left hand oar we'll call it works,
And here this right hand one we'll call it faith;
Now let us use of either of the two Alone, will make the boat skim it path."

And use the right hand oar he steadily pulled,
And to tell the best word splendor on the skies:
As steadily then the left hand oar he pulled
Which cost not splendor to the other side.

"You see," he said, "that neither faith or the
Nor works alone will move the boat ahead:
Now both together I will try, and see
If that will give her any better speed."

So both the oars he pulled, and soon the boat
Was safely landed at her destined port.
My story's told—and he that hath an ear
To hear it let him hear and fear.

Because you know 'tis written in the book
Whose sacred words were spoken by the Lord,
"To that man," saith Jehovah, "will I look
Who, poor and contrite, trembles at my word."

Newburgh on Tay, Scotland.

Communications.

OUR FAITH AND HOPE.

A Sermon.

BY H. V. REED.

[The following sermon was preached by Brother H. V. Reed, at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881, at a memorial service of The Church of God, in honor of Brother Justus R. Dull; and was reported verbatim by Brother Samuel Wilson.]

As appropriate for our evening service, we will read 2 Tim. iv. 6-8. "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

The topic that we wish to speak upon to-night is embodied in the sentiments that are here uttered by the apostle, and they appropriately apply to the subject matter of the faith entertained, cherished, and fully held, by our brother who has passed underneath the dark wave of death; and in view of the fact that the sentiments believed by him in the hour of death are so generally misunderstood, it is only proper that we may be enabled, as surviving friends and brethren, to utter the same faith to the living that he entertained when dying.

Two weeks ago to-day he uttered the words of our text as expressive of his faith and hope, and his closing feelings and sentiments bearing upon the great question of human destiny.

Like many others in our times, our brother, in his younger manhood entertained sentiments in regard to matters of religion such as are entertained by the mass of the Christian world at our time; but a change of views came over his mind in consequence of a close study of the word, some nineteen years ago. At that time it was very precarious, in any of the religious bodies of this city, to entertain sentiments contrary to the creeds or accepted doctrines of the society; but with a spirit of independence, and from a love of truth, he consistently followed the leading of those convictions, which, of course, caused his separation from those with whom he had lived in Christian communion.

All of us have experienced similar trials, not because we wished separation, but because the Scriptures of Truth required of us a plain and distinct avowal of our faith in the teachings of the word of God, even though it might bring upon us the charge of heresy.

Such has been the history of Truth all through the ages. It has been sifted and tried in the crucibles of men; and those who have dared speak in its defence have passed through all the ordeals of persecution and martyrdom that bigotry and superstition could invent. Yet, truth, pure and simple, though crushed to earth has risen again, and lived and flourished here and there, even as the beautiful flower which, in the heat and exposure of the desert fades and is forgotten, again springs up, and gives forth fragrance, along the rivulets of time. But sometime these gems of truth will all be grouped in one beautiful picture, amid the blessings and beauties of the Paradise of God.

I do not wish to take up any matters of personal investigation to-night, but will analyze the various Scriptures that sustain this declaration of faith, and thus demonstrate upon what a true foundation our brother built his hopes.

Nothing can be more precious to you or to me than to feel this great assurance of faith in the closing hours of life, when our pilgrimage has reached its finale, when we have passed its temptations and trials, and the many battles of life, in which we have striven to overcome.

When night is gathering around us, and our feet are all set to step forth into the dark valley, it is sweet and precious to entertain a faith that can blaze as a light in the darkness, and show us the beauties of a life beyond the grave. We sing with fondness the last words of those who go before us into the state of death, for then it is that the true sentiments of the heart are uttered.

The last words of David were: "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God. And he shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain." Evidently looking forward to the glorious coming of the Master, when the times of restitution and millennial glory should be here.

We find in connection with this thought that, when Jesus himself was on the cross, as given in our present version, the last words spoken by him were: "It is finished," and he bowed his head and died. I have done thy will. I have done the work thou gavest me to do." The great work of redemption on the other side of the grave was completed. But, if we look upon the picture as completed at that point, it is the darkest scene in the world's history. If we follow Christ to the tomb, and leave him resting there, there is little indeed to brighten our path through life. But on the third day the scene changes; and when the sun blazes down upon the garden wherein was the sepulchre, it revealed an empty tomb. It no longer held the lifeless form of our Lord. "He has risen," said the angel, "behold the place where the Lord lay."

The last words of Paul I have read to you to-night. He stands a prisoner at Rome, with a Roman soldier standing guard over him, and looking over his shoulder as he pens the lines that fall from his pen. Well could Jesus say in coming from the garden: "Be of good cheer! I have overcome the world," and here is the victory over your faith.

And so Paul, after following his Master so many years could truthfully say that he had overcome. He was just ready to be offered as another sacrifice for the truth of the gospel. The decree had gone forth for him to be put to death; and he had been pointed out over and over again as the victim; and here, his last words are given in a letter to his friend, and in them he gives the story of his work for Christ, and his great faith in the future reward.

Now let us look at the last words or closing thoughts of the Bible itself. Did you ever contrast the closing words of the Old Testament with the opening thoughts of the New, as given in the beginning of the Sermon on the Mount?

"Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse," are the last words of the last book of the Old Testament; while in the New, the first word the Savior speaks in his wondrous sermon is "Blessed!"

The last word under the law was a curse, the first word under the new dispensation was a blessing. One door closes upon its rusty hinges with a curse, the other opens on its hinges of promise with the beautiful word—"Blessed!"

Then, when the scene changes again, and the last of the apostles is upon Patmos, he gives the last vision, which closes with this promise—"He that testifieth these things saith: Surely I come quickly. Amen! Even so, come Lord Jesus."

Here, then, are the closing words of the Bible all culminating to this point of Paul's own faith; and when he was offered as a sacrifice it was on account of his faith.

But coming back again to our text: "The time of my departure is at hand; I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." The faith has been the keepsake of the Church, left to be cherished by all true believers.

Jesus says, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you;" and in the parable of the talents he is represented as a nobleman going to a far country to receive a kingdom and to return. All that was left was the Faith, which was to be kept by the church through all ages until his return. When he made that declaration he was going toward Jerusalem, and they believed the kingdom was to appear. The populace gave out many demonstrations, crying, "Hosanna! Blessed be the kingdom of our father David coming in the name of our Lord!"

It was a time of great popular enthusiasm, and the whole nation seemed to have awakened to a consciousness that this was indeed the Christ, who had quickened Lazarus and others, had walked upon the wild waves of the sea as though they were marble; had driven diseases away, and restored men to their right minds; caused the lame to leap, the blind to see, and the dumb to speak; and had taught in their midst those beautiful lessons of love and good will that lifted them above the sordid selfishness of life, and taught them the universal brotherhood of mankind, and exalted men to a higher and nobler destiny.

All this had been done by him, and when he himself, with all these wonderful things conveyed into one picture appears, it is no wonder that in their enthusiasm they shouted, "Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest."

But he spoke to them a parable about going into a far country to receive a kingdom and then to return, and told them to occupy until he should come.

Turn to the 3d of Revelations and read his words to the Church at Philadelphia: "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the face of the earth."

What a preciousness there is in the sweet promise that, if we will keep the word of his patience, keep the word of his promise, and be loyal to him and the principles of truth that he has taught, he will keep us from the hour of trial and judgment, when the skies shall be darkened, and the terrible judgment scenes shall sweep over the earth. Then in the world you shall have tribulation but in me you shall have peace.

So Paul could write over eighteen hundred years ago that he had fought a good fight, had finished his course and kept the faith. His life's work was completed, and he left nothing undone. For thirty-two years he had labored, and struggled with all the elements of Church power, with heathen courts and potentates, and heathen superstition and prejudice; and the one great mission of his life was to preach the kingdom of God.

At Ephesus he kneeled down and prayed with the little flock to whom he had brought the glad tidings of the kingdom, after telling them that they should see his face no more.

On his way to Rome as a martyr to the faith of Christ we hear him saying to the Philippian brethren: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." If you put me to death I will magnify Christ. I will be his martyr or his herald, will die for him, or preach the gospel. I will magnify Christ. He had indeed kept the faith! that faith which Christ had committed to his little church before his crucifixion and which he still found burning, brightly in their heart when he rose again from the dead.

He came forth again and walked among the golden lampstands with the seven stars in his hand and a countenance shining with the glory of the sun, announcing: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of hell and of death." I will unlock the dark tomb, and will speak to the sleeping brother, "Come forth!" and they will take away the grave clothes, and he will arise, glorious and immortal, to receive from the Savior that crown of life that fadeth not away, and can exclaim—"O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?"

Then the glad throng of immortals will arise with gleaming crowns and bright scepters, and in robes of purest white they will gather on the banks of the beautiful river, and join in the glad anthem of peace on earth and good will to men.

Let us look a little further at this testimony: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." His life's work is at an end, and is a matter of history. He cannot add to or diminish it in any particular, and as all his labors and struggles, victories and reverses, in the cause of the Master, pass before him in review he sums them up in those words that tell that his work was well done; and with the full assurance of bright hope he writes to a surviving one who was to bear the tidings to the churches which they had visited together, Go back to the church at Jerusalem with the message, "Paul is dead." Timothy bears the letter to the churches, and what strength and consolation it must have brought to them as they read these closing words — "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing."

Here are no fears, no doubts! This battle of life has won a crown for that brave warrior. This sacrifice for Christ has won as a reward a crown of righteousness. This struggle to overcome has resulted in a glorious victory; and on the other side of the grave, when gloom and tears and Old Mortality himself shall be no more; when the dying world shall be blessed with new life; when griefs and heartaches, and all that gives pain shall end, when the fitful fever is over; when war's dread clarion, and the drum which calls together the hosts of earth for bloody strife shall be hushed, and when earth shall no more groan beneath the rod of the oppressor, then it is that a crown of righteousness shall gleam in brightness upon the brow of this noble Knight of Christ.

How great the contrast! How mighty the change! "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." As though the Lord was holding it in reserve, as a precious prize for the crowning of Paul. He did not expect it then, neither did he expect at death to go into the presence of the Lord to receive it; but he did expect his reward when his Lord should come again—"Shall give me at that day" are his words. What day? He answers the question—"And not to me only but to all them also that love his appearing."

Here then we see that the crown comes when the Lord comes; when the resurrection comes; when the kingdom is here; when the heartaches of humanity shall end; when he shall speak peace to our world, and have dominion from sea to sea; when all nations shall be blessed in him; when the saints shall arise in glory as co-partners in the blessed reign of millennial joys. Then it was that Paul expected his crown; and it was then that Peter expected his, for he says: "For when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown that fadeth not away."

There is a deeper thought still in the text—that of loving his appearing. There are people, even professing Christians, who do not care to hear about his coming. Why? Don't you trust him as your Savior? Yes! Don't you concentrate all your hope in him? Yes! Don't you look to him for the means of redemption? Yes! Don't you trust him as your elder brother, and the only one who could redeem you? Yes! Then why reject his coming?

The church has listened so long to the idea that it is to accomplish the conversion of the world without him that it has ceased to look for the Lord. But, instead, the world has converted the church, which is conforming itself every year, more and more to worldly customs. The world has fashions: so has the church. The world offers amusements and attractions for lovers of pleasure; so does the church. So by styles and fashions, pomp and pride, luxury and vanity, and many other worldly peculiarities the church shows that it has ceased to look for or desire the coming of the lowly Nazarene. Well might our Lord say, "Nevertheless when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" "And as it was in the days of Noe so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the days that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all."

Then it becomes true believers to entertain the hope of Paul, and stand in a position of loving his appearing, and like that of John whose last recorded words are — "Come, Lord Jesus."

What would you think of a wife who received a letter from her absent husband announcing his expected return, if she should spurn the news, and treat it with contempt? Would it not strike you that she did not love her absent husband?

Then, what shall we say of the church, the bride of Christ, which, in spite of his repeated messages that he would return again, and exhortations to be watching and always ready to meet him, has spurned the news, and by every word and action shows that she does not expect or desire his return? Are we not forced to the conclusion that the church has ceased to "love his appearing?"

According to the words of Paul, the Lord is to bring a crown of righteousness not only to him, but all those who love his appearing are to share in the honor. If you no longer love his appearing can you expect the crown? Must not there be some reason in your heart that will in some way alienate you from Christ? No innocent man is afraid of the sheriff. No pure man is afraid to meet any of the great issues of life. No faithful wife would dread the return of a loving husband. It is the rogue who dreads to meet the stern realities of justice. It is the sinful man who is afraid to stand before his God. It is the faithless wife who prefers her husband's absence to his presence.

It is declared by John that "perfect love casteth out fear," so, if we love our Lord, we will not fear him, but will love his appearing. What is there in life to compare with this precious hope and trust, that enabled Paul to speak in such earnest words of the future, and which led our brother to say in giving his testimony to his friends: —"These words are so precious to me, I must say that I love the appearing of my Lord, my hope is in him; my hope of a future life, my hope of immortality, my hope of a crown; all that is of value to me in the future is bound up in the one idea and hope that Jesus is coming again."

Well might the world cry out for his return in view of the evils with which its people are cursed, in the long continued struggle with sin.

The earth has been made rough with the bodies of the slain upon the battle fields, and seas have been made red with the blood of myriads. In all lands deceit and violence hold sway, and the humble and feeble are trodden under foot by the rich and proud: while from the caverns beneath earth itself has been rocked in revolutions. Yet through all ages, and amid all trials, the voice of a faithful few has been raised in prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth, even as it is done in heaven." That prayer will be answered. Though it waiteth long it will be answered; and the kingdom will come, when our Lord returns.

All through the ages the faithful waiting ones have fallen by the way, and been laid at rest. Some are on the embrace of old ocean, or lying along its rough shores, some sleep in the valley, and others on the hillside. They are quietly resting until that day when the voice of the archangel shall arouse them from their slumbers; then they will come forth clothed with immortality, ready for the grand gathering of the multitude of those who are victorious over death. Paul will be there to receive from the hand of the Lord, the righteous Judge, that crown of righteousness. The redeemed out of every nation, and people, and kindred, and tongue will be gathered together at that glorious marriage festival, when the Lamb of God receives his bride; and our brother who has so lately fallen asleep will be there as one of the glad throng, and will share the affinities of a new world where angels shall be with men, and men shall be as angels. O, glorious day of heavenly rest, soon may it come! Then our earth, which is now so beautiful, shall be made as the garden of Eden, and be no longer desolated by storms and rocked by earthquakes. The roar of cannon and rattle of musketry, and clashing of warlike hosts in bitter strife will not be heard in that millennial day. Tears and heartaches will be no more and the voice of weeping will be hushed forever by our dear Lord, when he shall come and prove the truth of his words to the weeping Mary who said "Lord if thou hadst been here our brother had not died," and he replied "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth on me though he were dead yet shall he live: and he that liveth and believeth on me shall never die." May we to-night, with these hopes set before us, and the words of promise burning into our hearts, be reconciled to God by the life of his Son, call him our Brother, our Redeemer, and Emancipator, who is to bring to us the crown, and usher in the kingdom of God with all its possibilities and glories. May it be yours and mine when called to rest after the conflicts of life are over, to be able to say with the Apostle "I have fought a good fight I have finished my course I have kept the faith—henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." "Then shall he say to those on his right hand, come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

May that be yours and mine, through Christ who hath loved us. Amen.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. Stephenson.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 12 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885.

—By M. L. Knapp, D. D.— and others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 24 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. Eychaner.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 2c., 15 for 25c., or $1 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. These having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881.

—By H. V. Reed.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. VII. 9-17.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the manner whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send Orders to

SAMUEL THORN,
[illegible] N. 21st St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by
THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE TRACTS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by BLOOD Baptists, in 1000. 3. Inconsistencies. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 25c., or assorted packages of 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 20c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.
The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof texts.
Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, both: the Theological and Bible use.
Human Government a Failure. By A. S. Maxwell.
Resurrection. Austin Cuttle. A careful explanation of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"
Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.
What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.
The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Lalor.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or 25 for 40c.
Is it Essential to Believe in the Eternity of Jesus? D. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Rosser, of Scotland.
The Scriptures and Geology. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 25c for 5c.
Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.
Scriptural Definition of the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. R. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 15 for 50c, or $2 for $1.
The New Birth. Josiah Pelrce.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiler, D. D. set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Which is Higher? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each; 15 for 25c. or 25 for $1.
Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 12 for $1.
Evangelium concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.
The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 96 pages, price 10c.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxix. 64 pages, price 10c.
Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 50 pages, price 10c.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned Pedobaptists, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 20c.
Bible Triumphant. Rev. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.
Discussion on the State of the Dead, between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 62c., paper 40c.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 220 pages, cloth $1.25.
The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 176 pages, cloth 75c, paper 50c.
Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.50.
God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are fully and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By Wiley Jones.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 328 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.25, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

—THE—

QUESTION BOOK.

The Question Book is now ready, and may be had of the writer, at 10c. a copy. Postage stamps taken for amounts under $1. Its full title is "Early Lessons, or Matters and Admonition arranged in the form of Questions and Answers." One of the brethren in New York, ready to add a good name, has ordered 300 copies; another, in Baltimore, writes, "Our little church desires me to say that we will take two dozen of the Question Books. . . . I am truly glad that such a suggestion was made by that good sister, for it is just what our children need, and many of us older ones also, for most of us are children, only of a larger growth."

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—REVISED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By Benjamin Wilson.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word for word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there correctly translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 864 pages, cloth $14.00, Library binding $15.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Poetry.

HOPE.

J. P. GELLETLY.

Which we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth to that within the vail.—Heb. vi. 19.

My soul's embarked on life's tempestuous sea,
I hear the roar
Of breakers as they beat destruction's shore,
Awaiting me.

The cloudy darkness deepens into night,
And the bright sheen
Of starry prospects now no more are seen,
To shed its light.

Fear, passion, doubt, the treacherous friend, the foe,
Strike hard my bark,
That bolts on their verge in the dark,
Rocked to and fro.

Midst deepening shadows I'll no longer grope
My destin- way,
I cast beneath the billows as they sway
The anchor Hope.

And while the roaring elements fierce fight
With clamorous sound,
Deep will I cast it deep grappled in the ground,
Waiting the light.

Oh, God! on whose vast bosom I lay hold,
Hear thou my prayer,
And give me patient fortitude to bear
Life's watery cold.

And in the fury of the mantled night,
While tempests roll,
Strengthen the cords that bind my wavering soul
To thy firm might.

Communications.

NATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF THE ABRAHAMIC COVENANT.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Before entering upon the investigation of this subject I will answer a question propounded by a correspondent of THE RESTITUTION. He wishes to know the difference between the throne of God and the throne of Christ. Rev. iii. 21. To be an objection to my position, which evidently called out this question, it should be stated thus: —If setting with Christ on his throne involves reigning with him, why does not sitting with the Father on his throne involve reigning with him. I would answer that neither of these declarations necessarily involves reigning at all. Suppose Queen Victoria should permit the Prince of Wales to sit with her on her throne as a special favor, would we therefore understand that he had ceased to be a prince, and had become an associate ruler with his queenly mother. Surely more evidence is needed than this promise that Christ is sitting upon his Father's throne to prove that he is reigning jointly with his Father in heaven. It is at best only an inference without one thus saith the Lord, to sustain it and with all the plain statements and analogies of the Bible against it. Christians are not dependent upon an inference for evidence that they will be kings and reign with Christ. Please notice the following references to-wit: 2 Tim. ii. 12, Rev. xx. 4-6; Christ is not a king but a prince. Acts v. 31; Rev. i. 5. Is he a prince and king at the same time? His mission as a priest is clearly described. Heb. viii. 1-6.

In the next to the last text referred to his work is that of a Savior to give repentance and remission of sins. His position relative to the active work of reigning is a passive, waiting position, until his Father shall have made his foes his footstool. His Father is the active reigning power in heaven, and the Son will be the active reigning power on earth. He did not as proven in my article, go to heaven to reign there, but to receive kingly authority (Whiting), and return to exercise that authority in the place from which he had gone away. The simile of the Roman nobleman teaches this, or it teaches nothing. For Christ to reign as king with authority in heaven would destroy all the existing analogy between the simile referred to by Christ, and that which he designed to represent by it. The only throne promised Christ, or looked up in the covenants of promise, is the throne of David. David never had nor will have a throne in heaven. David's throne is called God's throne, but God's throne is never called David's throne. The only locality associated with Christ's throne or kingdom is earth. The position that Christ is a de facto king and reigning in heaven, is environed with insuperable difficulties. But the position of one throne, one kingdom and one territory is sustained by the whole Bible.

The Abrahamic covenant may be divided into two departments, one embracing the rulers and the other the ruled, or the kings and the subjects. Paul clearly discriminates between these two seeds of Abraham. "Now, (says he,) to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." Gal. iii. 16. The apostle evidently refers to the language of God recorded in Gen. xxii. 16-18 "And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven a second time. And said, by myself have I sworn saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore, and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." In contrast with a seed as numerous as the stars and sands is a unit seed represented by the singular pronoun his qualifying enemies, who, recognizing in this unit royal seed the world's conqueror, will throw wide gateways to the citadels of the world, that earth's mightiest hero, may rule in righteousness, and with his kingly cohorts bless all the nations of earth. Paul in his letter to the church at Galatia associates with Christ, whom he declares to be the unit seed in contrast with the multitudinous seed, all Christians as belonging to Abraham's family also. Gal. iii. 29. In this individual arrangement there is but one seed, and that relates to character and not lineal descent as it does with the national department of the Abrahamic covenant. This seed embraces all who belong to Christ whether they be Jew or Gentile. Thus, he says, "There is neither Jew nor Greek (Gentile) . . . for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 29. We find the record of the individual department of the Abrahamic covenant in Gen. xviii. 1-8.

To this covenant was added a national covenant 430 years after this covenant was made. Gal. iii. 17. See iv. 13. This covenant was made with the twelve tribes of Israel or the multitudinous seed of Abraham. This covenant was to continue throughout their generations. It is called by Paul the old covenant, in contrast with the same covenant when it shall be restored to Israel as a nation under the new and perpetual order of things, as we shall soon see. Paul writing to his Hebrew brethren after the old covenant had about accomplished its mission and six years before it passed away, said "In that he saith a new covenant he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." Heb. viii. 13. Both the old and new covenants relate to the twelve tribes of Israel as a nation or an organized kingdom, and not to the individual, but the multitudinous seed in contrast with the unit seed of Abraham. In confirmation of this position Paul quotes the language of Jeremiah the prophet, saying, "Behold the days come saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts, and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." Heb. viii. 8-12. 1. Wherever Israel and Judah are spoken of it is literal national Israel. Israel as a divided kingdom certainly will not be spiritualized. If Israel represents the church who does Judah represent? 2. These are the children of the same Israel and Judah whose fathers God brought out of the land of Egypt. How can this be affirmed of any except the literal descendants of Jacob. The context of the text quoted by Paul shows conclusively that literal Israel as a nation was referred to by the apostle. God says "Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from all coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child, and her that travaileth with child—a great company shall return thither." Jer. xxxi. 8. 1 No one will think of spiritualizing these terms expressive of literal Israel. It must therefore relate to literal Israel. 2. The descendants of Ephraim had not been dispersed among all nations when they returned from Babylon, as they must have been thus dispersed to return from all the coasts of earth as they will when the foregoing prophecy shall be fulfilled. Again Jehovah says in the context immediately following the last verse quoted by Paul relative to the subjects of the new covenant in Heb. viii 8-13, "Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar: the Lord of hosts is his name: If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me forever. Thus saith the Lord, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord. Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner. And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about Goath. And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook Kidron, unto the corner of the horse gate toward the east, shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up nor thrown down any more forever." Jer. xxxi. 35 ft. 1. Here all the ordinances of sun, moon, and stars, and day and night, depart, or be dissolved ere the literal Israel cease to be a nation before God forever, or to be an eternal nation before God. Israel ceased to be a nation eighteen hundred years ago, and has not been a nation since that period, therefore Israel must be restored to its former nationality never to be overthrown or destroyed again. The ordinances of heaven and earth roll on in one unbroken succession; therefore God stands pledged to restore the nationality of Israel, that it shall not have ceased to be a nation before him forever." That this will be the same literal Israel which was once a nation before, that is evident from the fact that it ceased to be a nation, a thing it could not have done, had it not been a nation. For this reason this prophecy cannot be applied to the church. The church never has or will cease, to be restored.

Israel has ceased to be a nation since its return from Babylon, therefore this eternal nation cannot refer to the restoration of Israel from Babylonian captivity. This prediction never having been fulfilled in the past its fulfillment therefore must be yet future. The new covenant is to be made with Israel when thus restored to its former nationality; therefore the making, or ratification of the new, first with literal Israel, and second in the yet future. 3. The capital of this eternal nation or kingdom is to be the same city on the same site upon which was located the ancient capital of the same nation. It would be hard to spiritualize such terms defining the boundaries of Jerusalem under the new covenant as the "tower of Hananeel, gate of the corner, upon the hill Gareb, shall compass about to Goath; and the whole valley of dead bodies, the ashes of all the fields unto the brook Kidron, the corner of the horse gate toward the east.' When such terms as these can be spiritualized, it will then be time to spiritualize Israel, their capital, or the new covenant with them, as an eternal nation, having an eternal capital as we shall see under the last heading. 4. Jerusalem having been restored, or built upon its ancient site, "it shall not be plucked up nor thrown down any more forever." From which we may deduce the following irresistible conclusions. 1. To say that it "shall not be plucked up nor thrown down any more" demonstrates that it is the same city restored that had existed previously to having been plucked up and thrown down. 2. That having been restored it will stand forever as the capital of the kingdom of Israel restored, which according to the foregoing shall not cease to be a nation before God forever." When thus organized into an eternal nation the "new covenant" to be made with "Judah and Israel" or with "the house of Israel" will be the new constitution of that consolidated nation after having been divided for ages, never to be separated, plucked up or expatriated from their fatherland. Then will the Lord God have given to David's royal seed the "throne of his father Jacob, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Amen.

(To be Continued.)

Selections.

N. Y. Sun.

AN INTERESTING PART OF EGYPT.

The Remains of Lake Moris and the Famous Labyrinth—A New Field for Travellers.

FAYOUM, March 28.—I have been residing for three weeks in this oasis, which lies about seventy miles to the southwest of Cairo. As it is a part of the country not often visited by travellers, and is unique in its character and full of historical traditions and associations, a short account of it may be of interest to your readers.

The Fayoum is a most luxurious and fertile district, surrounded by desert. It measures about twenty-three miles, running north and south, and twenty-eight miles east and west. It lies twenty miles to the west of the Nile valley, from which it is separated by a low range of the sandy Libyan hills. On its extreme western margin there is a large lake of brackish water, thirty-five miles long by seven wide, called the Birket el Kerun, beyond which is the unexplored vast of the Sahara.

The remarkable feature of this lake is that the level of its waters is seventy feet below that of the Mediterranean, thus in some respects resembling the Dead Sea. The most elevated portion of the cultivated district of the Fayoum is 200 feet above the lake. The consequence is that it is the only part of Egypt where there are beautiful streams, picturesque waterfalls, wooded gorges, lakes embowered in trees, and scenic features which one does not associate with the narrow valley and flat delta of the Nile, that compose the Egypt of our imaginations.

The signification of the word Fioum in ancient Egyptian is marsh, and in extreme antiquity this was probably an accurate definition of this region. It was reclaimed, according to hieroglyphic records, by King Phiops, B. C. 3000, but its celebrity dates from a later period, when a certain Amenhotep the Third, B. C. 2200, constructed the artificial Lake Moeris, and built on its margin the far-famed Labyrinth, which was numbered by the ancients among the seven wonders of the world. I visited what remains of this marvelous structure, which consisted, according to Herodotus, of twelve courts and 3,000 sets of chambers, 1,500 above ground, and 1,500 beneath them again underground. They did not open one into the other, but were entered from winding corridors, which it was not possible to traverse without a guide. Situated on the confines of upper and lower Egypt, the Labyrinth was an assemblage of courts where the grand councils of the nation were held, where the most sacred religious rites were celebrated and from which as a central point the whole administration of the country was carried on. It is difficult to realize from a contemplation of its present remains its former grandeur and magnificence. Placed at the edge of the desert, the chambers have long since been covered with sand, and here and there a fragment of a papyrus column, some carved blocks of granite, a collection of upper chambers of which the roof, being crude brick walls alone remain, nothing is left to indicate its ancient splendor.

At its northern extremity there is a pyramid of crude brick about 150 feet high, from which a magnificent view is obtained over the whole oasis. The special interest which attaches to this structure lies in the fact that it is the oldest existing monument of the kind in Egypt, having been erected by King Semempses, whose tomb it is, about 400 years before the pyramid of Ghizeh. The probability is that excavations here on a large scale would reveal a buried necropolis, such as has been discovered at Sakkara, besides the plan and chambers of the Labyrinth itself.

But neither the pyramid nor the Labyrinth is so wonderful as the traces which still exist to indicate the limits of the ancient lake Moris, which formed a reservoir by which the irrigation of the whole province could be regulated. This lake was constructed by King Amenhotep, who led into it the waters of the Bahr Yussef, an affluent of the Nile, which leaves that river near Siout, and after a course of 200 miles, is conducted through a depression of the Libyan chain into the Fayoum. The bed of lake Moris is now a vast fertile plain, covered with groves of date trees and with fields of beans and cereals, but in old time it measured sixty miles in circumference, was twenty feet in depth, and navigated by boats, which in those days could sail into the Fayoum from the Nile. Some idea of the stupendous character of the work may be formed from the fact that the artificial dyke which retained its waters must have been thirty miles long, and in places thirty feet high and a hundred and fifty feet thick. The lock gates at Illahoun, about eight miles distant, where there is a pyramid still existing, must have been upon a scale commensurate with the rest of the undertaking, for we are informed by Diodorus that it cost fifty talents, or about $55,000, every time they were opened. This lake possessed a character of sanctity as well as of utility, for here was kept the sacred crocodile, which was an object of special worship to the inhabitants of the province, who, we are informed, fed it upon the choicest dainties, and even went so far as to adorn it with necklaces and earrings. Indeed, the district was called the Crocodilopolitan Nome from this circumstance.

Five miles distant from the Labyrinth and upon the opposite margin of the lake are the extensive mounds of the ancient city of Crocodilopolis-Arsinoe. I lived in the immediate neighborhood of this interesting locality, and was never tired of exploring the vast area of brickbats, potsherds, bones, and rags which cover the surface of the ground for several square miles. From beneath these huge mounds of debris I unearthed human bodies still wound in wrappers of impurity of to with skin tightly drawn over their skeletons, and their hair still remaining, and I exhumed many curious records of the past, an old bronze, a piece of a fishing net, fragments of glass bottles, and of many colored glazed pottery, besides picking up numerous coins, those of the latter older, however, than the Ptolemaic period.

The town of Medinet el Fayoum, the modern capital of the province, and containing about 9,000 inhabitants, is situated near these ruins. It is a good specimen of a wild country town, untouched as yet by civilization, with its narrow, crooked bazaar and motley population of Fellahin, Copts and Bedouin Arabs. This is intersected by the Bahr Yussef or River of Joseph, called after the son of Jacob, for the popular tradition erroneously has it that he it was who led the Bahr Yussef into this district during the year of famine, and that to him the great fertility of the province is due. Just outside the town the river is dammed and divided into several canals, which are again subdivided, thus carrying the water all through the country. Owing to the slope of the land it is irrigated by means of undershot water wheels made of date fibre, and which keep up a constant mournful creaking as they revolve and upset their earthen buckets full of water into the trough provided for it. At many of the villages the water is dammed into small lakes, from which it issues in waterfalls, thus forming a picturesque feature in the landscape. Indeed, the Fayoum may well be called the garden of Egypt. Nowhere are the groves of olives and oranges so flourishing and abundant. Every village is surrounded by acres of figs, vines, apricots, melons, and other fruits, while the town lands are extensively cultivated with cotton and sugar cane. In former years one of its main industries was attar of roses, and the town of Medinet was surrounded by hundreds of acres of rose trees; unfortunately, about fifteen years ago they were attacked with a disease which proved fatal to this culture; and no attempt since to revive it has been successful.

The population of the oasis is about 150,000, and the cultivable land amounts to 250,000 acres, of which half is owned by the peasants and half by the Government. I visited the Birket el Kerun, on the opposite shores of which are some interesting and little known ruins. Those at Kasr Nimrud are especially worthy of notice, and consist of the remains of a temple approached by a street three-quarters of a mile long, which was once ornamented throughout its whole length with sculptured lions. At the southwestern extremity of the lake is the temple of Kasr Kerun, which is in a more perfect state of preservation.

The waters of the Birket el Kerun abound in fish, but the process of fishing is involved in much discomfort, as the native boats are open, cranky vessels, redolent of decayed fish, undecked, without mast or sail, and propelled by cumbrous oars. Owing to its depression below the level of the sea and the proximity of the scorching desert, the heat even in winter is often disagreeable, and the banks of the lake have a reputation for being feverish. The remains of numerous mounds prove, however, that in ancient times they were inhabited by a dense population. In places the soft soil has been cut through by the canals at periods of inundation, forming immense ravines with precipitous sides, in the beds of which are thickets, the favorite haunts of wild boar and other game. The one at Narlut, for instance, is about 700 feet wide and 100 feet in depth, and is a wild, picturesque spot of a character totally unlike anything to be found elsewhere in Egypt. Altogether, for scenery, climate, sport, archæological research, and general interest, there is no part of this country which offers greater attractions than this little-known province, and it is a matter of astonishment to me that its merits have not been the more highly appreciated as a place of resort by those who have "done" the Nile, and are in search of health or amusement in the East.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

My address is now Lamark, Ill. We are located here now.—Brethren please take notice. G. M. MYERS.

The Family Circle.

FORGET NOT TO PRAY.

E. R. WINCH.

Forget not to pray—in the hour
When [illegible]
How oft were [illegible]
At noon and [illegible]
Would have roused the slumberer
Who [illegible]
Pleading our [illegible]
In the keeping of the Lord.

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

New York Observer.

LOVING GOD.

[illegible] MINTON, D. D.

"I never can I know my God I think of Him as great and holy. I am grateful to Him for the many evil things I have [illegible] but all the while I feel that I do not love him; this troubles and distresses me."

So said a friend, while sitting by me and in the words expressed what is in the heart of very many truly Christian people. She was mistaken about herself, and like others, her fear of love mistaken, was failing to take the position of strength and comfort she might have had. I talked to her somewhat in this way:—Were I to ask almost any true wife, on some unexpected occasion, "Do you love your husband?" she would at once reply, "Of course." Yet were she to judge of her love by the feeling that she has on the instant, she would be compelled to say, "I do not." At the time of the question, and perhaps for hours before, she has had, in the midst of her employments, no special occasion even to think of him. He has been out of her mind, and of course she has had no feeling in reference to him at all.

But suppose that, while I am speaking, the roll of a carriage is heard to stop at the door and a messenger announces that her husband has met with a serious accident and has been brought home insensible. On the instant what a change comes over her spirit! All the love of her nature overflows in a tide of emotion. From that moment and onward, her whole being is given up to the one work of preserving his life and restoring his health. With what absorbed interest will she watch his face while he sleeps, how she will hold his hand, smooth his forehead while tears dim her eyes, fears lest of solicitude, but of affection that finds no other expression.

But you must remember that here is no new love awakened: it did not come into being when her husband was carried into the house. It was there, pure and deep as now. The occasion simply called the emotion out.

So a child away at school, with mind all intent on her studies, may be suddenly asked, "Do you love your father?" And judging by her feeling at the moment, she would answer, "I have no special love for him." But it may be an hour afterward some subtle association brings him before her—the days when she sat in his lap, when he was folding her in his arms and quietly kissing her forehead or smoothing her cheek;—all at once her bosom heaves, her eyes fill, and her heart goes out to him in unutterable affection. But that affection was there all the time. It only needed some hand, though unseen, to touch the chords and make them vibrate. The principle of love was there, but just then the emotion of love overflowed her heart!

Mere emotion is no criterion of affection. Some persons are more emotional than others. They always see things in brighter lights than their friends see them. You call them enthusiastic. They speak in superlatives. You are surprised to hear them tell of their thoughts and feelings about something that you heard or saw with them. Upon you it made a quiet impression and you would never have thought of expressing yourself strongly about it; but they go into ecstasies over it—it is "glorious," "they cannot tell how deeply it moved" them.

But you would be in error were you to suppose that these enthusiastic people were necessarily persons of deepest and most reliable affections. Often when the matter comes to a test they fall into the background. When patience and self-denial, care and sleepless labor are demanded, there comes forward some calmer, and, as the unthinking perhaps have said, some less affectionate one. Then the long days of seclusion, of abandonment of pleasure and ease, of assiduous labor, nights that are watchful and filled with gentle ministrations, tell how pure and how strong the love has been.

We must judge of love by what it does or is willing to do. So a wife, a child, a friend, judges and is judged: not by the emotions of special moments or by the results of a peculiar disposition, but by the principle that leads to work, to endurance, to self-denial. True affection shows itself by such things as these. The wife knows that she loves her husband, not by what she feels on the moment, but because she knows that before all others she has chosen him, that there is no interest of his that she would not sacrifice, no [illegible] denial that she would not endure for him. You must determine the character of your religious affections somewhat in the same way.

THE LAST TIME.

S. L. TAYLOR.

The last time I kiss my lips to the cold pale brow and [illegible] locks in parting [illegible] the last time. He went for away we never see again. We shall never meet until the Great Judgment Day."

A thousand times are these sad words on the lips of men and women. For the these words have such scenes occur. And so the last time comes, is not that its bitterness lingers long. You feel a solemn change. A strange pain [illegible] You whisper, "Never again." Bewildered and at times careless, you pass on your way. You greet from your best beloved for the last time. You kiss your dead for the last time. You gaze on some favorite scene for the last time. You listen to some sweet voice for the last time. You stand on some well-remembered, quiet spot where your dear departed one sat with you in the long, long ago for the last time. You recall at the birthdays of your childhood, your youth, for the last time. You have been young and fair and strong, for the last time. For the last time you have played with the merry thoughts of younger hours. You are growing old. Life has become serious. The fancies of youth have perished. The hopes of youth, it may be, have faded. Care sits heavy on your brow. You can give no new affection. You can charm no more. With a touch of pathos her soul for tears, you sigh, "Never again."

Time moves relentlessly onward. The set 30 years sink into the dim past, but the memory of them dies not. And as the end upon us looks the last things of this poor life, its last joys, its last opportunities. Birthdays come and go more and more swiftly. The strains of some enchanting music thrill you for the last time. You hear the warning voice of some faithful preacher for the last time. For the last time you go abroad under the summer sun to scent the flowers and hear the singing birds. For the last time you stand on the corner of the busy street, or on the sea shore, or on the green meadow, and sighing, look behind you across your trodden path. For the last time you will go to the house of worship, the scenes of prayer, the place of your business, the parlor of your kindred. Life's grown-up work that once animated your buoyant step is nearly done. The bygone years flit as mystic shadows in memory's halls. "Never again," rings through the corridors of the soul.

Now you begin to know the hidden bitterness of those two words. Your faculties fail; memory is at fault. Sight becomes dim. You have to be spoken to twice or thrice ere you can hear your friends. The last hour of mortal life comes. For all things beneath the sun there is a last time. In the strange sleep of death you close your eyes. The pillowed head, so still. The soft tread, and whispered words of kindred tell that all is over. Your obituary is in the papers; your name is in the marble. It is the last of earth. Never again.

But this is not the last. You will rise and stand before the Judge. It will be for the last time. The uttered sentence is his; the fixed destiny is yours. Never again shall come to you the gospel's music, the preacher's warning, the Spirit's wooing. It is done. As ye have sown so shall ye reap. In that Great Day, what will the harvest be? It may be that I shall never again warn you of your danger. It may be this is your last warning. It may be the winds of winter will wail, and the snows pile in cold, white symmetry over your lonely grave, or the flowers of summer may bloom above your silent bed. Solemn thought! Solemn hour! are you prepared for that last time? O judgment-bound man and woman, think of these things ere it be too late, and the last time of mercy's pleading comes never again.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DUTCOMB.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. K. MARSHALL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
M. STEPHENSON, R. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. EDMONDS,
WILEY JONES, C. M. MYERS,
A. D. MACRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 11, 1881. NO. 18.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR,
Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS!

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as Joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel preparatory, and insisting on a prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Second Trumpet. Scripture Narration. Rev. viii, 8, 9. Explanation of Terms. Symbolic Exposition. History of the Events. Application.

No. 67.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Second Trumpet.—And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea; and the third part of the sea became blood. And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed. Rev. viii. 8, 9.

Such is the scenery of John's vision. It is the vision of events following the sounding of the second angel's trumpet. They are seen through the "open door," under Christ's officiating priesthood. The angel is God's direct messenger, stationed at the head of the second prophetic era, to give notice by the sounding of his trumpet, of the arrival of the time for the commencement of the new series of events.

John's attention is directed to a remarkable phenomenon in the physical world—a "burning mountain," loosened from its fiery seat, was cast, by some invisible power, into the sea. The results of such a baptism are very readily understood: the sea boils like a caldron. The third part, one of the three divisions, of the sea becomes blood, as when Moses and Aaron, by the command of God, turned the waters of the Nile into blood. The act was of man; the power of Jehovah.

The waters become death waters. All life, in that division of the sea, expires; even the vessels, floating on the bosom of that sea of blood, take fire from the burning mountain, and are consumed. The agent, the action, and the results are before us; what do they represent?

1. The Mountain. — A mountain symbolizes in vision, a kingdom. The stone which smote the image, seen by Nebuchadnezzar, became a great mountain and filled the whole earth. This is explained to be the kingdom of the God of heaven. Dan. ii. 34, 44. In Zech. iv. 7, we have the following: "Who (art) thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel (thou shalt become) a plain." The mountain is the Babylonian power that held the Jews in bondage.

In Jer. li. 25, it is said: "Behold I (am) against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth; and I will stretch out my hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain."

The Great Kingdom, symbolized by the "mountain," is that of the "Vandals," under Genserio. That nation was the creation and destroying agent of that barbarian monarch. The Vandals were a swarm out of the German hive. They originated in eastern Asia. Progressing westward they entered northern Europe, and for centuries occupied Scandinavia. They were of the Suevian race.

During the first century of the Christian era they were spread over north-eastern Germany, and south-western Russia. Their features and complexion were Teutonic. They were called the "blue-eyed warriors."

They spread westward, entered the Roman empire in the province of Gaul (France), thence they crossed the Pyrenees mountains into Spain; wrested that country from the Goths and Romans; thence, Boniface Count of the Roman provinces in Africa, soliciting their aid, they passed over under Genserio, into that land, the granary of the western empire.

Eight years were consumed in the conquest of the seven Roman Provinces of Africa. They were there, under the "Terrible Genserio," erected into a more settled kingdom.

It will be seen that the Goths under Alaric attacked the western empire on the land, while the Vandals under Genserio, fell upon its maritime provinces, and its navy.

Spain first gave way; then the maritime provinces of Africa. The dominion of Genserio extended along the coast of Africa, from Tangier to Tripoli, ninety days' journey. It was a land of great natural advantages: rich and populous. It was, however, too much so to satisfy their growing desires, or their ambition.

Genserio was not attracted by the sable sons of the desert wilds, nor by the countries of moving sand. Beyond a narrow sea, in the Paradise of Europe, sat the city of the proud queen of many waters; some of whose valuable provinces he now occupies. The prize beyond the sea was too great a one to tempting. He resolves to create a navy.

He orders his legions of workmen into the pine woods of Mount Atlas. Immense amounts of timber are conveyed to the sea by his Roman subjects, who were skilled in ship-building; his brave and daring Vandals enter this new school—the sea-training.

Many ships were constructed, and the great inland sea became the theatre of their maritime exercises. Their vessels, issuing from the port of Carthage, entered nearly every maritime city of the Mediterranean sea. The Vandals thus became skilled in navigation.

With an eye on the state of the western empire, Genserio equipped a large number of vessels, and manned them with Vandals and Moors, ready to attack the city of Rome and the empire.

By invitation of Eudoxia, widow of Valentinian, he set sail with his fleet, and landed at the mouth of the Tiber.

Three days after his landing, he entered the city. The pillage continued fourteen days and nights. The females were delivered to the insults and licentiousness of the Vandals and Moors. Public and private wealth, every treasure, sacred or profane, disappeared in the general plunder. "The holy instruments of the Jewish worship, the gold table, and the gold candlestick with seven branches, originally framed according to the particular instructions of God himself, and which were placed in the sanctuary of his temple, had been ostentatiously displayed to the Roman people in the triumph of Titus. They were afterwards deposited in the Temple of Peace; and at the end of four hundred years the spoils of Jerusalem were transferred from Rome to Carthage, by a barbarian who derived his origin from the shores of the Baltic."—Gibbon.

This sack of Rome was forty-five years after its overthrow by Alaric. The wealth of Rome, as well as a multitude of captives, passed over the sea to Carthage. Among the latter was Eudoxia the empress daughter of Theodosius the Younger.

The naval conflicts between the Vandals under Genserio, and the Romans, commenced soon after, under the emperor Majorian.

The Vandal depredations were constant, and were extended along the western coast of Italy. Majorian resolved to carry the war into Africa. Without a powerful navy this was impossible.

To create such a navy "the woods of the Appenine were felled; the arsenals and manufactures of Ravenna and Misenum were restored; Italy and Gaul vied with each other in liberal contributions to the public service; and the imperial navy of three hundred large galleys, with an adequate proportion of transports and smaller vessels, was collected in the secure and capacious harbor of Carthagena in Spain." Gibbon.

"But Genserio was saved from impending and inevitable ruin by the treachery of some powerful subjects, envious, or apprehensive of their master's success.

Guided by their secret intelligence, he surprised the unguarded fleet in the Bay of Carthagena; many of the ships were sunk, or taken, or burnt; and the preparations of three years were destroyed in a single day."—Gibbon.

The maritime parts of the western empire were laid waste by the Vandal and Moorish pirates. Every spring; Genserio headed a fleet from the port of Carthage, which plundered the western Mediterranean. Conveying in his ships a sufficient amount of horses, so soon as he had landed on any coast his terrible desolations commenced.

Plunder was his aim rather than conquest. "His designs were concealed with impenetrable secrecy, till the moment that he hoisted sail.

When he was asked by his pilot what course he should steer, 'Leave the determination to the winds, (with pious arrogance, replied the barbarian) they will transport us to the guilty coast, whose inhabitants have provoked the divine justice.' * * * Their arms spread desolation, or terror, from the columns of Hercules to the mouth of the Nile."—Gibbon.

The children of these hardy Vandals, being brought up in luxury, and under an African sun, loved pleasure and ease rather than the hardships of war: and the Vandals were soon divested of all their terror.

As a mountain, cast into the ocean, soon disappears, with all its effects, the waters again closing over the boiling chasm; so did the great political ocean swallow and close over the Vandal kingdom.

The race of Vandals is utterly extinct. Its mission accomplished, it is numbered with the dead and forgotten.

Application.—The outline history is now before us; does it fill the prophecy? When the events, introduced by the angel of the second trumpet, were transpiring, had John a vision of those conflicts that marked the history of the Vandal kingdom under Genserie?

Before we compare, a few points should be carefully noted, in reading the Old and the New Testaments:—

1. The Bible is not a Universal History.—God being its author he sketches the history of his own people, noting the acts of other people only as they concern his peculiar people, he leaves nations belonging to other gods to write their own history.

2. Following this unity of design, the history, which God gave to Christ to show to John, was not the history of all nations, but only of that monarchy under whose government his people were to remain during the officiating priesthood of his Son. The acts of other nations are noted when they bear on his people, and only then.

3. That history must, therefore, follow the fourth monarchy from the reign of Domitian, (A. D. 81–96,) to the return and kingdom of the Son of Man, and its final overthrow.

4. Paul follows the history of the apostacy, and consequently, must confine himself more particularly to the Latin division of the empire. This is an important point to be noted, since it follows the apostate priesthood.

5. The same great apostacy (for there has been but one) is brought to view in Christ's revelation to John; it is, therefore, safe to say that the same division of the empire is more particularly brought to view. The chain of prophecy follows this division through the seals, trumpets, and the vials.

(a) "Third part." Three divisions of the empire were made by Constantine the Great, for his three sons. The Latin, or western, was always one of those divisions. It is sometimes used to denote a large portion of any thing.

(b) "A mountain burning with fire." Not a "burnt," "burning mountain," active and moving. Not old and exhausted. Such were the Vandals.

(c) "Cast into the sea." Not rolled in. Violence is used. Thrown as a ball.

(d) "Sea"—symbolizes masses of human beings. This is a sea agent. It struck the marine of the empire, and as it struck it destroyed. This event was accociated with the church, true and apostate. Genserio was an Arian; and assisted the Donatists of Africa against the Romanists. These agents of ruin were members of the Christian church.

(e) "Third part of the ships were destroyed." The ships of one division of the empire. This is a remarkable feature of the prophecy, and was most signally fulfilled in the destruction of the Roman fleet in the harbor of Carthagena.

The weakest spot in every man may be where he thinks himself the wisest.

FAITH UNIVERSAL AND CHANGELESS—WORKS DISPENSATIONAL.

G. S. L. C.

Without faith it is impossible to please God. Heb.

This rule is absolute and universal, no exception from Abel's time to ours. By faith! by faith!! by faith!!! rings down the ages. Its glory lights up the faith of the just all through the darkness of reigning sin. Ages, governments, laws, customs, philosophies, institutions, religions change. This vital thread, holding the "worthy" in unbroken succession to the eternal throne, pulsates with a steady, growing life, bringing into and spreading through the world the saving vigor of righteousness. It is of God, the thought, the privilege, the power, the means of faith is of God, he is its source, and substance, and life.

Every approach to God, by word or act, must be by faith, always has been, always must be; not because the law of Supreme Power has prescribed it, but because that is the only possible way of assimilation, for that is what "come to God" means.

Faith is the working force of love. As we "acquaint ourselves with God," we love him, confide in him, trust him. We come to him; he comes to us: takes away our sins, darkness and weakness, and gives pardon, peace and power. So faith shines through all the Old Testament, but is the very body and substance of the New. Here the veil is removed and we are permitted to see its exquisite mechanism. It is relieved of routine and shadow for Jesus is here, its personal practical power.

Faith seems stilted in the Old Testament and to be fond of official prerogative and gorgeous array; in the New it is the very model of simplicity, the very life of frankness, the most direct expression of heart to heart. Jesus comes wherever he is welcome, a most familiar, sympathizing friend with all power to help, and urging his kind offices upon us. "Only believe," he says: "all things are possible to him that believeth."

How few and how small the words between us and Christ. These little keys open all the treasures of divine love, mercy and power, the wealth of grace, the glories of the kingdom. On, in, into—believe on, in, into him; put all on him, confide all in him, be absorbed into him; appropriate him and let him appropriate you.

Historical belief is not faith. Devils have that. To know is not enough; to love is not enough; God "so loved" that he did something; we must so love as to have faith, trust and obey;—to be in Christ, have him in us, in all our thoughts and business, and work out his will and character. "I in them," "they in me."

Works, ceremonial or in practical godly life, are varied to suit the age, people, or occasion—helping and holding the heart in the sun-light of faith. Conditions so change that what is duty at one time may be forbidden at another; and even both when, as a rule, it is a duty, and when it is forbidden conspicuous exceptions occur; this, perhaps, to keep in mind God's sovereignty and the fact that man can not save himself, that his working (to be of saving force) must respond to God working in him. The outward work reflects the inward faith. The latter, sure to show itself in some way, is not always punctilious how. This may be affected by a thousand things. Faith must not be forbidden by dispensational etiquette. Ordinarily the etiquette is of great importance, suiting the prejudice for uniformity and making the ways of grace easier.

Jesus was not uniform in his methods of mercy; he did not follow the formulas of the old covenant nor the new: but he never refused mercy, and was never tardy in granting it. His one rule was: "According to thy faith." He often blessed persons on the faith of others. He seldom required any not between faith and the blessing sought. "Thy sins be forgiven thee." "Go thy way, thy son liveth;" and "that very hour" the fever left him. Such is his promptness in pardon. His assurance to his disciples was: "You shall see greater things than these because I go to my Father." He is not tied to forms now more than he was then. Ordinances are the servants of mercy, not its masters. We spoil and abuse them by exalting them out of place. It would be an indignity to the Lord to tell him to wait till we get ready for him to pardon the impenitent.

A dispensational rite never shut any body from God's mercy; was never the gate to the way of life. Jesus is the door, and he has not hedged himself about with ceremonial guards. "Forbid them not," he says. "Come unto me." O how easily and how sweetly accessible Jesus always was and is still.

Youths' Column.

Rural New Yorker.

While I May.

Papa, shut the book please, let us play together,
I'll be Patty Wotton, in her gown o' gray,
Mamma'll be study, buying all my berries,
And you'll pay in silver. Papa what you say?

Pages of the Poets, open at your sweetest,
You will be to-morrow what you are to-day.
But the sunny eyes here, if I now deny them,
When I fain would meet them, may have turned away.

Singing birds are sweetest, only in the spring-time;
Blossoms will be blossoms only for a day:
Golden hair is golden, but a little longer,
So I'll make your heart light, darling, while I may.

Ever willing fancy charm away the present,
Summon all thy magic, frame bright its play,
Let my little maiden, in her seventh summer,
Be a wrinkled woman in her gown o' gray!

Harper's Magazine.

"Think a Minute First."

Apropos of the sayings of the little ones I am reminded of an incident which touched me very much at the time and may find a responsive chord in the hearts of those who are parents. I was sitting on my porch on a pleasant summer morning when up runs my little five year old Bell, intent on a visit to a playmate across the way. "Papa," she asks, "may I go over and play with Carrie awhile?" and when she seemed to discern a dissent in my face, she put her little rosebud lips to mine, and quickly added: "Please don't say no—think a minute first." Was there ever a more charming protest against a hasty and inconsiderate answer? Of course the little girl had her wish. We are, perhaps, all too ready, thoughtlessly, to deny many of the requests of the little ones—things that seem trifling to us, but are everything to them. And when their little appeals come, before letting the "no" rise too quickly to our lips, let us think a minute.

N. Y. Observer.

Birds of the Bible.

BY GEORGIANA KRINGLE.

NO. II.—SWALLOWS.

The swallows, I believe, are favorites with every one, and it is not difficult to understand why they should be so. They are interesting to us not only as friendly, innocent little birds, but are endeared to us by the mention made of them in the Bible—for everything mentioned there must be of interest, just as those things referred to in all letters of very dear friends become objects of interest or affection. The swallows are mentioned several times in this precious book, and always favorably, as when they are referred to as being wise little birds, and knowing the times of going and coming, that they may escape the cold blasts of the north, or the intense heat of the south. Jeremiah says: "The turtle and the crane and the swallow observe the time of their coming, but my people know not the judgments of the Lord," —meaning to rebuke those who live in sin and neglect seeking pardon of God while they have time. It seems unreasonable, and very sad, that while tiny birds are careful of their own safety, we, who know the dangers awaiting the unforgiven soul, should, in so many cases, take no care for it at all, and forget that we may put off seeking safety until it is too late.

The swallows are never too late. They never perish by putting off. At a certain season, with one accord, they all rise in the air and turn toward a safer country, never, however, forgetting to return when a proper season invites them back to their old haunts, and even to their old nests. The passage in Proverbs referring to the migratory habits of the swallow would teach us that the judgments of God are just, and never come without a cause, so that, if we would escape his chastisement, we must live lovingly near him. The verse reads: "As the bird by wandering, as the swallow by flying, so the curse causeless shall not come." Let us obey him in love, that we may not grieve him and compel him to chastise us.

The Psalmist alludes to the swallow, when afar from the Holy City, and envies the little bird, which, with greater privilege than his own, may live under the shadow of God's sanctuary: "Yea, the sparrow hath found a house, and the swallow a nest for herself, where she may lay her young; even thine altars, oh Lord of Hosts, my King and my God." Hezekiah, when in deep grief says: "As a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter." These words may refer to the flutterings and mournings of the chimney swallow, with which we are all familiar, as we know of no other variety of these birds to which the words of the prophet would apply. We feel, then, attached to the swallow, because it is a bird mentioned in God's Letter, but also because they are such innocent, domestic little things, building under our roofs, swinging up under our gables with food for the row of mouths open to receive it, darting through the air to feed the little ones, chattering so early and winging so late; always so busy, always harmless, always in time—doing the work God gives them to do with quick, cheerful wings, and setting us all lessons of innocence and obedience.—as one of the nearest and dearest of the Bible birds.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 14.

HOW YOU MUST DO AND LIVE, TO BE GOD'S CHILDREN.

I know you want to become one of God's children, and that you may become heir of God, through Christ, to the beautiful new earth, you want to see it, you want a place in the new Jerusalem, you want a crown that will never fade, and never be taken from you.

You want to live when the time comes for everybody to be glad; when tears will be wiped from all faces, and when death will be no more. And you want "to live on and on forever, and never never die."

Jesus has invited you to come, I have tried to show you how to come. You get a great many blessed things by learning about Jesus, you are made a great deal happier here, by knowing that your future life is secured to you, and that, having secured it, and become God's child, you are all the time under his watchful care—that his blessed angels are ministering to you.

You come to Jesus when you learn about him, you come to him when you believe what God has taught of him, and you come when you are baptized into his death. You learn, you believe, you are sorry for your sins, you turn away from them, you begin doing right by being baptized,—that is coming to Jesus.

But once in the way of righteousness, you must continue to walk in it. You must not stop minding God.

You want to be right that you may do right, and to know how to be right. You must keep on learning about Jesus, you can never become too well acquainted with him. He was gentle, you must be gentle; he was patient, you must be patient; he was submissive, you must learn to submit. It is a hard lesson for your stubborn will, but they must be made to bend to God's will.

When he says "come ye children hearken unto me, and I will teach you the fear of the Lord," you must not refuse to be taught, for "the fear of the Lord is to depart from evil."

When he says "honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee," you must obey, and the long days of eternity will be yours in the earth made new.

When he says obey your parents, this is right and well pleasing unto the Lord, he is not going to be pleased nor to bless, if you disobey.

You must form the habit of the daily study of God's word. It is not enough to read it, you must try to find out what it means, and what it means to you. Commit portions of it to memory, think about them when at your work, think about Bible texts, until it becomes a perfect delight to do so, make the Bible a real lamp to your feet so that you may always know just what is right to do. You can learn to love it so well that you will scarcely want to study anything else, and no other book can make you so wise, no other book has the words that are life to them that find them.

You have learned that Jesus is coming to this earth again, and that he is going to reward you then. You must think about him and about that coming, so much that you will love it, for Paul says, all who love the appearing of Jesus, will have crowns in the day of his coming.

You must love it so well that you will want to hasten it; bring it sooner; love it so well that you will be in a hurry to get ready, and to have others learn about it, so that they can get ready.

Prepare yourselves dear children, watch, pray, be sober, live as you would like to be living when he comes.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

Sententions.

Keep in the light of the Sun of Righteousness, if you would scatter sunshine around you.

The education of the moral nature of man is not only necessary, but it is the grand necessity. If the intellect runs to waste without education, much more the moral nature, which, like the earth without cultivation, will only yield thorns and thistles.

"Drifting away! drifting away!
Flowers that are fairest never stay!
Sometimes the orange-wreath weaves its spell
Sometimes to wear death's asphodel;
Soon come the shadows of the dying day,—
We are drifting, drifting, drifting away."

Prayers should always be characterized by entire submission to the will of God. The undertone of every supplication should be, Not my will, but thine be done. There is a warrant for stretching earnestness up to this point: "Father, if it be possible;" but that must always be combined with the "nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt."

Soon shall end the time of weeping,
Soon the reaping-time will come;
Heaven and earth together keeping
God's eternal harvest home!
Saints and angels
Shout the world's great harvest home!

A BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT.

I do set my bow in the cloud.—Gen. ix. 13.

It was out of the cloud that the deluge came, yet it is upon it that the bow is set. The cloud is a thing of darkness, yet God chooses it for the place where he bends the arch of light. Such is the way of our God. He knows that we need the cloud, and that a bright sky without a speck or shadow, would not suit us in our passage to the kingdom. Therefore he draws the cloud above us, not once in a lifetime, but many times. But lest the gloom should appall us, he braids the cloud with sunshine, nay makes it the object which gleams to our eye with the very fairest hues of heaven. . . . Peace in trouble, gladness in sorrow, nay peace and gladness, produced by the very tribulation itself, such is the deep love of God, and such is the way in which he makes all things work together for good to us.—Dr. H. Bonar.

TO YOUNG MEN ONLY!

This is intended for the eyes of none but young men. Older persons need not read it if they do not wish to. It may not be amiss to some young ladies if they would read it;

Dr. Lawson, late surgeon-general in the United States army, has often observed that when the wolves and buzzards camp upon the battle-field to devour the slain, they would not disturb the bodies of those who used tobacco until they had consumed all others among them. And yet there are thousands of presumptuous young chewers and smokers who expect that refined young ladies will be willing to love and cherish all their lives what even buzzards will reject as nauseating and unwholesome.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 11, 1881.

ONE of our special contributors complains that an article of his intended for publication does not appear. A probably sufficient reason for its non-appearance is that it has never come to hand.

FROM Dr. J. H. Thomas, of Pittsburgh, Pa., we have received another capital article for THE RESTITUTION. Its title is—Reasons why I believe the Bible to be the Word of God. Like his former article—Man as he was, as he is, and as he shall be—it was delivered before the Liberal League of that city. It is a lecture creditable indeed to its author, and one that could not very easily be surpassed by those who rank as Star Lecturers before the public. We shall probably give it entire in our next. Though it will fill a large share in our paper we think it would not be best to divide it.

AN article from Brother Myers on the genuineness of Mat. xxviii. 19, received and will appear soon. Also one from Brother Crockett on the "Only True Gospel" will be given shortly.—Other articles as soon as we can find room and keep up a general diversity. Till some manuscripts on hand are disposed of we will waive writing any further on baptism as connected with the Commission, as well as our "Oriental Sketches." For our own instruction and amusement we shall investigate both these subjects and write out the results whether we ever publish them or not. We will give preference to our contributors.

MR. R. D. LOCKE,—better known from his humorous pieces as P. V. Nasby—is about to sail for Europe as a travelling correspondent of the Toledo Weekly Blade. From Mr. Locke's known ability as a writer we anticipate a series of letters that will be particularly valuable as describing the country, its institutions and inhabitants, but more especially interesting as giving graphic details of the stirring events now in progress in that quarter of the globe. For terms and fuller notice see advertisement in another column.

ISRAEL AND JUDAH.

Of the two short articles below, we took the first from a leading journal, and the second we translated from an exchange. We have reason to presume that they will both prove acceptable to our readers as they reveal something about the present condition of the City of the Great King, as well as of a fragment of the Dispersion of Israel. God will soon make Jerusalem a name and a praise in the whole earth, and gather his scattered Israel from the four winds of heaven. Come Lord Jesus, thou heir of David's throne, and rightful Ruler of Earth's Universal Empire, and reign King of kings and Lord of lords.

N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

HEBREWS IN CHINA.

A subject of interest to all and of special interest to Israelites is revived by the publication of Dr. Martin's work, "The Chinese, their Education, Philosophy and Letters."

The volume is full of instruction, but the point to which we refer is his account of a visit to the families of the descendants of Abraham and Jacob, who have for two thousand years lived in the city K'ai-fung-fu in China. This colony of the old race was made known to the western world in the seventeenth century by the Jesuit missionaries, who contributed so largely to historic and geographical knowledge in those days.

They were heard from several times after that, but for more than a hundred years no one from the western world had visited them, when Dr. Martin went there in 1866.

Their present condition is such as to excite much interest and commiseration. The remarkable fact appears that after preserving for twenty centuries the laws and rites of the Hebrew religion, they are now presenting an instance unparalleled in the history of the Jews, of a people falling away from the faith, and rapidly becoming Pagans or Mohammedans.

Three or four hundred of them remain. Their synagogue, however, falling into decay, they themselves tore it down, and made no effort to rebuild it. After this was gone they ceased all practice of Hebrew rites and ceremonies, began to intermarry with Pagans, lost all knowledge of Hebrew, retained indeed, and still possess, ancient rolls of the law in a strange form of alphabet, which neither they nor ordinary Hebrew scholars can read, but have no knowledge of the contents of the manuscripts, and have almost lost the traditions of their religion.

Dr. Martin prophecies their total disappearance as a separate race, unless western Hebrews shall send missionaries to them and enable them to rebuild their synagogue, of which now only remains a stone inscribed with the record of its erection about A. D. 1183, and a subsequent re-erection.

The last rabbi who could read the book of the law died some sixty years ago.

Up to that time this remarkable colony which had come into China two or three hundred years before the Christian era, had with all the characteristics of their race, preserved their pure blood and the faith and ritual of their fathers.

These facts have been published before, and an appeal was once made to the Hebrews of New York by Dr. Martin on behalf of their relatives in China. He says the only result was the reception of some letters in Hebrew, which he was requested to transmit to the people, to whom they were, of course, unintelligible, as none of them could read the missives.

Allgemeine der Wahrheit.

MODERN JERUSALEM.

A Mr. M. Stern of Baltimore has now been for many years a resident at Jerusalem and seems remarkably well pleased with the place. In a letter to a friend he writes as follows concerning his new home, and although not disclosing much that is new, yet it is a sketch containing something quite recent concerning that noted locality.

"Jerusalem is situated 2,500 feet above the sea-level, and its surroundings are stony and rocky. The city contains 43,000 inhabitants, of which probably 12,000–14,000 are Jews, mostly Portuguese and Polish, as one scarcely finds more than two or three German Israelites among the masses. Arabic is the spoken language. The city is surrounded by walls in good condition, and has five gates that can be securely closed and fastened. This city is built above the ruins of an older demolished town. The Mount of Olives lies easterly from Jerusalem, which is covered with graves from base to summit. The earth is of a dry chalk-rock formation, and they bury the dead without coffins.

In the valley of Jehoshaphat at the foot of the Mount of Olives three of the distinguished prophets are interred. Absalom's grand monument is also there. From the highest place on the Mount of Olives one can see the Dead Sea, and, from the same point, obtain a most splendid view of the entire city of Jerusalem at a single outlook—a sight that one can never forget.

In a southern direction lies Mount Zion and the Sepulchres of the Kings, and in the valley is the Kidron. All around the city far and wide there is nothing but mountains, valleys, and rocks. But after all the land is generally fertile, producing figs, olives, oranges, citrons, almonds, pomegranates, and grapes on hill and dale. Wine is very cheap here, as a pint costs only from six to twenty-two cents, and grapes command only one-half a cent a pound. Wheat and barley also thrive exceedingly well. Of spring-water one finds but little, but the rain-water which is contained in cisterns remains cold and fresh for months. For a cistern $100 is the cost of building.

At the time of writing this the heat is not very severe except at noon-day. Now is the seed-time, but after the Passover is harvest-time which takes place somewhere from the end of March to the middle of April."

Selections.

Correspondence of the New York Observer.

EGYPT.

REV. E. P. INGERSOLL, D. D.

CAIRO, March 24, 1881.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE DISCIPLES.

In the suburbs of modern Cairo, surrounded by ancient burial-places and great mounds of rubbish, is the little walled city of "Old Cairo." It was founded by Cambyses, the Persian, more than five hundred years before Christ, and named by him "New Babylon." Afterwards, under Roman conquerors, as history affirms, it was called Babylon. This must have been about the beginning of the Christian era.

To-day, under the guidance of Rev. Dr. Gullen Lansing, the veteran American missionary of Cairo, four of us—all Americans but one—have visited this little city. We had already seen the Pyramids. We had dreamed in our boyhood of "Sphinx, Pyramids, and catacombs." We had read with eager interest Champollion, and Ebers, and Mariette Bey, and as far as its ancient princely and priestly life are concerned, had seen ancient Egypt alive, all but this little Coptic city. Even the "guide books" say little of it, and no master's pen has given its history. In the very centre of this huddle of old buildings is a little church whose every stone and every "thought in stone" seemed hoary with age. Dr. Lansing said: "Let us see if our guide knows where we are;" and turning to the dark-faced woman who stood near, he said in Arabic, "What is this called?" She gave the modern name of the Coptic section. "No," said the Dr.; "what is this building called?" Her face lighted with intelligence as she replied, "Babloun. Babloun."

Well, what of it? Where is the discovery? Perhaps just this, that Peter here wrote his epistles to the churches. First Peter 5: 13, reads: "The church that is at Babylon, . . . saluteth you, and so doth Marcus, my son." This city was then called Babylon. Mark was a companion of Peter, but Mark was the evangelist who preached in Egypt and was martyred at Alexandria. The tradition that Peter and Mark visited this church is here held with great confidence, not only by the Copts, but by the resident American missionaries."

THE PENTATEUCH BY EZRA THE SCRIBE.

Very near this ancient Coptic church (which by the way, is modeled after the ancient synagogue) is a synagogue of the Jews. Of which a historian of the fourteenth century writes: It was built forty-five years before the destruction of the second Temple, and within is a manuscript written by Ezra the Scribe." Dr. Lansing said: "For ten years I have known of this manuscript, and twice I have succeeded in seeing it, but they are very jealous of it; a prominent American scholar tried in vain to get a sight of it." Happily "the old folks" were not at home. A young man had the keys. He knew Dr. Lansing, and at once opened the door of the synagogue and promptly closed and locked it after we had entered. Then forth from its little chamber in the wall, fifteen feet from the floor, a part of the roll was brought. We saw it, we handled this more old vellum, upon whose time-yellowed surface is written, in bold, beautiful hand, the Five Books of Moses. Unmistakably it is very ancient. Having a Bible with both the Authorized and Samaritan-Hebrew versions, we sat down and compared them with this ancient roll, and found, after reading several verses in the 5th chapter of Deuteronomy, that it coincides et literatim et punctuatim with the Hebrew from which our Old Testament is translated. The tradition is that Ezra the Scribe came down into Egypt about the time of the "return of the captivity," in order to correct and complete the genealogy of the Jews, who had fled to and found shelter in Egypt (Ezra 2: 62), and that before his return to Jerusalem, and at the request of the rabbis, he left this: "Roll of the Five Books."

The young man watched our movements with curious, and, I thought, sometimes with a suspicious eye, but permitted us to proceed for at least an hour. Then I climbed the trembling old ladder that gives access to the sanctuary of this treasure, carefully replaced it, and closed upon it the doors which are black with age. If this roll of the Pentateuch dates from the time of Ezra, then, if I mistake not, we have to-day handled a Hebrew manuscript of the Old Testament which is (unless we accept the claims of the Samaritans at Nablous, more than fifteen hundred years older than any now know to be in existence.

WHERE DID JOSEPH AND MOSES LIVE?

In my eagerness to find the city, or cities, in which Joseph and Moses lived, I have been asking questions of every dragoman who knows English. They all say, "Here at Cairo." Then I thought, "Perhaps the 'Great Guide Book' will solve the question;" and so, turning to my Bible, I read Exodus 12: 17, etc., Numbers 13: 22; Psalm 78: 12–43; Isaiah 19: 11–13; also, Isaiah 30: 4—and am thoroughly satisfied that Zoan, on the eastern branch of the Nile and to the north of Goshen, was the home of both Joseph and Moses. Its present name is Tanis, and this is the marginal reading in the Bible. The apparent difficulty found in the location given in the maps to Succoth (see Exodus 13: 20) is easily removed when we learn from intelligent resident missionaries that there is not the remnant of a tradition as to its location.

Upon the 28th of March we hope to enter Palestine at Joffa, and to journey for a month in the "Land of the Book."

"We have no doubt that it was from Babylon on the Euphrates that Peter wrote his Epistles, as the most important Section of the Dispersion of Israel was located in that City in the times of the Apostles. In either case, however, Rome is out of the question. There is not a particle of reliable evidence that Peter was ever at Rome.

New York Herald.

THE PLAGUE AT BAGDAD.

Likely to Be More Destructive Than the Earthquake at Chios.

The cable announcement that the Turkish Government has forbidden the Turkish newspapers to publish reports of the Bagdad plague, which continue to be unfavorable, reveals the horrors of a calamity which the outside world little suspects. It seems probable that the ravages of this dread disease in the land which was the cradle of the human race have but fairly commenced, and we shall not be unprepared for startling intelligence of its progress. The plague of 1831 did not set in at Bagdad till near the close of March, and even as late as the 4th of April that year the deaths were not more than 150 a day. But this mortality was nothing compared with what followed. Defying not only all curable but alleviate medical treatment it made rapid strides, and by April 10th the daily mortality rose to 1,000 or more, and by the 20th had doubled this rate in a population not exceeding 80,000 of which nearly one-half, it is estimated, had fled the limits of the city. In that month alone not less than 30,000 souls perished from this scourge. The inundation of the Tigris at the end of the month, according to an eye-witness, "swept away 7,000 houses, burying the sick, the dying, and the dead, with many in health, in one common grave." It was only with the cessation of the spring rains in May, and the arrival of clear weather that either the pestilence or the flood was stayed or food could be gotten into the city.

The worst of the present visitation has, therefore, in all probability, yet to come, or to be reported. In a short time the far-famed scorching Simmer of Bagdad, in which Sir Henry Rawlinson says the thermometer occasionally mounts to 122 degrees, will add its terror to the scene of the plague's devastations, the population of which is reckoned at 150,000. Unless the plague should prove remarkably mild and tractable its victims will be much more numerous than those of the earthquakes at Chios, whose sufferings have awakened so much sympathy in this country and elsewhere. But the Porte's suppression of the news of the Bagdad calamity seems the highest height of folly, and calculated to rob the plague-smitten district of the sympathy and succor which the outside world would extend to it, even if its own Government is too heartless to relieve it.

The Centinel.

"SIGNS OF THE END OF THE AGE."

REV. MR. STONE.

The Rev. Mr. Stone, pastor of the Asylum Avenue Baptist church, delivered an interesting address recently on the above topic. A large audience was present and a decided interest was manifested.

Mr. Stone began by mentioning certain cautions and safe-guards to be observed in the study of prophecy. Because of the difficulties of the subject, however, we should not neglect prophecy. To do so would be to neglect a large portion of the Bible. God has mingled it in his word by divine wisdom in just the proportions best for us. The speaker then gave as a first division, the order of great events of prophecy yet future. The appearing of Christ is the imminent event of the New Testament. It is mentioned 318 times in the 260 chapters of this division of the Bible. This is to be followed by a judgment of the living nations, the restoration of the Jews and the millennium.

Mr. Stone next spoke of tokens of possible nearness of the end of the age, of a favorable character. There has been, he said, a remarkable restoration of neglected truths of late. Among those were mentioned the dispensation and personality of the Holy Spirit; and the second coming of Christ. There is also a remarked revival of Bible study generally. The last seventy years have witnessed an unprecedented success of the gospel. Heathenism has its doom written in modern science, as well as in the word of God. The loss of the temporal power of the papacy, the wonderful reception of the Gospel in France, and the disintegration of the Turkish power were cited. The influence of recent inventions upon labor, and the status of the Jews were elaborated under this same head. The address was closed with allusions to the darker aspects, which betoken not an end of the world but of the age, and of great dispensational changes.

1. The unusually restive condition of the people of the world under the restrain of law—communism and nihilism are the more appalling expressions of this.

2. The tendency away from doctrinal and spiritual power in the Christian church, Christmas and Easter are becoming great world festivals.

3. The disturbed relations between labor and capital are daily rendering this problem more complicated.

Bible Banner.

THE EXPECTED KING.

D. T. TAYLOR.

In my "Voice of the Church" are found traditions of a coming deliverer and restorer who shall renew the world. These are shown to be current among all the old and many modern nations. In the Independent, March 17, Mrs. Lew Wallace, writing from Mexico, adds another to these. Of the Pueblos she says:—

"The last hope and strongest faith of the Pueblos are in the second coming of the great King, who is to raise the dead, judge the world, and reign in peace and righteousness. Struggling with shadows and weird imaginings, working out their destiny with many a bitter failure, in anguish of heart, they instinctively reach through the darkness for the almighty hand of the unseen helper. The sons of Montezuma, as they love to call themselves, believe the fullness of time is come and the return of their Messiah at hand. He will leave his bright sun-house, to right the wrongs and heal the woes of the race so mercilessly stricken down by the Spaniards. Then there will be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain. Their ideas are vague and dim; legends treacherous as memory, and growing fainter from generation to generation, for their wise men are without open vision and their sagamores have neither written prophecy nor guiding stars."

Are not these the groans of our nature, the blind yearnings of crushed humanity for the coming of the Redeemer?

Hyde Park, Mass.

Communications.

A EULOGY ON THE DOCTRINE OF GRACE.

B. V. LYON.

"These are none that can know the Father's right,
But those who learn it from the Son.
Nor can the Son be well received,
But where the Father makes him known."

Every day of my life convinces me more and more of the truthfulness of that humiliating yet glorious doctrine of grace. It is an ornament to the book of nature and revelation. With what resplendant lustre does it shine forth to my vision! O how I love it! because it exalts the name of Jesus above every name, and abases man by bringing him down at the foot of sovereign mercy, as a lost, helpless and ruined sinner, justly doomed to die. Yes, my mind responds to the sentence—justly doomed to die!

Glory to God, whilst the creature was in this ruined state, the Father cries out, "I have found a ransom." The Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

O what a shout was then heard on the plains of Judah at this eventful moment! All was interest in the court of the Eternal. O my soul, be astonished and ashamed that thou dost no more revere the name of him who hath through Jesus our elder brother, at so great a price, opened up the way whereby we, his rebellious children, can obtain pardon of our sins, and finally come into possession of life and earth in its renovated state!

Where the glory of God, like a boundless sea,
Will bathe the immortal company;
And pure love's banner, and friendship's wand,
Shall wave above the princely band.

Yes, him whose groans Calvary witnessed, and at the sight the sun felt himself called upon to put on a mourning garb, and for the space of three hours his radiant beams were not felt or seen, and all nature seemed hushed into silence, around that hallowed spot.

But O, how great the change when he from the tomb came forth, and had the monster death in chains! Death is a conquered foe to all who die in the Lord. They will be made alive when he comes in glory. But on high he ascended where all heaven was waiting to receive him, to conduct him to his Father's throne, where he has ever since resided, to make intercession for the purchase of his blood, according to the purpose of the Deity.

Glory be to God through his exalted name: at the time appointed he will return to gather the trophies of his victorious grace! Not however, as he made his first appearance, to be cradled in a manger, with no cherubim legions to guard him, but with the retinue of heaven to accompany him, as he shall be seen riding down the burning pathway of the heavens in his flaming chariot, whose wheels shall roll in fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, be removing them into a state of non-existence, and bringing earth into a paradisiacal state. The throne of his father David given to him, and he to reign over the house of Jacob, jewels of his victorious grace for the ages of the ages.

Glory to God! Self will then be lost sight of, and the song of the redeemed will then be, as they walk the plains of Eden, which will glow in immortal verdure, "Unto him who hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God."

What a moment! Redemption completed! Tribulation ended! O what a shout will there be heard among the subjects of his electing grace, whilst walking the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, (Jerusalem rebuilt,) which will be more brilliant and glorious than the light of yon orb of day! A shout! 'as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, alleluia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

Glory be to his exalted name that drew the wonderous plan: grace has marked out the way for sinful man to walk in, and by it he must be led, and by it he must be saved, or else die that death from which there is no revival into life, either limited or eternal! "for by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." That is grace in God's gift; whilst faith is the basis of things hoped for; that is an act of the mind laying hold of this favor through Jesus the life-giver. And this "unspeakable gift" is the antidote of sin—and sin is a transgression of the laws, and the penalty of this law is death,—and death is "the extinction of life" and this favor or "free gift," when applied to man will bring him out of hades, "the empire of death," into possession of life and earth in its renovated state. And only to such as the Deity has given to Christ, will he bestow this favor upon. And only such as will comply with the requirements of God when presented to them, has he given to Jesus the life-giver! Amen and Amen.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The brethren of the Church of God at Antioch, Marshall Co., Ind., appoint their annual meeting to commence on the Friday before the first Sunday in June, at four o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday—the days dating June 3–5, 1881. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to attend. The place of meeting is between Plymouth and Argos, about five miles from the former and and three miles from the latter place.

The Lord willing I will be at More's school house, on Friday, April 22, and continue over Sunday. The first Sunday in May at Bracken, as Brother Griffin may appoint. Friday, May 6, in Brother Roose's neighborhood and continue one week. Friday, May 13, at Kingsbury, Laporte Co., as Brother Clem may appoint, and continue over Sunday. Friday, May 20, at Brother Henry's, north of Walkerton, and continue over Sunday.

J. S. HATCH.

On the third Sunday in May, and the Saturday before, being May 14 and 15, 1881, I will be at Fort Scott, Kan., as Brother E. R. Vermillion may appoint. A general invitation is extended. Come one, come all.

JOHN FOORE.

The Annual Meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held (D. V.) at Watson, Allegan Co., Mich., in the Christian Meeting House, commencing at seven o'clock Thursday evening, June 2, 1881, and hold over Sunday, the 5th. Those coming from the east or west on the Michigan Central R. R., will take the Grand Rapids and Indiana R. R. at Kalamazoo, and go north to Montieth Station, and there take the Allegan R. R. to Fisk's Crossing, near the church. Those who come from north or south on the Grand Rapids and Indiana R.R. stop at Montieth and go to Fisk's.

Let there be a good representation from all parts of the state. The friends of the Blessed Hope at Watson are fully able and willing to welcome and entertain all who come. Those annual gatherings will be few before the great meeting in the air, when, if faithful, we shall see the Lord and be like him. We would like to greet our brethren from Lenawee and Buchanan and all other parts of the state. We expect brethren Chase, Woodward and others will preach the word.

E. HOYT, Sec.

The use of tobacco is a filthy habit; a stupefying, brain-deadening habit; a habit injurious to one's own health and character, and a nuisance to one's family, and to all who come in contact with him who uses it.—Dawn of the Morning.

Letter Drawer.

From Our Cherokee Brother.

URBANA, KAN.

Editor Restitution:

I take this opportunity of thanking the brethren through the columns of THE RESTITUTION for the gift conferred (The Diaglott) upon one who is a stranger personally, but known by the love that is in Christ our Lord. I feel myself under many obligations for it. I am poor in this world's goods, but hope I am rich in the love of Christ, and may be abundantly rewarded all at his soon appearing, for my faith is firm that it is nigh at hand. Then let us be glad, with rejoicing of such a hope.

I can assure you, brethren, that my diligence in searching and learning the truths therein contained, will be unabated. I am a searcher for truth and nothing else. I am yet only a babe in Christ, and his work. My prayers are constantly ascending to the hearer of the faithful, that he may stablish and make me firm; not to be shaken by every wind and doctrine of men.

Thanks also for the tracts contributed; they are also highly prized.

I try to make plain the pure and true light of God's word in my feeble way, three Sundays in each month, at different places. Some are receiving the light by degrees, and I hope they may soon accept in full by being buried in baptism.

Last Sunday I spoke from Mark iv. 12, as some were anxious to know why it was that the language used by the evangelist was so spoken, if Christ came to save sinners. The satisfaction was general, I believe.

After the services I organized a Sunday School, to meet next Sunday, and begin our study and investigation of the word.

Your Brother in Christ.

W. P. PAYNE.

CLEVELAND, Ohio.

Editor Restitution:

Perhaps I ought to send you an item. We have recently added five to our number with a prospect of still another. We have left the Chapel on Linden street, and gone back to Beck's Hall cor. Woodland and Case avenues, where we formerly met. Where any Brother who may come this way may find us every Sunday at 10:30 a. m. Yours in hope.

G. W. ELTON

STOCKTON, KAN.

Editor Restitution:

I have seated myself this day to write and let you and the brethren in Christ know of my welfare, and what we have been doing since January the first.

We have a crop of about thirteen acres of spring wheat, and it looks well. We have sown in faith but what the result will be we know not. We had to hire all our team work to put it out. If some one would help us a little till we raise a crop, the Lord will bless them.

I am at work in the gospel field, preaching every week. I recently baptized two intelligent believers into the Christ—Brother and Sister Reuben Walk.

Your brother looking for the return of Israel's King.

DANIEL FIKE.

ROME AND JERUSALEM.—The Roman church maintains a steady attention to the Holy Land. At Jaffa they have erected a new hospital, they have established a branch nunnery at Ramleh, and a nunnery and schools at Bethlehem. It would appear that the Franciscans have a new establishment at Romans, in addition to the large hospice at Jerusalem. On the Mount of Olives a grand sanctuary and an extensive nunnery have been erected and endowed by the Princess de la Tour d'Auvergne, who with great devotion, spent several years on the spot, in order personally to superintend the work.

Dr. Chalmers beautifully said: "The little I have seen in the world and known of the history of mankind, teaches me to look at their errors in sorrow, and not in anger. When I take the history of one poor heart, that has sinned and suffered, and represent to myself the struggles and temptations it has passed through—the brief pulsations of joy; the tears of regret; the feebleness of purpose; the scorn of the world that has little charity; the desolation of the soul's sanctuary, and threatening voices within; health gone; happiness gone—I would fain leave the erring soul of my fellow-man with him from whose hands it came."

Beautiful lives have grown up from the darkest places, as pure white lilies, full of fragrance, blossom on slimy, stagnant waters.

Poetry.

STRENGTH FOR THE DAY.

BEFORE.

The morning breaks in clouds, the rain is falling,
And on my pillow still I sigh for rest:
But yet I hear so many voices calling
To work, by which my burdened soul is pressed,
That I can only pray,
"Strength for the day."

'Tis less a prayer of faith than weak regret,
For with the words there comes no hope to light:
On other days a morning can be shining,
While mine seems but a chance from night to night;
So while I weep I pray,
"Strength for the day."

It seems so hard to walk in constant concern,
Climbing with weary feet an upward road:
That while my weak heart dreads each coming morrow,
And I once more take up the heavy load,
Hear on thro' life I pray,
"Strength for the day."

AFTER.

Now looking backward, to the long hours ended,
I wondered why I feared them as they came:
Each brought the strength on which its task depended,
And so my prayer was answered, just the same.
Now, with new faith I pray,
"Strength for each day."

For in the one just crossed I've learned how truly
God gives us help according to our need:
Sufficient for each hour is eagerly needs,
If we but follow where He leads like lead,
Believing, when we pray,
"Strength for the day."

For he who felt the load which we are bearing,
Who watched each step along the path we tread,
Is ever for his weary children caring,
And keeps the promise made to us, when he said,
I'll give thee all the way,
"Strength for each day."

Communications.

ETERNAL LIFE.

S. S. WARNER.

But now, being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Romans iv. 22, 23.

As thou has given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him.—John xvii. 2.

And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son.

Here are four great points settled in the above texts:

1. That eternal life comes to us, or is obtained as the end (result) of holiness, which is attained by the service of God which is holy.

2. That it comes from God, and is given through Christ.

3. That Christ gives it to us directly, by having power over all flesh, so that he can raise the dead, and give eternal life to as many as the Father has given him.

4. That eternal life is in Christ, God's Son, and nowhere else can we find it.

A pious young man came to Jesus and made the prayer:

Good Master, what must I do, eternal life to get?
The treasure he could not find in all the Jewish law,
Not in himself, nor any rabbi priest he ever saw.

For upon the great boon had been hid from human sight.
And by the "Good Master" alone, could be brought to light.
With the great foe he must have a victorious strife,
And conquer death, to get, show, and give eternal life.

The two great truths that the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord, (the second and not the first Adam) and that the life is now in him, should forever settle the question as to its future) existence. That it did not exist in the first Adam everything connected with his creation, and subsequent life clearly shows, and therefore it does not exist in us his offspring, for we cannot inherit what Adam never possessed.

Again, it would be impossible for us to receive eternal life through the second Adam if we received it through the first.

We are told distinctly in the creation of man, or its history, who made him and of what he was made, and just what it took to constitute him "a living soul." In submitting to us a history of our common parent, the Lord has not been pleased to say one word about giving him an "eternal spirit." The real man—the man of the Bible—created by God, was made of the dust of the ground, and then God breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives (life) and man became a living soul. We can claim no immortality for the dust, nor for the breath of lives, for we are clearly told that men and beasts have all the same breath, neither can we prove immortality from the phrase living soul, for that relates to animals as well as men. All it took, according to the account, to make a living soul was the power of God and the dust of the ground, and the breath of lives.

"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives, and man became a living soul."

What became a living soul? The very dust that God formed and was called man before the breath was given. Now mark, the history does not say God breathed a living soul into the man, but the man became a living soul.

Paul tells us the first man Adam was made a living soul. Adam, then, was just what he was made—a living soul. 1 Cor. xv. 45. And Paul declares that the man or the living soul, was of the earth earthy. The same apostle tells us that sin entered into the world by one man. Rom. v. 12 Now if the phrase living soul proves immortality, the whole one man must be immortal—breath and body—and this proves altogether too much for our learned doctors.

We can have dead men as well as living; so the one man of the Bible does not need the breath of lives to make him man. It is useless for them to run off the track with their double man, mortal and immortal at the same time, and say the soul does not always mean the whole man. That is a mere dodge. Nowhere does it mean an immortal part of man, or it could not be said that the dust moulded by God became a living soul.

Let it mean what it may in other places, we have shown clearly that it means the whole of the one man of the Bible, and if it prove a part of him to be immortal, the whole must be, inasmuch as it took the whole of him to make the one living soul or man.

Eternal is an adjective of time and not of quality, only marking the duration of the thing to which it is added, and if life be the active principle in any thing, the wicked of modern wisdom will have eternal life in hell.

What mean the texts then: "They shall not see life," "They that sow to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting," "He that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life," when all have it?

A great effort is made to prove that eternal life means something more than eternal active being, but where do they find the proof? It is not in the word life, for that cannot mean more than life; it is not in the words temporal or eternal, for they only express its duration.

Godliness is profitable to all men having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. 1 Tim. iv. 8.

Now by what law of criticism can we show that life, in the above text, means one thing in the first clause, and in the latter something entirely different? By adjectives we may make it limited or eternal, miserable or happy: but life only is life, whether here or in the world to come.

We then have only two lives before us, the one that now is—temporal—the one to come—eternal.

Mark, Paul does not say, one of the lives which now is nor one of the lives to come, as though there might be more than one in each state. Both of these lives are given by God to man. One transmitted through the first Adam, temporal or limited; the second transmitted through the second Adam, eternal or unlimited. Both conditional to us, at least so far as relates to enjoyment. If we would live long on the earth we must obey certain laws; if we will have everlasting life we sow and reap, for it is the end or result of our conduct and given us as our great reward. "To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, immortality, eternal life" will be the reward. Rom. ii. 7.

We have two bodies or images before us—one earthy, the other heavenly, and we depend just as much upon the Lord from heaven for the second image, as we do upon the first Adam for the first image or body. We all trace our creation to Adam, and we essentially exist in him, and the Christian, though mortal or dead, essentially or substantially exists in Christ, the second Adam.

We trace our first life and being down, and back to the first Adam; and our second life up and forward to the heavenly Adam, who is our living head, and when the believer dies, he can look up to Jesus and rejoice that he lives in Christ; yes, has eternal life in him.

To resurrect is to restore to life and being. When the Christian dies his Adamic life and being are gone; personally he does not exist, only in Jesus who will give him life and being at the last great day. Glory to God, and Christ—our eternal life.

Permit me to say in conclusion, that it is not necessary for me to reply to the many arguments that are brought forward to prove that there is a living principle, that survives the death of the body, and is conscious until the resurrection, for if that could be fully sustained it would by no means prove that such a life was immortal, and could not be destroyed by Christ at his coming.

If we prove that some of the bodies of the saints will live till Christ comes, it argues not that they will need no change from mortality to immortality at his coming, nor that they are already immortal.

THE BLESSED KING AND KINGDOM OF DAVID PROCLAIMED.

A Testimony.

ASA W. BUTTON.

Kings and conquerors have met, have been greeted with loud acclamation by admiring throngs. Jesus had been a conqueror as kings and heroes can never be. The tomb of Lazarus at the town of Bethany had been the place of the encounter and the victory. The king of terrors and the terror of all kings, had there been conquered and forced to yield and the prey was taken from the mighty, and the captive—Hell by law delivered. Is it strange, if disciples admiring and adoring, thought they—

"Heard the king of glory say,
'O death! have conquered you!'
Th' ages your locks, ye sentinels, lift,
I will bring my saints all through."

Nor strange that an interested concourse followed as he went to Jerusalem. Nor that people who had come to the feast at that city, hearing that he had done this and was on the way, started out, and the two crowds met at the garden of Bethphage, where a halt had been made, disciples being sent to bring the colt. In due time they laid garments on the colt and set Jesus thereon. It was a new thing: hitherto he had walked over the highways, the hills and valleys. They took in the idea that there was a purpose now, and their rising emotions as he started toward the city, prompted to spread their garments along the way, as if the bare earth was not good enough for the honor of the occasion, to ride over.

Soon a voice or two raised the cry —"Hosanna! Blessed be the King, that cometh in the name of the Lord." For the lack of banners, branches of trees are torn off and waved aloft. The cries extend till the whole multitude of the disciples, ring out the words "Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest:" as Mark has recorded.

Here is a doctrine—here are the words that confirm it. Angels to the shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem did not affirm a more substantial truth. It is true as the sightly watchers heard, "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people: For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." It is true that Christ the Lord—the Christ—sooner or later, cometh in the name of the Lord, restoring the Kingdom of David over the people of David. "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever," are the words of God's messenger Gabriel, to Mary, recorded by Luke. If one mighty truth was spoken of Christ the Lord by an angel to the shepherds, another mighty truth of equal authority and evidence, was spoken by an angel to Mary. If you deny one, you may logically deny both.

Should not the disciple's proclamation and the words of Gabriel, spoil people's faith in an ideal kingdom, purely spiritual? Must the kingdom of David and Israel be accepted only, as a pictorial illustration of an esthetic conception of a spiritual kingdom? as an idol is supposed to represent a disembodied spiritual divinity by idolators? Mr. Moody ought not to preach the advent of Christ, "It is too Jewish," says Professor Porter. Ah, well, keep to yourselves a Gentile Christ, a Gentile religion, made up of Gentile doctrines, and a Gentile ideal of a spiritual kingdom; with so much of human device in the whole, as makes up idolators. Cast off the Jewish Christ, and in that be equal with the Jews. They had made to their liking, what the Christ ought to be; and so have you.

But what shall we think of the New Testament Christ sending for the colt, with the pre-arranged design carried out, as he intended? What of his sincerity, probity and candor, if this was the vaporous hilarity of an hour—the outburst of passionate excitement—with no more significance, than shouting at a camp-meeting? Do we suppose Jesus the leader of a masquerade, receiving mock homage, as if a prince of the house of David, for diversion for himself, and his disciples?

There was a deep sincerity, or a great insincerity in the proclamation. We do not admit the latter—that it was a vain show—and must insist that it was an assertion of legal and regal rights, which will not and cannot miscarry, though long delayed; for, "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this"—yes, this very thing. Isa ix. 7. If Christ's disciples sincerely declared their belief of the Blessed King, and the kingdom of their father David, to come in the name of the Lord; and Jesus accepted the declared relation; can we affirm it was a mistake of ignorance? Divines say the disciples were ignorant of the true nature and character of Christ's kingdom; that they were full of the Jewish ideas of an earthly and—as they called it—a temporal kingdom. But this is too much: it involves Christ in the ignorance. Besides it makes him a bad teacher: even though he did explain all things in private to his disciples, saying to them: "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom." Yet after three years of public and private instruction, they did not know the greatest—most of all important mystery—that of its true nature. When ten words may day could correct and put them in the right. Well if Jesus and his disciples were in the wrong as to the kind of kingdom, I am content to be wrong with them. I think it is safer than the company of Gentile Doctors who by ignoring his kingship in its true effect, discard the true Christ.

The proclamation does not prove by any evidence that his disciples were deceived, by an illusory expection of an immediate assumption of the royal crown and kingdom. Though they declared full faith in the "King that cometh," and "the kingdom of their father David that cometh in the name of the Lord." It could not have been many days since they were told—and could have lost sight of the impressive fact, by no means—that "the days will come when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it." "But first he must suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation." That as it was in the days of Noah, and when Lot went out of Sodom, destruction would fall on hardened criminals, for: "Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." This makes it a proved fact that their Hosannas had respect to some distant day.

There are sometimes met, persons who believe in "second sight," a phantom apparition beforehand, of something that took place in reality as they saw afterward. Whatever may be the philosophy of cerebral action yet undeveloped—if there be such—the disciples saw no phantom, though it was a first sight, yet to be repeated, by the coming of the King and the kingdom. Particular illustrations of first sight are found in Scripture. Abraham foresaw in Isaac bound on the wood to be slain, the violent death of the Christ, and his resurrection—the rescue from death—"whence he received" Isaac back "in a figure." Moses saw before he was sent to rescue Israel, a bush burning with fire, yet not consumed. And chose to suffer affliction with that people who were doomed to the long burning of tribulations, but like the bush, not to be consumed by their trials of ages. This was foreseeing. And when Moses built the tabernacle he saw the reproduction of the pattern, showed him in the mount.

So God has caused great events to cast their illustration before, for the instruction of some of his servants, that they may see what concerns to know. Christ's regal majesty over the kingdom of Israel must be proclaimed as an antefact, of the real fact yet to be a full reality. Therefore the stones in the street by miracle would cry Hosanna, if disciples had not. "Your house is left desolate"—its crown in the dust, for, "ye shall not see me till ye shall say"—what disciples said—"Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." And this includes the Hosannas, for the kingdom of David being restored also. This with the antecedent proclamation, makes a mighty trustworthy prophecy, full of hope.

West Northfield, Ill.

IF YE LOVE ME KEEP MY COMMANDMENTS.

SARAH F. CHAMBERLAIN.

How often these words of the Savior come to my heart. I dare not lose sight of them. Oh, what a beautiful meaning they have! "If ye love me keep my commandments."

In reading God's blessed word we learn what his commandments are. They are to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it: We should love our neighbor as ourself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

His commandments should not be grievous, but rather a pleasure to do them. How can we say we love Jesus and yet fail to love a dear brother or sister? I know people who profess to love the Lord and his cause, and at the same time they are holding spite at some one dear brother or sister. This is not right. We should love our enemies and pray for them. Oh, if we have aught against any one let us go and make all right with them, and the blessing will be ours.

May we follow in our Savior's footsteps, for when he was reviled he reviled not again. Let us be tender and loving and forgiving toward each other. we are all so apt to go astray, and when we go to Jesus, how willing he is to forgive us! Should we be less willing to forgive those who injure us? God forbid. Oh, let us imitate his noble character.

If would be genuine Christians we must remember the golden rule—Do unto others as we would have them do unto us.

Oh Lord! may the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable unto thee, oh God! my strength and my redeemer. And now dear reader, let each one of us so live that when Jesus comes we may be able to enter in to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Praise his holy name now and forever.

Land. Ind.

ADONIRAM JUDSON.

[Though we corrected the error alluded to last week, yet we give this a place for the additional information and the poetry.—ED.]

Editor Restitution:

My attention was arrested by an item in your issue of April 20, and which I had seen in another paper previously, referring to Miss Abigail B. Judson, of Plymouth, Mass. who lately passed her 90th birthday. It states also that she is the sister of the late Adoniram Judson, the famous missionary to Burmah, etc.

Further the Boston Courier says that its front door has never been open since his body was carried through, etc.

Although it is a small matter, and the other statements may be true, yet history is falsified, in regard to his body being carried through the front door of the house in Plymouth.

The missionary Judson was carried from his home in Burmah, on board ship, in the last stages of consumption, in the faint hope of some benefit to him from a voyage, which proved illusive. After a few days he died on board, his body was wrapped in his winding sheet, silently and sadly lowered into the deep waters of the Indian Ocean, which became his grave.

I have not the record at hand, but a short extract from those wonderfully pathetic lines, written afterwards by his wife, who was unable to accompany him, illustrates the scene of his departure. They were addressed to her mother.

"Sweet mother, I am here alone,
In sorrow and in pain;
The sunshine from my heart has flown,
It feels the chilling rain—ah me,
The chill, and would, and vain.

Four hapless months have wheeled their round,
Since love upon it smiled,
And everything of earth has fevered
On thy fond stricken child—sweet friend,
Thy weary, suffering child.

I've watched my loved one night and day,
Scarce breathing when he slept;
And as my prayer were swept away,
I'd on his breast wept—Oh God!
How had I prayed and wept.

They hope him from me to the ship,
As hearts bear the dead;
I kissed his cheek and pale lips;
And left him on his bed—alone!
It seemed a coffin bed."

C. C. H.

Selections.

Evangelical Messenger.

EVENING-TIDE REFLECTIONS.

Each day should find us "earnestly contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints," and "warring a good warfare." "Enduring hardness, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ." Life is overmore a great solemnity, linked, as it is to God and eternity. Says a writer: "Men's lives should be like the day, more beautiful in the evening; or, like summer, aglow with promise; and like the autumn, rich with the golden sheaves, where good words and deeds have ripened on the field." The ancient sages had no time to look around, and scan the faces of those with them in the contest. They keep their eyes upon the goal. So must the spiritual runner. "Pressing (each day) toward the mark of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Time flies: The race is hard to run. Press! Press!!

"Our days are gilding by" should constantly urge us on to make sure work for eternity. "Running the race (daily) marked out before us, looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith." etc. "The most common action of life—its every day, its every hour—is invested with solemn grandeur, when we think they extend their issues into eternity. Our hands are now sowing seed for that great harvest. We shall all meet again what we are doing or have done. The graves shall give up their dead, and from the tombs of oblivion the past shall give up all that it holds in keeping, to be a witness for or against us. Oh, think of that! In yonder hall of the inquisition see what its effects on us should be. Within those blood-stained walls one is under examination. He has been assured that nothing he reveals shall be written for the purpose of being used against him. While making frank and ingenuous confession, he suddenly stops. He is dumb—a mute. They ply him with questions, flatter him, threaten him; he answers not a word. Hunger makes the senses quick. His ear has caught a sound; he listens: he ties his tongue. A curtain hangs beside him, and behind it he hears a pen running along the pages. The truth flashes. Behind that screen a scribe sits committing to the fatal page every word he says, and he shall meet it again on the day of trial.

Ah! how solemn to think that there is such a pen going in heaven, and entering on the books of judgment all we say or wish, all we think or do. Would to God we heard it, everywhere and always heard it! What a check! and what a stimulus! Are we about to sin? how strong a curb; if slow to duty, how sharp a spur. What a motive to pray for the blood that blots out a guilty past, and for grace as in time to come shall enable us to walk in God's statutes, to keep his commandments, to do them! Oh, let us think of this unseen pen, unseen scribe, and unseen record each day!

Herald of The Morning.

THE PASSOVER.

Q.—Did Jesus and the Jews keep the passover on the same day? compare Matt. xxvi. 17; Mark xv. 42; Luke xxii. 7; with the statement in John xviii. 28; xix. 14. If Jesus was slain on the evening of the 14th of the first month, as the law required, he certainly did not eat the passover with his disciples on that day. Can you reconcile this difficulty.

A.—All the Jewish feasts were movable. The beginning of their year being determined by the first new moon after the spring equinox; and even that, changeable as it is, was to be determined by sight, rather than by astronomical calculation. They had men on the mountains to watch for the new moon. If it was clear on the first night when they expected to see it, that would mark the beginning of the new year, and month Abib. If it was cloudy, so that the watchers could not see the new moon on the first evening, they would watch a second or even a third night; when, if it was still invisible, they would begin their third year without seeing it; and the 14th of the first month would therefore vary accordingly. Thus either one of the three days would be legal; according to the above circumstances.

Now it is certain that Jesus ate the passover on one day, and was crucified on the following day. And from John's statement, it seems probable that the Jews ate the passover on the night of the crucifixion. As either day, when determined by the Jewish officials was legal, the circumstances which made it necessary that Jesus should eat the passover on one day, and be crucified on another day, was very beautifully provided for by the above arrangement. The eating the passover was not always to be observed on the 14th of the first month, it depended on circumstances. (see Num. ix. 10, 11); thus individuals might eat it legally, and not affect the year. The day on which the nation at large would kill the pass over, would determine the legal day. And though the authority of Jesus might determine, within the three days limit, when he should eat it, his crucifixion was evidently at the exact time the nation at large, counted as the evening of the passover. And the day the Sanhedrim fixed upon, would be the legal day, not necessarily for Jesus to keep it, but for its fulfillment.

OUR FALLIBILITY.

A fallible being must fall somewhere.—Dr. Johnson.

From time to time there returns upon the cautious thinker the conclusion that, considered simply as a question of probabilities, it is decidedly unlikely that his views on any debatable topic are correct. "Hora" he reflects, "are thousands around me holding on this or that point, opinions differing from mine; wholly in most cases, partially in the rest. Each is as confident as I am of the truth of his conviction. Many of them are possessed of great intelligence: and, rate my-self as high as I may, I must admit that some are my equals,—perhaps my superiors. Yet, whilst every one of us is sure he is right, unquestionably, most of us are wrong. Why should not I be among the mistaken? True, I cannot realize the likelihood that I am so; but this proves nothing; for though the majority of us are necessarily in error, we all labor under the inability to think we are in error. When I look back into the past, I find nations, sects, philosophers, cherishing beliefs in science, morals, politics and religion which we decisively reject. Yet they held them with a faith quite as strong as ours; nay, stronger, if their intolerance of dissent is any criterion.

Of what little worth, therefore, seems this strength of my conviction that I am right? A like warrant has been felt by men all the world through; and in nine cases out of ten, has proved a delusive warrant. Is it not, then absurd in me to put so much faith in my judgment?—J. C. F.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By John Dilworth.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. Woodruff.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. Stephenson.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 15 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885.

—By M. L. Knapp, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 12 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881.

—By H. V. Reed.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send orders to

SAMUEL WILSON,
3116 N. 21st Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by

THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind

NASBY IN EUROPE.

May 11 Mr. D. R. Locke, (Nasby, Petroleum V. Nasby), will sail for Europe, for the purpose of contributing a series of letters to the "Toledo Blade." These letters will cover a period of six months, commencing June 1.

They will be written in Mr. Nasby's peculiar vein, and will be as lively as he can make them.

—THE—

TOLEDO Weekly BLADE

Is the LARGEST Political and Family paper in the United States, and in addition to this feature contains a dozen others, known to and approved by a majority of the families in every state and territory.

TERMS:

For Three Months, post paid - 50c.
For Six Months - - - - $1.00

Nasby Portrait Free!

Every subscriber to the "Blade," during the publication of Mr. Locke's European Letters, for either three or six months, will receive free of charge a splendid in size and style similar to the one of President Garfield which we issued last summer. This portrait in the picture stores would sell for 50 cents. It will not be put upon the market at all, and can only be had by subscribers to the "Blade."

PORTRAIT OF Mr. LOCKE,

Those desiring these letters complete and the portrait, will do well to send their orders early. We shall print an extra edition, to be able to supply back numbers, but they will doubtless be exhausted in a month. Send your orders immediately.

Specimen copies of the "Blade" mailed to any address upon application. Send your subscription at once.

Address

BLADE CO., Toledo, O.

Poetry.

Independent.

COMFORT ONE ANOTHER.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Comfort one another!
For the way is growing dreary,
The feet are often weary,
And the heart is very sad.
There is heavy burden-bearing,
Where it seems that none are caring,
And we half forget that ever we are glad.

Comfort one another!
With the hand-clasp brave and tender,
With the sweetness love can render,
And the looks of friendly eyes.
Do not wait with grace unspoken,
While life's daily bread is broken,
Gentle speech is oft like manna from the skies.

Comfort one another!
There are words of melody ringing
Down the ages, sweet as singing
Of the happy choirs above.
Reinspired saint and mighty angel
Lift the grand, deep-toned evangel,
Where forever they are praising the Eternal Love.

Comfort one another!
By the hope of him who sought us
In our peril,—him who bought us,
Paying with his precious blood;
By the faith that will not falter,
Trusting strength that shall not falter,
Leaning on the One divinely good.

Comfort one another!
Let the grave chasm lie behind you,
While the Spirit's words remind you
Of the home beyond the tomb.
Where no more is pain or parting,
Fever's flush or tear-drop starting,
But the presence of the Lord, and for all his people room.

Communications.

READ THIS.

G. M. MYERS.

I.—Israelitish Time.

In the Bible there are many expressions pertaining to time which are calculated to give us trouble, and to lead us into error, unless we understand the manner of Israel's computation of time, and always before our minds keep a distinction of this from our own manner of computation.

While we commence our day of measurement of the diurnal revolution of the earth at what we call midnight, and count it by two periods of twelve hours each, the Israelitish count was different. They began their count at sunset and divided the time of the diurnal revolution into two parts, the evening and the morning; i. e. "the evening and the morning were the first day; the evening and the morning were the second day; the evening and the morning were the third day."

Formerly Israel divided the first of these periods into three watches. See Psa. lxii. 6; xc. 4; Lam. ii. 19; Jud. vii. 19; Ex. xiv. 24. But after the Babylonian captivity they divided it into four watches. See Mark ix. 11; Jno. xx. 9; Mark xiii. 35; Jno. xviii. 28.

The second period they divided into twelve equal parts beginning at about sunrise. For example, in the parable of the laborers in the vineyard, Mat. xx., their third hour corresponds to our ninth A. M.; their sixth hour to our noon; their ninth to our third P. M.; their eleventh to our fifth P. M. Again, in the crucifixion of our Savior, as recorded in Mat. xxvii. 45–50, it is stated that there was darkness over the land from the sixth to the ninth hour, and at the ninth hour Jesus cried, and then shortly afterward died. The time corresponds to our twelfth hour, M and third hour P. M., the last date at which Jesus died.

Also an observance of this Israelitish count of time removes all apparent trouble respecting the prophecy and the record of Jesus' stay in the tomb. Upon the hypothesis, and the best of evidence to support it, with which we will not now trouble you, that Jesus died at the ninth hour—Israelitish count—of the fifth day of the week—Thursday—and was deposited in the tomb at or about the commencement of the sixth day, it follows that he was in the tomb according to Israelitish time all Friday night and Friday, Saturday night and Saturday, Sunday night and arose upon Sunday morning. Therefore he was in the tomb upon three days and three nights, and arose upon the third day.

The term month they apparently derived from the word moon, and measured their months according to the moon's phases from change to change, that is from new moon to new moon, commencing their months as nearly as circumstances would allow with the change. They generally alternated twenty-nine and thirty days to the month and twelve months to the year, with occasionally—about one year in three, throwing in an extra month to preserve solar time.

II.—The Passover.

The last one of the ten plagues visited upon the Egyptians in order to induce them to relinquish their hold of bondage upon Israel was the death of the firstborn in all the houses and flocks of the Egyptians.

This message was to be administered by a messenger termed the Angel of Death. In order to secure the safety of Israel against the hand of this messenger Israel was to prepare a kid or lamb of certain specifications and of it to make certain dispositions. This done, the messenger of death was to pass on, to pass over their houses and flocks without a visitation of death. This act of passing by or over their houses and flocks was really and literally the Passover.

But by the figure of cause being substituted for effect the rites and ceremonies connected with the slaying of the lamb or kid have been called the passover, and again by the figure where a part is put for the whole the lamb or kid has also been called the passover.

In the last—an accommodated—sense, Paul in addressing the Corinthians (iii. 7,) says Christ was their passover. Reference here is made to Christ as the lamb, and without any reference whatever to any literal rites or ceremonies pertaining to the passover, or without any reference whatever to any literal rites and ceremonies or institutions that might have come in the room and stead of those of the passover, or might have become the antitype of the passover. So far from all this is Paul's reference, that by accommodation he compares the lost connected with the passover institution with the body—the church—at Corinth, the refractory member there to leaven, and then exhorts them to purge out the leaven—the refractory member—and to have a pure lump or body.

There is no eating or drinking in any sense contained in the reference. This is a quotation without antitype, without analogy, but simply by accommodation. There was no such similarity and relationship existing between the lamb and the loaf in the passover as between Christ and the body.

But now a few quotations relative to time in the order of the feast known as the passover will be of value.

"Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb. . . . . and ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the month; and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening." Ex. xii. 4, 6. Thus the lamb or kid was to be slain in the evening of the fourteenth day of the month.

But further as to a disposition of the lamb: "And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread; . . . and ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; and that which remaineth until the morning ye shall burn with fire." Ex. xii. 8, 10.

Thus, nothing was, after the lamb was slain, to remain over till the next day. No such thing as the lamb being slain one evening and then an eating of it the next—twenty-four hours later—could occur.

But further, in reference to the work and character of this fourteenth day of the month read: "Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel. And in the first day there shall be a holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be a holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you." Ex. xii. 15, 16.

There are a few points in this quotation worthy of enumeration:

1. For seven days they were to eat unleavened bread.

2. Upon the first of these seven days no leavened bread was to be eaten, which first day must have been this fourteenth day, shall we say necessarily so—

a. In order to make out the count of seven days from the one and twentieth day of the month backward in count, for seven days must include the fourteenth.

b. Because it is so stated in v. 8 that the passover must be eaten with unleavened bread.

c. Because the fourteenth day in v. 18 is positively named as the first one of the seven, and one of holy convocation: "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even."

3 As these days were days of holy convocation "No manner of work shall be done in them."

III.—Crucifixion Day.

From the foregoing developments it follows beyond all doubt that Crucifixion day could not have occurred upon the fourteenth day of the month—the day that the paschal lamb was slain, but must have occurred upon the thirteenth. For this statement let me give the reasons:

1. For as the fourteenth was a day of holy convocation, and a day upon which no work was to be done, the Jews would never upon that day have consented to have gone into Pilate's court, or to have crucified Jesus and the thieves.

2. For it is written, "Then led they—the Jews—Jesus from Caiphas unto the hall of judgment; and it was early; and they themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the passover." Jno. xviii. 28. Thus upon the day of trial these Jews, Jesus' accusers had not yet eaten of the passover.

3. But further it is written: "When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said 'It is finished;' and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost. The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath day, (for that Sabbath day was a high day) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away." Jno. xix. 30, 31. What further proof need we? Who can doubt?

Conclusions.

Since the passover was slain and eat on the fourteenth day of the month, and since Jesus was crucified upon the preceding day—the thirteenth day of the month, it follows therefore,

1. That Jesus did not, and could not have eaten of what is generally denominated the last passover, but of a preparatory supper.

2. That it was not, and could not have been upon the fourteenth day of the month, and in connection with the passover supper, but upon the evening of the thirteenth day of the month that Jesus instituted the breaking of bread which is generally by the world denominated The Lord's Supper, and The Communion.

3. Therefore, as the ordinance of "the breaking of bread" was not instituted upon the fourteenth day of the month, nor in connection with the eating of the passover sacrifice, it does not come in the room and stead of the passover: it is not substituted for it, nor is it the antitype of the passover. Therefore the time for its observance does not have, nor cannot have any connection with the time for the observance of the passover institution.

In the April No. of Zion's Watch-Tower, appears an article from Brother Russell, the Editor, entitled "The Lord's Supper." In this article the Editor advocates the theory of a substitution of "the Supper" for the passover, and remarks that "Jesus died on the very same day," of course that the passover was killed and eaten.

We would ask Brother Russell, as he remarks elsewhere in the article that "Protestants have not generally given this subject much attention," either to give this subject a little closer attention or to give us a little "more light" on his count of time.

In connection with the last above quotation Brother Russell remarks: "Protestants have not generally given the subject much attentation, using the words—"As often as ye do this" as authority for any convenient time, and not seeing that "this" referred to the passover, as oft as ye do commemorate "this" event do it in remembrance—not of the type but of the antitype—me."

To Brother Russell's grammar in making the passover the antecedent to the demonstrative "this," we must object:—

1. Because as we have shown the two institutions were not by the Savior connect, but were at least twenty-four hours apart, and the instituting of the supper antidatip, the time of the passover.

2. Because in the entire paragraph given by Paul in which this language (as often as ye do this) occurs no reference whatever is made to the passover, or that the supper has become its antitype, or substitute.

Next, Brother Russell advertizes April fourteenth days, at eight o'clock P. M., our time, for the observance of the supper this year, 1881, as the time corresponding for the passover. How is this? Singular count this! My calendar puts the new moon March twenty-ninth day and between five and six o'clock P. M. According to Israelitish count their month commenced at sunset that same twenty-ninth day of March, our count.

The question then arises upon what evening in April, our count, would this fourteenth day of the moon's age come? It is easy to count. We will count.

Mar. [illegible] superfluous [illegible] was 1 day Jewish time
" 30	"	2	"
" 31	"	3	"
Apr. 1	"	4	"
" 2	"	5	"
" 3	"	6	"
" 4	"	7	"
" 5	"	8	"
" 6	"	9	"
" 7	"	10	"
" 8	"	11	"
" 9	"	12	"
" 10	"	13	"
" 11	"	14	"

Brother Russell, why this discrepancy in time, or are you "Using the words—'As often as ye do this,' as authority for any convenient time?"

But in an article in The Restitution for April 6, Brother Foore advertises at 8 o'clock p. m. April 15, as the time for observance, and invites his brethren to attend. Brother Foore, why this discrepancy between you and Brother Russell? Have you different calendars? It is true that you live near 1,000 miles west of where Brother Russell does, but this should hardly make twenty-four hours difference in time. However this is in about the same ratio of Brother Russell's count from Palestine westward. At Pittsburg, Pa., he is three days late of Israelitish time, and at Galesburg, Kan. Brother Foore is four days late.

Brother Foore remarks in his article, "Brethren, do not partake of this ordinance on the day of Christ's resurrection to show his death: but if it be done once a week, try and take Thursday evening." Question: Are we to gather the idea from this remark that Brother Foore understands this ordinance to be for the purpose of showing forth Christ's death, and the word death to be used in the sense of the act of dying? If so and time has anything to do in the institution, the question of importance arises what time is to be observed? Is it Israelitish time, the first month in the year? or is it the thirteenth day of the month? or is it the fifth day in the week? or is it the ninth hour in the day? What right have we to exact the month in the year without observing the day, as Brother Foore and Brother Russell have both failed this time? Why should not the day in the week be observed as closely as the day of the month? Why should not the ninth hour in the day—Israelitish time—the hour at which Jesus died be observed as closely as the month in the year and the day in the month if an institution is to show forth his death as an act? Why exact at one point and fail in another? But is not death in this instance, which this institution commemorates, like the penalty for sin, the absence of life, the death state as seen in the penalty upon Adam Gen. iii. 18–19, —"into dust shalt thou return—This is what it is. It is not my blood being shed, but shed. It is not my body being broken, but broken. It is blood in the sense of his life. It is body not personal, for not a bone of him was broken, but, in the sense of the church. It is a representation then of the blood—life of Christ during his personal ministry to demonstrate the way of life and immortality. It is a representation of the body—the church—in a broken and incomplete state yet in death, resting under the death sentence; watching, waiting, hoping and expecting the return of the Master when they will be redeemed from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. What better time, what more appropriate time then, to show forth our faith in the blood—the life—of Christ given for us, the broken condition of the body of Christ now, but complete in the morning of the resurrection, when all the members will be brought together and united to the head, than upon the first day of the week—the day of the week upon which Jesus arose. It is when the grey rays of the morning dawn from the East begin to arise, and to drive back the gloom of the night. It is the mingling with, and the victory of hope over despair. It is where sorrow and joy meet in a vacated tomb and sorrow is made to give place to joy in a risen Savior in a resurrected life, and in a complete and a united body in Christ.

Lanark, Ill.

Selections.

New York Observer.

THE ROMISH INQUISITION.

Is It Really Dead?

C. R. G. P.

Messrs. Editors:—I am inclined to think that Madame Bonaparte may have conveyed an erroneous impression by the remark in her last letter that the Inquisition at Rome has not been in operation for two hundred years. May it not have been in operation even in comparatively recent years, unknown to any save those who presided over it and those who were the victims of its cruelty? It is some thirty years since I visited that city in company with Mr. Stiles, then our Minister to Austria, and brother of the distinguished preacher of the same name. It was at a time when a tempest of revolution was sweeping over the whole of Europe; nor were the Pontifical States an exception. The people of Rome rose up in mass, drove Pio Nono out of the city, and compelled him to take refuge in the little town of Gaieta, some distance to the south. Scarcely had he departed, than the mob seeking some object of Papal despotism upon which to wreak their fury, selected the building of the Inquisition. The doors were burst open, and we—the only Americans in the city—went in with the crowd. Though a boy, hardly out of my teens, I can never forget the thrilling sights which there presented themselves to me. The walls of the broad hall through which the crowd surged were hung with instruments of torture of various sizes and shapes, the very sight of which sent a shudder through my frame. Then up and along the broad stairway we were carried into what was called the "Tribunal Chamber." The throne of the Chief Inquisitor occupied one end of the room; from the other proceeded a long, dark and very narrow passage, with a trap door in the darkest part. This trap-door was so arranged that the accused one, passing along and treading unsuspectingly upon it, was at once plunged headlong into the cellar below and speedily smothered in quicklime. Descending into the cellar, I saw for myself the lime, the bones of those who had perished, and even took up a piece of the matted hair of one of the victims. All this would seem to show a comparatively recent exercise of the cruelties of that institution, and I think that there are modern histories of Rome, as well as published incidents, that go to confirm the same. It was certainly the opinion of Gavazzi, who made the Inquisition a special subject of a lecture before a New York audience some little time after, that the cruelties of the Inquisition had been secretly carried on up to that period. I am well satisfied, from many things that I both saw and experienced in a recent visit to Spain, that the Romish Church still has the inclination, if not the power, to employ the same cruel methods which it employed in former times. The limited sufferance which, a few months ago, was accorded by that Government to those of another faith, has, I am sorry to say, through the remonstrances of the Romish Church, been very recently revoked, and intolerance is again the rule in that benighted land. The following extract from a manuscript of the Rev. Fritz Fliedner, of Madrid, containing a careful review of the present condition of affairs, will show this:—

"No less than three lawsuits against Protestant clergymen are in process, all undertaken by the authorities. One is accused of having buried a Protestant in the general cemetery; another in accordance with the law, held a Protest at service with not more than twenty persons; but on leaving the house, found a number of people on the threshing-floor, which he crossed, and spoke to several of them—he neither delivering an address nor holding a service; and he is now condemned by the Court of Appeal to two months' imprisonment. The upper Court has just decided that any one who does not take off his hat when a Roman Catholic funeral passes, can be imprisoned. This has since happened in case of a half blind man, who did not see that the funeral train was near."

This intolerance is especially evinced in the matter of the burial of the dead. "A professor of the gymnasium of Pontevedra died, and, not having received the sacraments, he was to be buried in the Civil Cemetery, when it was found that no grave could be dug, as a piece of rock had been allotted to the Protestants as graveyard, in which the graves would have to be hewn in the stone. In Alcazar de San Juan, the former Mayor had founded a civil cemetery. The Roman Church summarily took possession of it, and when, a few weeks ago, a man not belonging to that communion died, he was buried in the yard where the grave-digger keeps his pigs. In the Protestant Cemetery in San Vincente de Castellet, the grave of a Protestant has been profaned without any redress. The remains of the dead still remain exposed, and even dogs and cats are put in at night, that the superstitious people may be induced to believe that evil spirits are howling over the grave of the doomed Protestant."

Some of the pyramids near Cairo, Egypt, have been recently opened by Maspero, the archæological expert. The ones explored are those containing the tombs of the Egyptian Kings of the fifth dynasty. On the mortuary chapels of these are inscriptions of small and closely written texts, which, properly interpreted, give details of the religious beliefs and customs which prevailed at the time the inscriptions were made, and which show that the previous belief on these matters is utterly at fault. The discovery is regarded as of great value to archæologists, historians and scientists.

Brevities.

The great cavern which was discovered last year in Colorado has been thoroughly explored. Forty rooms are accessible, and many of them contain a profusion of stalactitic formations, in some cases translucent, and in others varying in color from red to pure white. Shining crystals, tufts of satiny fiber, slender arms resembling growths of pearl, rams' horns twisted in every conceivable way, pillars, pendants, stilettes and grotesque shapes of life are among the curiosities of these halls.

The death of Oscar de Lafayette, son of George Washington de Lafayette and grandson of the distinguished general of our Revolutionary War, nearly extinguishes this historic family. The only person living of the name is his brother Edmond, a confirmed bachelor, with whom the Lafayettes will expire. The family was among the oldest and most historic of France and had been famous in the history of that country even before the days of Charlemagne, figuring conspicuously among the heroes whose deeds are related in the pages of Froissart.

The Persian correspondent of the London Daily News writes of the Turcoman tribes: "Up to forty or fifty years ago, when firearms were almost unknown among the Nomads, the Derguez and Attock warriors had iron helmets with sliding nose guard, and wore shirts of chain mail. These defensive arms were very efficacious against light curved cimeters and such projectiles as arrows. With the general introduction of firearms the helmet and mail ceased to be worn. Suits can now be bought here for very little. I saw one the other day, helmet and all, sold for 25 francs. One sees also the curious stone rings formerly worn on the left thumb, by the Turcoman archer horsemen to save it from the rebound of the bowstring. "Tir" is the Persian for an arrow, and "cemon" a bow; and though the union of the two sounds very like the present name of the descendants of the famous archers of antiquity, it has nothing whatever to do with the etymology of the word Turcoman."

A curious document was presented to Prince Bismarck the other afternoon in the shape of the anti-Semitic petition, which has been going about the empire for signature for the last six months, and which aims at imposing restrictions on the immigration of Jews into Germany, at excluding them from certain walks of activity altogether, and, in fact, of undoing much of the legislation of the past in their favor. Silesia, which has been most assiduously worked upon by the anti-Semitics, as being the channel through which the westward stream of Jewish immigration pours, has alone contributed one-fifth of the total number of signatures, while Brandenburg follows with 38,000, including 12,000 from Berlin; Westphalia, with 27,000; the Rhine province, with 20,000; while south Germany has made but a poor show of intolerance. Baden, with Hohenzollern, sending only 7,000, and Bavaria but 2,000. The king of Bavaria, it may be remembered, issued an order strictly forbidding government officials to further in any way the movement, which had begun to show signs of spreading in his territory. The Catholic districts of the empire have, as a rule, refrained from joining in the agitation against the Jews.

JAILS AND ALMS HOUSES DESERTED.

No liquor licenses have been granted in Potter county, Pa., since 1869, and here are the grand effects: At a recent term of the court, the district attorney informed the court that he had no indictments to present to the grand jury; the sheriff also stated that he had no criminals in the prison; the directors of the poor reported that they had no one to keep at the charge of the county.

GOD ESTABLISHED
—AND—
The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. Eychaner.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 12 for 50c., or $3 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent prepaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

Bible Pearls. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 3000 Baptists, in 1879. 3. Immateriality. 4. The Kingdom of God & Nature of Man and Thought for Thinkers. 5. The Two Advents. 6. What is Religion? 7. The Resurrection Age. 8. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptists. Ten copies &c., or assorted packages of 100, $1.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5 for 10c; 20 for 25c; 100 for 60c.
The Soldier of Man in Death. Contains an abridgment of preceding.
Life and Death. A popular statement and refutation of the two views of these terms, in full; the Theological and Bible view.
Human Government.—Palmer. By A. B. Mackenzie.
Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"
Hell Tract. B. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.
What is Death? B. V. Reed. An excellent collection of the Bible teaching and modern theory.
The Perverted Parable. Two Rich Men and Lazarus. S. Laing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2 cents, or $15 a M.
Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. B. V. Reed. Contemplates the infinite three fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or $2 a C.
Christian Unity. Joel A. Simonds.
Is Christ one and the Kingdom of God. B. Reed. Should end in inquiring minds.
Responsible Immortality. Dr. Ezekiel. The grand results of redemption. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 10 for 35c, or $3 for $1.
The New Birth. Joseph Seiss.
Hope for the Worlds. Joel A. Simonds.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss. In it Dr. Seiss sets forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations,
What is Right. T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching as to the question as to whether a Saint's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so fully reflected to by prophets and apostles.
The King in His Beauty. B. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5 cents each; $3 for 50c., or $5 for $1.
Die Ewige Bund der Reiche Gottes. Teaches the true notion of God's Kingdom.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. B. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
5 cents each, or $3 for $1.
Evangelism concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the Bible teaching concerning the Kingdom of God and the nature of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.
The Restitution of the world restored to its primeval state, and the basis of its everlasting continuance. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout in harmony with Bible teaching. 96 pages, price 10c.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxii. 24 pages, price 5c.
Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A connected history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 20 pages, price 5c.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 72 pages, price 25c.
Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self contradictions of the Bible." By A. J. Smith. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 25c.
Discussion on the State of the Dead, Between the Rev. W. C. Beardsman, Congregational minister, and W. Bellamy, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Beardsman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the grave. Cloth 60c., paper 40c.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Presbyterian of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.
The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 176 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.
Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.25.
God's Plan of Salvation. J. H. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading features of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 250 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By Wiley Jones.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, toned paper, 256 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to
WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

The New Testament in Greek and English!
—entitled—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By Benjamin Wilson.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary Word-for-word English translation, Said to be renderings of eminent critics, also the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Historic-ative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 986 pages. Cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

--- MAN ---

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE,

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in The Restitution of Jan. 26, 1881, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 12 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY THE
The Christian Publishing Association,

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. R. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. E. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER. WM. RAILSBACK.
I. C. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
M. STEPHENSON. B. WILSON.
J. P. WEETHEE. J. A. SIMONDS.
WILEY JONES. C. M. MYERS.
A. H. HARTDEB.

The Restitution.

Keep Bro Weethees Article.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 18, 1881. NO. 19.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and his immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Third Trumpet. Rev. viii. 10, 11. General Sketch. Terms Defined. History of the Events. Application.

No. 68.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Third Trumpet.—And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers and fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood, and many men died of the waters because they were made bitter.—Rev. viii. 10, 11.

General Sketch.—A new series of events follows the third angel's trumpet:—A meteor, leaving its place in the heavens, suspended over the Roman world, shoots rapidly down the sky toward the earth. Its magnitude and brilliancy cast a lurid glare over the vast concave. It was a meteor of the first magnitude. It was peculiar in its shape—like a lamp.

John followed its downward pathway, till it was extinguished in the fountains of running streams.

Its elements, held in solution, impart their peculiar properties to the waters; they are converted into bitters resembling wormwood, yet exceedingly poisonous and fatal.

This peculiar property gives name to the star; it is called Wormwood All the waters, holding in solution this star element (the European waters) imparted deadly poison to those who were obliged to use them; "many men died because the waters were made bitter."

We have an agent and its agency.

Terms defined.—"Great Star"—"lamp shape." There are two kinds of stars, fixed—those that are of immense magnitude, and those that fall or shoot through the heavens. The former we call planets, and suns; the latter we name meteors.

Shooting stars seem to be more or less connected with our planet. When they fall they seem to touch the earth. Meteorites or meteorolites, are stones, high in the air, and shooting through it. Such, perhaps, was the one seen by John.

"Third Part."—One of the divisions of the Roman world. At the era of this trumpet, the empire had three divisions, but only two emperors, and three capitals: Old and New Rome, and Ravenna.

Third part has also another meaning—a large portion. In Ezek. v. 12, is the following: "A third part of thee shall die with the pestilence; and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee; and a third part shall fall by the sword about thee; and I will scatter a third part into all the winds, and I will draw out a sword after them." "And it shall come to pass (that) in all the land, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off (and) die; but the third shall be left therein. And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and I will try them as gold is tried." Zech. xiii. 8, 9.

We think that it covers the western division of the Roman empire.

"The name of the Star is called Wormwood."—Wormwood—Ἄψινθος—is here used as a proper name; yet it seems to be an attribute of the star, since it is a name given to denote the character of the star—bitterness. The star was like wormwood in being bitter, it made the waters bitter.

"Waters," "Fountains," "Rivers."—In these visions John has a view of the Roman Earth. Its heavens, glorious by the sun, moon, and stars; its mountains and cities, fountains, rivers, and seas; men, occupied with the business of all trades and professions. A busy, moving world is before him.

The symbols are taken from the natural world—the physical world, over, under, and around the Roman empire. Physical phenomena are more familiar to mankind than moral phenomena; the natural phenomena are therefore used as illustrations.

The star, the fountains, the rivers, the waters, and the men, are, in the vision, symbols of physical objects, selected to represent similar objects, attributes and actions in the moral world. With this scenic view in our minds let us find its photograph in history.

Profane history of the Third Trumpet.—Empire of Huns.—A brief sketch of that extraordinary race will aid us to understand more readily the events of the third trumpet.

The Huns, a deformed race, a mixture of Calmuck Tartar blood, originated in an extensive, dry, and barren tract, north of the great wall of China. To stop the inroads of the Huns, that wall was constructed, two centuries before Christ. They conquered China and Siberia. Under another dynasty they were driven out of that empire, and lost, in the war, nearly all of their original possessions.

Their empire, which had stood nearly thirteen centuries, having terminated through divisions, their bravest warriors, with their families, resolved to conquer a home in the wilds of a distant west.

During many years, they were wanderers between the empires of China and Rome; lost to the former, and unknown to the latter.

They conquered the Alani, "A pastoral people, who occupied or wasted an extensive tract of the deserts of Scythia."—Gibbon.

They spread over the plains of the Alani, between the Volga and the Tanais, and formed a union with a remnant of that conquered nation.

Their forces being thus augmented, they invaded the territory of the Gothic nation, which at that time extended from the Euxine, or Black Sea, to the Baltic.

At the approach of this unknown enemy, the Goths were terror-stricken. The personal appearance of the Huns added horror to the utter desolation that followed their movements, so sudden, and with such celerity.

It was a matter of doubt in the minds of the Goths whether these strangers were strictly human. Their shrill voices and uncouth gestures aroused their suspicions that the Huns were a cross with some other race. Their broad faces, flat noses, broad shoulders; their small, black, deeply-sunken eyes, square bodies, and their dark, gashed, and almost beardless faces, testified against their human origin. They were gorillas in form rather than men.

Their uncouth and savage visage, induced the Goths to credit, very readily their fabulous origin:—That they were offspring of Scythian witches copulating with infernal spirits.

The Goths were overthrown, and forced across the Danube into the Roman empire.

They first call the attention of the Romans under Attila, their great king.

The person of Attila was as remarkable as his deeds.

"The portrait of Attila exhibits the genuine deformity of a modern Calmuck; a large head, a swarthy complexion, small, deep-seated eyes; flat nose, a few hairs in the place of a beard, broad shoulders, and a short square body; of nervous strength though of disproportioned form. The haughty step and demeanor of the king of the Huns expressed the consciousness of his superiority above the rest of mankind; and he had the custom of fiercely rolling his eyes, as if he wished to enjoy the terror which he inspired."—Gibbon.

Taking leave of the nation of the Huns, let us follow the history of Attila, their visible embodiment.

At this point in profane history, or soon after, begins the Apocalyptic view. Attila assumed, like Zingis of the Moguls, a supernatural origin. He, having the rightful possession of the sword of Mars, asserted his divine claim to universal dominion.

He called himself "The Scourge of God;" and boasted that where his horse planted his hoof grass could never grow. As an agent of the Almighty, he called himself lord of the Roman empire.

His first bitter cup was drained by the eastern empire.

He had prepared himself by the conquest of Scythia, nearly all of Siberia, Scandinavia, and the German nations to poison the very fountains and streams of Roman life, and thus rapidly to hasten its dissolution.

Attila first invaded the eastern Roman world. His ravages spread along a front of five hundred miles, from the Adriatic to the Black Sea; overthrew the Romans in three great battles; took seventy cities, and carried his conquests to the walls of Constantinople.

"In all their invasions of the civilized empires of the south, the Scythian shepherds have been uniformly actuated by a savage and destructive spirit." Gibbon.

It was so with Zingis the great Mogul chief; it was so with Attila in his eastern attack; it was the same in all his invasions;—not conquest, but dissolution.

It was to level all monuments of civilization; to reduce a land smiling with cultivated fields, prosperous villages and cities, to a Scythian wilderness.

In such a mission Attila deserves the title of "Scourge of God."

The slain in battle, the number destroyed in pillaging excursions, and his captives, nearly depopulated the northern parts of the Greek empire.

His conditions of peace were humiliating and exhaustive. He did not conquer the empire, but he obliged it to drain the cup of bitterness.

Attila tormented the emperor, by continued embassies, to sue for all back payments; and to produce all the fugitives, still protected in the empire.

It was the intention of Attila to overthrow the Roman empire, both east and west; still hesitating which he should first accomplish.

During this suspense, he dispatched his ministers to the courts of Ravenna and Constantinople with the following message: "Attila, my lord, and thy lord, commands thee to provide a palace for his immediate reception."

The unsettled state of the kingdom of the Franks, brought about by the death of their king, Clodion, decided Attila to the invasion of the western empire, by the way of Gaul.

Attila espoused the cause of Clodion's elder son, while the Roman promised to defend the claims of the younger son.

The rival armies met on the plains of Chalons. On the Catalaunian fields was fought one of the greatest battles of the world. It was there contested, whether Europe should be governed, henceforth by the Mongolian or the Germanic. It was decided in favor of the latter. Attila was defeated, yet he was not conquered. He was obliged to retire from the field, and finally to evacuate Gaul.

The slaughter of that battle was immense—from 152,000 to 300,000. The latter figures cover, perhaps, the number slaughtered during the entire conflict.

Attila marked his pathway into Gaul by rapine and bloodshed. The consternation produced in every province of Gaul, by its invasion by Attila, was exceedingly great. No plague or any ordinary desolating scourge could have produced such an alarm.

We have now followed Attila, the Hun, through three noted conflicts; one only remains.

1. His first great conflict was the subjugation of Germanic nations, with other barbarous tribes.

2. The second contest was with the Greek division of the Roman empire.

3. The third conflict was in Gaul where he met his first, and we may say, his only reverse.

The first was a conquest, but it was principally beyond the Roman empire. The second and third were bitter scourges: the second in the eastern empire, the third in the western empire.

The way of salvation is a highway; highways are always free; the peasant has the same right as the poor; the meanest beggar has the same warrant to travel this road as the greatest monarch; proud nature does not like this: "Whosoever will, let him come."

THAT ARTICLE.

Matthew xxviii. 19, 20.

C. M. MYERS.

Since Brother Reed has written his short article on the above text, I see that Brother T. G. Newman also has written, heartily endorsing what Brother Reed has said. Like Brother Newman I too say let "The triune God, triune or 'trine' immersion, and triune name to be baptized into, with many other triplet fables, fall." Yea, and may all that the Paganistic doctrine of the Trinity has brought us likewise go.

Of Brother Reed's article I want to say that I most heartily endorse what he has said in numbers 1, 2 and 3; but must dissent from his number four.

It is true that Trinitarianism has wonderfully corrupted the text of our Bibles. And it is also true that that class of corruptions is the most difficult we have to deal with, and the hardest we have to correct, from the fact that the church became wedded to Paganism, and the doctrines of the Trinity arose and spread wide at an earlier date than many of the now possessed manuscripts were prepared, and therefore many of these corruptions appear in the body of the manuscripts. So were I satisfied that the text—Matt. xxviii. 19, 20—was spurious, then I too would say let it go. But we should be careful. To my mind the evidence is not strong enough for a rejection of the text. Therefore I am still willing to try a reconciliation between the apparent difficulties of this text and the remainder of the Bible. Indeed I think what Brother Reed has said in the preceding part of his article will present at least a fair reconciliation. I yet want to remark:

1. That what Priestly has written I have not seen, having only his work entitled "Corruptions of Christianity."

2. "The Creeds of Christendom," written by W. R. Gregg, we have frequently met on railroad trains and examined. It gives discredit to the whole book of Matthew claiming that Matthew never saw the history we have hearing that title. It is a skeptical work, and belongs to that class of literature, which of late years, has so poisoned the minds of the people, and therefore it will not do to depend on. Indeed it is unworthy of a citation.

3. With the Improved Version at hand the note referred to is as follows: "Some have called in question the genuineness of this verse, but without sufficient authority." This version published in 1809 is strictly Unitarian.

4. The Parisian MS. is none other than the Ephremi. T. K. Cheyne, R. L. Clarke, S. R. Driver and Alfred Good in their brief history of MSS., say of this one, "Now in the National Library at Paris, mutilated, containing about half the New Testament, no single book being entire."

Stowe, on manuscripts says: Ephraim manuscript so called from Ephraim the Syrian, a Mesopotamian Saint of the age of Constantine. * * * Same class manuscript as the Alexandrian as to age, form of letters, etc. It originally contained the whole Greek Bible. * * * In the 12th century St. Ephraim employed the paper to write his sermons on, taking the leaves promiscuously, sometimes tother end turned up and back side turned front. These sermons formed a thin quarto volume containing 64 leaves of the Old Testament and 145 of the New. * * * 2 John and 3 John are wholly missing. About 37 chapters are wanting in the four gospels; 10 chapters in Acts; 42 in the Epistles, and 8 in Revelation.

Bishop Horn says of this manuscript: "The chasms in the New Testament are very numerous."

Though this manuscript was once complete, and though its fragments are now of value for criticism, yet as it has now become fragmentary, it is easily seen that it will not do to omit all that it omits, and as the omissions were not intentional but accidental, therefore its omissions simply weigh nought against their credibility.

5. The Sinaitic and the Vatican manuscripts antedating this Parisian manuscript both contain this verse.

6. The Syriac antedating in age all other manuscripts contain this verse.

7. I have in possession three Unitarian versions complete, and they all contain the verse.

8. I have on hands a half dozen other Unitarian works all of which often quote these verses but say nothing of their doubtful authenticity.

Therefore we think the foundation is good for the retention of this verse. We submit this in love and respect, but for truth's sake.

Youths' Column.

Northern Indianian.

Not As We Please,

S. ROXANA WIXE.

"I can do as I please when the maple shade
Are covered two on that one birthday,
That stands ahead with its pleasant lines
Stretching out on the meads away?"

"I can go and come with the bird and bee,
Freed from the bonds of my girlhood years,
And laugh and dance as the world I see,
With never a thought of these bleeding tears."

Ah little maid, with thy soft brown hair,
With thy rosebud mouth and thy meek blue eye,
This dream of thine, with its pictures fair,
Is a specter luring thee on to die!

Nor never in life can we safely throw
The chains of law from our souls away,
Nor wander out in the world to sow,
The baneful seeds of an unbridled day.

God holds us bound to the law of right,
And a blessing comes if we meekly bend,
Opening our minds to the blessed light,
The faults of our faltering steps to mend.

His precious word is the only mold
Where we can in lovely form be cast;
And she who would come out fairest gold,
Must bind her heart to its precepts fast.

Christian Advocate.

Children Poisoned with Tobacco.

In one of the schools of Brooklyn a boy thirteen years old, naturally very quick and bright, was found to be growing dull and stupid. His face was pale, and he had nervous twitchings. He was obliged to quit school.

Inquiry showed that he had become a confirmed smoker of cigarettes. When asked why he did not give it up he shed tears and said he had often tried, but could not.

The growth of this habit is insidious and its effects ruinous. The eyes, the brain, the nervous system, the memory, the power of application, are all impaired by it.

"It's nothing but a cigarette," is really "It is nothing but poison." German and French physicians have recently protested against it, and a convention of Sunday and secular teachers was recently held in England to check it. It was presided over by an eminent surgeon of a Royal Eye Infirmary, who stated that many diseases of the eye were directly caused by it.

Parents, save your children from this vice if possible! Do not allow them to deceive you. In future years they will raise up and bless you for restraining them.

N. Y. Observer.

The Stone Lamb.

A German minister, Pastor O'Fencke, tells a story in a very interesting book of his about things which have really happened to him, or which he has met with on his travels.

In 1865 he stood, with a little band of travelers, before the beautiful Roman Catholic chapel of "Werden an der Ruhr," in Germany, waiting for the key to be brought that the door might be unlocked for them to enter. While they waited they saw something on the ledge of the roof, which they found to be a carved stone lamb, and began to wonder what it meant up there.

They asked an old woman who was hobbling along a little way off, if she could tell them about it, and she replied, "Yes;" and related the reason why it had been placed in that strange place.

"Many, many years ago," she said, "where that lamb now stands, a man was busy repairing the roof of the chapel, who had to sit in a basket fastened by a rope as he worked. Well, he was working in this manner one day, when suddenly the rope which held the basket gave way, and he fell down, down from that great height to the ground below!

Of course, every one who saw the dreadful accident expected that the man would be killed; especially as the ground just there was covered with sharp stones and rocks, which the men were using for building. But, to their great astonishment, he arose from the ground and stood up quite uninjured.

And this was how it happened: A poor lamb had wandered quite up to the side of the chapel, in search of the sweet young grass which sprung up among the stones, and the man had fallen exactly on the soft body of this lamb—it had saved his life, for he had escaped with the mere fright, and with not so much as a finger broken. But the poor lamb was killed by his heavy fall upon it. So, out of pure gratitude the man had the stone lamb carved, and set up for a lasting memento of his escape from so fearful a death, and of what he owed to the poor lamb."

Do you not think this is a beautiful story? Does it not remind you of the story of the Lord Jesus—the Lamb of God who was slain for us that we might live forever? Never forget that "he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities."

Let us copy the poor man's example in being truly thankful, and in showing that we are so. He could not do anything more for the lamb which had so wonderfully saved his life, than make a little monument or memento of what it had done.

But there is much that we can do for the Lamb of God who was slain for us. We can love him for what he has done, and we can give him the one thing he wants from us. Do you ask what it is for which even the God of glory longs, he who has all the riches of the world, and to whom heaven and earth belong? He says: "My son, give me thine heart."

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 15.

HOW TO CONFESS JESUS.

Now I wonder if there are any of the children who have been learning these things, who are willing to stand up for Jesus? Do you know what it is to stand up for him? what it is to confess his name? It is to confess that your future life depends upon him, and upon him alone; that he only can raise you from the dead,—to confess that you believe the covenants of promise, believe that it is this earth that is promised to Christ; that it is to be his kingdom, and to endure forever, and that all who believe in Jesus as the Christ of the promises, and come into him by being baptized into his death, can share in that kingdom and in blessing the nations. If you deny these things you deny him. If you are ashamed of his words, you are ashamed of him.

If you confess Jesus by confessing the truth, now, he will own you for his when he comes.

Are you willing? Then stand up for him to-day. Say "I want to be a Christian." I want to serve God. I want to mind him. I am going to try not to get angry any more. Not to wish that I had all the nice things that other people have. Not to care for the foolish pleasures of this world. I will deny myself all ungodliness and lustful lusts. I will try to increase in the knowledge of the truth, "to live and work for Jesus." He will accept you for he has never sent anyone away who sincerely wanted to come.

It is easy to begin serving God in your youth, and if you do begin doing right now, you will be very happy when the journey's end is reached, that all your life has been given to him.

The pleasures and riches of this world cannot last; you cannot keep them, and while you are wasting your time purchasing them, you are losing the joys of the everlasting future.

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," is God's command. Come to Jesus now, give up your sins now, enter the path of obedience now. Learn, believe and do God's commandments now, and when Jesus comes you will not be afraid. You will be glad to see him and to share in his glory.

The white robes of the saved will be yours. You will wave the victor's palm. You will join in singing the new song. Oh how glad I shall be to meet you there and to help you sing.

I love you dear children, and because I love you, I beg you again to come to Jesus and be saved in his kingdom.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

Sententious.

Beautiful are the admonitions of him whose life accords with his teachings.

The universal heart of a man blesses flowers. He has wreathed them around the cradle, the marriage altar and the tomb.

He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit in the centre and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts
Benighted walks under the midday sun—
Himself his own dungeon.
—Milton.

Ostentation and much learning are seldom met together. The sun rising and declining makes long shadows; at mid-day, when it is the highest, none at all.

Our lives are like some complicated machine, working on one side of a wall, and delivering the finished fabric on the other. We cannot cross the barrier and see the end. The work is in our hands—the completion of it is not.

When you do not need help from any one then any one will help you; and when you do need help the world is somehow always looking the other way.

Thou art the bright and morning star
Immanuel!
Through all the burden of life's day,
Oh, may my heart's deep well
Reflect thy light divine;
And in my day's decline,
Rise thou as evening star, and on me shine!

What a folly to dread the thought of throwing away life at once, and yet have no regard to throwing it away by parcels and piecemeal. —John Howe.

The hills of lofty endeavor and high achievement lie all around us, and if we never eat a glimpse of the views they afford, we need not complain that it is because of the insuperable limitation of our surroundings.

What can be a stronger motive to a firm trust and reliance on the mercies of our Maker, than the giving us his Son to suffer for us?—Addison.

Listen to the water-mill,
Through the live-long day,
How the clashing of the wheels
Wears the hours away!
Lazily the autumn wind
Stirs the greenwood leaves;
From the fields the reapers sing,
Binding up the sheaves,
And a proverb haunts my mind,
As a spell is cast:
"The mill will never grind
With the water that has passed."

Why cannot men begin to glorify God with a yard-stick, a pair of shears, a hand saw, and a goose quill in their hands, and not wait for golden harps? —Golden Rule.

I had rather believe all the fables in the legend and the Talmud and the Alcoran, than that this universal frame is without a mind; and therefore God never wrought miracles to convince Atheism, because his ordinary works convince it. It is true that a little philosophy inclineth man's mind to Atheism; but depth in philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion, for while the mind of man looketh upon second causes scattered, it may sometimes rest in them, and go no further, but when it beholdeth the chain of them confederate, and linked together, it must needs fly to Providence and Deity.—Lord Bacon.

The showers that fell a thousand years ago watered the earth and rendered it fruitful for the men living. They cannot now be gathered up and made available for us. They did not constitute a reservoir for the supply of future generations. In like manner the unrecorded teachings of Christ and his apostles did their work. They were not designed for our instruction. It is as impossible to learn what they were, as it is to gather up the leaves which adorned and enriched the earth when Christ walked in the garden of Gethsemane.—Dr. Hedge.

THE RESTITUTION.

B. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 18, 1881.

COMMUNICATIONS from Brother J. Cameron, Edinburgh, Scotland, have come to hand. Will give them to our readers shortly. Articles from others will find a place in due season. Our brethren must exercise patience, as we have a very flush supply of manuscript communications on hand at the present time.

THE state of affairs in the East is anything but assuring as to the future peace of the nations. So far as Greece is concerned the allotment of the greater part of Thessaly is an instalment of what she has claimed, and with which the Great Powers advise her to be content, as nothing more could be had without a war. This she may not risk though greatly dissatisfied with the arrangement. The Jews in Russia are subjected to the most fearful violence. Their shops have been pillaged and their houses burned. These riots have occurred at several different places. A late telegram states that the whole Jewish quarter at Kieff had been burned. Crowds of refugees are crossing over into Austria. The French are pursuing a very aggressive policy in Northern Africa. In South Africa quiet is not yet restored. The world is in a state of uneasy disquiet, but our space compels us to be brief on the general state of affairs this week.

WE print Brother Thomas' article entire in one number as we intend to use the type, as now set up, for a tract. We are persuaded that it will be a timely tract for general distribution. While we have distributed excellent works on infidelity in book form, we have not had the subject discussed in the cheap form of tracts. We think this, and the forth-coming one by Bro. Magruder will meet an existing want, and hope that our friends will do all they can to give them a general circulation. There is no time to lose. What we do for the cause of truth must be done soon, as this dispensation nears its close. We think with regard to Peter's prophesy that its grand intent is to foretell a fearful scene yet in the future. If the Jews fell upon the stone and were broken, its future fall upon the Gentiles will grind them to powder. An awful doom awaits a sinful world at the close of this gospel age. That Peter was the apostle of the circumcision, should not be lost sight of however in this connection. His prophecy may be comprehensive like our Lord's on the Mount of Olives.

THE following describes the situation of the Jews in Russia when in the best circumstances:

RUSSIA.—"The Jew, in his civil capacity" (says the Jewish World)—"the Jew as a citizen—is just where he was five-and-twenty years ago in Russia. Hampered in his endeavors to advance, harassed in his attempts to excel, handicapped in every profession by his faith, he finds no vent for his energy, no scope for his restless activity, neither reward nor consideration for his labor. He is still scribbled, cabined and confined by restrictive legislation. Compelled to reside in certain specified districts, forbidden to follow any but prescribed callings, effectually hindered from engaging in agriculture, and subjected to taxes which none others pay, he struggles on under disadvantages of which the outer world hears comparatively nothing. The official censorship exercised over the Russian press effectually gags the Jewish journals. Hence the little that is heard and known of the disabilities under which our brethren in Russia labor, and of the prohibitive restrictions that hinder their progress while embittering their lot."

Communications.

REASONS WHY I BELIEVE THE BIBLE TO BE THE WORD OF GOD.

DR. J. H. THOMAS.

My first reason for believing the Bible to be the voice of God is founded in my unquestioning belief in the existence of God.

The Atheist, he who he may, that gives the lie to the still small voice of his own consciousness, by saying he does not believe there is a God, cannot be expected to acknowledge that God has spoken; and therefore, would seem to most people consistent with himself in saying, the Bible is not God's word; but I contend that the Deist or Infidel who acknowledges the existence of a God is expected to believe that God has or does speak; therefore, to be consistent with himself, ought to believe that the Bible is God's word. That these propositions are consistent and reasonable I shall endeavor to show.

There are few indeed who emphatically deny the existence of a God, though there may be many who do not believe in the personality of God—which by the way, is about equal to saying that God does not exist—yet, this class admit some great first cause or primal energy, as the source from which springs all life and intelligence.

I contend there is no man of intelligence and education possessing ordinary reasoning powers who can emphatically deny the existence of God without giving the lie to the involuntary admission of his own mind that back of all we see—of all we are able to comprehend, there is still the incomprehensible—a first cause, designer, and creator of all things.

Hence Professor Tyndall, a man great in the school to which he belongs says:

> Science does not in any degree lessen the wonder with which we look at the material universe. At best it only marshals the phenomena of nature under the head of all its sequences, which are law; but the great ocean of all the unknown supply recedes as we advance, and all the researches that science may make to the end of time, will never abridge by one hair's breadth the infinite expanse of mystery across the boundless ocean. The region of mystery lies not merely in the distance, but also at our very feet. When I have looked at the spring-tide, at the sprouting leaves, and grass, and flowers; when I have seen the general joy of opening life, I have asked myself the question, can it be that there is no being or thing in nature that knows more about these matters than I do? Can it be that I in my ignorance represent the highest knowledge existing of these things in the universe? The man who puts that question to himself, if he be not a shallow man; if he be capable of being penetrated by a profound thought, will never answer it by professing that creed of Atheism, that has been so lightly attributed to me.—Inaugural Address British Association, Manchester, England.

Professor Tyndall then finds the still, small voice of his own consciousness tell him there is a higher intelligence in the universe than his own; that beyond the joy of opening life there is a God.

I furthermore contend that it is almost, if not quite, impossible for an intelligent mind with fair reasoning powers to doubt the existence of God.

No man can comprehend that there is no limit to space; he cannot understand how such a thing can be; yet he is compelled to believe it because he finds it impossible to disbelieve it. No man can comprehend the fact that illimitable space always existed; he cannot understand how such a thing could be, yet he is compelled to believe it because he finds it impossible to disbelieve it.

So I contend no man can comprehend or understand how there can be an uncreated, self-existent intelligence, or God, yet he is compelled to believe it because he finds it, like Professor Tyndall, impossible to disbelieve it.

It is just as difficult for a man to bring himself to believe there is no God, as to bring himself to believe there is a limit to space, or that there was a time when there was no space. I contend he cannot do either.

To say there was no space would be equal to saying there was nothing, which would involve the absurdity, too monstrous to be entertained even by an Atheist, that all things come from nothing, or that nothing became something.

To say there is no God is equal to saying there is no primal energy, or creative power, which involves an equally great absurdity, too monstrous for any except an Atheist to believe, that everything created itself, and that without the power to do so.

Is it not therefore more consistent and reasonable, and more in harmony with our natures, to believe with the Psalmist David, as poetically paraphrased by Addison in these words:

> The spacious firmament on high,
> With all the blue ethereal sky,
> And spangled heavens a shining frame
> Their great original proclaim.
> The unwearied sun, from day to day
> Does his Creator's power display,
> And publishes to every land,
> The work of an Almighty hand.
> Soon as the evening shades prevail,
> The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
> And nightly to the listening earth
> Repeats the story of her birth;
> While all the stars that round her burn,
> And all the planets in their turn,
> Confirm the tidings as they roll,
> And spread the truth from pole to pole.
> What though in solemn silence all
> Move round this dark terrestrial ball;
> What though no real voice nor sound,
> Amidst their radiant orbs be found,
> In reason's ear they all rejoice,
> And utter forth a glorious voice,
> Forever singing as they shine,
> The hand that made us is divine.

Hence, Tom Paine, in his virulent, inconsistent reasonableness, and oftentimes ridiculous contention against the Bible, "The Age of Reason," admits the existence of a God, but only admits it, but says plainly, "I believe in one God, and no more;" not only says he believes in a God, but adds "It is the fool only, and not the philosopher, or even the prudent man that would live as if there were no God," thus unconsciously endorsing the truthfulness of the Bible he so maligns which said to the world thousands of years before Paine lived, "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God."

But I must here repeat what I have already said, that to contend that God has no form, but is merely blind unintelligent unreasoning force or power, is virtually to disbelieve in a God; for to deny the personality of God is to deny the intelligence of God, which would not only involve the absurdity that there is no higher intelligence in the universe than our own which is too monstrous for any human being to believe, but would require us to believe the greater absurdity, if such can be, that all things, human intelligence as well, were the creation of blind intelligent, unreasoning, nonentient force, or power; which I contend no man can believe, and which no man contends for, except in a vain endeavor to silence the still small voice of his own consciousness, that there is an uncreated, self-existent, all-wise Creator, to whom he is indebted for his existence, and responsible for his actions.

But I am here met by the Atheist with the contention that it is impossible for the human mind to believe in a God that has form, as such a belief would necessitate a power beyond, by which that form was created, which would involve an absurdity.

In answer to this I contend that the human mind finds no greater necessity to look beyond an intelligent being, or God possessing form, for a power that created him, than it does to look beyond illimitable space for a power that created it. As the mind accepts the one as thereafter, so may it accept the other.

It is therefore more consistent and reasonable to believe in a self-existent uncreated being possessing form, who is the centralization and embodiment of all intelligence, of all life, and of all power, than to believe that all life, all intelligence, and all the varied forms in the universe were evolved from or by blind unreasoning unintelligent force.

But before leaving this point we must slay the infidel with the sword of his own construction. He rejects the God of the Bible who is represented as a being, because he claims he cannot believe in the eternity of form; yet he contends for, and believes in the eternity of matter or substance; a moment's thought and it will be seen that he must then of necessity believe in the eternity of form, as form is essential to all matter or substance. Therefore he must withdraw his contention for the eternity of matter or believe in God as an uncreated, self-existent, all-wise being from whom radiates all life, intelligence, and power; and out of whom are all things.

With this conviction then, that there is a God, every intelligent man does violence to his own sense of what is consistent—to his own sense of what is reasonable, to say that he does not believe that God has spoken; does not believe he has made a revelation of himself, nor of his purpose concerning the world. I contend we are compelled to believe, resist it as we may, that God, the source and fountain of all life, mind and intelligence, has spoken to the world.

We are compelled to believe it, because it would not be Godlike to speak into existence intelligences with the capacity of comprehension like ourselves, and leave us to grope our way in the dark through life down to the silence and darkness of an atheistic night. We cannot believe that a God would speak into existence so purposeless a creation. If our intelligences rose no higher than the brute creation, there would be no call for a revelation; but our superior intelligence, our capacity for comprehension, calls for a knowledge of why we exist, and what we were created for.

Again it would not be Godlike to speak into existence intelligences under conditions in which they must go down to endless death, unless they knew how to avoid it, and yet not make known how death could be avoided; yet such is absolutely true if there be no revelation from Deity. I contend therefore that it is both consistent and reasonable to believe that God has spoken to us.

Even Thomas Paine, in his "Age of Reason," admits the correctness of this reasoning, (admits the necessity of a revelation), and in answer to the question, "Are we to have no word of God, no revelation?" he says: "Yes there is a word of God, there is a revelation." But he then says "that word of God is the creation we behold;" and then adds "It is in this word (the creation) which no human invention can counterfeit or alter that God speaketh universally to man."

With this we fully agree, and why should we not, for thousands of years before Thomas Paine lived, the Bible, that book he condemns, made known that truth to the world in the words of David:

"The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork."

And the apostle Paul speaking of God says:

"The invisible things of him from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head, so that they are without excuse."

But while the Bible makes known to the world that God has revealed himself "universally to man" through his creation, or in the works of nature, it is more explicit than Paine, and tells us in what respect he revealed himself, namely, his "eternal power and God-head;" hence it is the fool only that hath said in his heart, there is no God. Or as the poet has it:

> There is an unbelief:
> When very God—a word in death for us,
> And made to see it push away the dead,
> He trust in God.
>
> There is its sublimest:
> When not a star, north winter's field of snow,
> The silent harvest of the future grain,
> God's power must know.

But this is not all the revelation that man requires—not all that he reasonably expects—not all his very existence demands; as we have already said, it is not only consistent and reasonable that he should know from whence he came, and whither he goes, but that he should know how to escape that corruption to which as an animal he is heir; that he should know how to escape death and obtain unending life.

Believing this, we naturally arrive at the conclusion that God has given to man such a revelation; and as the Bible claims to contain the word of God, or revelation of Deity; and as all it reveals of God is in perfect harmony with that revelation of God which we see in the works of creation; and as it meets all the requirements of man, by informing him from whence he came, and whither he goes, and tells him how to escape from death to unending life, and as there is no other book among men when compared with the Bible that has a shadow of a claim to be a revelation from God, I contend we are consistent, and reasonable, in believing it to be the word of God.

But we have other reasons for believing the Bible is the word of God. The first I shall give is the historical confirmation of the New Testament; or in other words that we have equal and even better historical evidence that the several writers of the New Testament lived and wrote the portions thereof attributed to them, than we have that other writers lived and wrote what we accept; that as we accept the books and writings of Eusebius, of Xenophon, of Tacitus and others, because of the historical testimony of ages to their genuineness, so we receive the books of the New Testament as the genuine writings of Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, and others for the same reason.

There may be members of the Liberal League who may question the correctness of this position. We do not dispute their right to do so, for there are always two sides to every case that comes before a court of law, and when ably argued, both sides often appear so plausible as to confuse the jury; but a careful and unprejudiced analysis of the evidence will sustain one side and condemn the other; so we contend it is in this case; a careful analysis of the evidence by unprejudiced men sustains the position we have taken.

Owing to the accumulation of such historical testimony, Atheists, Infidels, and enemies of the Bible generally, or at least, the most intelligent of them, have abandoned their first position, or base of attack, by no longer contending that the Bible is a work of fiction—the production of ignorant and designing men written long after the events were fulfilled. Even Mr. Bradlaugh, the noted English Atheist says in his discussion with Robert Roberts, of Birmingham, June, 1876:

"I may say at once, that I never contended, that I do not contend, and that I do not know any decently educated man who does contend that the whole of the Bible is the work of ignorant and designing men."

Again he says:

"I never made the contention that the book is a monkish production of the fourth and fifth centuries; on the contrary, the Bible like many other books is the collection of the works of different men in different ages; added to or curtailed according to the whims of the different ages through which they have come down to us."

Once infidels boldly affirmed that no such person as Jesus Christ ever lived, but the literary labor of years, has exhumed volumes of books and documents, the investigation of which has produced evidence which has forever set aside the possibility of sustaining such a theory, hence it too, has been abandoned, and now his character, his claims, his miracles, his resurrection are assailed.

The historical evidence to which I refer is found in the writings of Eusebius, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, Theophilus of Antioch, Ireneus of Lyons, Justin Martyr, Clement of Rome, and others of so-called Christian authority, who lived and wrote in the first and second centuries, and who refer to, speak of, and quote from the gospels and writings of the apostles as being in existence, with the same confidence and freedom as we speak of, and quote from Shakespeare, Byron, Burns or McCauley.

I admit the authorities to which I have referred are not always to be relied upon. Most of them may have been guilty of adding to, or taking from, the writings of the apostles, but it is simply preposterous to suppose they manufactured whole men, or quoted from writings that never existed; besides they are accepted as authority by even the atheistic school in reference to other questions of history, and therefore are entitled to respect in reference to the existence of the apostles and their writings.

I also admit there were spurious gospels, and forgeries and other documents claiming to be apostolic that are not genuine; but that is no evidence that there were none genuine, for how could there be forgeries if there were no genuine gospels.

But we have not only the authority of the so-called Christian Fathers, but of other writers, many of whom were the bitterest enemies and persecutors of the Christians, who testify to the existence in the beginning of the first century of a sect called Christians, followers of Christ, who was put to death by Pilate. I may mention Celsus, an epicurian philosopher, and Marcion, of the second century, and Josephus, Tacitus the Roman historian, and Pliny the younger.

Of these, the writings of Tacitus and Pliny alone, are sufficient evidence of the existence of Christ and Christians his followers, at the beginning of the first century. The testimony of these two writers, even Mr. Bradlaugh in his discussion with Mr. Roberts, could not discredit.

It is impossible, however, in a single lecture to give extracts from all these writers, therefore I must content myself by referring you to two or three only. Pliny, in his letter to the Emperor Trajan, at Rome, in the year 112, asking how he was to deal with this rising sect of Christians, said:

In the meantime when they have been brought before me as Christians, I asked them again, and a third time intervening threatenings with the questions. If they persevered in their confessions I ordered them to be executed.

Pliny admits the number of Christians to be so great that the Pagan temples were almost forsaken.

Tacitus, the Roman historian, says:

Nero, in order to stifle the rumor (that he himself set Rome on fire) ascribed it to those people who were hated for their practices and called by the vulgar Christians. These he (Nero) punished exquisitely. The author of the name was Christ, who in the reign of Tiberius was brought to punishment by Pontious Pilate, the Procurator, not only over Judea where this mischief sprang, but in the city of Rome also.

Here we have testimony that no one will presume to impeach or question of the existence and death of Christ and of large numbers of Christians who were his followers; and who were at the hands of their enemies suffering all manner of persecutions even unto death.

Now I ask what was this suffering, and sacrifice of life for on the part of the apostles? Was it for a mere opinion, a mere belief of what some one had said. I answer no. It was for a fact, of which they were witnesses.

We will let Festus, a Roman governor, tell what it was for. He says to King Agrippa:

There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix, whom the Jews desired judgment against, but when I sat on the judgment seat and commanded the man to be brought forth, they brought none accusations of such things as I supposed, but had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus who was dead whom (this man) Paul affirmed to be alive.

We find then that the apostles were tried, condemned and punished because they bore witness to the resurrection of Jesus Christ, being eye witnesses thereof.

Paul himself says, it was for the hope and resurrection of the dead he was called in question; and he asks the question:

Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead?

And Peter speaking for all the apostles, stood up before the Jews, and at the risk of their lives said:

Ye denied the Holy One, and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you, and killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead, whereof we are witnesses.

I contend for these things being true. The New Testament is what it claims to be, and the resurrection of Jesus Christ is established, and the divine origin of the Scriptures set at rest.

I further contend that the evidence that these things were true amounts to positive proof, being testified to by eye witnesses whom we have proved lived and wrote their testimony at the time, or shortly after the events transpired, which testimony cannot be impeached from any standpoint.

I know it is contended by those who don't deny that the apostles lived and wrote, that they are not to be credited, because they, unlike other ancient writers whose testimony we receive speak of things taking place, such as the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and working of miracles, which are contrary to our experiences and contrary to my law.

This reasoning assumes a knowledge of all laws, and that nothing can take place that is contrary to our experience; which is simply absurd. The discovery of the telegraph, telephone, phonograph, and all other wonderful inventions, were contrary to our experiences and yet they were believed in upon the testimony of others long before we saw them. The magnetic power of the human will or mind was acknowledged and believed in as a fact long before the law of its action was understood; in fact, it is but imperfectly understood yet.

If then we believe these things that are unaccountable by law, and contrary to our experience which are the discoveries, and works of men, why should we disbelieve those things that are the work of God, as evidenced by competent and creditable witnesses? Again I ask in the words of Paul, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead?"

We believe there was a time when man did not exist. We know he exists now. What has been, may be again; therefore, if man ceases to exist, he may exist again, which would not even be contrary to our experience. I contend therefore, that the Atheist and Infidel, in accordance with their own reasoning are bound to accept the testimony of the apostles that Jesus rose from the dead, whereby the divinity of the Scriptures is proved: for, if God raised Jesus from the dead he was divine; and as he acknowledged the authority of the old Scriptures, and they testified of him, they are divine.

Having noticed a few of the arguments that might be adduced under this head, I call your attention to the New Testament prediction of an apostacy and its fulfillment as another reason why I believe the Bible to be the word of God.

If the New Testament prediction be divine authority, there should be to-day not only an apostacy from the faith once delivered to the saints, but there should be a dominant Christianity (at least so-called) political, tyrannical and corrupt. As proof of this we call your attention to the predictions.

Says Paul (Acts xx. 28), Take heed to yourselves, and unto all the flock over which the Holy Spirit hath made you overseers; feed the flock of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood; for I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you not sparing the flock: also of your own selves, shall men arise and speak perverse things.

Again, writing to Timothy he says:

The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables.

This is a plain prediction of a departure from the truth as proclaimed by Christ and his apostles; and before the apostles had finished their work this departure from the truth, or apostacy had commenced, and we find Paul writing to the Galatian believers, saying:

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the favor of Christ unto another gospel; which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

We see the predicted apostacy had commenced in Paul's day. This was to go on and grow into a political form and become in the world an ecclesiastical system supported by the sword. This is clearly predicted by Paul. The Thessalonian believers had become anxious about the return of Christ as an event about to happen. But Paul writes them, saying:

Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come except there come a falling away first and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God showing himself that he is God.

Paul further says:

This wicked one the Lord shall consume with the breath of his mouth and destroy with the brightness of his coming.

According to these predictions then, there ought to have been in the past an extensive departure from the faith, a corruption of Christianity, developing a pretender to divine authority, lording it over the kings, and governments of the earth.

I ask if this prediction has not been fulfilled—realized in every particular? What has been in the past, and what is to-day the most notable feature of European history? Is it not a man at the head of an ecclesiastical system exhibiting himself as an object of the highest homage upon earth, and in the name of Christ claiming the highest authority, and the right to lord it over the kings and governments of the earth?

I contend then that the developments of this apostacy—a prominent feature of which is a union of church and state—is an exact fulfillment of Paul's prediction and is therefore a good and valid reason why we should believe the Bible to be the word of God. What human being unassisted by divine inspiration could have predicted 1800 years ago with such clearness of vision—such accuracy of detail an apostacy such as now exists, headed up in Rome and extending nearly, if not quite to every inhabited part of the globe, and embracing every false system of religion—teaching for doctrine the commandments of men, and which is fully ascribed in the apocalypse and symbolized by a woman sitting upon a scarlet colored beast upon whose forehead is written:

Mystery, Babylon the Great, The mother of harlots and abominations of the earth.

This is symbolical and expressive of all names and denominations of the great apostacy, from the church of Rome to the most extreme division of Protestantism who make void the truth by their traditions, and so fill up the measure of Paul's predictions, which is evidence that Paul spoke not of himself but as he was instructed by the Holy Spirit.

We call your attention to the wonderful fulfillment of prophetic history in relation to the Jews, or Jewish nation, and their distinct racial existence at the present time as another reason why I believe the Bible to be the word of God.

That a race of people with no national organization, no centralized power, banished from their own land, scattered among every nation under heaven, despised, cast out as evil, down-trodden, robbed again and again of their wealth, should still exist as a distinct people is a remarkable thing, unaccountable from any human standpoint. A people massacred by tens of thousands, yea more; in A. D. 70 1,800,000 perished at the destruction of their city and temple and 97,000 were carried away captive. Sixty years after in attempting to return half a million were slaughtered. A. D. 135 the Emperor Adrian destroyed 50 castles, 800 cities and slew 580,000. Under King John of England 1600 were massacred at York in one day. Under Ferdinand and Isabella 800,000 by a single decree were forced out to sea in boats, and the most of them perished. And still they live.

Does the history of the world record another case like it? Over 3,000 years ago going down into Egypt a family of 70 persons and in 430 years coming out a great nation. They saw the proud Egyptian perish in the Red Sea. They witnessed the fall of great Babylon and the rise and fall of the mighty empire of Medo-Persia—in the words of another, "They out-lived the Cæsars and the terrible visitation of the dark ages, and here they stand to-day as distinct as ever; occupying no country of their own, scattered through all lands; identified in their immemorial physiognomy, earth's men of destiny, before the venerableness of whose pedigree the proudest escutcheons of mankind are but trifles of yesterday.

We turn to the works of creation; to the world of liberal-minded, to the Atheist, or Infidel for an explanation. Tell us how it is that such a remarkable race of Jewish people, in whose days nations have been born, kingdoms established, empires formed, great and magnificent cities builded; and passed away leaving no sign of their glory; and scarcely a relic to show that they ever had an existence; while this people, persecuted, banished from place to place, massacred, robbed, and cruelly deprived of their wealth by almost every government on the earth, still live a powerful people, distinct in their facial and racial peculiarities, and still hold the wealth of the world?

We read no answer in the Infidel's revelation—the works of nature—to such a question, and we contend that apart from the Bible—apart from a revelation from Deity no answer can be given.

How different has been the course of the other peoples! What Englishman can say with a certainty to-day he is from Briton, Roman, Saxon, or Norman stock? But find the Jew where you may in Russia, Germany, England, or our own great republic where English, Irish, Germans and all nations amalgamate like metals in a furnace, and he is a Jew still claiming Abraham as their father, clinging to Moses, holding fast their traditions, looking towards Jerusalem, longing for their Messiah, as when their fathers trod the vine-clad hills of Judah's land—wandering for centuries, weary and foot-sore in every land but their own, surviving the greatest persecutions ever inflicted upon a people; suffering enormous and almost incredible butchery again and again for over eighteen centuries, they have risen again as a great power among mankind. Holding the money power of Europe. Among the foremost in science, literature, or government you find the Jew—the marvel of nations the standing miracle of the world's history which no human tongue untouched by spirit power has ever been able to explain apart from that book the Bible—that book from whose divinely inspired pages comes the solution of the mystery in the words of Jeremiah the prophet.

Fear thou not O my servant Jacob, neither be dismayed O Israel, for I am with thee, saith the Lord to save thee; though I make a full end of all nations I will not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.

Surely there are none so blind as not to see a solution of the mystery, and the voice of God in this prophetic announcement.

O Israel be not dismayed, for though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee yet will I not make a full end of thee; for lo the days come saith the Lord that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers and they shall possess it; for lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity, and Jacob (or Israel) shall return and be at rest and none shall make him afraid.

From this book, the Bible, then we learn why the Jews still exist, why they still retain a distinct racial identity, why they are a power among mankind, why they hold the wealth of the world! because God hath said he will not make an end of them, but will deliver them from their captivity and bring them again to their own land where they shall have rest.

I contend then that the Israelitish people are a living testimony of the divinity of the Bible—of the spoken word of God. Like the bush of Moses ever burning yet never consumed—an unanswerable refutation of the blasphemous sophistry of that class of Atheists who like Col. R. G. Ingersoll dares to speak with solemn mockery of the word of God, and defy Yahweh the Elohim of Israel who hath said again by the same prophet:

Hear the word of the Lord O ye nations and declare it in the Isles afar off: Say, he that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock: for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob from the hand of him that was stronger than he. Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth. * * * I will say to the north give up, and to the south keep not back, bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth (Isa. xliii. 8) for I am a father to Israel and Ephraim is my first-born.

Let me assure you that as certain as this prophecy has been fulfilled in the preservation of down-trodden Israel in all lands, so certain will it be fulfilled in their restoration to their own land; even now the Jews number 30,000 in Jerusalem and vicinity and every day increasing. I ask what better reason need we give for believing the Bible to be the word of God?

But no greater reason is the one I have just advanced than the one which follows why I believe the Bible to be the word of God. I refer to the prophecies in general and the wonderful and marvelous accuracy of their fulfillment.

How different from the vague incoherent predictions of the Greek and Roman augurs, and the doubtful, hesitating utterances of diviners, soothsayers, psychologists, and false prophets of all ages: the latter, speaking from the inspiration of nature, and an intuition common to an animal creation there is no certainty of their predictions coming to pass; while the prophecies being accurately fulfilled compel us to believe that they spoke as they were moved by the spirit or inspiration of God.

The prophets, being inspired by him who knoweth all things and who hath said to the world by the prophet Isaiah:

I am God and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.

Their predictions are always fulfilled.

I contend that if we carefully consider the prophecies and their fulfillment the evidence of the divinity of the Scriptures is overwhelming.

Take for instance the prophecies concerning the Jews. It is admitted by Atheists and infidels that the Jews are an ancient people, going back at least 3,000 years, that they have documents which they regard as those of Moses, and hold as divine.

We turn then to Moses and read what is written, and we find that God informs Moses that after he has brought Israel into the land, which he swore unto their fathers, that floweth with milk and honey, and when they shall have eaten and filled themselves and waxed fat, then will they turn unto other Gods and serve them, and provoke me, and break my covenant.

And Moses was required to write the words in a book as a witness against them, and tell the words to the people. Moses did so, and you will find them in the 31st chapter of Deuteronomy, and Moses said to the people:

I know that after my death ye will utterly corrupt your-selves and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you, and evil will befall you in the latter days, because you do evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger through the work of your hands.

Then follows a prediction of the evils that should fall upon them in the latter days of the Mosaic constitution of things which was then being laid or founded.

Some of the evils predicted are as follows:

I will scatter you among the heathen, or nations, and will draw out a sword after you, and will bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as the eagle flieth, a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand, a nation of fierce countenance * * * and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst throughout all thy land: and thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters * * * in the siege, and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee.

I ask you to read the history of the passing away of the Mosaic constitution of things at the destruction of Jerusalem, and you cannot help being awed by the accuracy of the fulfillment. The Roman eagles were planted upon her walls, and in the midst of the seige so great was the distress that women took their babes from the breast and roasted them for food.

Every line and word of the prophecy by Moses was fulfilled with awful reality. One million three hundred thousand Jews perished and 95,000 were carried away captive and so the Jews were scattered among all nations. Jerusalem was laid in the dust, not one stone of their magnificent temple was left upon another and to-day Jerusalem continues to be trodden down by the desecrating footstep of the Mussulman and Turk. A marvellous fulfillment of that prophecy of Jesus when he stood and cried:

These be the days of vengeance that all things that are written may be fulfilled: for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people, and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

Jerusalem is to-day a standing fulfillment of this prophecy.

Don't tell me this prophecy was written after the event, for the preponderance of evidence is against you. There is little if any doubt that this prophecy was written as early as A. D. 50. But it matters not when it was written, as it is testified by the apostles that it was spoken by Christ, and their testimony has never been impeached. Not only so, but the prophecy is in course of fulfillment before our eyes and speaks for its own divinity; the Jews are still scattered, Jerusalem still trodden down. Why? Because the times of the Gentiles are not yet fulfilled.

But we turn to other prophecies equally remarkable. Of the city of Tyre, once the stronghold of the Phœnicians, that stood a thirteen years' seige by land and water, and even then not conquered, it is said:

Behold I am against thee O Tyre, and will cause many nations to come up against thee: and they shall destroy the walls of Tyre, and break down her towers. I will also scrape her dust from her, and make her like the top of a rock and it shall be a place for the spreading of nets, for I have spoken it.

History informs us that Alexander scraped the ruins from the site of the old city. The infidel Volney, states that it is a place where fishermen spread their nets. It is evident then that the prophecy was the voice of God and not man.

Again the prophet says concerning Samaria:

I will make Samaria as an heap of the field and as a planting of a vineyard, and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley and I will discover the foundations thereof.

Was this fulfilled? says Dr. Keith, The people of the country in order to make room for their fields and gardens, have swept away the old houses, and poured the stones down into the valley. The hill is left like the plantings of a vineyard. Every clause of the prophecy has been fulfilled with awful minuteness.

Do we need a better reason for believing the Bible is the word of God? Could a man whose lips were not touched with the inspiration of Deity have spoken with such unerring certainty? Every man of sense of culture of reason must answer no.

The same is true of the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian and Roman kingdoms. Their rise and fall were accurate fulfillments of prophecy. Even the Roman Empire, to-day in its divided state fills the prophetic vision.

But for a moment we must call your attention to prophecies that relate to our own times: and what are they? I answer, it is declared in the prophecies that "in the latter days"—Mark, it says in the "latter days;" that the land of Israel shall be "brought back from the sword" and numbers of the Jews are to return, having been gathered out of the nations, and settle in agricultural colonies, dwelling in unwalled villages, dwelling safely, without bars or gates; possessing much wealth in cattle and goods, under the protection of a foreign power easily recognized as the British power. That the Ottoman or Turkish power must pass away. That it will be accomplished or brought about by Russia in conjunction with other powers. That she will be led on with a view to take great spoils from the Jews. That she will plant her standards at Constantinople, and take Egypt; that she will be opposed in her onward march by the British lions who will say to her: "hast thou come to take a spoil?" That it will result in all the nations of Europe being gathered together in the great battle of Armageddon, at which time Jesus Christ the King, whose right it is to rule, appears upon the scene for the controversy of Zion. That the armies of the nations are overthrown. The kingdom of God established upon the mountains of Israel. The nations subdued and a reign of righteousness and peace given to the world.

These are prophecies that relate to our own times. I ask what of the outlook? Are they being fulfilled as evidence that God has spoken? Most assuredly they are.

The Jews are slowly, but surely turning their wandering feet towards Jerusalem. The Anglo-Turkish Convention opened the way for their return with a freedom that has never been granted before. England has thrown her protecting arm over Asiatic Turkey, which makes the British power, in fulfillment of the prophecy, the protectorate of the Jews.

When the protectorate was officially announced, the Jewish Chronicle wrote thus:

There has dawned in the East—the cradle of our race—a light which deepens in effulgence as the day advances.

The Jewish World wrote:

This opens a great future for the Jews of the Holy Land.

The result is, numerous schemes are being put forth to further the return of the Jews and establish them in agricultural colonies which is an accurate fulfillment of the prophecy. Of these I may mention the great humiliarian scheme of the Sir Moses Montafiore Testimonial Fund, the object of which, says the Jewish World, is to better the condition of the Jews of Palestine by the introduction of industrial and agricultural pursuits. But lately, the Testimonial Fund Committee advanced £2,000 to a building society in Jerusalem, of which societies there are several. I may also refer to Mr. Oliphant's book which has just appeared advocating the formation of a Jewish settlement in the land of Gilead.

Of this work, the Jewish Chronicle writes:

We are inundated with books and pamphlets on Palestine; the air is thick with schemes for colonising the Holy Land once more, but none of the projectors are more enthusiastic, or more practical than Mr. Oliphant.

I ask what is this but the fulfillment of the prophecies before our eyes—the prophecies I have just referred to—an evidence that God has spoken?

But what of Turkey, the prophecy says that power must pass away? I answer, Turkey is slowly but surely being devoured, and the question has long been: who will pick her bones? The student of prophecy alone can answer that question: he knows it is Russia, the king of the North of prophecy, that is to pick the bones of Turkey, and set up within the skeleton thereof her own aggressing usurping power. For years Russia has been slowly but surely advancing towards the position of European leadership. Universal dominion is the height of her ambition; but God has said, thus far shalt thou go but no further, with her feet on Turkey, her standard raised at Constantinople, and her hand on Egypt, her proud march shall be staid, —upon the mountains of Israel she will fall to rise no more.

Already she has passed over the Danube and marched to the very gates of Constantinople. Why did she not enter? The world answers, the powers forbade it. True enough, but why did they forbid it? I answer, the time for the further fulfillment of the prophecy had not arrived, but ere long it will be accomplished. Russia will come down upon Turkey like a bird of prey, lay Turkey in the dust, and stretch out her hands upon Egypt. In the words of the prophecy by Ezekiel:

Thus saith the Lord God, in that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it? and thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts and many people with thee * * * a mighty army; and thou shalt come up against my people of Israel as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days.

Then the "young lions" of the British power will say in the language of the prophet:

Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?

This will bring England in contact with Russia in battle array and gather all nations together to battle—the great battle of Armegeddon. Russia and her hosts fall upon the mountains of Israel. The Deliverer comes to Zion; then follows the fulfillment of those prophecies that relate to the final gathering of Israel and the establishing of the kingdom of God.

These then are some of the prophecies that relate to our own times, and are being fulfilled before our eyes with marvellous accuracy of detail, and in connection with all those which have been fulfilled in the past, of which we could name over one hundred, are conclusive evidence of the divinity of the Scriptures—evidence which is simply overwhelming when fully realized and which no amount of sophistry can obscure or confound.

But we must turn from other reasons why we believe the Bible to be the word of God, and notice a few objections that are raised in contention against it.

It is contended that the teachings of the Bible are contrary to the established facts of science. I have to say in reply to this, that is mere assertion which never has been nor never can be sustained; and is accepted by those only who are in ignorance as to what the Bible teaches.

I contend on the contrary; the Bible nowhere opposes demonstrated science, but always has been, and is yet far in advance of man's highest attainments in scientific knowledge.

For ages man taught that the earth was created at the beginning of the Adamic creation: and centuries before science discovered that the earth had existed many thousands of years before that, the Bible had been saying that at the beginning of the Adamic creation, "the earth was without form and void." For ages scientists taught that the world was made out of nothing, yet all the time the Bible was saying, "Unto us there is one God the Father out of whom are all things." For ages scientists and philosophers taught that the earth was flat, yet all the time the Bible was saying, "God sitteth upon the sphere of the earth," thus teaching that the earth was round. For ages scientists taught that the earth was floated on water; yet the Bible was perpetually telling man that "God had hung the earth on nothing."

For ages scientists thought the stars could be counted. Ptolomy counted 1026, yet the Bible was constantly saying to man they were as the sand of the sea, innumerable. For thousands of years before the great scientist Faraday demonstrated that fine gold may became perfectly transparent like clear glass, the Bible was saying "pure gold like unto clear glass." For many years scientists have been saying that the land of Palestine must forever remain barren because the Olive groves and beautiful forests have been destroyed, yet the Bible is continually sounding in their ears that God will plants again the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box tree together, to beautify the place of his sanctuary and make the place of his feet glorious, that the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.

For ages scientists have been looking for the missing link that would prove that man was evolved from protoplasm while the book is continually saying God formed man of the dust of the ground, in his own image created he him. For ages scientists, atheists, and infidels have been saying, God does not exist, yet the Bible is ever sounding in their ears, "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God."

For ages scientists, atheists, and infidels have been teaching that "death ends all," while the book is ever sounding forth the good news that Jesus Christ has abolished death; that he has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel; that he is the resurrection and the life; that the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ.

This must suffice to demonstrate the truth of the proposition, that the Bible nowhere opposes demonstrated science, but always has been, and is yet far in advance of man's highest attainments in scientific knowledge.

For instance, water is turned into wine in every vineyard by the slow process of nature every year; what is to hinder a more powerful employment of the same law producing the same results instantaneously which would be miraculously?

Bury a seed and God by the process of nature reproduces it. Bury a man and God by the process of a resurrection reproduces him. I ask, which is the greater miracle, to produce a man that never did exist, or reproduce a man that has ceased to exist? Let those answer who cavil at the word, while we turn from miracles to consider other objections. It is claimed that the Bible abounds in contradictions that are irreconcilable with a divine revelation.

To this I must say that such is only apparent, not real. With a knowledge of the book they disappear. We can notice only one or two as an illustration how easily apparent contradictions are reconciled.

In the account of Paul's conversion we are told in Acts ix. 7, that the men which journeyed with him "stood speechless, hearing a voice but seeing no man;" whereas in Acts xxii. 9, it says "they that were with me saw indeed the light but they heard not the voice."

This apparent contradiction disappears when we understand that in Acts ix. 7, when they heard the voice but saw no man, the word hear is used in the sense of hearing with the ears; but in the second instance, Acts xxii. 9, the word hear is used in the sense of hearing with the understanding. We use the word in this sense every day of our lives and to the atheist and infidel it is a note never observed, but when it occurs in the Bible it is a beam that must be lifted out of the way. This is very unfair to say the least. I will illustrate our every day use of the word. Some person speaks or calls to us, and we do not catch the words. A friend standing by says "what did he say?" We answer we did not hear. That is we did not understand or hear the words. Again at political gatherings when a speaker commences to speak, how often you hear some one in the crowd cry out, "Speak louder, we can't hear," yet he does hear with the ear but not with the understanding; he simply means, speak louder, we can't understand what you say.

This is the sense in which it is used in Acts xxii. 9. They that were with me saw indeed the light but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me; that is they understood not the voice of him that spake to me; and it is so rendered in later version. There is no contradiction then in this case.

Again, we are told in the Old Testament, "that the earth shall abide forever, and never be removed: that it was created to be inhabited," whereas in the New Testament Peter says "the heavens and earth which are now will be burned up or destroyed."

This apparent contradiction, like the other disappears in a moment when we understand that the phrase "heavens and earth," is used in the Bible again and again to express the constitution of things existing on the earth, under the starry heavens, and it was in this sense Peter used the phrase. Peter had no reference to the age in which we live, as some suppose who do not examine the passage carefully, but to the age in which he lived—the decade of the Mosaic constitution of things.

This will appear clear by referring to one or two passages. In the third verse of the chapter:

Knowing this first, that in the last of the days scoffers will come with scoffing, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his presence, etc.—Diag.

Now if we turn to Heb. i. 2. Paul there tells us what the "last days" refers to. He says:

God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son whom he hath appointed heir of all things, on account of whom also he constituted the ages. —Diag.

This fixes the last days at the time when God spoke by his Son, which was in the last days of the Mosaic constitution of things.

Then it was to the Mosaic constitution of things or world to which Peter referred when he said "but the heavens and earth which are now," and which were to be burned up or destroyed; which came to pass a few years after Peter wrote, at the destruction of Jerusalem, when the heavens and earth, or Mosaic world passed away with fire and smoke, and a great noise; but the earth referred to in the Old Testament is the globe, the earth which was erected to be inhabited and which shall abide forever.

As in these two instances so in all others that occur in the word of God, there is only an apparent contradiction —not real. A careful study of the word dispells them all, and the Bible is cleared of the charge of contradicting itself.

Again it is contended as a reason for not believing the Bible to be divine, that it represents God as cruel, vindictive, destroying the innocent with the guilty; destroying large cities, sparing not the women and children. So says the objector. I prefer to believe in the God of nature, and in the works of nature as his revelation—a revelation of his love and goodness, and as I contemplate the beauties of creation I admire and adore the author thereof as a god of love. Do you my friend? Are you not aware that most things in this world have their dark side, and bright side? That there exists the evil as well as the good? Do you think your revelation in the works of nature is an exception? Have you not looked upon the bright side of your revelation, and the dark side of the revelation of the Bible? Do you think that there are not equal, and even greater difficulties to contend with in your revelation than appear in the revelation of the Bible? Do you think "the dark side of your revelation does not exhibit a god apparently cruel, vindictive, destroying the innocent with the guilty —sparing not the women and children, and that too, with no reason why, no remedy? If not, listen while I take up your mode of contention against the God of the Bible, and use it against your god of nature.

Your god in nature makes one tree wickedly uproot and displace another in its growth. Whole forests of towering pines, gigantic oaks, and spreading elms are destroyed to give place to a growth of chesnuts. He makes one half the animal kingdom devour the other, that they, themselves, may live. The lion, the tiger, and the bear slaughter their prey without mercy. The hawk devours the cooing dove, and the sparrow feasts upon the useful lady bug. He makes one fish swallow another, and man swallows the fish. He causes the infant of a day to pass from the fount of life to the chamber of death, and the strength of manhood and the flush of womanhood to meet the grave. He causes the pestilence to stalk abroad at night and famine at noonday. He makes terrific storms devastate whole neighborhoods sparing neither man nor beast; beautiful forests are laid in the dust, briars and thorns come up instead; earthquakes swallow up entire cities, destroying the innocent with the guilty, and sparing neither women nor children. These are a few of the things that are done by your god of nature for which you have no reason and no remedy. They must for ought you know continue for aye.

No my friend, I prefer to believe in the God of the Bible, who is set forth in his word as a God of love, who so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth into him should not perish, or go down to the dark oblivion of an atheistic night, but have everlasting life in the Paradise of God. A God long-suffering, not willing that any should perish but that all should come to a reformation. A God merciful and gracious, abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands who love and keep his commandments, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin, but will by no means spare the guilty. A God who has not only given a ransom, but a remedy for the evils that exist, not only among mankind but in all nature; for he hath promised in the words of the apostle, that the whole creation that now groaneth and travaileth in pain, shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. Who hath promised that earth shall be freed from the curse of sin, and yield its increase; that instead of the briar and thorn and thistle, shall come up the myrtle tree the fir tree and the pine tree to beautify the earth and make the place of his feet glorious. No longer will the lion and the bear slaughter their prey without mercy for the lion shall eat straw like the ox; the wolf and the lamb and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, the calf, the young lion and the fatling together, and a child shall lead them; for they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

That instead of the gloom and darkness of all endless night for all of Adam's race, he hath promised for the obedient and believing an immortal crown of life radiant with all the glories of a world made perfect by a hand that's all divine.

And when at last the work of redemption is completed and the purpose of God accomplished, then the whole creation will have been delivered from the atheistic creed of skull, cross-bones, coffins, dust, travail, pain, and slavery of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, and this world of ours will become the dwelling-place of the Elohim of Deity—the Paradise of God.

Then shall the believing and obedient walk the golden streets of the City of the Great King; climb the vine-clad hills of Eden's land, bathe in the pure streams that flow from the throne of God and bask in the joys of an endless life amid the groves of Paradise made fragrant with the perfume of undying flowers.

Then shall the believing and obedient redeemed from every nation, kindred, people and tongue, clothed with the immortal robes of righteousness, with palms of victory in their hands, stand upon the glory-capped hills of Israel's land, and make heaven and earth resound with the shout, "O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?" and every rock and hill and dale takes up the sound and echoes back the strain, Where now thy sting O death? where now thy victory, O grave?

Such my friends is but a faint portrait of the beauty, grandeur, loveliness, joy, and unfading glory, set forth in the revelation of Deity—the word of God—the Bible. I ask then what more exalted conceptions of God can man have than are revealed in this Bible? What more can the heart of man desire than is set forth for him in this Bible? What more does the world need than is promised in this Bible? This book of books, on whose every page and line is stamped the impress divine.

Let me say in the language of Byron that to the infidel and unbeliever—

> "While this awful volume lies
> The mystery of mysteries!
> Oft happy they of human race,
> To whom their God hath given grace
> To hear, believe, and hope, and pray—
> To lift the latch, and burn the way!
> Best-better, had they ne'er been born
> Who read to doubt, or read to scorn."

Such then are my answers to contentions against the Bible, and such are my reasons for believing the Bible to be the voice of God.

Poetry.

A MEMORY.

To Mrs. E. S. Willard, of Haddenfield, New Jersey.

S. MOXANA WINCE.

We left the train as the silver stars
Came out in the blue of the evening sky,
While a golden flush from the sunset bars
Was lingering still on the oaks afar;
And clamoring crows in the dusk went by
And dreamily walking the streets adown,
'Neath the shade of the trees of an ancient town,
We went beyond, till our footsteps came,
Past the grassy tombs of the Quaker dead,
To a sweep of fields, and a grassy lane,
And the happy milkmaid's low refrain;
Then, hastening on, with a hopeful tread,
'Till the cedars seemed as a darkly heap,
And the song was hushed, and the bird asleep.
There! there! with its rambler porch around
The prayer-inside Bethel of rest was found.
The prophet's chamber upon its wall,
The pilgrim's staff at its door laid down,
And the orphaned child, of the far-off town,
With ear bent low, to the Savior's call,
And clasped in arms that my childhood knew,
And drawn to a seat, by the blazing grate,
I seemed to be living my life anew.—
A group up child with its wreath of blue!
Sweet token blending the ends of life!
And my heart arose from the wounds of death,
And trembling still at its icy breath,
Felt the soft warm touch of the hands of love
Oil of grace and balm from above.
O friend! you read, as a mother reads,
The child's sore pain and its inmost needs;
And while you held in your own my hand,
Repeating the story of Judea's land,
A blessed light on my pathway shone—
Sweet truths were learned, that I ne'er had known.
"The past was past and my feet must press,
In the forward course till the crown be won.
Our eyes behind us, we leave undone,
What might ourselves, and the wide earth bless."
So I turned my gaze from the grave away
To the glorious light of a coming day,
Where Rachel, mourning her slain no more
Should clasp them all on the new-earth shore,
And the fair, young child, that I ne'er met here
And the pleasant light of my mother's face,
I look at now, as beyond the blue,
In the golden light of another sphere,
Where death is gone and the serpent trace
No more can come to a world of grace;
So I work and sing till the dawn be come,
And the doors are op'ed to the Father's Home.

Selections.

N. Y. Sun.

FRESH EXCAVATIONS IN EGYPT.

The Discovery of an Ancient Temple of Isis and Unknown Methods of Burying the Dead.

CAIRO, April 15.—Some weeks ago, while spending a few days with a friend, who was a learned Egyptologist, and who lives on the banks of the Nile, about 100 miles above Cairo, he suggested an expedition to a spot on the eastern shore of the river, which he was desirous of visiting, in order to examine the ruins and rock tombs which were known to exist there. I gladly assented to the proposed trip, and we deemed ourselves well rewarded for our pains.

The ruins consisted of immense masses of crude brick work, which covered an area measuring about half a mile long by a quarter of a mile wide, by which the limestone cliffs were faced to the height of fifty or sixty feet, the solid masonry being in places upward of ten feet thick. Here were the crumbling walls of the ancient houses still existing, and the natives showed us holes nearly filled with sand, which, they averred, led into rock-cut chambers, containing any quantity of mummies and their coffins. All attempts to enter them at the time proved more or less abortive, as the entrances were too small to admit even a thin man without the risk of being jammed and suffocated, so we turned our attention to the brick remains, and found among them the ruins of what seemed to be an ancient temple built of burnt bricks twenty inches long by nine wide, and stamped, to our great delight, with hieroglyphics. These my friend, who reads hieroglyphics like English, translated as follows: "High Priest of Ammon Pinadjem—Protector of the Grand Sepoturary of Isis."

The inference to be gathered from this inscription was that this wall formed part of a temple dedicated to Isis, which was built by the Pontiff King Pinadjem, the third of the twenty-first dynasty, who reigned about 1042 before Christ, and was probably that King of Egypt whose daughter we are informed that Solomon married. This discovery was so interesting that my friend applied to the authorities at Cairo for permission to excavate, and for the last two weeks I have been assisting at the interesting work of exhuming the corpses and the records of the past. Unfortunately, our force, which only consisted of ten men, was too small to the extent of ruin to be examined, but our experience may be of interest to your readers.

We began by digging a pit at the base of the masonry-faced cliff, as it was probable that it was undermined by rock tombs. We had no particular indication to guide us, but our conjectures proved correct, and after digging down about three feet we came upon some mummies, coffined in cradles of palm stems. This was in itself a discovery, as, so far as I am aware, it is the only case which has yet occurred in the records of Egyptian investigation in which the bodies were buried so near the surface of the earth, and in which this primitive method of sepulture had been resorted to. On cutting loose the palm sterns which had been beautifully sewn together, we took out the body, the wrappages of which still remained in a state of extraordinary preservation. The long flax ropes with which it was corded were as strong as the day they had first been used. Then came yards of strong linen wrappages which we carefully unwound; the inner wrappings were of a finer material, but those nearest the body were black and rotten, and presented a charred appearance. This arose from the fact that the rude method of embalming had been restored to of plunging the corpse into boiling bitumen, which destroys the flesh. The result was that there was nothing but black skin drawn tightly over the bones, and a great quantity of a black material which all crumbled at the touch. It was evident that the people buried in this rude fashion belonged to the poorer classes, who were not able to afford the more expensive process which in some cases has preserved the bodies in a perfect and almost life-like condition. In one instance we found, nevertheless, an almost perfectly preserved foot, and in another a quantity of long black hair.

After examining several of these superficially interred mummies, we dug down till we got below them, and about eight feet from the surface came upon the rock where there was an opening beneath it. This we cleaned out, and I scrambled down, well provided with candles to investigate. For the first few yards the passage was so low that I was obliged to lie perfectly flat upon my face and wriggle along, but after a little I could get upon my hands and knees. This was rather a relief, as I was crawling among bones and skulls, which were strown about in great confusion. There was a curious faint odor pervading the place, devoid of all taint of corruption, but the reverse of invigorating. As I scrambled along, the passage went from one low cave into another, and the slabs of sarcophagi which had been broken and fragments of the wooden coffins which they had contained, were lying about. It was evident that at some very remote period in the past the whole series of chambers I was traversing had been broken into and rifled, in the hope, possibly, of finding treasure. In no one case was a sarcophagus unbroken. Opening out of the last cave, which I calculated was thirty-five yards from the mouth of the pit, was a small chamber about seven feet square hewn out of the solid rock, the sides quite smooth. It was filled with the debris of mummies. Near the entrance to it was a sarcophagus, the lid of which had been cracked so that one could see the perfect mummy inside, beautifully swathed in linen, on which was a pattern of some sort. I put my hand into the crack to feel about, but everything I touched went to powder; and there is something uncanny in groping about in a coffin with a body in it, in the dark, though, somehow, a corpse 3,000 years old is a far less gruesome object than a fresh one. There was not only no objects of interest or value in this pit, but no inscriptions.

We now set the men to work at the walls of the building where we had found the stamped bricks. Here we were completely at fault. We dug down for eight or ten feet, but never got to the end of the bricks. We opened parallels, but in whatever direction we went it was all solid brick. The only difference was that after going for a certain distance we came upon crude brick unstamped; but we soon became convinced that the structure was solid throughout, and was either the commencement of a pyramid or the huge pedimont upon which the temple had been placed; for that this was a spot which at one time had been a centre of Isis worship we had additional testimony in another inscription which we found on some of the bricks. On one side was the ancient name of the town, "Isemahbeh," or "The Isis of Isis," and on the other Ramen Chopor, the name of the fourth pontiff king of the twenty-first dynasty. The fact that the town took its name from the goddess, and of "Grand Sanctuary of Isis" being stamped on the bricks, rendered it pretty certain that if we could only find them, the remains of a temple must be buried in the mounds of potsherds and brickbats with which the area was covered. This was the more probable, as the enceinte of solid brick which crowned and faced the cliffs must have been the wall of the temple enclosure, which at the same time served as a fortification for the rest of the town.

With the view of seeing whether the masonry which crowned the cliff concealed any chambers, we now determined to go to the highest point, which was about a hundred feet above the level of the Nile, and dig down. Here again we met with nothing but crude bricks, but they had apparently been cemented with thrashed ears of barley. At first we thought we had come upon a granary, but the bricks were all solidly packed upon one another, merely the interstices being filled with empty ears, of which we speedily obtained a bushel. We also found built into the masonry a log of wood, which had been squared and pierced; but it had only been built into the mass as a part of the general structure. Between every four layers of brick, there were also layers of bean straw. When we had dug down about ten feet we approached the bed rock without having solved the mystery. We had now pierced a horizontal tunnel through the brick at the base of the cliff for ten feet and arrived at the rock; we had done the same vertically on its summit with the same result, and we had run both vertical and lateral shafts into the mass of stamped bricks on its shoulder, without ever coming to an end of this solid masonry.

As the time at our disposal was limited, we did not wish to waste any more of it on this gigantic construction, and decided upon clearing out the entrance to a cave in the rock which we had observed on the occasion of our first visit. As soon as this was big enough to admit an Arab I decided to follow. Almost immediately at the entrance were two sarcophagi, upon which rested the superincumbent rock. To get past these it was necessary to lie on one's side, push one's feet through between the sarcophagi, and then call to the Arab to drag you through by main force. Had I been a quarter of an inch thicker I should have stuck; as it was, my waistcoat buttons suffered severely. I now found myself in a maze of sarcophagi, but they were piled so closely together, and so near the roof of the cave, that it was difficult to move about, even on one's hands and knees. Standing erect was out of the question, but the cave was not strown, as the other had been, with mummy bones and cloths. Although holes had been here and there knocked into the sarcophagi, the contents had not been abstracted, and I counted six which were untouched. On some of the lids were splendidly sculptured colossal heads. The finest of these was so wedged in beyond the others and so near the roof that I could only examine it by pushing myself over the intervening sarcophagi in a prostrate attitude until I was lying right on top of it.

There was something at once solemn and grotesque in thus finding one's self with one's face about six inches from the majestic bearded physiognomy of an ancient Egyptian on his own coffin lid. Here had he been reposing, staring in a calm and dignified manner into futurity for the last 3,000 years, till I come with my prying inquisitiveness and nineteenth century irreverence, and stretched myself full length on the top of him. I almost fancied, as I held the candle up to examine his placid almond-shaped eyes, that they gave me a reproachful wink. We determined, nevertheless, to open some of these sarcophagi, failing to find any other more accessible, and I was dragged again into the light of day in a bath of perspiration, and not a little exhausted by my efforts.

Two days after a cave was found much more easy of access and full of untouched sarcophagi. In this we found three alabaster Canopian vases. There should have been four, but one was missing. They were usually placed, two on each side of the sarcophagus of a distinguished personage, to hold his heart, intestines, and viscera. They were about a foot high, and on their covers were carved respectively the heads of a god, a jackal, and a cynocephalus. We also found a small papyrus scroll which had apparently been a charm worn round the neck of a child. We opened altogether six sarcophagi here. On one was sculptured a head even finer than the one I had made acquaintance with already, and inside was the mummy of a giant. He must have been nearly eleven feet high, with a thickness of skull greater than I supposed possible in a human being; but curious to relate, his coffin contained no inscription to dignify his personality and rank, nor in any of the coffins that we opened were there any inscriptions on statuettes, rings, or ornaments, which are invariably found placed with the dead. My friend, who was learned in these matters, has been unable to account for this peculiarity; and while it was disappointing in one sense, it was interesting as suggesting possibly a different epoch of sepulture from any which has yet been investigated.

We were obliged to content ourselves with this discovery, with that of the palm oradles, and with the certainty that our researches had established that the name of the place in old time had been Isembheb, and that a temple must have once stood here of great celebrity, dedicated to Isis. With the small force and limited time at our disposal, we regretted that it was impossible to do more, but I feel convinced that the ruins of Isembheb, and the careful investigation of its massive masonry and rock-cut tombs, may yet reveal records which would throw light upon an obscure and little known epoch of Egyptian history.

Communications.

JOHN XVII. 24.

E. S. HARDING.

Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory.

Christ is here mediating for his own; not his disciples alone, but for them also which shall believe on him through their word." This includes all saints, and Jesus is asserting his power as their Redeemer.

Nowhere else in God's word do we find Christ using such language, save toward believers. His most earnest prayer for himself, even in the hour of dire eternity, were to a different style!

Listen! though longing for deliverance, he cries, "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done."

We all need to think of this. He, knowing the hour had come, and speaking of things that were to be as though they were, enters into possession of all believers, saying to the Father, "All thine are mine, and I am glorified in them."

He purchased all believers by the finished work of Calvary; and while at work he appeared as a servant doing not his own will, but the will of him that sent him, "obedient unto death"—ever attentive to the leading of the Spirit—not my will but thine.

Having finished the work, fulfilled the law's demand, "By one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified," and pleading on the ground of the offering of his body once for all, the perfect satisfaction he was about to make by his death he utters in the words of our text—Father, I will.

Herein is true faith, accepting under all circumstances, Christ's constant intercession in heaven. Knowing his sheep, touched with a feeling of their infirmities; having given unto them eternal life, and that life hid with him in God, we should look with no eye of faith, approaching with boldness the throne of grace, for there sits he who is the propitiation for our sins.

O! may we all realize this intimacy, this joint-heirship. He being acquainted with all the secrets of the hearts of redeemed sinners. To know that we are saved at his coming is but to know that we are saved now. Paul is our best illustration of present salvation, of full confidence in Christ's words—Father, I will! He declares "We are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul." Original rendering "whole body."

Saved now, waiting for the redemption of the body, for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones.

To be workers together with God (and this is now our time of labor) we must realize our indwelling salvation, saved, "working out our salvation with fear and trembling"—not our will be done, but "God working in us to will and to do of his good pleasure." To have real effective works we must have that full confidence of that noble apostle whose works demonstrated his utterance of faith. "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Paul had full confidence in Christ's prayer—Father, I will—and according to his faith it was done unto him, in his preaching of the glory that is to be revealed in us.

Brethren, to believe, to fully believe in Christ is to know that the blood cleanseth from all sin—once for all—then within our hearts the plastic power of redemption begins to cast us forward into the same long-suffering that God has toward our race, not willing than any should perish, and we groan within ourselves, waiting for the redemption of our body.

To wait for is to expect our Savior in his fullness without our sins unto salvation. His prayer then being visibly answered, "that they whom God gave him, rise to meet him, to be with him where he may be, to behold his glory."

To know the fullness of Christ's finished work is but to know the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Brother Myers:

I see by THE RESTITUTION that you are located at Lanark, Ill. Now I wish to enquire the reason why those articles on the Covenants, the Law and the Sabbath do not appear? I have been eagerly waiting for them for the last four months. Yours in hope,

T. E. ADAMS.

Onaokee, Kan., April 17, 1881.

REPLY.

To T. E. Adams and Others:

The articles requested of me upon the above theme are in a state of preparation. Fourteen in number have been written and are ready for the press aggregating about 100 pages of manuscript. It will yet require from fifty to seventy-five pages to complete the subject. Wherever I have made the discourse on the subject of the Covenants and the Law I have been requested to write it. Some have requested it just as delivered, and others have requested an extension. So I have concluded to prepare the series at length. After they are published if they are thought to be worth book form I will put them into book form. These articles would have been prepared sooner but the extreme cold weather through the winter season often caught me away from home without good facilities for writing. And yet it will require a few weeks to complete the series. Last year I wrote for THE RESTITUTION, Herald of Life, and other papers near 400 pages of manuscript. This is quite a tax upon my time when considered that it is without compensation. I have not now so much time to devote, but will do the best I can, and will try to start the articles along about the first of July.

In brief the articles will embrace the topics of the terms, the boundary, the duration and the heirs embraced in the Abrahamic Covenant. The relation that the Sinaitic Covenant sustained to the Abrahamic; the time, the place, with whom the Sinaitic Covenant was made. The unity and duration of the Law. The New Covenant, with whom made, the mediators, duration, etc.

Yours in hope.

O. M. MYERS.

Lanark, Ill., May 7, 1881.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The brethren of the Church of God at Antioch, Marshall Co., Ind., appoint their annual meeting to commence on the Friday before the first Sunday in June, at four o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday—the days dating June 3–5, 1881. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to attend. The place of meeting is between Plymouth and Argos, about five miles from the former and three miles from the latter place.

The Lord willing I will be at More's school house, on Friday, April 22, and continue over Sunday. The first Sunday in May at Brooken, as Brother Guffin may appoint. Friday, May 6, in Brother Reese's neighborhood and continue one week. Friday, May 13, at Kingsbury, Laporte Co., as Brother Clem may appoint, and continue over Sunday. Friday, May 20, at Brother Henry's, north of Walkerton, and continue over Sunday.

J. S. HATCH.

The Annual Meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held (D. V.) at Watson, Allegan Co., Mich., in the Christian Meeting House, commencing at seven o'clock Thursday evening, June 2, 1881, and hold over Sunday, the 5th. Those coming from the east or west on the Michigan Central R. R., will take the Grand Rapids and Indiana R. R. at Kalamazoo, and go north to Monteith Station, and there take the Allegan R.R. to Fisk's Crossing, near the church. Those who come from north or south on the Grand Rapids and Indiana R.R. stop at Monteith and go to Fisk's.

Let there be a good representation from all parts of the state. The friends of the Blessed Hope at Watson are fully able and willing to welcome and entertain all who come. These annual gatherings will be few before the great meeting in the air, when, if faithful, we shall see the Lord and be like him. We would like to greet our brethren from Ionaswee and Buchanan and all other parts of the state. We expect brethren Chase, Woodward and others will preach the word.

E. HOYT, Sec.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Church of God, will commence on Friday, June 17, in the grove near John T. Spaid's, and continue over Sunday. All of the Abrahamic faith, and the people in general, are respectfully invited to attend. Brother Spaid lives near High View, Frederick Co., Va., and any one interested may address him or John D. Good at that place. All from a distance will be cared for during the meeting.

N. J. MORGAN.

On the third Sunday in May, and the Saturday before, being May 14 and 15, 1881, I will be at Fort Scott, Kan., as Brother E. R. Vermillion may appoint. A general invitation is extended. Come one, come all.

JOHN FOSHE.

A LETTER

TO A BAPTIST MINISTER ON THE LEGALITY OF

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN,

The Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the

THRONE OF DAVID

—AND—

KINGDOM OF ISRAEL

Together with Strictures on

Mr. Cheever in "THEODOSIA."

—BY DANIEL HOWARD.—

A Capital tract for those desiring information on the subjects discussed. Send to this office for it, and after reading send it to your neighbor.

PRICE ELEVEN CENTS EACH.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885.

—BY M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE

TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881.

—BY H. V. REED.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send Orders to

SAMUEL WILSON,

1028 N. 2nd Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by

THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—BY JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

A Letter to a Friend!

—BY MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—BY J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 75 for $5.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND THE—

BIBLE Vindicated.

—BY A. J. EVOHAKER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every child in the land. Those living in debt, and by needs will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 10 for 40c., or 60 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is in a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c., cloth 80c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PEARLS, Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by which Baptists, in 1880. 3. Immateriality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 25c., or assorted packages of 100, 25c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A complete statement and contrast of the Views of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible view.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Magruder.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it Peace? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What Is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Luke.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

2c. each, or $1 for 75c.

Is It Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? R. Wilson.

Miracles of the Bible. H. Bamar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each, or $1 for 25c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited for inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each; 10 for 75c, or $5 for $1.

The New Birth. Joseph Marsh.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Marsh, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promises made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each; 8 for 35c, or $3 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.

10c. each, or $5 for $1.

Evangelium concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution of the world restored to its primeval state, and who to be its everlasting possessors. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts 3d. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 96 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. P. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. 22d ver., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiv. 24 pages, price 5c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. P. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 24 pages, price 5c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned lexicographers, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 25c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. G. Boardman, Congregational minister, and W. Kellaway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 60c., paper 40c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets; together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 116 pages, cloth 75c, paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.50.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to lend and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 320 page, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co. Clear type, good paper 12mo size. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.25; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—EDITED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—BY BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious collection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christendom have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are to be arranged in the common version so as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 984 pages, cloth $7.50, Library Sheep, $8.50.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MAN

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE,

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in THE MESSENGER of Jan. 26, 1881, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 12 for 50c., or 25 for $1.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
H. S. OWINGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. M. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
J. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, H. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SIDONIS,
WILEY JONES, G. M. MYERS.
A. H. MACOMBER.

The Restitution.

Keep Bro. Weethee's Article.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 25, 1881. NO. 20.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As it means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a manly belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Third Trumpet Continued. Attila's Fourth Contest. Invasion of Italy. He Meets the Roman Embassy. Is Bought Off, and Retires Beyond the Danube. Suddenly Expires. Propriety of the Symbol, Great Star. Fourth Trumpet. Rev. viii. 12. General Narration. Terms Explained.

No. 69.

J. P. WEETHEE.

We have followed Attila through three severe conflicts. One still remains—his invasion of Italy. The failure of his expedition into Gaul, did not diminish his power, his haughtiness nor the hosts that were ready to battle under his standard. He again demanded the princess Honoria (daughter of the Roman emperor of the west) with her immense patrimony. The demand being evaded, he gathered an immense army and immediately invaded Italy. He laid siege to Aquileia, the gate into Italy. After a lengthy struggle, the city was taken, and erased from the earth. Having laid waste all northern Italy, he prepared to move southward to desolate the eternal city, and put an end to the western empire.

Alarmed by the impending danger, the emperor, with the senate, and Roman citizens, sent a distinguished deputation to appease and avert the wrath of Attila. Pope Leo the Great headed the embassy. They were heard with attention, Leo's eloquence, sustained (as the legend has it) by the apparition of Peter and Paul, threatening the barbarian monarch with immediate death, if he rejected the prayers of the commissioners, caused the king to abandon his intentions. His ultimatum was, the hand and dowry of the Princess Honoria.

Such was the price demanded for the deliverance of Italy.

The magnitude of this donative will appear when the disparity of the races is considered; a barbarian (clay), in form scarcely human, joined in marriage to the daughter of a Roman emperor (pure iron);—a bitter cup for a proud and haughty Roman, yet he promised to drink this poisonous cup of wormwood.

Attila, evacuating Italy, retired to his wooden palace beyond the Danube. Before the time appointed for his nuptials with Honoria, he wedded Ildica, a Gothic virgin, of extreme beauty. On the night of the marriage, he ruptured a blood vessel and expired. Thus died the hero, the scourge of his enemies, and the terror of the world."

"The remains of Attila were enclosed within three coffins, of gold, of silver, and of iron, and privately buried in the night.—Gibbon.

The earth opened and closed over the mighty conqueror. Such was the termination of Attila, the Hun, a man of destiny; the lamp was suddenly extinguished when his work was ended. Had his life been continued even for a few years, the Roman empire would have had quite a different history in its downfall.

As it was, his fruits ripened through centuries.

Such briefly, is an outline history of the character and doings of Attila. His prophetic symbol, in our view, is the falling star, called Wormwood. Is the symbol appropriate? Why should Attila be called a star? Why a falling star? In what sense did he fall on the rivers, and fountains? How may it be said that he made the waters bitter and poisonous? These points of sbullitude we propose to investigate.

Is the name appropriate? Why is he denominated a star? How is that term used in the Divine Scriptures? As to its literal meaning there can be no question. Its figurative and symbolic interpretations have to do with our subject. Attila was a star, or a meteorite, in the Roman political-ecclesiastical heavens. The term is not confined to the religious world, but is applied to the political heavens. It is used to denote distinguished persons, either in state or church. The following are illustrations:

"There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth." Num. xxiv. 17. This star means David, and his son Messiah. Angels are called stars. "The morning stars sang together." Job xxxvii. 7. The King of Babylon is addressed under the name of Lucifer—morning star: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cast down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations." Isa. xiv 12. In Dan. viii. 10, we have the following:

"And it (a little horn) waxed great, even to the host of heaven: and it cast down (some) of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them." Stars here denote persons of high standing in the church. The following show its use in the Apocalypse:

"And had in his right hand seven stars." Rev. i. 16. These are said to be the angels (messengers) of the seven churches. "I will give him the morning star." Rev. ii. 28. Also, "The bright and morning star"—Rev. xxii. 16—denotes Christ. In Rev. viii. 12, sun, moon and stars, are interpreted to denote official rank, in the Roman world, grades of civil officers, not ecclesiastical officers. Under the fifth trumpet, another star falls from heaven. Rev. ix. 1. This denotes a wicked, politico-ecclesiastical agent. This will be explained hereafter. The sun-clad woman had on her head a crown of twelve stars (twelve apostles). Rev. xii. 1.

And his tail (red dragon's) drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth. These examples show that the term represents good and bad persons in the church and empire; and also beyond them.

Attila was not a fixed star in the Roman heavens, but a meteoric star shooting down through their heavens from a more northern latitude. He rushed down the northern heavens from a German sky, and fell like a blazing meteorite upon their rivers and fountains of waters.

Falling from the Roman heavens, is implied in the language; indicating that he was once a Roman subject, born of noble parents in the empire. His early history inclines us strongly to such a conclusion. Hungary claims him as one of her native kings, and traces his genealogy, through thirty-five generations, to Hun, the son of Noah; and yet they fail to give the name of his father. If he be a native of Hungary, he was a native of the empire, since Hungary was a part of the ancient empire, it being a part of Dacia. His early training was in Hungary, under his uncle, Rugilas. He was, therefore, an apostate from the Roman empire; its laws, its civilization, and its religion. Rugilas, the uncle of Attila, was king of the Huns, and was made a Roman general, by Theodosius the younger, with a salary of 350 pounds of gold. Attila and Bleda succeeded to the throne of their uncle, Rugilas. Bleda was soon obliged to resign to his brother his sceptre and his life. In either sense which we have named, he was a star fallen from heaven. He was the sovereign of an empire without a capital, its moving embodiment, moving through the Roman political heavens, and falling upon its rivers and fountains of waters.

3. The location of Attila's attacks, harmonizes with the vision. His national seat was principally on those rivers and fountains from which the Roman empire in those days, drew their material support.

His immense cavalry required such locations. As the star fell upon the fountains of waters so did Attila with his innumerable army of Huns and Germans fall upon the political and ecclesiastical fountains and rivers; for, in the Roman empire the civil and religious interests were inseparable.

The same is true of Daniel's fourth beast.

The German nations, marshalled under Attila, had for centuries been the chief resources of Roman power and wealth. These were converted into enemies—wormwood—which poisoned the empire, as it was dependant upon them for servants, laborers, soldiers, and officers. The pure Romans, east and west, had become so effeminate that they were totally unfit to sustain the burdens, and maintain the honors of the empire. The Germans were their fountains and rivers. They were to the Romans what fountains and rivers are to countries, their great national resources. Attila poisoned these necessary supplies, and rendered them waters of bitterness to the Roman empire.

Attila conquered the Alani, then joined them to his army, since the Goths, to the number of one million, across the Danube, into the Roman empire; conquered and afterwards enlisted them into his armies; not only depriving the Romans of these allies, but converting them into active, bitter enemies.

His first invasion of the Roman provinces in Gaul, was accomplished by an army formed of all the German nations from the Euxine to the Baltic seas; first conquering, then enlisting, thus poisoning the northern resources of the empire.

A glance at the state of the Roman world at this period, reveals the fact that the empire, east and west, was fully as helpless, without the aid of these German tribes, as a country without fountains and rivers of pure water.

4. The character of Attila, when we consider his influence on the Roman empire, entitles him to the name of "Wormwood." He was to the Romans what wormwood is to the human taste; water of bitterness. His first contest (the conquest of the Germans) poisoned their fountains. His second, third and fourth conflicts, poisoned with extreme bitterness their rivers. They fell upon their character and resources.

The influence of Attila did not expire with him. His bitter waters were drank by the Germans long after the fall of the western empire. The fountains being bitter, the streams issuing from them partook of their nature.

Hanseric was a burning mountain in the sea, and his fires were soon quenched; Attila was wormwood in the fountains that sent forth their bitter waters long after the star went out. The bitter poison which he infused into the nations (fountains and rivers) flowed through the eastern and western empires till the Roman blood had nearly ceased to flow. Attila's influence was lasting, bitter, deadly. Many men died of the waters for the waters were made bitter.

This star is one of the most noted and appropriate symbols in the apocalypse. No one can read the life of Attila, with John's vision and a map of the Roman empire before him without seeing the divine similitude.

Fourth Trumpet.—"And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so that the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise." Rev. viii. 12.

The fourth trumpet is the last of the first division. It symbolizes the last series of events which resulted in the infliction of the deadly wound on the imperial head of the western Roman empire.

No agent is seen in the Roman world. The angel has sounded. One revolution of the earth is completed. A terrible hail storm follows the blast of the first trumpet. At the sound of the second trumpet, a burning mountain is cast into the sea. When the third angel sounds a star falls from the heavens. When the fourth sounds the heavens exhibit terrible phenomena in her luminaries. The day is darkened by an extraordinary eclipse of the sun; the night is darkened by occultations of the moon and stars.

NEW COVENANT WITH THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

In Ezek. xxxvii., we find the whole house of Israel represented by a wide valley, over which are scattered dry bones. These dry bones represent Israel disintegrated and scattered all over the earth.

Again the prophet sees in vision these dry bones united each to its kindred bone, and all covered with sinews, flesh and skin, and vitalized with the breath of life. The application follows, explaining these dry bones to be or to represent the whole house of Israel. Ver. 9-11.

Again, the prophet foretells the union of the divided house of Israel in their own land.

That the foregoing does not relate to the literal resurrection of the dead is evident:

1. From the fact that they shall be gathered from among the heathen whither they had been dispersed. Ver. 21.

2. Because they will be saved from their dwelling places.

3. That they are not what is called spiritual Israel is evident from the fact that after having been saved they will be cleansed from their sins, transgressions, idolatries and detestable things in the land of the enemy. So they shall be my people saith the Lord. Thus showing that they are not approved of God until subsequently to their restoration.

4. That it is a national salvation is evident from the fact that after having been brought back to their own land, and cleansed from all their past sins, the two nations and two kingdoms will be united into one kingdom in their land to be severed or plucked up no more forever.

5. One king shall be king to them all, or to both kingdoms. This has not been true since the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity; nor have the two kingdoms been united into one since their partial deliverance from Babylon.

6. That it is not what is called spiritual Israel is further evident from the fact that after their deliverance they will be greatly multiplied, and teach the commandments, statutes and judgments of God to their children, and children's children, forever. Verses 25, 26.

The immortalized saints will neither marry nor be given in marriage, nor will they have children or grand children.

7. The heathen will survive their restoration and acknowledge Israel's God when he is sanctified in them. Ver. 27, 28.

When thus restored to their own land, and Judah and Israel are united, never to be separated, nor removed therefrom, then and not till then, the new covenant will be made with the whole house of Israel.

God says, "Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them; and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore. You I will be their God and they shall be my people, and the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore." Verses 26-28.

Thus again it is evident that that new, or second covenant is a national covenant the same as the first or Sinaitic covenant had been.

8. The first covenant was temporary and ready to pass away when Paul wrote his letter to the Hebrews. Chap. viii. 13. But the second or new covenant will be eternal.

Thus again it is clearly evident that the new covenant was not made with Israel when they returned from Babylonian captivity.

9. From the time this new covenant is made with Israel, God's sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore, and the heathen shall know Israel's God when he is sanctified in them, the same as the heathen knew God when he was sanctified in Israel under the first covenant.

The prophet refers to the same covenant with the whole house of Israel, when he represents God as saying "And I make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beast to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods; and I will make with them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in its season; shall be showers of blessing; and the trees of the field, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and shall know that I am the Lord when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and deliver them of those who served themselves of them. And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beasts of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid. And I will raise up for them a plant and a renown, and they shall be no more a prey to the heathen; neither shall the beasts of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely and none shall make them afraid. And I will raise up for them a plant of renown and they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land; neither bear the shame of the heathen any more. Thus shall they know that I the Lord their God am with them, and that they, even the house of Israel is my people, saith the Lord. And ye my flock, the flock of my pasture are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord God." Ezek. xxxiv. 25-31.

1. Since the return of the Jews from Babylon they have been a prey to their enemies, but after the restoration spoken of in the foregoing quotations they shall no more be a prey to their enemies.

2. After the restoration to their own land they are to dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid. So far from dwelling in their own land and none to make them afraid they have been dispersed among all nations, and in constant fear of enemies.

3. The plant of renown to whom the prophet refers has not been raised up since the dispersion of Israel to place them beyond the power of their enemies to consume and put them to shame.

These prophecies have not been fulfilled in the history of the past; they remain therefore to be fulfilled in the future under the new covenant, according to the foregoing quotation.

Paul refers to the new covenant with the children of Israel in Rom. xi. 27. He says:

"I would not brethren that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written, there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the gospel they are enemies for your sakes, but as touching the election they are beloved for the Father's sake. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance."

That the foregoing cannot refer to believers, or what is called spiritual Israel is evident—

1. From the fact that they are represented as natural branches in contrast with the wild olive branches.

2. They are the Israel that stumbled over the table of their national privilege and fell; and through whose fall a breach was made through which Gentiles could pass, and through the faith and obedience of the gospel become the seed of Abraham.

But the same people who stumbled and fell will rise again—the same people who were impoverished shall be enriched.

Paul says, "Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles: how much more their fulness."

Now unless the same people who have been diminished should be subsequently enriched, and as the result of such enrichment should be the means of greater riches to the Gentiles than they had in their poverty, how can the language of the apostle ever be fulfilled?

But when the foregoing prophecy of Zechariah shall be fulfilled then will the promised greater blessing to the Gentiles through Israel's redemption be fulfilled.

The Lord says, "But now I will be unto the residue of this people as in the former days, saith the Lord of hosts. For their seed shall be prosperous; the vine shall give her fruit, and the ground shall give her increase, and the heavens shall give their dew; and I will cause the remnant of this people to possess these things. And it shall come to pass that as ye were a curse among the heathen (Gentiles), O house of Judah, and house of Israel, so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing. Fear not, but let your hands be strong. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, in those days it shall come to pass that ten men out of all languages of the nations even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, for we have heard that God is with you."

The Gentile world will acknowledge that the Jews are a greater blessing in their fullness than in their diminution. These glorious predictions have never been fulfilled in the past: their fulfilment must be future.

3. The same Israel are to be saved who had been blinded. Was spiritual Israel blinded?

4. This blindness is limited to the times of the Gentiles. Thus teaching that when the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled this blindness shall cease, and the same people shall see who had been previously blinded.

The apostle then draws a conclusion from the foregoing premise. He says:—

"And so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written, there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

1. Before the Deliverer can come out of Zion he must come to Zion. By reference to the text quoted by Paul the Deliverer "comes to Zion, and to them that turn from transgression." Isa. lix. 20.

2. According to the foregoing quotations the Deliverer comes to turn away ungodliness from Jacob; and to them that turn away from ungodliness in Jacob. Thus the Israel to be saved when the Redeemer returns to Zion will be ungodly.

3. This thraldom of all Israel has been national, therefore her salvation will be national.

David, referring to this salvation exclaims, "Oh that the salvation of Israel was come out of Zion." He then explains this salvation saying, "When the Lord brings back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice and Israel shall be glad."

Thus the Bible being its own expositor, this salvation of all Israel will deliver Judah and Israel from captivity. Then the apostle draws the conclusion, "For this my covenant with them, when I shall take away their sins."

Thus again the new covenant is made with Judah and Israel, or with Israel as a nation; and therefore a national covenant the same as that made with their fathers when God took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt. And that Christian character is not the basis of the salvation spoken of in the foregoing is evident for the following reasons:

1. The apostle says, "As concerning the gospel they are enemies for your sakes: but as touching the election they are beloved for the Father's sake. For the gifts and callings of God are without repentance.

This qualification should forever settle the question as to whether the subjects of salvation spoken of in the text before us relates to what is called spiritual Israel or the literal nation of Israel, or whether it is individual national salvation to which the apostle refers. Individual salvation has never in any age or dispensation been offered unconditionally while enemies of the Gospel. During the times of the Gentiles the class of people who shall be the subjects of this salvation will have been enemies of the gospel. When the Redeemer returns to Zion, the Jacob or Israel he comes to save will be ungodly or enemies of the gospel. God has promised to extend national deliverance to Israel while ungodly and enemies of the gospel, and he will not repent or change his purpose. Had God required individual faith and loyalty of the millions as prerequisites of their promise of deliverance of their fathers they would be in Egypt to-day. They were delivered as a nation and surrounded by circumstances in which they could worship the living and true God unmolested by their cruel task masters; and were then required to render individual obedience, or judgments were inflicted upon the disobedient.

The descendants of these fathers will not be saved on account of loyalty or for their own sakes, but for God's holy name's sake, which they had profaned among the heathen. God says, "Therefore say unto the house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God, I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen whither you went. And I will sanctify my great name, which ye have profaned in the midst of their land, and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified by you before their eyes. For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you.

Thus also Rom. xi. 26-29, Israel is saved as a nation while in their sins, not through obedience or loyalty to God, but as the elect on account of the Father's or for God's holy name's sake. And subsequently to this unconditional salvation they will accept their long-expected Messiah, and turn away from ungodliness, and God will bestow upon them the spirit of grace and supplication, and they shall call upon the name of the Lord and say "The Lord is my God, and he will say This is my people."

FORGIVENESS.

ISAAC MCCURRY.

I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.—1 John ii. 12.

Through the kindness of Mr. J. F. Gullett—my neighbor—I have the pleasure of looking at THE RESTITUTION occasionally. I read a good many nice things in it. I must say the majority of the articles by far excel the average newspaper letters.

I have often sent little paragraphs to newspaper managers, and after waiting a week or so I would call around and inquire what they thought of my article. "What article?" Why the piece over my name, in your last issue, (giving them my name), and instead of looking for it in the file, they would invariably begin searching in a little churn-shaped basket which sat on the floor under the manager's table.

The last time my letter was fished out of this little churn, I thought I saw tobacco juice on it. I was—well, I was anything but pleased—but I am leaving the text.

"I write unto you little children because your sins are forgiven you."

My attention has been drawn to this theme for several days. I see a great many pieces in your paper on various points, such as Immersion, First Trumpet, The Approaching Translation of Christians, The Near Approach of our Lord's return to Earth, The Crafty Sons of Jacob returning to Palestine, etc., but not much thought given to the central thought, or golden text of both the new and old Scriptures—Forgiveness. I hope your correspondents who instruct your readers on things soon to be revealed, are enjoying this blood-bought blessing. Until we experience this, the first or last trumpet, the Jew's return or the Lord's return will be as nothing to us. It may be right to speculate on things shortly to happen, but this depends on our devotion to Christ keeping pace with our knowledge of the laws of his kingdom. Forgiveness—like manna, we must get fresh each day. This is more important to us than all the ram's-horns and trumpets from Jericho to Patmos. But is the Lord willing to bestow pardon? When this question is presented I quote—"Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon him." And what our Lord said to the woman, "Neither do I condemn thee, go thy way and sin no more." PRAISE HIM!

Dear Lord, and can it be,
I now may go my way?
Thou no load dost here lay
To guilt and sin
How have indeed forgive.
All my dark crimes I confess?
Will no more "go in peace,
And sin no more?"

Help I And thy strength,
Help all sufficient power,
Confess to take a spell
When these are near,
Thy love has conquered me,
Thy grace doth me restore,
Help me obey thy word,
"He sin no more."

All through my pilgrimage,
It guide me with Thine eye,
And when I no more bend
I'll to thine fly.
And when the last dread foe
Strikes and the conflict's o'er,
May not to me go,
But come, oh no more.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHARLES, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 25, 1881.

WILL our friends make an effort to increase our list for the last half of the year. Also let our new tracts be put into circulation at once. Let us be faithful. The Lord is coming, and his reward is with him to give to to every one according to his works.

SINCE our last the Revised New Testament has been placed upon the market for sale, and the demand has been large indeed. A telegram from London, of May 21, states that two millions of copies of the Revised New Testament had already been sold there. The sales in this country have probably aggregated hundreds of thousands.

WE have not the space this week for much in the editorial department. There is one item of news that is noteworthy. As the time draws near for the return of the Jews to their own land, their condition in some other lands is becoming intolerable. The following will show their condition in Russian dominions:

Professor Dragamanoff writes to the Pall Mall Gazette from Geneva: "The significance of the recent anti-Jewish rising in Russia is much underrated. It extended throughout the Ukraine, which is full of Jews, between whom and the peasantry there has been an undying hatred for centuries. It is the beginning of a social war, which may assume frightful proportions. It is the deep-rooted detestation of the peasant for the money-lender which is breaking out in the Ukraine. Anti-Jewish riots of a most serious character have occurred at Kieff, Elizabethgrad, Vasilkow and other Russian towns. The military succeeded in restoring order at Kieff, and arrested 500 persons there. The people who suffered most were mechanics, small traders and retired soldiers. There are 1,800 destitute families at the barracks at that place. At Elizabethgrad, the Jews suffered terribly. The losses there are officially estimated at $1,500,000. Private estimates make them much larger. At Odessa trade is completely paralyzed. Details of the work of the mobs in different towns show warehouses pillaged, railway trains looted and railway workmen rendered homeless and starving. Latest advices say that the military have restored order."

Later news is that many of the rich Jews in Moscow have received threatening letters, and have abandoned their country villas, which they had hired for the summer. The number of arrests in the Kieff district, for attacks on the Jews since April 16, is 1,227. The Czar arranged to hold an audience with Baron Gumberg and other influential Jews on Monday last, at Grotchina. A telegram from Odessa, of May 23, states that disturbances continue there; and that forty-five restaurants had been plundered and destroyed. In view of their persecutions, and from the innate love that many of them have for their own land, a correspondent of one of their own journals has been urging upon wealthy Jews to combine in proposing to Turkey to let them have Palestine for its full value in money. If Turkey declines, he thinks the Ottoman empire will soon be dissolved into smaller States, when Europe would freely give them what they might want. Events are shaping toward the consummation of this age.

Communications.

THE FORMULA OF BAPTISM.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

"Offences must needs come. But woe unto him by whom the offence cometh."—WORDS OF JESUS.

It is perhaps not known to all the readers of THE RESTITUTION that there are in a dispersion in the Valley of Virginia, and perhaps elsewhere, certain "immersed believers," who claim to follow the Bible and who practice baptism, invoking only the name of the Lord Jesus, and who reject all fraternal union and communion with those whose baptism has been accompanied by the use of the formula "into the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit."

They insist that these words, though contained in the commission in Matt. xxviii. 19, were not to be retained in use after the day of Pentecost, and even go the length of insisting that the repetition of these "wholesome" and unrepealed "words of our Lord Jesus Christ," actually invalidates the baptism—makes it of no effect! and this even when the formula used in the act embraces "in the name of the Lord Jesus." In short they maintain that this mere surplusage (upon their theory) vitiates the whole act.

Giving these erring brethren—as I assume them—credit for an honest though erroneous construction of their duty in the premises I have attempted, "by reasoning out of the Scriptures," to convince them of their serious mistake, in all meekness and patience. I hope time and fuller reflections and investigations, and earnest prayer to be led into the way of truth, may cause the scales to fall from their eyes.

The following letter to one of them exhibits a recent effort I have made in that direction, and I send it for publication in THE RESTITUTION, suppressing the name of the person addressed, in the hope that the considerations, kindly presented may serve to lead him and others into the clearer light of "the more excellent way."

May our Father in Heaven preserve us from error and lead us into all truth, is my earnest prayer, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE LETTER.

STEPHENS CITY, Va.
Feby 7, 1881.

My Dear Sir:

Reflecting on our conversation yesterday and on previous occasions, it seems a pity that agreeing as we do on so many points, and both anxious to do right, that we cannot harmonize and co-operate, in all good conscience, in the good work of preaching and practicing the things we find written in the word of the Lord; and this reflection leads me to make at least one more effort to arrive at a common ground on which we may stand together. I submit to you in all kindness:

I. That in order to sustain your position as to baptism you have to reject or disregard the words of our Lord in Matt. xxviii. 19–20, inclusive. I know you say you do not deny the words, but you regard them as non-applicable—but for the purpose of your arguments, are they not regarded as of no use as to the question of baptism? I think candor compels you to admit that this is so, and therefore you pay no regard to them, any more than to the laws of Moses, which though once true are no longer binding.

Now is not this very dangerous ground to take, in view of our Lord's solemn declaration that "though heaven and earth shall pass away my words shall not pass away," and also in view of Paul's warning words in 1 Tim. vi. 3–5.

II. Consider the extraordinary occasion on which the Master spoke the words in Matt. xxviii. 18–20, after he had risen from the dead, and just then about to part from the eleven for so long a time, could it be at all probable that he should use language and give a formula of baptism which was to be repealed and superceded a few days—at most about fifty days—after, at Pentecost, and without the least hint of any change in this formula which was so soon to take place?

III. There is another view which cannot be contradicted and it seems to me, ought to be conclusive. It is that such a baptism as you suppose the Savior to institute in Matt. xxviii. 18–20, and which, as you contend, was to last only till Pentecost, was never practiced at all, for there is no record of the apostles having either preached or baptized any baptism in the interval between his resurrection and the day of Pentecost! Indeed we can positively assert the fact that they did not, for he commanded them to "tarry at Jerusalem until they received power from on high," and so you see by your construction, the words of the Savior became unmeaning, and what he commanded to be done, namely "to baptize in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost" never was done! Besides,

IV. He told them in Matt. xxviii. 19, that they were to teach all nations and baptize them into the name, etc., and yet (as you contend) the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost in baptism, was not used on Pentecost nor afterward by the apostles, and it follows necessarily that the baptism he commanded in the use of the three names has never yet been performed on the Gentiles, and consequently the Savior's words and command were disregarded and disobeyed by his apostles!

Are you prepared to take these consequences of this logical carrying out of your construction of Matt. xxviii. 18–20, and Peter in Acts ii. 38? If we baptize "in the name of the Lord Jesus" into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit," do we not carry out both Matthew and Acts, and thus reconcile Christ and Peter? There is one remaining suggestion which I think is worthy of your serious attention.

Your position is that none are scripturally baptized who use the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit in the act. That the use of these names invalidates the ordinance, although the act should have been performed "in the name of the Lord Jesus," and holding this position you exclude—consistently, I admit—all those from your fellowship and communion who have used in their baptism the prohibited names. Are you justified in this course? You know the promise is, that he that believeth the gospel and is baptized in the name of the Lord, shall be saved.

I present myself, for example, to you as one who has believed and has complied with the conditions, in the name of the Lord—can you deny that the Lord, according to his pledged word has received such an one—and yet you reject him.

Is it any reply to this to say that the baptism is nothing because the three names were used also in the act, unless you can show a "thus saith the Lord" as authority, and you have never done so yet.

The omission in Acts to record the specific use of the three names in baptism, is unimportant and proves nothing. A plain command once clearly given derives no additional value from its repetition. In Acts xvi. we have an account of the baptism of the jailor and his house, and of Lydia, in which no name is recorded. Would that authorize to baptize without invoking any name in the act?

Yours very truly.

ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

English version.

HAMMOND, Mich.

Editor Restitution:

A word to the brethren in Michigan: Held meeting in Watson, Allegan Co., commenced April 23, preached four discourses, and baptized four intelligent believers into Christ. The interest in this place is good, and as our conference is to be held there, let us have a full representation from all of our conregations in the state, and be assured the brethren in Watson will care for all our wants.

They are a body of earnest workers, keeping up their prayer meetings and Bible class.

Let us all make up our minds that we are going to have by far the best conference ever held in the state. Let us all come praying that the Lord will bless this meeting abundantly.

Would say, much prejudice has existed in this state. Cause: Extreme views; but it is growing less daily. The Baptist, Methodist, and others are inviting us to preach in their churches. The truth is onward. The Lord is gathering out a people for his name. Let us remember if we are unworthy we shall be left behind. The Lord's cause is onward, and others more worthy will take our place and also our crown.

God's people are a people who live their religion as well as talk about it. Our success depends very much upon our example. The world is watching us closely. If our religion makes us no better, really we are no better for professing it.

Let us pray "Thy kingdom come." The long looked for day is near at hand.

BEN'J. WOODWARD.

Selections.

Prophetic Times.

CHRIST'S PERSONAL COMING, AS KING AND JUDGE.

S. BONDHOLME.

Why do the Gentiles rage, the people imagine a vain thing, the kings of the earth set themselves and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord and against his anointed, saying: let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us? Psa. ii. 1-3.

Then it is that the Lord vexes them in his sore displeasure, and declares that notwithstanding their rage, he has set his king upon Zion (not the Christian church) the Zion of his holiness. Christ then publishes the decree—Jehovah hath said unto me, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the Gentiles for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." "Thou shalt break them in pieces like a potter's vessel." Psa. ii. 7–9. No passage could on its face bear stronger evidence of God's purpose to establish Christ's Dominion on earth by power and judgments. Language less descriptive of the speed of Christ's truth, or language more descriptive of the forcible and violent establishment of his dominion, could hardly be devised.

But we are not left to conjecture as to how the prediction of this Psalm receives its accomplishment. On the contrary, its fulfillment is thus graphically narrated: "And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called faithful and true, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood. And his name is called the Word of God, and the armies which were in heaven (i. e. the saints of God) followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and he treadeth the wine press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God." Rev. xix. 11–15. This passage then further describes the gathering of the armies of the beast and the false prophet, the capture and fearful doom of the two leaders and the destruction of their followers, the binding and imprisonment of Satan for "one thousand years." That the one here described is Christ cannot be questioned, and that the work he accomplishes is the same foretold in the second Psalm, the identity of the language clearly proves.

The forcible establishment of Christ's dominion upon this earth, therefore, and the destructive judgment of his enemies takes place at least one thousand years before the last judgment upon the white throne, and the end of this world. He then comes to this earth in manifold glory, and with resistless strength to execute the judgments of God and to reign in righteousness over the world. By looking a little further into the same chapter, we discover something which casts light on this subject. We there hear mighty rejoicings going on in heaven, "the voice of a great multitude, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying: Alleluiah: for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." Rev. xix. 6.

Christ in addressing the church at Thyatira, declared: "He that overcometh and keepeth my word unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers, even as I received of my Father, "this peculiar honor have his saints." Rev. ii. 26–27. Thus those who overcome, that is, real believers, as distinguished from false professors, are here joined with Christ in the judgment of the nations foretold in the second Psalm.

The epistle of Jude contains a very ancient prophecy uttered by the patriarch Enoch, the seventh from Adam, in which he says, "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all." Jude 14–15. Now there are but two scenes named in Scriptures to which this can refer. One of these is the judgment of the great white throne, at the end of the world. The other, the coming of Christ to take his early dominion; we have already seen that the saints, the armies of heaven, issue forth with him, clothed in his likeness, and his companions in executing judgment over his foes. Psa. cxlix. 5–9. There can, therefore, be no doubt that it is to this time that Enoch's prophecy relates.

In writing to the Thessalonians, (2 Thess. i. 7–10) Paul says, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and secondly the other class, so numerous in the church in the present day, i. e. false professors, who do not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, fashionable Christians of the present day, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, "when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe, because our testimony among you was believed, in that day." Again, in another epistle, Paul says, "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 3, 4. And John writes in the same strain, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." 1 John iii. 2. Nothing is simpler than to follow the truth of God, if allowed to flow in its own natural bed, nothing more difficult, if diverted into artificial channels of human theology and tradition.

Again, the second personal coming of Christ, with his mighty angels and his saints, is the time promised of a speedy deliverance of this earth from the tyranny and the dominion of his enemies; and of the new and immortal career on which the saints are to enter with him, for the accomplishment of the great purpose which he has revealed, of a conquest over his foes, and a victorious reign on this earth for one thousand years.

The giddy heedless world supposes that the revolutionary commotions of 1793 and so on since will never be repeated again. But the prophecies of the Old and New Testaments predict a far more violent revolution, such as was not since men were upon the earth. Rev. xvi. 20. So mighty a revolution and so great; that the national cities of all governments upon earth will be annihilated for ever and could not be traced back, sweeping away thrones and governments, and institutions in the foaming seething torrent of a universal whirlwind deluge. The present state of the world may seem to be such as to make it unreasonable to give warning of danger; so the Jews thought when the Roman army surrounded Jerusalem to raze it to the ground.

Another feature of these dangerous times we may state consists in insubordination, self-will and lawlessness which is prevalent among the lower classes or orders, and alienate the highest classes from them. The worldly selfishness of those who have been amassing riches in trades, manufactories and commerce, or by other means without any regard to the spiritual or even temporal welfare of those who have toiled for them. Thinking dependants only to be employed and retained for their own convenience, and casting them off with careless indifference when they can no longer serve their worldly interests, has alienated the lower class too from the higher. Both classes seem mostly unconscious of their own danger in consequence of this state of things.

The apostle Paul assures us, that in the great day of the Lord, the pious believers then alive shall be caught up simultaneously with the sleeping saints to the Lord by a glorious deliverance (1 Thess. iv. 17,) which seems to corroborate every testimony of the New Testament.

It is in the days of these kingdoms (Dan. ii. 31–35) i. e. of the great image, that whatever peculiar governments have been formed, from the toes of iron and clay of this image, shall be swept away, like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and completely wiped out of human existence.

Then it is that truly a kingdom, as predicted in the second Psalm and of the prophets, a kingdom, a government, a tangible sovereignty and dominion shall be established upon and over the face of the whole earth. All the connections and terms of the descriptions show this. The dominion of Christ is called a kingdom because it fulfills the functions and performs all the offices of a great political sovereignty. It fills on all other governments, crushes them out of existence, and takes their place. This, then, the kingdom of the Son of God, is a kingdom in respect of nature the same with the kingdoms represented by the great image, that is, it is outward as they of the nations are outward, with this difference, that it is an everlasting kingdom and shall stand forever and ever.

Now this is just the very thing we see in the apocalypse. There we behold the creation groaning under fearful woes till Jesus and all the other sons of God are manifested in their glory, coming from heaven for its deliverance, destroying them which destroy the earth, and reigning in peace and happiness for a thousand years.

In concluding this subject, we refer to the Word of God, and first to Psa. l. as to the fiery judgment to be poured upon mankind shortly. "The mighty God, even the Lord hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Zion the perfection of beauty God hath shined." "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence, a fire shall devour before him; and it shall be very tempestous round about him." And, says Psa. xcvii. 2, 3, "Clouds and darkness are round about him, righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne. A fire goeth before him and burneth up his enemies round about."

Then Psa. xlvi. 8–10, brings in the peaceful reign of Christ with his society, saying, "Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth, he breaketh the bow, he cutteth the spear in sunder, he burneth the chariot in the fire." In Joel iii., we have it in a more detailed order, as well as in Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix., and Zech. xiv.

The apostle Paul, speaking of Christendom's profession in the latter days, and the Lord's personal coming and reign upon earth with his saints, foretells that it will be a subject of derision. Men will point to the world around, declare everything to be prosperous, and discern no sign of change, even the public press is constantly harping away of these prosperous times upon which we have entered a short time ago, and that it is to increase manifold more, as there could be no interference whatever. Alas, they are willingly ignorant, that so it was before the flood of Noah, nor did the mockery of the long warning prevent the deluge coming and sweeping the scoffers away; nor will it stay the execution of judgment on the human race now, in whose stability men are trusting. When the hour shall arrive, the visitations will overwhelm the nations, and it will overwhelm them like a thief in the night, for the destruction of those left on earth.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At his home near Windfall, Ind., May 18, 1881, at 11 o'clock a.m. of phlegmonous erysipelas, Brother S. G. Clark, at the age of sixty-three years, and seven days, after an illness of just one week.

To those who know the dread nature of the disease of which he died, it is not necessary to say that his suffering was terrible; so much so that he was not fully conscious, and his mind never clear, from the time the disease had become fully established. For months his suffering had been so acute from other diseases, that he had often expressed a desire to be relieved of his suffering and be at rest.

His faith in the absolute rest of the dead, and the resurrection of the just, to immortal life, at the coming of Jesus, was firm and steadfast, and his confidence in the literal fulfillment of all the glorious promises recorded in God's holy word, was perfect and unshaken; and knowing that his ailments were such that he could accomplish but little more in his great life-work, and having full assurance that he would be among the number of those who will come forth to meet the Savior and King at his coming, he had for months anxiously awaited that perfect rest that death brings to the weary and suffering.

Brother Clark was indeed a veteran in the cause of Christ. He was one among the first, in these latter days, to espouse the doctrine of the personal coming of Christ, to reign literally upon the earth: and his eloquent voice has been heard in nearly half of the States of the Union, in vindication of that sublime faith.

But that voice is hushed in death. No more will his eloquence thrill the very being of the anxious listener. No more will his powerful logic and his clear and forcible reasoning convince the skeptical and doubting; his manly persuasions confirm and strengthen the weak and wavering. No more will his friendly and cordial conversation enliven our homes and firesides.

His work is done; his labor is past: his sufferings are over and he is at rest, and in that glad morning when the righteous come forth, when those that sleep in Jesus are caught up to meet the Lord in the air, our brother will live again.

Then while we mourn his loss to the church and to his family and friends, "we mourn not as others who have no hope."

Brother Clark leaves a wife—our esteemed Sister Clark, the sharer of his life and labors, his joys and his sorrows, and of his glorious hope—and two sons, and very many friends to mourn his loss.

May the consolations of Divine Grace rest with the sorely afflicted ones, and may grace, mercy and peace be and abide with us all. Amen.

A. M. LAND.

WINANS—At Austin, Ill., May 5, 1881, Brother Frederick Winans, aged near 80 years.

Funeral services were held Sunday, 8, at the Baptist Church, the Disciple and Baptist Churches being represented in the services; Mrs. Winans being a Baptist and Mr. Winans was associated with the Disciples.

Brother Winans was one of those Christians who possessed an extraordinary love for Christ and his cause; he dearly loved to bear testimony for the encouragement of others, that they may be prepared to meet Jesus when he comes in his glory.

His presence and voice in the church we shall miss very much, but we shall meet him soon on the evergreen shore.

The province of Adana in Asia Minor has been thrown into a state of frantic excitement owing to an unpleasant discovery that all the cultivated land between the ports of Mersina and Lidjghe was found to be covered with locust eggs. The eggs lie in compact layers, and are supposed to have been deposited by an army of locusts that passed through the district toward the middle of last year. On the state of affairs having been made known by telegram to the Governor, Abeddin Pasha, orders were at once transmitted to the authorities of Tarsus telling them to summon all the able-bodied men and women who could be mustered and to set them to work to destroy the eggs.

Hodscha-Ahmet, who was sentenced to imprisonment for life for having translated the Bible into Turkish, and for having circulated it in the States of the Sultan, escaped from the prison at Chio after the recent earthquake. The prison was thrown down by the violence of the shock, but Hodscha-Ahmet was not hurt. He managed to get on board an English vessel anchored in the harbor, and is now in London.

Sententious.

Slinginess in praise brings scantiness of spiritual growth and blessings.

Most of the beatitudes which infinite comparison pronounced have the sorrow of earth for their subject, but the joys of heaven for their completion. —H. More.

That very law which moulds a tear,
And bids it trickle from its source;
That law preserves the earth a sphere,
And guides the planets in their course.
—Samuel Rogers.

God walks with the simple; he reveals himself to the lowly; he gives understanding to the little ones; he discloses his meaning to pure minds, and hides his grace from the curious and proud.

The bird that sings on highest wing
Builds on the ground her lowly nest,
And she that doth most sweetly sing,
Sings in the shade when all things rest:
In lark and nightingale we see
What honor doth humility.

The interests of experimental, vital, practical religion, are the great interests of our being. No language can be strong enough to give them due expression. No anxiety is too deep, no care too heedful, no effort too earnest, no prayer too importunate to be bestowed upon this infinite concern of the soul's purification, piety, virtue, and welfare. No labor of life should be undertaken, no journey pursued, no activity employed, no business transacted, no pleasure enjoyed, no rest indulged in without ultimate reference to that great end of our being. Without it life has no sufficient object, and death has no hope, and eternity no promise.—Orville Dewey.

Leave God to order all thy ways,
And hope in him whate'er befide:
Thou'lt find him in the evil days
An all-sufficient strength and guide.
Who trusts in God's unchanging love,
Builds on the rock that naught can move.

Be ye of good cheer, every one that is afflicted, for the Lord is preparing for you the city of God. Whatever be your sorrow, it is the token of his love; for the Man of Sorrows is our King, and the path of sorrow is the path of his kingdom; there is none other that leadeth unto life. Your reward is sure if you are but true to yourself. Do we believe these things? Are they realities, or are they words? They are God's word, which is a reality.—Dr. Manning.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The brethren of the Church of God at Antioch, Marshall Co., Ind., appoint their annual meeting to commence on the Friday before the first Sunday in June, at four o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday—the days dating June 3–5, 1881. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to attend. The place of meeting is between Plymouth and Argos, about five miles from the former and and three miles from the latter place.

The Annual Meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held (D. V.) at Watson, Allegan Co., Mich., in the Christian Meeting House, commencing at seven o'clock Thursday evening, June 2, 1881, and hold over Sunday, the 5th. Those coming from the east or west on the Michigan Central R. R., will take the Grand Rapids and Indiana R. R. at Kalamazoo, and go north to Monticth Station, and there take the Allegan R. R. to Fisk's Crossing, near the church. Those who come from north or south on the Grand Rapids and Indiana R.R. stop at Monticth and go to Fisk's.

Let there be a good representation from all parts of the state. The friends of the Blessed Hope at Watson are fully able and willing to welcome and entertain all who come. These annual gatherings will be few before the great meeting in the air, when, if faithful, we shall see the Lord and be like him. We would like to greet our brethren from Lonawee and Buchanan and all other parts of the state. We expect brethren Chase, Woodward and others will preach the word.

R. HOYT, Sec.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Church of God, will commence on Friday, June 17, in the grove near John T. Spaid's, and continue over Sunday. All of the Abrahamic faith, and the people in general, are respectfully invited to attend. Brother Spaid lives near High View, Frederick Co., Va., and any one interested may address him or John D. Good at that place. All from a distance will be cared for during the meeting.

N. J. MORGAN.

The Lord willing I will be at Scirleville, Clinton Co., Ind., the second Sunday in June, and hold a grove meeting, as Brother Keever may appoint. And while in the county I will hold other meetings as brethren may think best. Will be at Scirleville Friday before, and commence meeting in the evening.

J. S. HATCH.

Poetry.

CONSOLATION.

W. I. CROCKETT.

While around me are lying
The tints of a dying day,
And sadly the breezes are sighing
For the light that is fleeing away,
I think of the joys that are vanished
Through the darkened doors of the past:
That though throughout time they're banished,
They'll return with the treasures that last.

There is nothing on earth that is broken
That God will forget to unite;
And the words that are spoken
Oft are germs of unending delight.
As the sun through rain drops is shining
Makes the glorious bow of the sky,
So are the trials of our lifetime
The prisms of heav'n's purest dye.

When around us the shadows are closing,
And life's sweetest pictures are fled,
While thought's dark-tinted chambers are rising
With the tone of a voice that is dead:
We may deem the weight of our sorrow
Is greater than ah! it ay bear;
But a light gleameth out from the morrow,
And reveals not a comforter there.

Communications.

GOSSIPING.

A. M. HARLAN.

We consider this one of the great evils of the day. It is an unnecessary evil that does no one any good. We find persons in different communities who do not know how to govern their tongues; and what is the reason? It is because they let the tongue govern them, instead of governing the tongue. If they would only try and resist the evil one he would flee from them, and they can resist if they will only try; for the Savior says they shall not be tempted above what they are able to bear.

We should be very careful then and keep our tongue from unkindness; for a soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger, and words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in frames of silver.

We do not know what wounds we often cause by unguarded words. They may not be very deep, but they irritate. Our words are unkind sometimes when there is no unkindness in the heart. But so much the worse that unintentionally pain is caused.

Slander is another evil that does no good to either the slanderer or to the slandered one. Sin should not go unrebuked, but it should be according to the Scripture. "Go and tell him (the individual) his fault between thee and him alone." And we should confess our faults one to another, and try to reform, and he that is faithful will forgive us our sins.

But how is it when we do not try to mend our ways? A reputation is too sacred a thing to be made a plaything of, even if the intent is not malicious, more than that, for me to give some one a bad name does not make me any better, or the person talked of any worse in the eyes of thinking people.

Some gossip because they have nothing else to talk about, or do not try to know anything else which would make them and their neighbors happy. But instead of doing their neighbors any good they try to injure them, and also injure themselves in the attempt.

Some have no temptation to gossip, for their neighbor's doings form a subject of less interest than one that grows out of their own knowledge and culture. And here lies the secret of the whole matter. This habit is formed either by malice or ignorance. Nor does it belong to one community only, but is everywhere present, causing the best friends to become the bitterest enemies. The separation of companions for life. The divisions and strife in the churches are caused by gossipping and meddlesome busy-bodies.

Oh! would to God we would think and consider more about these things and do less work with our tongues.

The apostle Paul says "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouths, but that which is good to the use of edifying; that it may minister grace to the hearers."

James says "The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things; behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth."

This exclamation is full of meaning. See how the evil-disposed tongue can set on fire the evil propensities of men, causing jars, confusions and discords among the participants.

All kinds of birds and beasts have been tamed, but the tongue can no man tame! It is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Jas. iii. 5-8. Why full of deadly poison? Because the tongue of the slanderer, culminator, back-biter, whisperer or tale-bearer is more dangerous to life than venomous serpents.

Therewith we bless God even the Father, and therewith curse we men, which are made after the image of God.

Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Jas. iii. 9, 10.

Again the apostle says "Be swift to hear," i. e., talk little and work much. Says A. Clark, The righteous speak little and do much; the wicked speak much and do nothing. Slow to speak, slow to wrath. There are four kinds of dispositions, says the Midrash Hamalam. cap. 5, 11.

1. Those who are easily incensed, and easily pacified. These gain on one hand and lose on the other.

2. Those who are not easily incensed, but are difficult to be appeased. These lose on the one hand and gain on the other.

3. Those who are difficult to be incensed and are easily appeased. These are the good.

4. Those who are incensed and difficult to be appeased. These are the wicked.

Thus we see those who are hasty in speech are soon angry and are of a peevish disposition. A person who is careful to consider what he says is not soon angry. Can not any individual who has a fair amount of observation see that the foregoing are facts?

But why should these things exist among the brotherhood? Why not rather take wrong? It would be far better for both parties than to harbor an envious disposition.

Oh! that we would heed the admonition of the apostle James when he says Be slow to speak, slow to wrath. Why be slow in these things? "For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."

Solomon says, "He that is enraged (margin) with strife . . . . is like one that taketh a dog by the ear." Prov. xxvi. 17. Why so? Because he that giveth way to strife is sure to be worsted, and not benefitted.

Now why should evil-speaking, hatred and malice be? Why not suffer wrong? It will be better for us in the sight of our Heavenly Father, for he has told us, through the apostles and his Son, to lay these things aside and choose the good. Life is short, a vapor that passeth away. A few more joys and pleasures, a few smiles, many tears, much pain, clouds and darkness. Some sunshine and song, hasty greetings—abrupt farewells, then our little play will be over, and injurer and injured will pass away.

Then let us be slow to speak and slow to wrath; for he that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit (temper) than he that taketh a city.

Selections.

The Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.

THE COMING GREAT EARTHQUAKE.

REV. M. BAXTER.

The Book of Revelation distinctly states that when the seventh and last vial of God's wrath is poured out, there shall be "a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great: and the cities of the nations shall fall" as a necessary consequence of it. This is an unmistakable prediction of the destruction by an earthquake of the great cities of the nations of the earth.

We are now living at the end of the sixth vial, which dries up the mystic Euphrates or Turkish Empire, and are, therefore, on the margin of the seventh vial, which is expected to be poured out between 1885 and 1890. Therefore, within about ten years at the furthest, we may expect the great earthquake referred to. And it is remarkable that even now premonitory vibrations and terrestrial perturbations are being exceptionally felt throughout the globe.

A London newspaper says: "The consequences of an earthquake in England would be terrible. What would it be if nearly every house from Whitechapel to Kensington, a distance of six miles, and from Sydenham to Highgate (suburbs of London on the east, west, south and north of the city), were suddenly to be shaken to its foundations, to be cracked, rent, and riven while all the inhabitants were flying terror-stricken from a wreck of falling timbers and crashing walls? We will not picture the awful possibility for ourselves, how the parks would be crowded with trembling refugees, and every ship on the Thames would be assailed by fugitives anxious to escape from the fated city which was once the secure capital of England; how commerce would lie at a standstill, the funds go down, and starvation stare the people in the face. It would be equally bad were Paris, or Berlin, or St. Petersburg to be the scene of such a devastating calamity; and inasmuch as the continent has more volcanoes than England ever contained, and is far more subject to subterranean convulsions, there is less improbability in this hypothesis than in any such unlikely disaster befalling one of the great English cities.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT LISBON.

"It was about the beginning of a bright November day in the year 1755 that the flourishing capital city of Portugal was laid low in the space of about ten minutes and fifty thousand persons were overtaken by an awful death. The first shock at Lisbon is described as having been very slight, barely more than the vibrations caused by a passing wagon. Then, after an interval of two or three minutes, came another movement which caused the houses to split and crack, and this was followed in a minute more by the most awful convulsion that ever occurred in any European town. Lisbon had been subject to earthquakes before that time, but they had been, for the most part, horizontal wave-like motions of the earth, which had only brought down one or two houses.

"This historical Lisbon earthquake is described as if two subterranean waves had met in collision just beneath the beautiful city on the Tagus, and thrown the buildings overhead into the air. In a moment the city was a heap of ruins, and, amid a profound darkness the screams of the living and the groans of the dying were all that could be heard. Then a fire broke out, and, driven by a fierce wind, completed the destruction of the Portuguese capital. Some unfortunate people had fled in terror to take refuge on the river banks; but the side suddenly rose and overwhelmed them, while the marble quay of the Terreiro do Paco sank with all the persons on it, and not one of the bodies ever rose to the surface again. All this, it should be remembered, happened in a part of Europe, little liable, as a rule, to such earthquake shocks as are common in tropical countries. It was an awful revelation of the insecure tenures on which even the most solid towns and cities hold their existence.

"A natural feeling of anxiety must now prevail among those fair isles of Greece.' Which of them will be the next victim, they must be thinking; or has the laboring earth exhausted its restlessness for the present? The fact that loud reports as of distant cannon or thunder have accompanied the shocks felt at Chios seems to lend color to the idea that earthquakes may be caused by some sort of subterranean explosion, either of gases or of steam. At the best many years must elapse before the fair isle of Chios can lift its head again, and in the meanwhile all Europe should unite to aid its unhappy people in their dire distress."

The Daily Telegraph justly observes, "Agrium, Casamicciola, and Chios all bear witness to the disturbed condition of the interior of our planet at the present time, and the earthquake at the last mentioned place has been by far the worst. This will set people thinking rather uncomfortably as to whether we in England are quite safe from such awful visitations. We have enjoyed immunity from serious earthquake so long that we have been led to believe that the earth in our quarter of the globe is solid enough to resist all possible pressure from beneath. Neither London, Liverpool, nor Birmingham, neither Edinburgh nor Dublin has ever—so far as history records—been subjected to anything more than slight terrestrial tremors. Certainly the houses have never come toppling down on the heads of the unfortunate inhabitants. Slight shocks have been experienced once or twice in a century, in various parts of Great Britain or Ireland, which have made plates and glasses jingle for a few moments, and caused people to wonder whether an explosion had taken place, or an unusually heavy cart passed, but nothing worse.

"Yet reasonable as our confidence may be in the stability of Mother Earth, as she exhibits herself in these islands, there have been times when England has been the scene of volcanic phenomena similar to those that have lately appeared at Agrium, at Ischia, and at Chio. Traces of eruptive energy exist in every quarry, in almost every mountain and hill in the British Isles. Not only the igneous rocks, the product of bygone fires, but 'faults' and irregularities of strata are eloquent proofs of the terrible disturbances to which the crust of English soil has long ago been subjected. Why else should the solid granite or limestone strata in many places stand tilted up towards the sky, or lie curved in fantastic shapes?"

RECENT EUROPEAN EARTHQUAKES.

The Genova correspondent of the Times writes:—"Professor Morel, of Borgeo, the eminent seismologist, has communicated to the local papers a complete list of the major and minor earthquakes recorded in Europe between February 25th and March 12th, 1881, or within fifteen days. The enumeration begins with the earthquakes at Agram, in Hungary, the first on February 25th, at 5.55 a. m., the second on the 27th, at 5.30 a. m. On the 28th occurred the third at Kirchberg, Austria, at 2.20 a. m., and on the same day there was also a shock in Auvergne, France. On March 3rd, at 3.35 a. m. shocks were felt in Switzerland at the following places, the centre of the disturbance being in Rich Vallais, Valley of the Aar, Valley of Aosta, Great St. Bernard, Geneva, and the region of Lake Leman, Vaud, Neuchatel, Berne, Basel, Zurich, Schaffhausen, Tessen, and throughout Central Switzerland. The shock extended also to Mulhausen, in Elsass, and was felt in the Black Forest. March 4th, at 1.30 p. m., the town of Casamicciola, in the island of Ischia, was destroyed by an earthquake. On March 7th, at 3 a. m., a smart shock was felt in Fischenthal, canton Zurich, and on the following day at 3 a. m. one equally strong was observed at Lausanne. To these have to be added the fifteen slight shocks which took place on March 12th at Fuligno and Perugia, Italy, though they are not included in Professor Morel's list. If these be reckoned as one earthquake, there occurred in Europe in these fifteen days, nine distinct earthquakes, composed of twenty-three separate shocks. The increasing frequency of earthquakes in Switzerland is marked and significant. In 1876, the known number of shocks was six; in 1877, five; in 1878, eight; in 1879, seven; in 1880, seventeen; in 1881, since January 1st, that is, in two and a half months, eight. The Swiss Seismological Society, for the scientific study of earthquake phenomena, is already in the third year of its existence. It is considered probable that we may shortly hear of further earthquakes, both in Switzerland and elsewhere."

N. Y. Observer.

THE REVISION AT LAST.

On Tuesday, May 17, the Revised New Testament was to be formally presented to the Queen of England, and then published. On Friday, May 20 it is to be published in this country. Our paper of this week bears date May 19, and we are therefore constrained, by what the British copyright owners claim to be their rights, to refrain from making any use in this paper of the work which will be in the hands of thousand before they read these lines. But we have seen enough of the work, and have heard from revisers themselves enough to justify us in making the following remarks, which may be supported by examples, if necessary, in a subsequent review:

1. The Revision is the fruit of ripe, vast, conscientious, impartial, Christian scholarship. The King James version was made by men who looked helps which the revisers enjoyed. Therefore, if the piety and scholarship of the two boards were only equal, the advantage of two-and-a-half centuries of learning is in favor of this Revision.

2. Combining several denominations, schools of theology, schools of criticism and shades of philosophical thought, it would be scarcely possible to organize a corps of scholars more competent to the task assigned. Fifty men in England, thirty in America, coming substantially to unanimous agreement as to the words by which the mind of the Spirit shall be conveyed to the English reader of the Bible, of itself is an overwhelming evidence of the correctness of the conclusion reached. The statements we have heretofore made in regard to the alterations desired by the Americans, and not approved by the British, are literally and exactly confirmed by the Book.

3. Modern criticism has assailed with such violent ability the text of the Bible, to impugn the faith of Christendom, we count it one of the grandest movements of God's wisdom and providence that these learned men should be incited to give their verdict as judges and jury on the integrity of the words received as by the inspiration of God. And that verdict is, that not one jot or tittle of any fundamental doctrine of our holy religion is to be altered or amended by the severest scrutiny of the text of the Sacred Record.

4. Beyond this unspeakably important result is a second scarcely less sublime and momentous. Passages which have been assigned as interpolations, spurious, and unlimplied, have been subjected to the crucibles of eighty experts in Biblical criticism, and the result is, that the foundations stand sure. We will illustrate this position hereafter.

5. The alterations of the old version are far less in number and importance than we anticipated. Some of them do not commend themselves to our taste, and inasmuch as they do not change the meaning, we would prefer that the text had been left to stand as it was. "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian," is slightly different in meaning from the revised version "With but little persuasion thou wouldst fain make me a Christian," but the old conveys the speaker's idea quite as clearly as the new. Nor do we believe it wise to substitute modern words in all cases for old English.

6. The revision is more strictly conformed to the original, is less free, more literal, and therefore more accurate. Those familiar passages which are omitted have been dropped because the weight of evidence, as to their genuineness is against them, in the judgment of two-thirds of the revisers. No partisanship, no sectarianism, no self-interest has entered into the work of revision, and the result may be accepted as reached on its merits only. That it is the most accurate rendering of the original text which the English language now presents, will be the verdict of Christian scholars, who make it the subject of thorough and honest criticism. The omission of certain disputed passages will be censured and the decision of this committee will not preclude further investigation.

7. The revision is the most valuable contribution of Biblical knowledge which has been made within the last two centuries. It will at once stimulate the reading and study of the Holy Scriptures. Thousands will read the Bible now who never read it before. It will confirm the faith of every believer in the essential doctrines of the gospel. It will silence the cavils of many skeptical critics. It will make clear several passages which were obscure and thus essentially promote knowledge of the mind of the Spirit.

8. And lastly, as to its superseding the present version, that is to be determined by the sense of the English speaking world. Happily there is no authority in this country or in Britain to prescribe or proscribe the reading of the Bible. The lovers of God's Word will acknowledge their great indebtedness to the revisers for the immense learning, pains-taking and time they have bestowed upon this work, which will stand as their monument. And as the translation of the text into another tongue must be the work of fallible men, and inspiration cannot be claimed for them who make it, and in all essential features these two versions are the same, we may congratulate the English race on the possession of the sacred oracles in the most nearly perfect form in which they have appeared. The effect is with him who has said, "My Word shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please."

Youths' Column.

Young Christian.

Follow Thou Me.

Have ye looked for sheep in the desert,
For those who have strayed their way?
Have ye been in the wild, waste places,
Where the lost are wandering astray?
Have ye trodden the lonely highway,
The foul and darksome street?
It may be ye'll see in the gleaming
The print of my wounded feet.

Have ye folded home to your bosom
The trembling, neglected lamb?
And taught to the little lost one,
The sound of the Shepherd's name?
Have you searched for the poor and needy,
With no clothing, no home, no bread?
The Son of Man was among them:
He had nowhere to lay his head!

Have you carried the living water
To the parched and thirsty soul?
Have you said to the sick and wounded
"Christ doeth make thee whole?"
Have ye told my fainting children,
of the strength of the Father's hand?
Have ye guided the tottering footsteps
To the shores of the golden land?

Have ye stood by the sad and weary,
To smooth the pillow of death?
To comfort the sorrow-stricken,
And strengthen the feeble faith?
And have ye felt when the glory
Has streamed through the open door,
And child across the shadows,
That I had been there before?

Have you wept while the broken hearted,
In their agony of woe?
Ye shall hear me tenderly whisper,
"Thou art mine, I love you so!"
My friends, disciples, brethren,
Oh! ye dare to follow me?
Then where the Master dwelleth,
There shall the servant be.

A Parable from Krummacher.

A dying father gave each of his three sons some seeds, with very special directions how to plow the soil, sow the seed, and take care of it.

After the father's death the eldest took his seeds, and said: "Of what use will it be to me to give such pain to myself and to the earth, as to toil in ruining its bosom. The sun will, notwithstanding, warm it, and the rain moisten it, so that it will bring forth its fruit. Then he scattered the seed over the hard ground. But it did not spring up, nor bear fruit. The eldest despised and neglected the gift of his father.

The second son said: "Why should I do myself such an evil, in plowing up the bosom of the earth so long as the land offers me its fruit abundantly. And he put the seed aside and let it lie. Afterwards, when he had consumed the fruits of the land, he sowed the seeds of his father. But it did not spring up, for a worm had eaten out the germ so that he sowed nothing but the hull. He contemned the gift of his father and forgot it.

The youngest, however, did as his father had bidden, tried the best field, manured it, and dug it up with all care; then put a hedge around it, and sowed the seed in the soil. The seed sprouted and grew, and brought forth fruit sixty and a hundred fold.

He did the same the next year, and his farm and crops became continually larger, so that he and his children and grand-children had a superabundance.

Some years after, the older brothers having become poor and dependent on their younger brother, visited him, and saw his farm covered over with rich ears and sheaves, and heard the shouts of the reapers in the fields, for it was the time of the harvest. They were astonished, and said to each other, "We have done wrong to contemn the gift of our father."

Review and Herald.

The Wants of the Children.

MRS. L. D. A. SMITH.

The wise man says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

If this language be true, as we all must admit, what fearful responsibilities rest upon us as teachers and parents! God has kindly given us the little ones, that by judicious training we may prepare them for a life that is eternal. Oh, how careful ought we to live before them! How quickly their little faces reflect the ill-tempered frown or the pleasant smile! It is my serious opinion that a child should never be addressed in any other than a pleasant tone of voice. Jesus says it were better we were cast into the depth of the sea, than that we should offend (or discourage) one of the little children.

Parents, some of our own dear little ones have lately evinced a love for the Savior. Shall we, by our coldness and inattention, chill all the love and tenderness of their young hearts? This may be done much easier than we perhaps imagine. A frown may do it. A harsh word may do it. A neglect of duty on our part may crush and wound the spirit beyond hope of recovery. If the mother daily permits the petty cares of life to worry and annoy her till she becomes peevish and irritable, the sensitive little ones very soon wonder if "mother is really a Christian!" And they add: "If she is, I don't want to be one. I guess the angels don't come very near people that scold."

Parents, do not forget to pray with your children, often and earnestly. In after years, when temptation comes, as it surely will, mother's prayers will be to your child what the pole-star is to the storm-tossed mariner. Teach them to believe that the great God hears their little prayers, and that the answer to the prayer of faith is sure to come.

A child is easily encouraged, but as easily discouraged. Parents may think they have done their duty by their children, but just so sure as they depart from the good way when they become older, there is a serious fault somewhere. Had nothing essential been omitted by the parent, the child which is now the shame and reproach of their declining years, might have been a crown of glory to their head. Then, do not neglect the children now. Pray with them, talk with them, sympathize with them, appreciate and prize them to-day, that should the hand of death rudely snatch them from your arms, you may not feel the keen pangs of remorse added to those of sorrow.

Many changes have taken place since I was a child; but neither time nor trouble can ever efface from my memory the many times my own mother has taken me by the hand and led me to a quiet place, and there has knelt down before God and earnestly commended her child to him. I believe God heard those prayers, and answered them.

There is much to encourage us to faithfulness in this matter. Shall we not feel well repaid for our labor, if, by-and-by, we may with the dear little ones by our side, sit down in the kingdom of glory?

God grant that there be an awakening on this subject,—of all others the most important—that at last we, with the dear children whom God has given us, may shine as the sun and the stars forever, even forever and ever, in our Father's kingdom.

Let thy life be a continual [illegible] to the appetites and passions of [illegible] nature.

To the Little Boys who Read the Youths' Column.

BY AUNTIE.

Dear little boys, knowing that you are so sadly neglected, and that the girls, as a rule, are more tenderly cared for, I deem it my duty to write to those little boys whose parents have so kindly prepared a way for you to learn to read, and those who cannot read, I trust you have some one to read to you until you are able to read for yourselves.

Girls are more timid than boys 'tis true, but boys need just as many caresses as girls, and a far better example set them by the father and older brothers, than many have.

You, little boys, have no doubt heard or can think of families, whose girls and young ladies are refined and modest, while the boys and young men are quite the reverse, and perhaps you have heard people wonder why. Well I think I can tell you. The mother (whose love none other can excel) and who had most of the training of those nice young girls, the father being out of doors most of the time, that affectionate mother never uttered a profane sentence, nor even a naughty word, nor was she ever seen with her mouth full of tobacco, chewing and spitting. She was never seen indulging in anything she does not wish her boys as well as her girls to do.

But how is it with the father of those innocent boys. He from youth up has chewed that noxious weed, beginning when quite young, to make it appear he was considerable older, or perhaps his father chewed, and of course it seems nice to do what ever papa does.

But what if the father does not take the filthy weed in his mouth, nor take the name of God in vain, you would still want to be like papa in that respect, but temptation stares you in the face every day. You may have a schoolmate or a cousin, with whom you are very intimate. Well, you think, he chews, swears, and acts the rowdy, and it looks like he was big like Tom Jones, who swears, and spends fifty cents a week for plugs of tobacco, so you think you will swear and chew just a little, while out at play or at school to make you look big, for of course you think mamma and papa will never know it.

O! my dear little boys, this is just the way you are led on to ruin! RUIN! yes ruin. It will show in your very countenance, and it so soon becomes a habit, for one bad thing is sure to lead to another. Swearing is not only wicked, but it makes you rude-hearted and degraded; chewing injures the mind, wrecks the nerves, and makes any one filthy.

Now little boy just think, is it nice to use anything that makes you nervous and irritable; besides your clothes smell so strong, your breath so offensive, your teeth are stained, and, finally, when you are grown, your shirt bosom more or less soiled. Will you just put your mind to it, and see what a worthless habit it is, what a needless expense, say nothing about the bother of dropping all your work and go to town expressly for tobacco.

I have known men who could not buy a second suit for their children, no not even books for them, and still they would buy or beg the weed.

I heard one man say he would buy tobacco if he had to do without everything else, and from the appearance, I should judge he had very little but tobacco.

Dear little boys, do you want to spend your hard earnings for filth, and then when you are grown to a real man, you think how unmanly it is. It is nothing but an uncivilized habit. Just ask your parents if the Indians used it when America was discovered. Now is it not strange that civilized white people will follow a habit of the filthy tribes. Just imagine yourself grown to be a useful man without any of those bad habits, and then imagine how disgusting it would be to change from good morals to bad ones. O! how ridiculous. But if you will only heed and do right, you will be much happier. When you are grown you can teach others by your example the virtues of a moral life. Yes, more than that, you can begin now, with a firm resolution, never to indulge, and teach your mates and older ones better.

I hope if there are any fathers who partake of the weed, that they will see their folly and quit immediately, and thereby show they are men, that boyish days are past. Little boys you can have lots of influence, if you will only try.

Never be guilty of beginning; then you will never have to reform.

This is the world of seeds, of causes, and of tendencies, the other is the world of harvests and results, and of [illegible] and eternal consequences.

Poetry.

WRECKED.

HELENA M. HUNT.

How sadly the waves are murmuring—moaning
Far out in the bay,
While the sounds come softly back to the stillness
of twilight gray,
Like the echoes in many a human heart of a once vanished day.

The wide-winged ships are floating—flitting fast from the shore,
While over the bar the waters are breaking
With sullen roar,
Like the rush of some hidden memories
With their re-awaken—Nevermore.

Alas! that our lives like those ships fast sailing
Into foreign strands,
Are wrecked, wrecked as we lie at the harbor
On some treacherous sand,
In the gloom of that night-fall ever slaking
In midst of land.

O the [illegible] on the bark be true and faithful
Wherever we be,
In storm or calm may we breast the billows
Undaunted-ly,
And if we go wrecked may we even while sinking,
[illegible]

Communications.

CHRISTIAN EDIFICATION—ITS APPOINTED AGENCY.

J. CAMERON.

In a former paper we traced some modern attempts at a restoration of the primitive usage of mutual edification in the assembly of the saints. We propose now to inquire as to the teaching contained in the New Testament regarding this practice.

Edification is a building up—an increase in certain valuable qualities, moral, intellectual, and spiritual, as regards the individual; social, affectional, and adhesive as regards the community. This superstructure of moral excellence, and true wisdom, rests on a solid foundation, namely, "the faith of the gospel," that "faith once for all delivered to the saints." It is well expressed by the apostle Jude—"Building up yourselves on (not in, but on) your most holy faith."

This "edifying of the body of Christ," as expressed by the apostle Paul, may be said to embrace all that contributes to that perfection of the Christian character so much insisted on in the Divine teaching, "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect," though not meant to express equality in degree but in kind, is nevertheless a standard of lofty attitude sufficient to tax the energies and endurance of the man of God. Paul wrote to the disciples—"this also we wish even your perfection." In regard to its primary source this perfection is ascribed to God as its author. See Acts xx. 32; Col. i. 12; Heb. xiii. 20, 21. In the actual working out of it in the life it is as distinctly attributed to the persons themselves. See 2 Cor. vii. 1; Phil. ii. 12; Jude 20. Viewed as a personal work this perfection of character has to depend, under God, and with the means he has provided, mainly on the force of individual determination assiduously exercised under all the varying circumstances of life. This determination is susceptible of being greatly stimulated and sustained by the encouragement and help of kindred spirits engaged in the same work.

This extraneous aid rendered to the individual, is reciprocated in some measure though it may be by the rendering a service of a different kind, or even only by the manifestation of gratitude for the benefit. All circumstances of time and place, however varied, may afford occasion for the administration of such helpful services—in the house or by the way. The field for its exercise more immediately in view is the church of Christ, and the object of the present paper is to inquire into the agencies which God has appointed for the upbuilding of his people when thus gathered together for his worship and service.

In the apostolic arrangements for a church order and teaching we are presented with what at first sight appears to be two distinct modes of promoting the edification of the church. These might be termed the Tutorial and the Mutual. We read of "apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers." All these were evidently more or less responsible for the progress of the churches toward perfection. The apostle Paul expresses his sense of responsibility in this matter when he speaks of "the care of all the churches coming upon him daily." He writes to the Philippians—"God is my record how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ. And this I pray that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ." We see this care of the apostle practically exemplified in his revisiting the churches he had planted for the purpose of confirming them in the faith and hope of those things they had received, and in the position they had taken up in embracing the gospel. Thus we are informed that Paul and Barnabas "returned again to Lystra and to Iconium and Antioch, confirming the souls of the disciples and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." At another time, we are told, Paul and Silas "went through Syria and Cilicia" confirming the churches." This was a usage of Paul as far as opportunity afforded, for we find him saying—"Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do."

It may be well to note in passing that this confirming the churches is not to be confounded with what is known and practiced in the Episcopal churches under the name of "confirmation." This is defined in theological dictionaries as a "rite whereby children (having come to years of discretion) in the presence of God and of the congregation, renew the solemn promise and vow that was made in their name at their baptism, ratifying and confirming the same in their own persons." It professes to be founded on a practice said to be followed by the apostles "laying their hands on those who had been baptized in order that they might receive some miraculous gift which confirmed their faith." But it is admitted that "such confirmation was a temporary usage" and was "kept up by those who succeeded the apostles for a purpose different though somewhat analagous," and is looked upon as the completion of the baptismal service in the case of those baptized in infancy. How utterly human is such a ceremony need not be here insisted on.

While the apostles were so solicitous for the edification of the churches they had planted as to make personal visits to them from time to time, they also appointed men of age and experience in the churches to take the oversight. We read that "they ordained elders in every city." And in cases when they could not oversee the appointment of such men themselves personally, they delegated the duty to others. Such were Timothy and Titus, as Paul's letters to these men show. While the general oversight of the churches was the principal duty of the "elders," which is indicated by the term "bishop," also applied to them meaning overseer, one of their qualifications was "aptness to teach." They are otherwise termed "pastors and teachers." The elders that ruled well were to be counted worthy of double honor, but there was a speciality in favor of those who also labored in word and doctrine (that is, teaching). It is evident from the letters to Timothy and Titus that these apostolic deputies were charged with the appointment of brethren having the edification of the church as a prominent part of their duties. See Titus ii.; 1 Tim. iv 6–16; 2 Tim. i. 15; iv. 1–5; etc. The responsibility imposed upon these elders, and the duty of the members of the church to render to them implicit obedience is well set forth in various places. Take the following as a specimen:

"Obey them that have the rule over you and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls as they that must give account." Heb. xiii. 17.

All this shows such an organized system of tutorial superintendence, as, in the absence of any other qualifying circumstances, might well justify the popular idea that nearly the whole of this machinery was intended to be permanent in the church and that no other edifying agency could exist alongside of it.

Let us, however, take a glance in another direction. We find numerous apostolic exhortations to the duty of mutual edification. These are addressed to the disciples at large, and not merely to the elders. And this duty of mutual edification was not only to be exercised alongside the teaching of the bishops, but must have been intended to occupy a very prominent place in the church. "Comfort yourselves together and edify one another even as also ye do"—"Exhort one another daily"—might refer either to the private sphere or to the public assembly. This duty was becoming at all times, and often absolutely necessary, in the various circumstances of life. But the injunction of the apostle in the letter to the Hebrews places it beyond a doubt that the church meeting was equally appropriate for this friendly interchange of good service. He says—"Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." See also 1 Cor. xiv., where the church meeting is the subject.

There were thus two very distinct agencies for edifying the church coexisting in the days of the apostles, namely, the tutorial by the elders, and the mutual by the brethren in general. The question arises here—Have we any information as to the relation these sustained to each other, and especially as to whether they were both designed to be permanent?

In Paul's letter to the Ephesians he makes a very pointed reference to the various officials already named, and the work for which they were appointed. He had been reminding the Ephesian disciples of their being a mixture of Jews and Gentiles, and of the Gentile believers having become fellow-citizens with those saints of the stock of Israel who had walked in the steps of Abraham's faith. As those Gentiles were now associated with Jewish believers in Jesus as the Christ, who had reconciled both to God in one body by the cross, and were thus made "fellow-heirs, and partakers in Christ by the gospel," he proceeds, in chapter iv. to exhort them to "walk worthy of this calling wherewith they had been called, endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit by the bond of peace." He enforces this advice by reminding them of the one body and the one spirit of their being "called in one hope of their calling," and of there being one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all. He then alludes to the fact that along with this unity of the Spirit (demonstrated by the Holy Spirit on Pentecost to Jews and in the house of Cornelius to Gentiles) there was diversity of gifts. "He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children," etc.

In this passage we have as the end proposed—"the edifying of the body of Christ." This is farther defined as the growing up of the individual disciples in faith, knowledge, and love, from a condition of moral and intellectual infancy and childhood to the stature of full grown men, as measured by that standard presented in the perfect character of Jesus himself, who is the Head. He also specifies the agency by which this end is to be brought about. First, then, the apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, were appointed, according to the way in which verse 12 is pointed, for three separate things:

1. "The perfecting of the saints."
2. "The work of the ministry."
3. "The edifying of the body of Christ."

It is well known, however, that the putting in of points is a modern invention, there having been no points in use when Paul wrote this epistle. We are therefore entitled to inquire whether the pointing in our Common Version is absolutely necessary, or if it is capable of improvement. Dr. James Macknight, in his translation of the Epistles, has taken the liberty to answer this question for us by the simple omission of the comma. His rendering is—"For the sake of fitting the saints for the work of the ministry in order to the building of the body of Christ." According to this pointing the objects of the appointment of apostles, etc., are only two, and these related to each other as means and end:

1. "The fitting the saints for the work of the ministry."

2. "The edifying or building of the body of Christ."

Thus without altering or transposing a single word the plain teaching of this passage is to the effect that the primary and direct duty of apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers was the perfecting, fitting, or training the general body of the saints for the work of the ministry, with the grand end in view that by the exercise of that ministry the work of mutual and general edification might be done.

Dr. Macknight's pointing is borne out by a distinction in the three conjunctions rendered "for" at the beginning of each clause. In the Greek the first is pros, the second and third being eis. The second only is rendered "for" by Macknight, the first and third being rendered respectively "for the sake of" and "in order to." Besides by the ordinary pointing the apostle is made to commit a glaring tautology or repetition, not at all in keeping with his usual clear style. This will be seen by reference to the first and last clauses of verse 12 as expressing substantially the same idea. These are "the perfecting of the saints" and "the edifying of the body of Christ." The altered pointing presents no such anomaly, but resolves the three clauses into two, denoting the means and the end of "perfecting the saints for the work of the ministry."

Considering the heterogeneous materials of which the early church was composed, it will be readily seen that there was ample need for such a training system as that shown in this passage. Grown up persons of both sexes drawn from all classes of society, and from among Jews and Gentiles, for the most part unpractised in the exercises of superintendence, teaching, etc., must have required to undergo a special course of training ere they could efficiently take part in the work of mutual edification, and excel to the edifying of the church."

Coming back to the question—What relation was it designed the tutorial part of the agency of edification should bear to the mutual? We might inquire here—Were they both intended to be permanent? And if not, which of them should be superceded by the other? In view of what has been already advanced it will be admitted that the ministry of the saints was to continue as a permanent agency in church edification, whatever conclusion we may come to regarding the tutorial. The tutorial was the means of preparatory training for the saints to fit them for the mutual. And it becomes of great importance to ascertain whether any means were provided for securing a succession of "apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers." Here it may be noted that the apostles were appointed by our Lord himself personally, and that pastors and teachers (elders) were appointed by the apostles or their deputies. How prophets and evangelists were appointed is not so clear. The apostles passed away and left no successors. All their deputies we have any account of (Timothy and Titus) have been gathered to their fathers, and regularly appointed elders would soon also die out. But as long as there were disciples to meet together "the ministry of the saints" would continue in the measure of such ability as might in the course of things be transmitted from generation to generation.

It may be well to note an exception to the regular and formal appointment of elders in what is contained in the first epistle of Peter, chap. v. It is probable that Peter, who wrote to disciples "scattered abroad," advised the men of experience and mature age among them to "take the oversight," although not regularly "ordained" to this office. His advice to the "younger" to submit themselves to the "elder" seems to confirm the unofficial idea of the term elder in the passage. Even if this be so, however, it still leaves the exercise of "the ministry of the saints" to be continued with or without the tutorial as an accompanying agency.

Should it be thought that the grand end of unity of faith, knowledge, etc., contemplated by the arrangement under consideration has not been accomplished, and that therefore there is a necessity for the continuance of the various officials mentioned by Paul, or at least some of them, a single remark may suffice. It was a Divine arrangement, but one which required the co-operation of men. It will be admitted that it was fitted to secure the end in view if man did his part. God's part was done, and if there was failure on man's part, the Divine arrangement is not to be charged with the result. God could say in this case as he said of Israel—"What could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it?"

It is well known that the popular churches throughout the world ignore what we understand by "the ministry of the saints," and claim to possess "successors" of the "apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers," for the edifying of the church by their direct ministrations. Various agencies have been devised for the appointment of these. Pope, emperor, king, conference, presbytery, bishops, and people, have each their devoted partisans upholding their right to succeed the apostles and their deputies in the duty of appointing pastors and teachers for the churches. This "patronage" as it is termed, whether exercised by sovereign, conference, or people, has no countenance in the New Testament. "The powers that be" were duly recognized as worthy of honor in matters civil; but there can be no doubt that the injunction of our Lord to "render to Cesar the things which are Cesar's, and to God the things which are God's," was ever prominent in the minds of the apostles. As for the people there is no evidence that they had any authority to choose pastors and teachers. The apostles or their deputies were the only authorized electors of such officials. The only case in which the disciples were asked to "look out" certain persons was to meet an emergency that had arisen from a complaint as to the distribution of food. To allay this murmuring certain persons were nominated by the parties interested, so that no suspicion of injustice might be felt. See Acts vi.

But not only have churches in modern times claimed to have "successors of the apostles" in the form of archbishops, bishops, etc., some have gone the length of appointing officials with the very name of apostles. This has been done by those calling themselves "Latter-Day Saints," and by the "Catholic Apostolic Church." These apostles claim to have been appointed by the Lord himself by some supernatural influence operating through individuals.

There was a similar attempt in the days of the true apostles, to which Paul makes allusion when he speaks of "false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ." 2 Cor. xi. 13. Some of those appear to have been detected as we find from one of the letters to the angels of the seven churches in Asia—"I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not endure them who are evil; and thou hast tried them who say they are apostles and are not, and hast found them liars." Paul utters a warning after making the statement above quoted which all who make such claims should ponder—"And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of right eousness, whose end shall be according their works." 2 Cor. xi. 14, 15. One who knows such works is cognizant of their doings. They may go on now with impunity, but a coming day shall bring the retribution due to such doings, be they of greater or less enormity.

The position of those who are identified with such a movement as that represented by THE RESTITUTION, suggests a very important practical question as to "the fitting of the saints for the work of the ministry." We do not possess the agency for this purpose which the early church had, and yet we require to minister as far as possible to the upbuilding of the body of Christ. Is there, then, any other available means which can supply its place? It so happens that although the apostles are not to be found among us in person, we possess an important part of the means which they employed for the edifying of the churches, and for the training of the disciples for the ministry of the saints. The letters of the apostles, although called forth by special circumstances connected with the various churches and individuals to whom they were addressed, were well fitted to promote their edification. The letters to Timothy and Titus contain express directions for the election of fit and proper persons for this work, and include plain advice as to their own personal duty to carry it out both by precept and example. Then we have the teachings of our Lord contained in the writings of the four evangelists. These, as well as the apostolic letters could not have been in general circulation for a considerable time among the early disciples; hence the necessity for oral agencies both for direct teaching, and for the training the inexperienced for the same work. Besides these sources a mine of knowledge exists in the writings of the Old Testament, which will amply repay the labor of digging. Let these various means be used to the best advantage in combination with whatever helps these modern times can furnish us with, bearing in mind that now as of old "all Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished to all good works."

A word in closing as to speaking in the church. Many from popular usage, are apt to think that some kind of public address is absolutely necessary in a church meeting. This seems to be a mistake. The chief object of meeting is to commemorate our Lord by eating bread and drinking wine to show forth his death till he come again. Another object is to worship God by offering thanks and praise for good received, and supplicating a continuance of the same. This implies address to God only, and must be offered in the name of Jesus. Whatever benefit there is in address to one another, (and there may be much) the existence and validity of the church does not depend upon it. The Scriptures can be read, especially the teachings of our Lord, and the exhortations of the apostles; and a church of no more than two or three individuals may do what is really necessary to be done without address, either short or long, to one another. In sparsely peopled districts where there are but few disciples in a place, and few visits of brethren, it is of great importance to keep this in mind. At the same time, the duty of "not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhort one another"—should be attended to; and the latter duty cultivated by every brother to the best of his ability and opportunities.

Edinburgh, Scotland.

A LETTER

TO A BAPTIST MINISTER ON THE LITERALITY OF

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN,

The Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the

THRONE OF DAVID

—AND—

KINGDOM OF ISRAEL.

THE SUBJECTS AND SOVEREIGN OF

Mr. Cantuary is "THEODOSIA."

—By DANIEL HOWARD.—

A Capital tract for those desiring information on the subjects discussed. Send to the office for it, and after reading send it to your neighbor.

PRICE ELEVEN CENTS EACH.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885.

—By M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the Author. 72 pages, 24c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE

TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 6, 1881.

—By H. V. REED.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

FIVE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send orders to

SAMUEL WILSON,

918 N. 33d Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by

THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 1$ for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND THE—

BIBLE Vindicated.

—By A. J. EYCHANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting the enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 10 for 50c., or 40 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New HYMN Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Hooker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 20c. cloth 30c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,

Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PRIMER. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ. 3. Bible Baptism. In tract. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thought for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 5c., or assorted packages of 100, 25c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 25c.; 50 for 35c.; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and comment of the two uses of these terms, to wit: the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. R. Macgruder.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

1-10 Tract. H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are entitled to salvation.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and man-made theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Luisy.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? R. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Nation, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each, or 12 for 25c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each; 12 for 25c.; or 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Jonah Pierce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing from Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promises made to Abraham, repeated to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each; 8 for 20c. or 25 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches (Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY TWO PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each, or 25 for $1.

Evangelical concerning the Reign of Christ on Earth and the Nations; or a brief view and set of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and fitted to be the everlasting residence. S. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. This exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 99 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and 23rd. 64 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 60 pages, price 15c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 25c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational minister, and W. Bellamy, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth $1.00., paper 50c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Containing a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 116 pages, cloth 50c., paper 30c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.25.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., from type. Good paper, 370 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,

Norfolk, Va.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—ENTIRE.—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the texts of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper. 866 pages, cloth $4.00. Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

— MAN —

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE,

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. B. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 26, 1881, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 10 for 35c., or 30 for $1.

THE RESTITUTION
Is published every other Thursday at
The Christian Publishing Association,
PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
B. F. DWIGGINS.....Vice President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. E. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
I. U. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, H. WILSON,
J. P. WESTFIELL, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, G. M. MYERS,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Brotherhood Article

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 1, 1881. NO. 21.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS:—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel to the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Fourth Trumpet Continued. General View. Terms Explained. History. Application. Close of the Series.

No. 70.

J. P. WESTFIELL.

General View.—The visible objects and agents of the first four trumpets, belong to the physical world, introduced to the prisoner of Patmos, to illustrate the history of the Roman Politico-Ecclesiastical world.

The great Delineator (God) keeps behind the curtain. John is intensely absorbed with the views of the phenomena, the visible work of an unseen agent.

Under the sounding of the fourth trumpet the natural phenomena are extraordinary, and somewhat terrific. The heavens are in sackcloth because of the afflictions of her luminaries. The photograph is that of a single revolution of the earth; consisting of one day and one night. During four hours (one-third of the day) the sun is under an extraordinary eclipse; and through an equal part of the night. Its luminaries labor under a similar obscuration; doubtless from the continuation of the same cause.

The single revolution, with its natural phenomena, symbolizes the entire period, covered by those events which resulted in the temporary extinction of the western empire; we say temporary, for it was again restored.

Explanation of Terms.—1. Third part—τριτον. Τ, τον is a neuter adjective; the noun is understood in the Greek original; part may answer.

"Sun" here means light of the sun; the latent, or attribute, taking the name of the cause. So also with the moon, and stars. Light is intended. This is evident from the last clause: "And the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise." There was total darkness during a part of the day, and of the night also; there was a supernatural eclipse of the luminaries, both of the day and the night.

History.—Can we find this divine original in history? The western empire is the symbolical heavens; the civil officers of which are its luminaries; since they are to the political world what the sun, moon, and stars are to the natural world—their light. We must look for an eclipse of these moral luminaries.

We have explained the star to be Attila, the Hun. Under Alaric, Genseric, and Attila, the Roman sky had lost much of its purity and lustre, affecting the brightness of its planetary light. Its imperial sun, its senatorial moon, and its consular, tribunitian and pretorian stars; its entire officiary gave signs of the approach of some remarkable occultation.

The twenty years following the death of Attila, saw nine emperors, successively occupying the throne of the western empire, only one (Majorian) being of any force. The immediate circumstances, which hastened the fall of the western empire were as follows:

The bravest youth of those nations that fought under Attila, enlisted in an army of the nations confederated for the defence of Italy. Among these nations were the Heruli, Scyrri, Alani, Turcilingi and the Rugians. The army of this confederacy was commanded by Orestes, the former secretary of Attila, and the father of Augustulus, the last Roman emperor of the west. He was made patrician and master-general of the confederate armies.

Orestes refused to accept the purple. It was then offered to his son Augustulus. This army, composed of foreigners and native Romans, was mercenary. These mercenaries demanded that one-third of the lands of Italy be immediately divided among them. This was refused by Orestes.

Odoacer was a bold barbarian, a member of the army. From all the camps and garrisons of Italy, many rushed to the standard of Odoacer; overwhelmed and slew Orestes.

Augustulus, the emperor, implored the clemency of Odoacer, the Scyrrian.

Odoacer, by his army, had the title of king, "but he abstained, during his whole reign, from the use of the purple and diadem, lest he should offend those princes, whose subjects, by their accidental mixture, had formed the victorious army; which time and policy might insensibly unite into a great nation."—Gibbon.

Odoacer now resolved to abolish the imperial office as useless and expensive. Augustulus (called Momyllus Augustulus, from Romulus and Augustus) resigned to the senate. The senate sent an epistle to Zeno, the Greek emperor, which contained the following:

"They disclaim the necessity, or even the wish, of continuing any longer the imperial succession in Italy; since, in their opinion, the majesty of a sole monarch is sufficient to pervade and protect, at the same time both the east and the west. In their own name, and in the name of the people, they consent that the seat of universal empire shall be transferred from Rome to Constantinople; and they basely renounce the right of choosing their master, the only vestige that yet remained of the authority which had given laws to the world. The republic (they repent the name without blush) might safely confide in the civil and military virtues of Odoacer; and they humbly request, that the emperor would invest him with the title of Patrician, and the administration of the diocese of Italy."—Gibbon.

After some apparent unwillingness, Zeno yielded to the request of the senate, and kept up a friendly correspondence with Odoacer.

Augustulus with his family, was dismissed from the imperial palace, assigned the castle of Lucullus in Campania, and his annual salary fixed at six thousand pieces of gold—sixteen thousand two hundred dollars.

Odoacer was the first barbarian king of Italy. He was overthrown by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, whose reign continued thirty-three years; the latter part of his royalty being extended over the fairest portion of the western empire.

Under Theodoric warriors with their wives and families, were planted in the heart of Italy, requiring the products of one-third of the land to sustain them.

Under the reigns of Odoacer and Theodoric the sun (Imperial) was darkened, and at last, totally eclipsed. Under Odoacer the consuls ceased for seven years; were restored, and finally expired in the thirteenth year of the reign of Justinian.

Such is an outline of the history covered by the fourth trumpet.

There could be no objects more appropriate, selected from the physical to represent these political and national revolutions.

Bishop Newton says, "This change (the fall of the western empire) was effected by Odoacer, king of the Heruli, who coming to Rome with an army of barbarians, stripped Momyllus of the imperial robes, put an end to the very name of the western empire, and caused himself to be proclaimed king of Italy."

Thus was the Roman sun extinguished in the western empire; but the other lesser luminaries, the moon and stars, still subsisted, for Rome was still allowed to have her senate and consuls and other subordinates, as before.

The western empire became extinct A. D. 476, under Odoacer. Sixteen years after he was overthrown and slain by Theodoric, who in A. D. 493 established the kingdom of the Ostrogoths which continued sixty years.

We have now passed over the events which, in our view, belong to the first four trumpets. A few general remarks will close the first series.

1. Take, if you please, the book of God. Open the Apocalypse. Place before you the record of the first four trumpet visions, Rev. viii. 1–12, with this sentence in your mind, "Blessed is he that readeth."

The chart contains four celestial phenomena—meteors of the first magnitude, increasing as they progress, taking a deeper hold of the physical world.

a. A hailstorm, terrible for its wind and lightnings, sweeps through the western division of Roman earth. Before it is a smiling Eden; behind is a desert wilderness, red with the blood of the slain. Who in the politico-ecclesiastical world, is this tempestuous meteor? History points to Alaric, the Goth. He marched like a tornado through Italy. Rushing down from the Alps his fury was not expended until his track of desolation had measured the length of the peninsula. His was exclusively a land mission: and when about to try the sea, he expired.

b. A second scene is opened: a volcanic mountain, with its cups overflowing with consuming fires, is loosened from its adjacent ranges, and cast into the sea. Its waters seethe with intense heat, and cast up their innumerable dead. Fleets, navigating the sea, take fire and are consumed. Who is this burning mountain? The empire of the Vandals, made volcanic by the "Terrible Genseric." Cut out of the German wilds, he crossed the Pyrenees; organized his forces in Spain, crossed over into Africa, wrested from the Romans their seven provinces, constructed a large fleet and made himself master of the waters of the Mediterranean; burned two immense naval armaments, one belonging to the western empire; the other to the eastern, was called "Monarch of the sea;" and finally took and destroyed the city of Rome.

c. The curtain rises and a third scene is acted. A meteor, called Wormwood, courses its fiery track down the northern heavens, and falls upon the rivers, and fountains of waters. They are converted into wormwood, and many men die because the waters were made bitter. Who is this star? Attila the Hun; the "scourge of God," and the "terror of the world."

d. At the opening of the fourth scene the physical heavens put on sackcloth, the sun is obscured from its going forth till it has climbed to the vicinity of its meridian. The moon and the stars suffer a like obscuration. What great political events are here symbolized? Expositors are quite uniform in their interpretation of this fourth class of symbols. In the obscuring of these luminaries they discover the fall of the western empire. The emperor and the lesser luminaries.

We are now brought down to the fall of the western empire, and to the close of the fifth century; four deadly thrusts of the barbarians to destroy the adherents of the Roman world.

2. That we have followed the correct interpretation would appear from the following:

a. The empire deserved such an overthrow from her treatment of Christianity.

b. It was necessary that her officiary should be removed, and her civil institutions be abrogated, to allow the rise of the ten horns, and a little horn (Dan. vii. 7, 8); and the revelation of the man of sin. 2 Thess. ii. 7. He who had hindered would hinder till his removal. So also of the horns. The Gothic kingdoms under Odoacer and Theodoric (the confederates and the Ostrogoths) were established on the ruins of the western empire.

PUBLICATION OF REPLY TO INGERSOLL

Editor Restitution:

Please state for the information of the brethren and friends who have subscribed to the fund to defray the expense of publishing my reply to Mr. Ingersoll's Lectures, that finding the amount contributed not quite sufficient to meet all the costs of the undertaking, I succeeded in making an arrangements with the publishers, Messrs. P. J. Hale & Son, of 17 Murray St., New York, by which, on their advancing the sum of $60, they became partners in the enterprise to the extent of one-fifth, I retaining, on behalf of our subscribers, the other four-fifths, and advancing, or rather investing, out of the fund contributed and in my hands, the sum of $200.

This upon the estimate of $250 for the whole work. The manuscript is now being printed, and we hope will be ready for delivery to subscribers early in June.

The exact expense of the first edition cannot be accurately known until the work is finished, but it is supposed will not exceed $275. To meet the excess, whatever it may be, I have in hand up to date, a balance of $27.80, (the total receipts being $227.80), which will enable me to meet our part of any sum that may be needed to pay the cost in full.

The pamphlet will probably contain 175 pages, and will be sold with a handsome cover and in good style, at 50 cents a copy at retail, but at a less figure "to the trade"—booksellers—to sell again. Out of the edition of 1000 copies, 100 will be needed for gratuitous distribution to newspapers and magazines, and press people, from whom notices of it will appear, by which means, I learn, such works are got into circulation and in aid of the same object, advertisements must be liberally inserted and paid for, in leading journals of large circulation. Money will be needed for this purpose but let us hope that the sales may be brisk and will enable us to meet this necessity without calling on our friends for further pecuniary help.

Every brother it is hoped and believed will consider himself a special agent to sell the work, the supply of which will be arranged and announced hereafter.

I consider every subscriber entitled to receive the amount of his subscription in copies at 50 cents each, and shall forward them accordingly unless instructed otherwise. In some instances brethren have expressed their wish to receive only so many copies, less than they are entitled to, desiring the remainder to be sold and proceeds appropriated to paying the expenses of postage, transportation and expressage, advertising and the cost of other editions from the stereotyped plates—this last amounting to about $100 for each new edition. These expenses will require any help the brethren may be willing to give in allowing the sale, for that purpose, of some part of the copies to which their subscriptions entitle them. It is for them to determine.

The publishers write on the expense of advertising thus: "Advertising in this city is enormously dear, and we have to pay from $50 to $100 on every new book we issue."

The total subscriptions, viz: $227.80, at 50 cents a copy, call for 454 copies to subscribers; add 100 copies for the press gratuitously and we have left out of the 1000 copies, 446 for general sale. If these are sold to the trade at 30 cents, leaving them 20 cents profit on each—the usual terms—there will be, at a cost of $250 for publishing the whole, only five cents profit to the publishers, or $22.30 on the first edition.

If other editions should be called for, the profit would be remunerative, the heaviest expense always attending the first edition.

As I am only a steward of this fund, I am thus explicit that the brethren and sisters and friends who have so generously advanced and risked their means in this effort to defend and maintain the cause of truth may see how it has been applied.

Faithfully submitted,
ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

Stephen's City, Va.

P. S.—It is proper here to add that Messrs. Hale and Son, are commended as judicious and reliable business men, and being experienced and well known publishers they command opportunity and facilities for getting the work into circulation which I could not control.

A new work by M. Strelbitsky, describing the acquisitions of territory made by Russia during the reign of Alexander II., has just been published at St. Petersburg. The writer says that the late Czar left Russia the largest State in the world, extending from the thirty-seventh to the twenty-eighth degree north latitude, and covering an area of about 10,500,000 square versts. During his reign the amount of territory added to the empire was 1,818,927 square versts, of which 1,168,700 were ceded to the United States, leaving a net increase of 665,227 square versts in twenty-five years. So great an addition of territory was not made to the empire during any previous reign—not even that of Catharine II., who became famous by her conquests, and yet acquired 2,000 square miles less land for Russia than Alexander II. did.

Youths' Column.

Rural New Yorker.

The Little Armies.

There are two little armies
On the world's great battle field;
Though mustered off by nations
To the eye of God revealed.
Though we hear the shouts of triumph,
Though we see no fearful fray,
These little armies battle
For the Right and Wrong each day.

They must fight—no ground is neutral—
And watch the sides they take:
Our little army chooses
To fight for truth's dear sake;
And the banner floating o'er it,
Blue—proudly up to view,
And I read this glorious motto:
"Fighting for the Good and True."
The Beautiful and True"

How brave this little army!
What a halo o'er it shines!
And even angel's welcome,
Every soldier to its lines!
How stirring is the music,
Of the tramp of little feet,
That to God's holy, happy highway
Swiftly onward and upward beat.
Onward and upward beat.

Also the other army
Neath a gloomy flag unfurled,
Marches with the tramp of hell.
Treads the dark ways of the world
Not for the True and Beautiful,
Does it grow brave and strong.
For I read upon its banner,
Fighting for the Wrong,
Old early-hearted Wrong"

CHR. PRES.

The Echo-Boy.

A little boy once went home to his mother and said: "Mother, sister and I went out into the garden, and we were calling about, and there was some boy mocking us."

"How do you mean, Johnny?" said his mother.

"Why," said the child, "I was calling out 'Ho!' and this boy said 'Ho!' So I said to him, 'Who are you?' and he answered, 'Who are you?' I said 'What is your name?' He said, 'What is your name?' I said to him 'Why don't you show yourself?' He said 'Show yourself?' And I jumped over the ditch, and went into the wood, and I could not find him, and I came back, and said, 'If you don't come out I will punch your head.' And he said, 'I will punch your head.'"

So his mother said, "Ah, Johnny, if you had said, 'I love you,' he would have said 'I love you.' If you had said 'Your voice is sweet,' he would have said 'Your voice is sweet.' Whatever you said to him he would have said back to you." And the mother said, "Now, Johnny, when you grow to be a man, whatever you say to others, they will, by-and-by, say back to you;" and his mother took him to that old text in the Scripture, "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."

Review and Herald.

Ten Minutes' Delay.

All well-informed people are familiar with the sad account of the death of the young Prince Napoleon, who fell pierced by nineteen wounds at the hands of the Zulus, of South Africa, June 1, 1879.

Many will remember that Captain Carey, in his published report, said that after they had selected the camping-ground—the object for which the squad of six had been detailed—and had hid coffee and rested, he suggested that they should remount and return to camp. But the young prince, who commanded the squad said,

"No, let us wait ten minutes."

Just as they were preparing to remount, at the expiration of that ten minutes, a body of Zulus came on them, and all fled but the prince, whose horse broke from him. After a desperate resistance he fell, covered with wounds, and died in the tall grass of the dongo."

I presume all do not know that this pleading for ten minutes' delay was a habit of the young prince from early childhood.

The correspondent of a leading Paris journal interviewed the empress as she was upon the eve of departure for the scene of the tragedy that had wrecked all her earthly hopes, and drew her into conversation on the subject of her son.

She talked freely during the interview, but with an evident anguish of spirit, which seemed only more sad from her effort at control.

During this interview, while speaking of the childhood of her son the prince, she unconsciously revealed the trait in his character that had caused all this woe—to her, wrecked hopes and a broken heart; to him, the probable loss of a throne, an earthly future, and his life.

After describing her as still lovely in her lonely grief, the writer from whom we quote said, "The empress had now risen and stood, slightly trembling with emotion, when, stepping rapidly and gracefully forward across the room, she opened a cabinet, from which she took a pocket book, and read therefrom on a leaf, 'Going with Carey,'—the last words that were ever written by the prince; and then she added—

"Of all that Capt. Carey has ever written in regard to my son, those fatal ten minutes alone, I hold to be true. It was ever his habit,' she continued, 'to plead for ten minutes' delay; so much so that I used to tell him they ought to call him Monsieur Dix Minutes. It was always ten minutes more to sleep in the morning; ten minutes more at night to sleep in his chair; and when too much overcome with sleep to speak, he would hold up his two little hands, the ten fingers representing the ten minutes for which he pleaded.'"

The habit of procrastination is a deadly foe to a prosperity in temporal or moral affairs. We should do our every duty as soon as it can be done.

Youths' Temperance Banner.

"It Won't Hurt You if You Let It Alone."

"Liquor won't hurt you if you let it alone," said one, with a sneer, to another who was making a strong fight to have it kept out of town by law. "You needn't meddle with it. If others take it, all right, that is their look-out."

"But liquor does hurt thousands who let it alone, who hate it utterly, and never set foot in a saloon."

"I should like to see your evidence," said the other, somewhat puzzled.

"Just step around the corner into Mrs. Watson's house—a pretty little house, but it will not be hers much longer. The rumseller has it in his grip; I hear she must move out next week. Watson is working on his new verandah, which is to run around three sides of the tavern, to pay up another bill, while his wife and children are starving. They never touch liquor, but it has hurt them. I can pick out twenty families in this place where it has done mischief, and it is so the world over. Every man that drinks involves others with him. Those who let it alone have to suffer. Probably five sufferers to each drunkard would be stating it very low. Now, I mean to work hard and fight hard, if need be, for those who have no helper; and if the law can be made to help them, well and good."

Our boys are to be our future law-makers. Let them be well established in temperance principles. Let them look on liquor license just as they would on a license to commit any other sort of crime. All these and far more are included in every permit to sell rum.

N. Y. Observer.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE.

The Ostrich.

GEORGIANA KLINGLE.

The ostrich is frequently referred to in ancient heathen writings, and also in the Bible. Though forbidden the Jews as food, it is very much used by other nations, who, from their fondness for ostrich flesh, acquired the name of "ostrich-eaters."

The Romans regarded their flesh with much favor. The Emperor Heliogabulus, at a certain feast, had in one dish the brains of six hundred ostriches. The savages of Africa at the present day eat their flesh.

The Arabs call this largest of all birds the "Father of the Desert;" the ancient Hebrews gave it the title of "Daughter of the Desert;" throughout the east it is known as the camel-bird, from its shape, which from a distance, somewhat resembles the camel.

It is said to subsist without water, and its food is of the coarsest kind; leather, wood, stones, hair, rags, lizards, serpents, are swallowed by it with eagerness.

It has prodigious strength, and is occasionally used in carrying burdens, and is the swiftest running of all birds, if not of all animals. It is seven feet from end of beak to tip of tail, and from seven to eight feet in height, and with wings each about three feet long.

Ostriches are black, white, or gray. The head is covered with shining hairs, with occasional tufts here and there; its feathers are soft and downy. The bill is short in shape resembling that of the duck; the eye somewhat resembles the human eye, being furnished on the upper lid with lashes. The legs and feet are covered with scales, and each foot is divided almost in halves, forming two great toes, which are also scaly. The skin is very tough and is often used as leather; a kind of vest is also made from it by some of the Arabs.

Five or six birds lay in one nest, sitting on the eggs by turns. During the sitting the male never leaves the vicinity of the nest, but watches from the nearest sand-hill, day after day, until he is reduced almost to starvation. Strange it is that, though so faithful to their eggs and young when undisturbed, if once frightened away they abandon them, and consequently young ostriches in sad straits of starvation are frequently found struggling devotedly over the sands.

Jeremiah refers to this cruelty: "The daughter of my people is become cruel, like ostriches in the wilderness."

The ostrich is capable of such speed that it would probably never be captured were it not for its foolish habit of moving in circles, which, however extended, gives its pursuers advantage over it and enables them, after persistent pursuit, lasting sometimes for several days, to tire it out.

When fatigued and famished, finding further effort of no avail, it will frequently turn and attack its pursuers with its feet and wings in a manner almost overpowering; but its usual habit is to cover its poor, silly, weary head in the first thicket or in the sand thinking to hide from view.

The speed of the ostrich is its chief characteristic—a speed which mocks its pursuers—while the huge outspread wings, like sails, bear it onward in a flight which almost spurns the sands.

This rapidity of motion is beautifully mentioned in the sacred poem: "What time she lifteth up herself on high, she scorneth the horse and his rider."

To each created thing God gives its own gifts, whether it be that of gorgeous plumage, or sweet song, or fleet wing—whether it be among cultivated fields or barren sands; on every one is a distinctive mark given by the great Creative Hand.

Christian Woman.

SWIFT JUDGMENT.

During the "crusade" some earnest Christian women in a village in Northern Pennsylvania went to the chief saloon keeper of the place, and said, "We want you to look at the names on the headstones in our graveyard, and count the young men who have gone down from drink sold by you. Is it not about time that you should stop this business?"

The saloon keeper, pointing significantly to a license hanging on the wall, answered, "There is the authority for my business, and whatever may be the results, I'll sell, if I go to hell with my whole family. Get out of this place."

They went on their way, leaving the saloon keeper in the hands of God. Two weeks from that time the oldest son went out of the world fighting delirium tremens. Two months later another son was run over by a railroad train and brought home dead. Three months later, his wife died in a lunatic asylum. A few weeks afterward, the last one of his boys was brought home on a shutter, dead—killed in a row in a neighboring saloon. This man is now a lunatic.

Another Jewess, a daughter of Blumenthalheim, known over here through his connection with Erie, has married another Earl, the Earl of Desart, and the marriage was celebrated, after the Rosebery precedent, first at the Registrar's and then at the church, as by law established. The stream of aristocracy in England is becoming largely impregnated with Jewish blood.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, June 1, 1881.

OUR cares are too many just now to write much editorially. This is all well now as manuscripts have greatly accumulated for a week or two past.

Bible Terminology received from the Bible Banner office. We have only glanced at the work, but are very favorably impressed with its style and contents. Will read and express a fuller opinion hereafter. See advertisement in another column.

THE revision of the book of John has come to hand from the American Book Exchange. Have read only a part of this, but like some of the changes. See letters from Brethren Magruder and Myers for some exceptions that we too should take to the work.

Communications.

THE CROSS AND THE CROWN.

S. B. REEVE.

Whoever may desire to become great among you, let him be your servant; and whosoever may desire to be chief, let him be your slave: Matt. xx. 26, 27.

The cross, in the Scriptures, carries with it the idea of sacrifices and suffering; and inseparably connected with the promises of glory and exaltation in God's everlasting kingdom, is the willing sacrifice and suffering of those who will make their "calling and election sure." The promises are not to those who suffer because they are obliged to do so; but they are to those who suffer because they love to suffer. Neither do they follow this course of life simply because they think they have to or be forever cast off; but it is self-imposed. It is one thing to obtain life; but to obtain greatness, royalty, to the ages to come, requires the willing sacrifice of pleasures, and time, and money.

"By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasure of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of reward." Heb. xi. 24-26. "And others were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection." Verse 35. Here is the sacrifice of the pleasures of this world. And John says, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; for all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." 1 John ii. 15, 16. The lusts of the flesh would embrace our carnal appetites, including high living. The lusts of the eyes embrace fashions, costly and unnecessary things in our houses, etc. There is a wide range for sacrificing for the Lord here. And the pride of life embraces both of these, together with the desire to appear well, and to please others, when it displeases God.

"Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they that testify of me." John v. 31. "Believed, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out in the world." 1 John iv. 1. "To the law and the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. viii. 20. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." 2 Tim. ii. 15. This cannot be done without we take time. "They have Moses and the prophets, let them hear them." John xvi. 29. "For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me." John v. 46. We are asked to sacrifice time to learn of the Lord, and to do his will, if we want "glory and honor"—will we do it?

Jesus said to the young man who desired to know what he must do: "If thou will be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me." Matt. xix. 21. "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Sell that thou hast, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth." Luke xii. 32, 33. Make for yourselves friends with (Mag.) the mammon of unrighteousness that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations. Luke xvi. 9. Here is the sacrifice of our money.

There is no degree of sacrifice stipulated; but if you desire to be great, you must become a servant; and if you desire to excel, make yourself a slave. I will try to illustrate this so there will be no mistake. You, who have sufficient property to support you by its income with your labor, are asked to part with enough of that income so you will have to economize to live on the remainder, remembering that the slave now receives the greater income over there. If the poor are needful, the principal must go for their support. I do not think it is needful for a man to sell himself out of house and home injudiciously; but if you have a farm, and by close economy can get along with a part of it, then let the poor support themselves on the rest—give it to them; and if they are unable to do the work, do it for them. We are never so poor but that we can help somebody who is poorer, if somebody who is better able does not give assistance. If you have a small plot of ground, and a house on it, you need not sell it in order to give help; but you can help in some other way. Haven't you anything to eat? Give part of it to the poor, hungry brother! If you have nothing to eat, give him a shelter from the cold and storms. You can share what little you have, in this way. We must all have a place of shelter. If you are in the condition of the widow in the days of Elijah, share it with the needy, and trust the Lord for more. Of course we are not expected to support people in riotous living or laziness; and yet reasonable help is required even in these cases, sometimes.

There are a multitude of ways we spend money for which God will hold us accountable. We fill up our houses with costly pictures, furniture, and the like; we live richly in food and drink; we think we must go here and there to enjoy ourselves; and we must fix up this and that thing. These do no one any real good, and are not sacrifices, nor do they make servants or slaves of us to Jesus and his cause. If we want the crown let us bear the cross.

As we are not often called upon to sacrifice so much for the actual poor, because the Lord has been so very good to us, there is one who asks us to sacrifice and suffer for his cause, which is essential to the salvation of mankind. Surely he could not ask for anything more worthy than that. You know what this is—will you give the asked for help?

There are very few of us so poor but that we could give a little occasionally. I suppose a little more leniency would be shown in cases where economy was necessary to get along, than where the actual poor called for it; but the most of us can give a little to support the truth.

Remember the same injunction holds good in this case as in the other, where what you have got supports you by your labor or otherwise. The Bible does not sanction idleness no matter how much we may have.

You know the condition of "our paper,"—will you sacrifice a little to help it? You know it is needed. You know, too, of brethren who are doing all they can to sound out the word of life, and are barely sustained. What if they do not preach in just your locality; they are preaching to some one else, who is just as needful. Will you help them?

Sacrifice on our part now will ensure us an abundant entrance into God's everlasting kingdom.

The time for bearing the cross is fast closing; the royal priesthood of Christ will soon have been made up, and then the door will be shut. Will we be outside?

"Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate. Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach. For here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come." Hebrews xiii. 12-14.

We are outside the gate; but when Jesus comes we will be inside. There will be no chance to seek then for a place in that spiritual temple, brethren; for the lively, bright and shining stones will all have been hewn out, and polished up, before we enter that continuing-city age! Willing suffering, which implies that it is patiently borne, is the process for hewing and polishing. It is a rough process, the prize can only be reached in this way. Even the living stones, which compose that continuing city, must be bright and shining, and of necessity must go through the same polishing process.

May the Lord grant you and I a humble position in that exalted city, is the prayer of your brother in the One Hope.

THREE LOGICAL WONDERS.

J. B. COOK.

No. 1 proves, or says it proves, that the earth is flat—that the ocean surrounds it, in which ships sail round its outer edge, with no other shore to build to; and that the north pole is directly over the earth.

This has just been rehearsed and its proofs given me as never before.

The fact that earth's form is reflected from the moon in its eclipse, is round! That ships at sea are seen first only at topmast, and that tons of thousands of observations by navigators from the southern hemisphere contradict it—all of which go to show its fallacy and folly, and yet they are good for nothing to its author.

Such are wise only in their own conceit.

Number 2 argues stoutly that the reign of Christ with his saints, they having, as the seed in martyrdom, inherited the earth—that the reign on David's throne; and the day of God as a thousand years, etc., are all about past!

Hence its climax and crown, will be the breaking off and the ending up of all terrestrial affairs—human and divine.

Note. This theory may be too subtle and unstable to take a definite and permanent language. Each advocate assuming originality, and slightly varying its verbal drapery, my plain words may not be just that of the would-be leader, editor or tract-writer. However it should be enough to quote the Great Teacher.

Mat. xii. 32, this world and that to come, and ages to come. Heb. ii. 2, 5; Rev. xx. 387; Dan. vii. 18, 27; Acts iii. 21; Eph. i. 10; 1 Tim. vi. 15; Psa. lxxii. 17. David's throne is in the dust. Acts. xv. 14-17; Isa. xvi. 5; Luke i. 33; Amos ix. 11-15; Psalms lxxxix. 1-29.

Number 3 maintains on a like logical plane, that the light and truth of gospel grace involves no responsibility, and hence no condemnation for its rejection. John iii. 16-21; viii. 12-24; Mat. xxvi. 14-30; Luke xii. 48.

Thence this theory proceeds to deny the resurrection to those under this condemnation. John v. 29; Acts xxiv. 14, 15; Mat. viii. 12; 2 Pet. ii. 6; Rev. xx. 12.

Note. The reasoning—falsely so called—is alike in all three and like theories. The proper evidence in each case is ignored. Then yielding to the charm of seeming wise, they become blind, as did the Jews, and all who do not like to retain God in their knowledge.

Responsibility is proportioned to opportunity. Where much is given much is required. Let us humbly believe God and obey in both nature and grace.

BAPTIZING IN THE NAME.

J. F. GELLETLY.

I think it would be well to warn the brethren that the discussion of above subject be conducted in a calm and gentlemanly manner, and that as little "party" enthusiasm be manifested as possible. I have heard the subject discussed and much foreign matter introduced that served only to daze the hearer. For my part the language used by our Lord in "the commission" has always been a puzzle to me, but I have no desire to expunge it on that account, but if we have very high authority that it is not in the original manuscripts of the gospels, it must be regarded as spurious. Can that be settled? I do not understand everything in the Scriptures yet and that is one of the things, but I do know what the language employed does not imply necessarily. It does not imply a trinity, that idea has no more foothold here than the "immortality of the soul" has in the half-dozen texts that are supposed to support it. It does not necessarily imply a set formula. And I think from the accounts of baptism afterward a set formula of any kind, is particularly doubtful. I suggest that the phrase 'in the name of' is equivalent 'by the authority of.' We believe in the Father "from whom are all things," do we not? Or are we to credit that he has no authority now that the Son has been sent, why even the Son is only a delegate. We believe in the delegated Son, do we not? whom the Father sanctified and sent? And are we to doubt the agency of the Holy Spirit "whom the Father will send in my name?" says the Son. Still there is a secret about the passage I do not understand, and if Christianity is exhibited in the discussion I expect to derive some benefit.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Editor Restitution:

I send a short communication for the benefit of those whom it may concern.

Paul, in his letter to his son Timothy, describes a class of religionists as having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof.

So far as we know of the makeup of the sects and denominations of the City of Washington, the appellation fits admirably. A plenty of well organized churches, with fine places of worship, very pleasant and very attractive, good singing and good long prayers; sermons twenty to thirty minutes long. Certainly they are not tedious in their sermons, but a prayer from twenty to thirty minutes is a little tedious, especially if one happens to be a little sleepy. As the custom is to sit in prayer time it affords a good chance for taking a short nap.

Formalism and the fashionable mode of worship—if it can be called worship—would be painfully amusing to the apostle Paul. If he were to visit our beautiful city he would be very apt to repeat what he said when he stood on Mars' Hill. To the unknown god whom ye ignorantly worship.

Catholicism has a strong showing in the city and surrounding country, and is gaining converts fast.

The Methodists are quite numerous, so are the Presbyterians and Episcopalians. These four are nearly even as to number of places of worship. The Baptists come next; then follow the lesser lights. They make up in all eighty-three meeting houses or places of worship.

The population is 180,000, the same as the city of Cleveland, which has less than one-half that number of churches.

If churches make the people good and a place desirable, then Washington is at the head of the list. Does the rule hold good—the more professors the more Bible Christianity? This is very doubtful. Is not the opposite the truth? We put the question in another form: Is it not a fact there is less holy, Godly living in the churches now than there was seventy-five years ago?

Here is a question for the Orthodox churches to answer. If they answer it according to Christ's teaching in Mat. xxiv. and Luke xxi. then indeed is Bible Christianity at a low ebb. It is the treacherous calm that the experienced mariner dreads, more than the howling tornado. As in natural, so in spiritual things.

Blindness, drowsiness and indifference to the things that are coming on the earth characterize this people most fearfully. There are two Presbyterian ministers who profess to be firm believers in the pre-millennial advent of Christ. They preach it in part but it is so mixed up and smoothed over with the popular preaching of the day, that it has little or no effect. I hope they will not be accused of handling the word of God deceitfully.

A day of reckoning is at hand, how will the deceivers and deceived stand before him whose eyes are as a flame of fire, and his feet as if they burned in a furnace; what fearfulness will surprise the hypocrites, what terror and amazement will confront the nominal professor. How have we been pained at the lifeless condition of the churches; all at ease, fast asleep over a burning crater. Not a word of warning is given, none to sound the alarm. A few believe Christ will come, it may be soon, but it is not best to say much about it.

I find it harder under these circumstances to keep my mind stayed upon the coming of the Son of Man, than when persecution raged like a tempest.

Oh! this treacherous calm. We are old and infirm, and can do but little.

Whose duty is it to come to Washington and work for God?

NEWELL BOND.

Letter Drawer.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:

After being confined at home in consequence of poor health for twenty weeks, I am, by the mercy of my Heavenly Father, able to be in the gospel field, which is my element, enjoying good health for a man in his seventy-second year.

I have pass through all the different stages of the Advent movement, as it is called, preached the kingdom of God and the things concerning Jesus Christ in fifteen different states, and extensively in Upper Canada, and some in Canada East. Have been exposed to all kinds of weather, and treatment that the enemies of God were capable of bestowing upon mortal man. But to sweeten my pilgrimage, God has given me multitudes of souls as seals of my ministry, and a host of true-hearted friends. But he shall have all the glory, through Jesus, my Elder Brother.

Since my recovery I have spent ten days with the brethren at Sweasburg and Norwich, Ont. Had some excellent meetings—good congregations gave the best attention to my message, closing our services on each first day, by eating the memorial supper.

Have spent three first days with the brethren who meet in their own chapel near Ponthill. A good representation from both families, and excellent attention was given to my message; which was highly seasoned with what some call heresy! I had the honor of immersing one into the saving name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. This church eat the memorial supper generally every first day. This is as it should be.

Fraternally,

R. V. LYON.

P. S.—I was glad to see Brother Reed's short but pithy article on Baptizing in the Name. Also Brother Newman's comprehensive letter of endorsement. For some ten years I have held, taught and practiced the same doctrine. It gives me much joy in the last days of my pilgrimage, to see the ear of truth roll on.

God grant me grace to keep my through ticket for the Saint's Eden Home.

R. V. L.

OSSEO, Wis.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find $1.83 for the following tracts: . . . . I attended a Sabbath School and succeeded in raising the above amount. It will help the cause of truth a little.

Brethren you know not what you can do until you make an effort. Try and see to it that these valuable reflectors of truth are not kept too long on the printer's shelves.

The Lord willing I shall commence my summer labors next Sunday. How long I shall continue my labors is only known to him who doeth all things well.

A brother of ours was here last week, and he said that if I could go into the regions beyond where I had previously labored he thought good might be done, and so I told him he might give out an appointment, and if the prospect for doing good was favorable I would continue the meetings, if the Lord gives me sufficient health.

While we have been penning these lines I cannot help telling what has been passing through my mind. As I look out of the door and view the green carpet that the great Eternal has spread over the earth, and listen to the feathered songsters as they breath forth the praises of God, and see all nature springing forth into life and beauty; I say when I see and hear these things I cannot help but think that they are symbolic of the good time coming, when the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose; when the time of the singing of the birds of Paradise shall come, and the voice of the turtle shall be heard in the land. When the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs of everlasting joy upon their heads and sorrow and sighing shall forever flee away.

Brethren shall we be there! May the Lord grant it we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

W. M. BUZZELL.

BEAVERTON, Oregon.

Editor Restitution:

In one of the neighborhoods where our Seventh Day Advent friends are flourishing the truth in its more advanced state is making some little impression. There has been quite an interesting discussion in our little place between Elder Vanhorn, a leading preacher of the Seventh Day Advents, and H. C. Plummer, of the Christadelphian denomination. The subject matter of discussion was, "Resolved, That the seventh day, or Sabbath, taught in Genesis, is binding on all men in this dispensation." Elder Vanhorn took the affirmative and H. C. Plummer the negative. Second, "Resolved, That the Bible teaches that Christ will return the second time to this earth, and reign with his immortalized saints over the mortal nations of the earth, with Israel restored for 1,000 years." I think that the utmost universal impression outside the seventh day friends was that H. C. Plummer did ample justice to the Bible teaching on both the propositions, and hence the call for THE RESTITUTION for further investigation. On the second resolution H. C. Plummer had the affirmative and Elder Vanhorn the negative. The subject was ably handled on both sides, Elder Vanhorn being acknowledged the most able advocate of the Seventh Day Advent doctrine in the State. The debaters are certainly deserving of much credit for the affable and gentlemanly manner in which they conducted the debate.

THOMAS H. DENNEY.

Dr. Joseph Jones, President of the Louisiana State Board of Health, has completed the investigation of the cases of leprosy discovered in the delta of the Mississippi last summer, and while he finds the number of ca[illegible] have been less than reported, he urges the thorough isolation of the victims, and the erection of leper hospitals by the State and city authorities, denouncing the practice of introducing such patients into the crowded wards of the Charity Hospital of New Orleans.

Selections.

The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

THE BUDDING FIG-TREE---A POST-SCRIPT.

REV. WILLIAM MAUDE.

As regards the future prosperity of Palestine, Mr. Oliphant holds this to be in any case assured. "Under any circumstance," he writes, "it is impossible that the region which comprises within its limits the luxuriant pasture lands of Jaulan, the magnificent forest-clad mountains of Gilead, the rich arable plains of Moab, and the fervid sub-tropical valley of the Jordan, can remain much longer neglected. Whether we regard it from an archeological, a commercial, or a political point of view, this territory possesses an interest and importance unrivalled by any tract of country of similar extent in Asiatic Turkey.

It remains for England to decide whether she will undertake the task of exploring its ruined cities, of developing its vast agricultural resources, by means of the repatriation of that race which first entered upon its possession 3000 years ago, and of securing the great political advantages which must accrue from such a policy."

He adds in another part of his book, "In this anticipation I am borne out by the testimony of all intelligent and unprejudiced travellers. Captain Burton, whose intimate knowledge of the country entitles his opinion to especial weight, says, in his Unexplored Syria, 'The Holy Land, when provided with railways and tramways, will offer the happiest blending of the ancient and modern worlds. It will become another Egypt, with the distinct advantage of a superior climate and far nobler races of men.'

And again, 'Syria and Palestine, I may safely prophesy, still awaits the hour when, the home of a free, a striving, and an energetic people. It will again pour forth corn and oil, it will flow with milk and honey, and it will bear, with proper culture, almost all the good things that have been given to man.'"

As he meets with such testimonies as these from able and practical men of the world, the Christian may well be led to exclaim, "How marvellous are thy ways, O God!" It is not many years since by such men the restoration of the Jews, was treated scornfully as the fond dream of those foolish enough to believe all that the prophets have spoken.

Now how differently do they regard it? Long ago Ezekiel prophesied: "Thus said the Lord God: Behold I even I, will both search my sheep and seek them out. As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day. And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country."

And lo! to-day our eyes behold this ancient prophecy touching its fruition. How, then, should this strengthen our faith, not only in Israel's restoration, but in all the blessed promises which are associated with it. For is it not written: "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he will appear in his glory?" And does not Jesus himself give this as a sign to us as well as to Israel, when he says; "When ye see these things coming to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand?" Luke xxi. 31.

With one other passage—which casts a most interesting light on the subject of the "seven years covenant" which the personal Antichrist is to make with the Jews—we must close our extracts from this valuable book, the perusal of the whole of which we would recommend to all who are interested in the subject of Jewish restoration. "I would remark," says Mr. Oliphant, "that the advantages of an alliance with the Jewish race to any power likely to become involved in the impending complications in the East, which may possibly involve a general war, appear to have been altogether overlooked by European statesmen. It is evident that the nation that espoused the cause of the Jews and their restoration to Palestine would be able to rely upon their support in financial operations on the largest scale, upon the powerful influence which they wield in the press of many countries and on their political co-operation in those countries, which would of necessity tend to paralyze the diplomatic and even hostile action of powers antagonistic to the one with which they were allied. Owing to the financial, political, and commercial importance to which the Jews have now attained, there is probably no one power in Europe that would prove so valuable an ally to a nation likely to be engaged in a European war, as this wealthy, powerful, and cosmopolitan race."

"I could multiply quotations to the same effect from the reports of Colonel Warren, Lieutenant Conder, and other officers who have surveyed the country on behalf of the Palestine Exploration Fund, which are fully borne out by the opinions of those who have already become agriculturists in the country.

"From whatever point of view, then, we regard a project that has for its object the ultimate regeneration of Palestine—whether from one of sentiment, as involving the repatriation of a nationality which surely has its claims upon us as equal to if not greater than those of the Slav or the Greek; or from one of the practical benevolence—for a considerable resident population would immediately benefit, while the success of the experiment would promote its extension to regions sorely in need of development under a like system, or from one of the political expediency—for it is only by means of such development that the Ottoman Empire in Asia can either be preserved and consolidated, or adequate provision made for the contingency of its disruption.

"It holds out inducements which the public of England should be the first to recognize: for as we have special interests, so we have come under special obligations in regard to this quarter of the globe. The population of Palestine in particular, of which twenty-five thousand belong to the Hebrew race, is looking to England for protection and the redress of grievances; and those who see in the relations which our own country now occupies toward the Holy Land the hand of Providence, may fairly consider whether they do not involve responsibilities which cannot lightly be ignored."

BOOK NOTICES.

Bible Terminology,

Relative to the Future Life. By Rev. J. H. Pettingell, A. M., Philadelphia, Pa. The author of this book advocates the doctrine of the immortality of a class—the regenerate in Christ—the attainment of a revival from death and a change to immortality of those who are divinely fitted for life forever. He attends principally, in this work, to an investigation of the sense of the principal crucial words in the Scriptures—such as Soul, Spirit, Life, Death, Hell, Eternal, Punishment, The Second Death, Everlasting Destruction, The Great Salvation, The Life Everlasting, The Unspeakable Gift, Discarded Scriptural Terms, etc., which convey its revelations regarding the future life, discussing very thoroughly their sense, both in the English and in the original languages of revelation. He treats the various matters that come into the field of thought dispassionately, candidly, and logically. We think he evinces learning, and patient research. The book will be valuable in connection with the study of the new English Revision, upon the doctrine of Immortality. The Bible Banner Association, publishers, 506 Minor street, Philadelphia, Pa., J. D. Brown, Agent. Price, cloth, 90 cts.; strong Manilla, 75 cts.

The American Revised New Testament.

The Literary Revolution is prompt with its edition of the Revised Testament. The British monopolists "unchained" their edition on the morning of May 20th, and at 8:30 p. m., the same day, the American edition was all in type, and of the various editions of the entire Testament and the Gospels published separately as many as 50,000 copies a day will be manufactured till the demand is met. The prices for the very handsome editions, in type nearly double the size of the British edition, are as follows:

The New Testament complete for 10 cents.

The Gospels complete for 7 cents.

The Gospels separately, each for 2 cents.

And in various forms and styles, up to full Turkey Morocco, gilt edges, for the new and old versions on pages facing for $1.50.

This edition is for sale by the leading booksellers of the United States, or they will be sent by mail on receipt of price. Liberal terms are allowed to clubs. Address, American Book Exchange, 764 Broadway, New York.

MARRIED.

PRICE—DICKSON.—In Plymouth, Ind., May 29, 1881, by Elder S. A. Chaplin, at his residence, Mr. Emanuel Price and Miss Mary Jane Dickson.

Poetry.

Evangelical Magazine.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Life hath its barren years,
When blossoms fall untimely down,
When ripened fruitage fails to crown
The summer toil, when Nature's frown
Looks only on our tears.

Life hath its faithless days,
The golden promise of the morn,
That seemed for light and gladness born,
Meant only needful wreck and scorn,
Hushed harp instead of praise.

Life hath its valleys, too,
Where we must walk with calm resolve,
With mourning clothed, with wills half wet,
Toward sunlight hopes that soon may set,
All quenched in pitying dew.

Life hath its harvest sesame,
Its ripened corn and purple-weighted vine,
Its gathered sheaves of grain—the blessed sign
Of plenteous reaping, bread, and pure rich wine,
Full hearts for harvest tunes.

Life hath its hopes fulfilled,
Its glad fruitions, its blest-answered prayer,
Sweeter for waiting long, whose holy air,
Inbreathed to silent souls, breathes forth its rare,
Grand speech of joy distilled.

Life hath its Tabor heights;
Its lofty mount of heavenly recognition,
Whose unveiled glories flash to earth remotest
Of love, and truth, and clear intuition.
Hail, mount of all delights!

Communications.

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH.

J. CAMERON.

Departures from true Bible teaching are both many and sad. Few are more grievous and even surprising than those concerning the nation of Israel. The design of the following papers is to point out what the Bible reveals to us regarding Israel, and more especially as to the position they are destined to occupy in the future as a nation.

In their rejection of the Messiah, Israel filled up the measure of their iniquity, and the doom predicted by Jesus came upon them—"They shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 24. It is consequently held by many that the peculiar privileges of Israel as a nation have come to a final termination, and the many glowing predictions in the Old Testament concerning their future glory are only to have their fulfillment in some remote sense in the persons of such individuals as become true members of the body of Christ, the church of the living God, the spiritual Israel: that even the very name Israel is now properly applied to the Christian church.

This error was, with many others, introduced during the early centuries of the Christian era, and has been ever since, with few exceptions, propagated among both Roman Catholics and Protestants, as the sequel shall more particularly show. In recent times, it has been more persistently and zealously advocated by those calling themselves Adventists, a party who hold many things maintained by the promoters of THE RESTITUTION. The late Mr. William Miller, the founder of the body above mentioned, embodied this error in his system, at an early period in his career. He says—"The return of the Jews could only be sustained by denying the positive declarations of the New Testament, which assert: 'there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek;' that 'the promise that he shall be the heir of the world was not to Abraham and his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith,' etc. This position was fortified at a later period by a pamphlet written by Captain Landers, and widely circulated in America. More recently, a book of nearly 200 pages, entitled, "Refutation of the Doctrine Called the Age to Come," by Elder I. H. Waggoner, maintains the same position, in opposition to the writings of the late Mr. Joseph Marsh.

The present articles were originally written without reference to any particular publications on the subject, and are now inserted here, with the above mentioned references, in the hope that they may lead to reconsideration on the part of some, and also be the means of confirming others in a more intelligent understanding of Scripture truth regarding Israel.

In thus examining the teaching of Scripture concerning Israel, I shall not only collate the positive utterances of both Old and New Testaments on the subject, but shall examine the usage of the latter in regard to the names Israel, Jacob, Jews, etc., in order to ascertain whether there is any real ground for the modern ideas entertained as to the church having come to occupy the place of Israel.

THE PROPHECY OF MOSES CONCERNING THE CAPTIVITIES OF BABYLON AND ROME, WITH ULTIMATE RESTORATION.

To begin our inquiry let us look at some of those passages which state in direct terms the ultimate and final restoration to their own land of the twelve tribes of Israel. And first claiming our attention is the remarkable prophecy of Moses uttered while Israel was yet in the land of Moab on the eve of their entrance into the land which God had given them. This is perhaps the most interesting prediction extant concerning Israel, and that for this reason in addition to the one just mentioned, that it foreshadows with astonishing distinctness the two captivities of BABYLON and ROME, and intimates a FINAL restoration to their own land, which, simply because it is a final restoration, must of necessity apply to the second captivity. And the fact of the restoration from Babylon being a literal one, taken in connection with the entire absence of any intimation that the final restoration should have any other character, must afford the most satisfactory evidence that the twelve tribes of Israel shall yet be restored to the land which God has been pleased to connect with the natural seed of Abraham in his purpose to bring about the blessedness of the world at large, through Abraham and his one seed the Christ.

Moses had set before the people the curses and the blessings which should follow the violation of, or obedience to the law. Among the former he specifies the following:

"The Lord shall bring thee and thy king which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone. And thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a byword, among all nations whither the Lord shall lead thee." Deut. xxviii. 30, 37.

This had an exact fulfillment in the carrying away to Babylon, as the following portion of the history shows:

"Zedekiah was twenty and one years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah, of Libnah. And he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that Jehoiakim had done. For through the anger of the Lord it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, until he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon. And it came to pass in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came, he, and all his host, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it; and they built forts against it round about. And the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of the king Zedekiah. And on the ninth day of the fourth month the famine prevailed in the city, and there was no bread for the people of the land. And the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night by the way of the gate between two walls, which is by the king's garden: (now the Chaldees were against the city round about;) and the king went the way toward the plain. And the army of the Chaldees pursued after the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho: and all his army were scattered from him. So they took the king, and brought him up to the king of Babylon to Ribhah; and they gave judgment upon him. And they slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon." 2 Kings xxiv. 18–20; xxv. 1–7.

Here the personal captivity and captivity of the king is a peculiar feature of both prediction and history. Besides this Moses also refers to that compulsory idolatry which the people had to submit to in Babylon. For fulfillment of this see Dan. iii. It is worthy of notice that in the prediction of Moses regarding the Roman captivity and dispersion, there is no mention of the king, which corresponds precisely with the facts of the case. They had, according to their own words, "no king but Cæsar." Moses says regarding the second captivity:

"The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth, a nation whose tone thou shalt not understand: and thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons, and of thy daughters (which the Lord thy God hath given thee) in the siege, and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee: so that the man that is tender among you and very delicate, his eye shall be evil toward his brother, and toward the wife of his bosom, and towards the remnant of his children which he shall leave: so that he will not give to any of them of the flesh of his children whom he shall eat: because he hath nothing left him in the siege, and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee in all thy gates. The tender and delicate woman among you which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateness and tenderness, her eye shall be evil towards the husband of her bosom, and towards her son, and towards her daughter, and towards her young one, that cometh out from between her feet, and towards her children which she shall bear: for she shall eat them, for want of all things, secretly in the siege, and straitness wherewith thine enemy shall distress thee in thy gates. And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind." Deut. xxviii. 49, 53–57, 64, 65.

Notice here one characteristic of the oppressing power which clearly distinguishes it from Babylon. "a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand." The language of Babylon, the Chaldee, was much akin to the Hebrew, so much so that several portions of the Old Testament are written in it. But the Roman tongue—the Latin—was quite a foreign language to the Jews of Judea. Hence the value of this mark of the great dispersor of Israel.

But it is interesting to observe that after describing this most complete scattering of this people "AMONG ALL PEOPLE," Moses predicts a glorious restoration to their own land and to the Divine favor such as has never yet blessed them, even in the peaceful reign of Solomon.

"And it shall come to pass, when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing, and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, and shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice, according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul: that then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return, and gather thee from all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee. If any of thine be driven out unto the outmost parts of the heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee. And the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it: and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers." Deut. xxx. 1–5.

Notice here that Moses expressly intimates that this restoration shall take place "when ALL these things are come upon thee which I have set before thee;" and seeing that he set before them the Roman captivity, it follows that the predicted restoration is yet awaiting them. The character of this restoration transcends anything in their previous history.

Should it be supposed from what is stated in verse second about "returning to the Lord," etc., that all this is dependent on individual conversion it may be observed that throughout this whole prediction Israel is addressed as a nation; that the threatenings came upon them as a nation; that their restoration from Babylon was in their national capacity—none being excluded who desired to return; and it is reasonable to expect that their future restoration, whatever conditions may be prescribed, shall be national and not individual. Besides, the conditions are stated to be "returning to Jehovah, and obeying his voice according to all that Moses commanded them." This allegiance yielded by the mass of the nation, although there might be many exceptions, would secure the promised blessing, just as the allegiance of a portion of the people would have saved the nation from the threatened captivity. The predicted restoration of Israel to their own land, then, will not depend on INDIVIDUAL conversion to Christ, but on NATIONAL allegiance to Jehovah according to prescribed rule.

Before leaving this passage it may be well to notice an expression of Moses which is probably referred to by Jesus in his prophecy of Israel's final tribulation uttered on Mount Olivet. Moses says, "When ALL THESE THINGS are come upon thee which I have set before thee." Jesus in referring to the impending desolation of the city and temple, and the consequent dispersion of the people extending over a period termed "the times of the Gentiles," says—"these be the days of vengeance that ALL THINGS which are written may be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 22. Of course those "ALL THINGS" are detailed more fully in the other prophets, but there can be no doubt that Moses summed them all up in the wonderful prediction under consideration, which although uttered upward of 3,000 years ago, stands as a witness at once against the Jews for their treason against their Divine Majesty, and against the Gentiles for their self-complacency in receiving in a literal sense the threatened evil against Israel, and in denying the literal fulfillment of the promised good; and not only so, but in transferring to themselves the blessings, and leaving to the Jews, in all their dire reality, the curses of this prophecy.

(To be Continued.)

THE NEW REVISION OF THE TESTAMENT.

A. H. MACKIDER.

Editor Restitution:

Doubtless the readers of THE RESTITUTION have a desire to hear something in advance of its receipt and perusal by them, of the version of the New Testament just published.

It is we know, the work of a committee of English and American religionists, principally clergymen, issued very recently, and now before the public.

Having obtained a copy of the Revision of the gospel according to John, and gave it an attentive examination, I confess to some disappointment in the work.

This single pamphlet edition is very well executed in type, style and paper, and is a marvel of cheapness, at the price of two cents a copy, issued and sold by the New York American Book Exchange, 764 Broadway, and the whole volume of the New Version, in paper cover, same style, may be had at ten cents a copy, to be sent by mail, free of postage. And from this price upward, according to style, paper, binding, etc.

The points of difference between this Revision of John and the Common Version are slight, and with few exceptions, unimportant; so that one is tempted to ask, of what use or advantage is such an additional translation?

Christian scholars and conscientious Bible students who desire, above all else, an honest translation, are disappointed at the obvious shrinking from duty in not translating but only transferring the Greek words baptize and baptism. Instead of rendering these words into their proper and only truthful English representatives, "dip, immerse, and immersion," these revisers have adopted and perpetuated the unworthy trick in the Common Version, of leaving the words untranslated. Not daring to translate the original baptizo into sprinkle or pour, which would have made them the laughing-stock of all scholars, they feared to give the true meaning, immerse, for that would have contradicted the practice of both the Catholic and Anglican churches at the same time, whom they wished to conciliate; hence with a shameful dereliction of duty and at the sacrifice of truth and honesty, they transferred the original words baptizo and baptisma, giving them an anglicised termination, and so left the words untranslated, as they stand to this day.

This is not conjecture but is abundantly proved by Lewis' History of the English Translations of the Bible, and other historical evidence. It seems vain to expect a faithful and true translation of the Bible by any committee or assembly of theologians or savans, however learned in the original tongues, for the reason that the responsibility of unpopular though truthful renderings is heavier than they are willing to meet and the wounded consciousness of skirking duty is shared by so many associates, that the reproach to each individual is almost infinitely small. A really true version of the Bible would be very unpopular and distasteful, for the reason that "the world loves its own," and men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil, and the true light is a perpetual witness and reproach against their practices.

It is on this account that a translation of the Bible by an individual who recognises a direct personal responsibility for its honesty and fidelity, is more worthy of confidence and should be preferred.

In another number I propose to point out some of the peculiarities characteristic of the New Revision.

Stephens City, Va.

THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

G. M. MYERS.

The readers of THE RESTITUTION, and we might say also of secular papers, have been for some time advised of the fact that there was undergoing a revision of the Scriptures, conducted principally by the English Church, with a few men of ability from other religious orders, both of England and America, invited to take a part with them in the work.

Of late we have been apprised that the revision of the apostolic writings would be completed, put into print and ready for sale about May 20. Patiently many have waited for this, hoping that by it they would in word and thought be brought nearer into harmony with the will of the Father as originally expressed in his word.

Monday last, May 23, we were favored with a copy of this revision in newspaper form, published by the Chicago Times dated May 22. To our utter surprise the entire book appears in fine newspaper type upon a little more than eleven pages of the Times. This copy of the Times has in it decidedly more Scripture than we ever met with in any other paper.

The idea of putting the entire book into newspaper form to be distributed among its many patrons speaks well for the firm and shows well for the art of printing at the present day. But what is more singular this office received the first six books entire from New York by telegram.

For many years in the past the masses of the English reading people have thought that the King James rendering was given to us by infallible men, and some have even thought that prophets and apostles spoke in English, and gave us the very identical words which appear in their Bibles. These have ever thought that a change in thought, word, or even in punctuation in any part of the Bible was wicked.

Upon the minds of these it is hard to tell what the effect will be by placing before them this revision, coming mainly from the same high court, and with mainly as much ecclesiastical authority as the old possessed.

We have no doubt but what many will regard the work as skeptical, as wicked, and even as blasphemous; while many are so little versed in the Bible language that they would not be able to tell any difference in the reading. Yet upon the minds of these classes we think it possible, and even probable that that it will be for the better. With many we think it will have the tendency to break the ties which they have had for the King James Version as a Version to cause them to think and to prepare their minds for something better in the future.

This revision, so far as we have examined, is in many respects an improvement upon the King James. It is what we have expected, but not what we have desired. It adheres in word and technicality too close to the King James. It has in this, however, one marked advantage, that it does not introduce us to a clothing of ideas entirely unfamiliar, and while it has this advantage, yet it is far from the rhetoric of this age—the close of the nineteenth century.

It is what we might expect from a body of men selected either ecclesiastically or promiscuously. They influence each other; they bias each other; they do not, they cannot think independently.

This revision is not what might have been given us by one good man left to act upon his own judgment and responsibility, free from vote as to word and sentence.

I have in my possession fifteen different renderings, many of which I regard as superior to this. Rotherham's Emphatic version, Noyes' rendering of the Tischendorf text, Darby, The Improved Version, The Living Oracles, Campbell and Macknight, Murdock's rendering of the Syriac, Tafel's interlinear of Matthew to Acts, and Wilson's interlinear, all are preferable in many respects. But upon the whole we hope that before the public it will supplant the King James version.

We will write a few short articles following this noticing some of the more important features of the work.

Lanark, Ill.

FEATURES OF THE NEW VERSION—TRANSMUTED WORDS.

G. M. MYERS.

Like many renderings from one language to another which have preceded this, the revisers have thought best to transcribe a few words from the original language, and accompany them with definitions. The old Hebrew proper names in our Bible are in many places transcribed but accompanied with proper definitions. The new unknown hand which, at an early date—possibly in the apostles' day—made a rendering of the original Hebrew of Matthew into Greek transferred many words, defining as he went along; but these revisers have not defined. And for the world possibly it is as well, unless they could upon great questions have lain all prejudices aside. This was hardly to be expected.

The Greek word baptizo and its cognates still remain unrendered, being as in the King James rendering only anglicized, with the reader left to definitions and circumstances to determine. Theories to sustain, and partisan ties alone can answer for this course. To have rendered these words as their scholarship would have compelled them, would have been to have snapped away every mysticism for their practice in what they call baptism. Educational facilities, and advantages in the way of manuscripts, in this latter part of the nineteenth century may be better for a correct rendering than in the days of King James, but candor—honesty—has not kept pace. It may have come from these men individually, but collectively we could not expect it.

Since, under the head of transferred words we have come to notice this subject—baptism—we will digress to notice the treatment this subject has further received at the hands of the revisers. Then we will note,

1. Matt. iii. 11, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." Here we have no change from the old version. Why? is the question, since the lexicographical definition of the particle en here rendered "with," and the laws respecting the case here demand our word "in," instead of "with." Liddell and Scott says of en. "Radically, signifying a being or remaining within, and so half-way between eis and ek." The word denoting a place he makes "in." The word denoting a means he makes "in."

Tafel's interlinear of the verse is, "I indeed I baptize you in water into repentance; but the (one) after (of) me coming stronger of me is, of whom not I am fit the sandals to have carried; he you will baptize in Spirit Holy and fire."

Even the Rheims version—Catholic—published in the United States under the permission of Bishop Hughs, gives "in" at this text. George Campbell, an old Scotch Presbyterian, gives "in" instead of "with." Noyes, a Unitarian, who renders the Tischendorf text, gives "in." Norton, a Unitarian, renders the word "in." But we did not intend to array authors at this point.

2. This version, in Matt. iii. 16, represents Jesus as going up "from" the water instead of, as the King James render it, "out of the water." But in Mark i. 10, they retain "out of." But why not a uniformity in rendering the word apo? The modern Greek texts have the word apo at each place. But it is to be noted that the text in Mark has been corrupted. Every manuscript antedating the tenth century has ek instead of apo. Possibly this fact has placed "out of" in Mark i. 10. I will remark, further, that Tregelles, Tischendorf, Alfred Green, Bengel, Lachman, Meyer, and Griesbach in margin all give ek in their Greek texts. The Rheims, George Campbell, Bible Union, Improved Version, Sawyer, Wakefield, Living Oracles, H. T. Anderson, Rotherham, Noyes, Norton, Tafel, and Wilson all represent the Savior as coming up out of the water. Then with these changes may be made in Matthew, as above set forth, the said of apo in Matthew the [illegible] Mark and authorities definitely to the action of the Savior in baptism.

3. Acts ii. 38. In answer to the inquiring multitude, addressed by Peter at Pentecost day, the answer is rendered. "Repent ye and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins: and ye shall receive the gifts of the Holy Ghost." Here the rendering of the preposition eis by the word, "unto" is for the better. The word "for" is significant enough, but as it does not always signify "in order to" advantage is sometimes taken, and the claim is set up that here it may signify "because of." But a turn of this kind cannot possibly be taken of the word "unto." Like its original eis it always denotes a forward move, an end to be obtained, a transition from one point to another, a transition from position without to position within.

(To be Continued.)

OBITUARY.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Matilda, Ont., March 27, 1881, after many months of severe suffering, John Matthew Hartle, (Mrs. Lyon's father) at the advanced age of 88 years and 11 months.

By his request he was laid aside to rest until Jesus shall come, upon the farm that he and his loving wife had owned, and lived upon and toiled for 61 years.

Father Hartle had been a firm and consistent believer in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ between 30 and 40 years.

His house and table was always free to all those who were engaged in giving the proclamation "Behold he cometh."

In his death mother Hartle has met with a great loss, for he was a good husband. But she sorrows not as others who have no hope of a resurrection! The children have lost one of the best of fathers, the town one of its most worthy citizens, and the church of God one of its most exemplary members.

He was a pattern for the young to imitate in all those habits that secure an honest living, and a good title to a life in the future on earth in its restored state, where it will be enjoyed eternally.

R. V. LYON.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The brethren of the Church of God at Antioch, Marshall Co., Ind., appoint their annual meeting to commence on the Friday before the first Sunday in June, at four o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday—the days dating June 3-5, 1881. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to attend. The place of meeting is between Plymouth and Argos, about five miles from the former and and three miles from the latter place.

The Annual Meeting of the Michigan Church Conference will be held (D. V.) at Watson, Allegan Co., Mich., in the Christian Meeting House, commencing at seven o'clock Thursday evening, June 2, 1881, and hold over Sunday, the 5th. Those coming from the east or west on the Michigan Central R. R., will take the Grand Rapids and Indiana R. R. at Kalamazoo, and go north to Montieth Station, and there take the Allegan R.R. to Fisk's Crossing, near the church. Those whocome from north or south on the Grand Rapids and Indiana R.R. stop at Montieth and go to Fisk's.

Let there be a good representation from all parts of the state. The friends of the Blessed Hope at Watson are fully able and willing to welcome and entertain all who come. These annual gatherings will be few before the great meeting in the air, when, if faithful, we shall see the Lord and be like him. We would like to greet our brethren from Lenawee and Buchanan and all other parts of the state. We expect brethren Chase, Woodward and others will preach the word.

E. HOYT, Sec.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Church of God, will commence on Friday, June 17, in the grove near John T. Spald's, and continue over Sunday. All of the Abrahamic faith, and the people in general, are respectfully invited to attend. Brother Spald lives near High View, Frederick Co., Va., and any one interested may address him or John D. Good at that place. All from a distance will be cared for during the meeting.

N. J. MORGAN.

The Lord willing I will be at Scircleville, Clinton Co., Ind., the second Sunday in June, and hold a grove meeting, as Brother Keaver may appoint. And while in the county I will hold other meetings as brethren may think best. Will be at Scircleville Friday before, and commence meeting in the evening.

J. S. HATCH.

The brethren of Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois, will meet at Adeline, Ill., on the Chicago & Pacific branch of the Milwaukee & St. Paul R. R., on Friday, July 1, and continue over Sunday.

By order of Committee.

J. M. OLOTWELTY.

A NEW TRACT!

CIRCULATE IT!

REASONS WHY

I Believe the Bible to be the Word of God; or an

Unanswerable Argument

—AGAINST—

Infidelity AND Atheism.

The foregoing is the title of a Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburgh, Pa.,

—BY DR. J. H. THOMAS.—

It is a large size Sixteen Page Tract, and can be had at the Office of

The Restitution,

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

Price Five Cents Each, Twelve for Fifty Cents, or Thirty for One Dollar.

Poetry.

A TEAR.

MRS. F. HOSMER CHAPLIN, (DECEASED.)

What is it when with grief oppressed,
And sorrow rives the breast,
So sweetly soothes those cares to rest?
A Tear!

What does the quick relief impart,
When loving ones are doomed to part,
And sunk in anguish, seems the heart?
A Tear!

And when from virtue's path we stray,
And wander far from wisdom's way,
O: let us never seek to stay,
A Tear!

When Mary's heart, in anguish bled,
And with her sister mourned the dead,
In sympathy our Savior shed
A Tear!

Yes, Jesus wept! the best believed,
Shall ne'er by sorrow be unmoved,
When adam's rib cheek there doth flowed
A Tear!

Flow on, blest tears! Ye'd not deface
The beauty of a seraph's face,
But only add a richer grace!
Sweet Tears!

Valparaiso, Ind.

Communications.

2 PETER III. 7.

J. H. THOMAS, M. D.

Editor Restitution:—As there may be some who will question the correctness of my exposition of 2 Peter iii. 7, as expressed in my lecture "Reasons Why I Believe the Bible to be the Word of God." I will with your permission give my reasons for so understanding it.

It will be freely admitted that the phrase "heavens and earth," as well as the word, "world," means in the Scriptures as well as at the present day "constitution of things" existing on the literal earth. Hence we have "the musical world;" "the theatrical world;" "the political world," etc., all of which are different constitutions of things existing on the earth. Each of these constitution of things or worlds have their heavens and earth, elements, etc.; for instance, the stars and luminaries that constitute the heavens of the musical world are those that sing or make the music; and those that listen are the earth, while the elements embrace all that constitutes the musical world; so the "Mosaic constitution of things" based upon a temple, and temple service, was a Jewish (kosmos) or world having of course, as every world has, its "heavens and earth" and and "elements." Being laid or founded upon a temple, and temple service which were necessary the keeping of the "law," when the temple and temple service passed away the heavens and earth or Jewish world with all its elements passed away with great noise, fire and smoke.

It will be readily admitted that the Mosaic constitution of things was only a temporary arrangement typical of that constitution of things or world to be established by the true Moses, Jesus Christ, based or laid upon a temple built of "lively stones," "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." which shall never pass away, but shall endure forever. According to the arrangement of Deity, the first was to be "shaken," moved, and pass away before the second could be established. This truth is beautifully set forth in the 12th chapter of Hebrews by Paul, who referring to the shaking and passing away of the Mosaic constitution of things says—"And this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a consuming fire"—that "fire" unto which the Mosaic heavens and earth were "reserved" and which signifies the spirit of God going forth in judgment.

Now Peter lived and wrote in the decade of the Mosaic constitution of things—in the last days of the Jewish kosmos. This is evident from the third verse of the chapter which reads, "Knowing this first that there shall come in the last days scoffers walking after their own lusts and saying, where is the promise of his coming" (parousia—a being alongside, or presence, Young's Analytical Concordance.) That the last days here spoken of have reference to the last days of the Jewish world, or Judah's commonwealth, is evident from Paul's letter to the Hebrews i. 2, "God hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Over eighteen hundred years ago in the end, or "last days" of the Jewish world, God spoke to the Jews by his Son—that prophet like unto Moses, of whom Moses said, "Every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people." Therefore Peter writing in the last days of Judah's commonwealth after the law had been nailed to the cross; after Jesus had said to Jerusalem, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate;" after Jesus had said to the Jews "the kingdom shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits therefor, and whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken, but on whomsoever it shall fall it will grind him to powder;" after Jesus had said, "These be the days of vengeance that all things that are writen may be fulfilled;" after Jesus had said that "upon that generation should come all the righteous blood that had been shed upon earth;" after Jesus had said that not one stone of the temple should be upon another. Peter writing after all this had been spoken by Jesus and when it was about being fulfilled says, "But the heavens and earth which are now by the same word are kept in store reserved unto fire against a day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Surely Peter writing in the last days of the Mosaic heavens and earth, or world, and saying the heavens and earth which are now" could have no reference to a Gentile heavens and earth which should exist eighteen hundred years after the Mosaic in which he lived had passed away?

That the heavens and earth, or world, which Peter says was to pass away, was a constitution of things is clear from the fact that he refers to the old antediluvian constitution of things in these words, "By the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water perished. The globe or physical earth and starry heavens were the same when Peter wrote, and are the same to-day that they were when the Antediluvians lived—they have never passed away, and never will. Therefore Peter's argument is that as the old world or heavens and earth by the word of God perished with water, so by the same word of God the "heavens and earth," or constitution of things in which he lived, were kept in store, reserved unto fire against a day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men—the men of that forty-fourth generation of whom should be required all the righteous blood that had been shed upon earth—the murderous husbandmen of God's vineyard.

But Peter rejoiced that after the Mosaic constitution of things which Paul said should be removed had passed away with a great noise and fervent heat, that there was to be a "new heavens and earth," or constitution of things in which righteousness would dwell. but how long after, the Spirit had not revealed to Peter. The times and seasons were as yet known only to the Father.

That new heavens and earth has not been established, and will not be until God shall set his King on his holy hill, Zion, or in other words, not until Jesus shall return and "build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down and build again the ruins thereof"—establish the kingdom of God again upon the mountains of Israel, which when established will be the new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, or the new creation so beautifully described by Isaiah in the 65th chapter. Thus saith the Lord, I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains [Jesus the seed of Abraham and Son of David] and mine elect shall inherit it and my servants shall dwell there [the bride of Christ—the king and priests of the new creation]. But to the unbelieving and rebellious Jews he says, "I will number you to the sword and ye shall bow down to the slaughter, because when I called ye did not answer, etc.; for behold I create a new heavens and earth, and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind." The new heavens and earth of which Peter speaks and of which the prophets writes. "But be ye glad and rejoice in that [new heavens and earth] which I create; for I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy;" and then a beautiful description of the way of this new creation which obtains after the former, or Mosaic has passed away to be remembered no more forever. We understand then that the heavens and earth of which Peter writes passed away at the destruction of Jerusalem; that the new heavens and earth are in process of creation: and when God has finished taking out a people from the Gentiles for his name, he will again, in the words of Isa. li. 16, 17, "plant the heavens and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion [the inhabitants of Zion], thou art my people." Under Moses God planted the heavens and earth with the Jewish people, or Israel, according to the flesh as a type of that heavens and earth which he will plant with the true, Israel under Christ. It is evident that the second could not be planted till the first was removed or passed away. Such being the case Peter had no reference to the present Gentile heavens and earth. Yet as an example it speaketh volumes to the Gentile world; for all God's dealings with the world are first with the Jew, afterward the Gentile; therefore, as he hath dealt with the Jewish world, so will he deal with the Gentile: as every Jew who heard not that prophet was and will be cut off from among the people; so of the Gentile. As the Jewish heavens and earth was reserved unto fire against a day of judgment of ungodly men and passed away, the elements thereof melting with fervent heat, so will the Gentile heavens and earth which are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment of ungodly men will pass away, the elements thereof melting with fervent heat

THE LAW OF LIBERTY.

S. ROXANA WING.

"For whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.

To what law is James referring? Manifestly to the law of commandments. We, who have come into Christ, "are to speak and do as they that are to be judged by the law of liberty." For Paul says, "We are the children of promise even as Isaac was;" "not the children of the bondwoman, but of the free." God sent forth his Son to redeem them that were under the law, that they might receive the adoption of sons. We are to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.

"If ye be circumcised," Paul argues with his Galatian brethren, "then are ye debtors to do the whole law.

If, by the covenant of circumcision, you bind yourselves to the Sinaitic law, you must be justified by that,—Christ is of no effect, you are fallen from grace.

But "we through the Spirit, wait for the hope of righteousness, that is by faith." Christ has died; he has risen from the dead; he is coming again.

God has so said through the Spirit. He has given us strong assurance in that he has raised Christ from the dead. We believe what he has said, and believing, have come into the hope. We wait for it, longing for "the manifestation of the sons of God."

The law avails us nothing. Christ Jesus is all in all. In him alone are we justified. Through him alone can we approach the Father. "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father even Jesus Christ, the righteous." "If any man sin." How broad the term! It includes me. Me, the poor, unworthy one. I too, can come; I too, can have an advocate. He can plead for me, plead as no other friend may plead. He is not a paid lawyer, he accepts no bribes, but he has been tempted, as I am being tempted, and he can feel for me. He has bought me with his blood and he loves me. that love will intercede on my behalf. "No man cometh to the Father but by him." He has been made the way. "He is a merciful High Priest" and he will pity. There may be foul sin stains on the pure white robes that he gave me, but when he sees my tears, and hears my cries, he will beg that they be taken away, that I be "purified and made white and tried."

The advocate is righteous, I can well be glad. He can throw those priceless robes around me, because he has been tempted without sin. The severe Judge will look at me. through him. "We are not under the law but under grace."

We are not bound to the law of Moses; we must obey the truth. Yet must we not use our liberty for an occasion to the flesh. Because we need not observe days and months and times and years, we must not do wrong. we must not work the works of the flesh: —be disobedient, envious, wrathful, heretical, emulous, unclean, idolatrous. Such characters cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Led of the Spirit; (guided by its teachings through the word) we are not under the law, and bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law.

The royal law of grace is that we love our neighbor as ourselves; that we, in love, serve one another. James defines this law of love to be that which will clothe a naked brother, and fill him with necessaries that is destitute of daily food.

If there is judgment without mercy, we shall be judged by the same harsh code. Where we have showed no mercy, none will be shown.

What measure we have meted will be measured to us again. If we have looked upon the poor, and said, "He brought his poverty upon himself, he does not deserve to be helped," who will pity us? how shall stand our ears in the last day?

We brought our poverty upon ourselves. We had nothing but filthy rags, no food that would endure; when we came to God, asking "to be helped, to be clothed, to be fed, to be saved."

What if he had not listened to our cry? What if he had not "laid help upon one that is mighty?"

"Mercy rejoiceth against judgment." Faith cannot save, if there are not the works that justify.

We must look into the perfect law of liberty and continue therein, being a doer, as well as a hearer of the word. Then only may we hope to be blessed in our deed. We must bridle our tongues if we would not have our religion in vain, "be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath." "Visit the fatherless child, and the lonely widow." "Minister to the necessities of the saints." "Be good as we have opportunity to all men," then may we hope, having believed God, and by works having made our faith perfect (in God's sight) to have that "faith accounted to us for righteousness."

"The law is dead, wherein we were held. We have been married to Christ, that we should bring forth fruit unto God."

Selections.

The Baptist.

RICHARD BAXTER ON CREEDS AND CONFESSIONS.

The Lord Jesus in wisdom and tender mercy established a law of grace, and rule of life, pure and perfect, but simple and plain: laying the condition of man's salvation none in the honesty of the believing heart, than in the strength of wit, and subtlety of a knowing head. He comprised the truths which were of necessity to salvation in a narrow room; so that the Christian faith was a matter of great plainness and simplicity. As long as Christians were such and held to this, the gospel rode in triumph through the world, and an omnipotency of the Spirit accompanied it, bearing down all before it. Princes and sceptres stooped; subtle philosophy was nonplussed; and all useful sciences came down, and acknowledged themselves servants, and took their places, and were well contented to attend the pleasure of Christ. . . . .

The serpent envying this happiness of the church, hath no way to undo us, but by drawing us from our Christian simplicity. By the occasion of heretics' quarrels and errors, the serpent steps in, and will needs be a spirit of zeal in the church: and he will so overdo against heretics, that he persuades them they must enlarge their creed, and add this clause against one, and that against another, and all was but for the perfecting and preserving of the Christian faith. And so he brings it to be a matter of so much wit to be a Christian (as Erasmus complains), that ordinary heads were not able to reach it. He had got them with a religious, zealous cruelty to their own and others' souls, to lay all their salvation, and the peace of the church, upon some unsearchable mysteries about the Trinity, which God either never revealed, or never clearly revealed, or never laid so great a stress upon: yet he persuades them that there was Scripture proof enough for these; only the Scripture spoke it but in the premises, or in darker terms, and they must but gather into their creed the consequences, and put it into plainer expressions, which heretics might not so easily corrupt, pervert, or evade. Was not this reverent zeal? And was not the devil seemingly now a Christian of the most judicious and fervent sort?

Yea, and where modesty restrains men from putting all such inventions and explications in their creed, the devil persuades men, that those being the judgments of reverent divines (no doubt to be reverenced, valued, and heard), it is almost as much as if they were in the creed, and therefore whosoever dissenteth must be noted with a black coal, and you must disgrace him, and avoid communion with him as an heretic. Hence lately is your union, communion, and the church's peace, laid upon certain unsearchable mysteries about predestination, the order and object of God's decrees, the manner of the Spirit's most secret operations on the soul, the nature of the will's essential liberty, and its power of self determining; the Divine concourse, determination or predetermination of man's, and all other creatures' actions, etc.; that he is scarcely accounted to be a fit member for our fraternal communion that differs from us herein. Had it not been for this one plot, the Christian faith had been kept pure; religion had been one; the church had been one; and the hearts of Christians had been more one than they are. Had not the devil turned orthodox, he had not made so many true Christians heretics, as Epiphanius and Austin have enrolled in the black list. Had not the enemy of truth and peace got into the chair, and made so pathetic an oration as to inflame the minds of the lovers of truth to be overzealous for it, and to do too much, we might have had truth and peace to this day. Yea, still, if he see any man of experience and moderation stand up to reduce men to the ancient simplicity, he presently seems the most zealous for Christ, and tells the inexperienced leaders of the flocks, that it is in favor of some heresy that such a man speaks; he is plotting a carnal syneretism, and attempting the reconcilement of Christ and Belial; he is tainted with Popery, or Socinianism, or Arminianism, or Calvinism, or whatsoever may make him odious with those he speaks to. O what the devil hath got by over-doing!

Review and Herald.

A KEEN REBUKE.

Robert G. Ingersoll in his tirade against the Bible and Christianity of course expected the opposition of the clergy and of religious denominations generally, and hence has not been surprised at the attacks made upon him from that quarter. He was hardly anticipating, however, that the secular press would join in the denunciations of his work. But so unreasonable and outrageous has been, and is, his course, that papers of this class have felt called upon to rebuke him sharply; and this, Mr. Ingersoll, as well he might, has felt most keenly. The following from the Inquirer of Philadelphia shows how the better class of the secular papers regard this man and his work:—

"Robert G. Ingersoll, better known among a class of politicians of the baser sort as Bob Ingersoll, may contend with the better part of himself—and we have no doubt that he has a better part than that of which he makes public exhibition—that he must live; and to live after the fashion he has chosen, he must have money, and a good deal of it. He tried to live by the law, but he lacked clients and failed as a lawyer; he tried to live by politics, but he lacked even the smallest stock of principles which our modern politicians must have to secure success, and, consequently, he failed. He recognized, however, that he had great and attractive abilities as an orator, a certain dramatic faculty as a story-teller, and a fund of sarcastic humor which delighted his boon companions of the Congressional lobbies. For after Mr. Ingersoll's failure as a politician, he tried to live as a lobbyist; but here he partly failed again, because the Credit Mobilier exposures had made honorable members afraid to have commerce with 'the gift-bearing Greek.'

"Having failed in everything he had attempted, Mr. Ingersoll determined to utilize as a lecturer the talents, gifts, and abilities which God had given him; and being shrewd enough to know that he could succeed only by choosing a subject of vivid or even startling interest, he chose that of the defamation of God and of his religion. It was his need—or his fancied need—that impelled him to do what he did, and he has prospered exceedingly in doing it, so far as reaping large pecuniary harvests from sowing the tares of unbelief and infidelity can be considered prospering. He wanted money, and he gets money. It is possible, however, that, if he does not now think, the time will come when he will think that there is something in the world better than money, and that a wholesome, abiding faith in God and his mercy is worth more than all the money that ever was coined. Mr. Ingersoll is simply a trafficker in blasphemy and infidelity, partly because it pays him to traffic in them, and, possibly, partly because he is as ignorant of the harm he is doing as he is of the subject of which he publicly speaks.

"It should be thoroughly understood that Mr. Ingersoll is simply a peripatetic showman performing for his own benefit. He represents no opulent body of citizens or of men; he represents only himself, and has no higher purpose to serve in denouncing religion and belief than of filling his pockets. It is possible, even probable, that if there were any lower depth to which he could sink his talents and his manhood, and which promised larger pecuniary rewards, he would seek it. He appeared at the Academy of Music last night in his favorite character of infidel and blasphemer, in opposition to Barnum's circus, and the stars at the theatres, and drew as large a house as any of them all, though even the clown in the ring or the singer of unclean songs in the variety show, must have felt humiliated to be compelled to contend for public favor against a performer who put his thoughts and speeches to such base uses, and, for a price, plays the panderer to the ignorant and vile."

Much indignation is expressed by Roman Catholics in Paris at the Government giving up to Pere Loyson the Church of the Assumption, on the Rue St. Honore, in which the Abbe de Cluerry, who is deemed to have suffered martyrdom from the Commune, for many years officiated. Dean Stanley came over to be present at its opening by Pere Loyson.

A LETTER

TO A BAPTIST MINISTER ON THE INTERMEDIATE STATE

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN,

THE RETURN OF THE JEWS, AND THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE

THRONE OF DAVID

—AND—

KINGDOM OF ISRAEL.

Together with Strictures on

Mr. Canning in "THEODOSIA."

—By DANIEL HOWARD.—

A capital tract for those desiring information on the subjects discussed. Send to friends for it, and after reading send it to your neighbor.

PRICE ELEVEN CENTS EACH.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1861 to 1865.

—By M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 24 pages, 12c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE

TWO THRONES.

A lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 6, 1861.

—By H. V. REED.—

BRING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the Throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the life of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send Orders to

SAMUEL WILSON,

208 N. 2nd Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by

THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture on (title) "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 50c. each, or 4$ for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND THE—

BIBLE Vindicated.

—By A. J. EVCHAFER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combating infidelity. Twenty pages, price 5c., 12 for 50c., or 25 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

About to be issued a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Proclamation" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. each 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent prepaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PRIMER. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Elder Baptiste, in 1833. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 6c., or assorted packages of 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 25c; 50 for 50c; 100 for $1.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two ages in these terms, to which the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Macgruder.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of it although so to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Laing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each, or 25 for 50c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? D. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each, or 25 for 50c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Repentance and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. R. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each; 10 for 25c, or 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Josiah Pelcrew.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each; 8 for 25c, or 20 for $1.

Pas Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.

10c. each, or 12 for $1.

Evangelium concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the World restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 36 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xvi. and xvii., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiv. 56 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 50 pages, price 15c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 44 pages, price 20c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "the Sacred Scriptures self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a state of consciousness after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatsoever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 60c., paper 40c.

Future Punishment. Is eternal and everlasting. Henry Constable. Treatment of Dives. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of the Wicked. By Dr. Thomas, 200 pages, 25c. with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia, most invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 188 pages, cloth 75c. paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.40.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and clear statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 328 pages. Plain cloth, bevelled $1; Cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather unrubbed edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—REVISED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear word-for-word English version, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the acts of Christ is here based, and with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are arranged in the common version so as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 986 pages, cloth $4.50, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

— MAN —

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE.

A lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1861,

By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 25, 1861, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each: 25 for 50c., or $1 for $3.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. E. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER. W. S. BALLARD.
T. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON. B. WILSON.
J. F. WEETHEE. J. A. SIMONDS.
WILEY JONES. G. M. MYERS.
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 8, 1881. NO. 22.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the full "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Herald Angel. Fifth Trumpet. Rev. ix. 1-12. First Woe. General Sketch. Terms Defined and Explained. History. Its Application.

No. 71.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Herald Angel.—And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice. Wo, wo, wo, to the inhabiters of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound. Rev. viii. 13.

The proclamation of this introductory messenger, is important, since it gives the alarm, and establishes the fact that the trumpets are consecutive, as well as it decides, also, the last three trumpets to be more terrible in character.

a. Preparatory alarms are God's method of dealing with mankind under all dispensations. He warns men of coming judgments, that they may avoid them. By the wicked these premonitory alarms are not heeded. Such persons are overtaken as a thief.

b. The trumpets are consecutive.—The expression "yet to sound," proves that four had sounded. Also their order is denoted by first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh.

c. The character of the trumpets belonging to the second series, is announced by the proclamation of this special messenger: "Wo to the inhabiters of the earth." The first four trumpets were severe; but they were local—confined principally to the territory of the western empire; but these wo trumpets involve the human family. Their torments involve the Christian world.

Fifth Trumpet.—And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth; and to him was given the key to the bottomless pit. And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit. And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth; and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power. And it was commanded of them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads. And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months; and their torment (was) as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man. And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them. And the shapes of the locusts (were) like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads (were) as it were crowns like gold, and their faces (were) as the faces of men. And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as (the teeth) of lions. And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings (was) as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle. And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails, and their power (was) to hurt men five months. And they had a king over them (which is) the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue (is) Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath (his) name Apollyon." Rev. ix. 1-12.

Such is the inspired description of the first two. The scenery, the chief and subordinate agents, and their work, are all very remarkable. Let us fancy what John saw; and let us enter into the same divine spirit.

The eastern world, with its earth and sky, occupies the prophetic vision. Among the southeastern constellations a bright star draws the attention. While the prophet is gazing with interest, the meteor shoots downward in a lucid pathway to the earth.

This star henceforth seems to possess human attributes, having hands and other members. The prophet has been looking into the blue concave of an Arabian sky, beneath which is the peninsula of Arabia. Every object is unlike those belonging to the Roman world: new heavens, new earth, new constellations, new race of men; new laws, new religion; everything new and wonderful

Let us follow that singular visitant from the heavens.

A key is placed in the hand of this extraordinary meteor; by what agent it is not stated. By some invisible power. It is no sooner given than it is put into its own lock and turned; open flies the door, and out rushes a blinding smoke like that of a great furnace. The prison is an immense cavern, so vast, and so deep, and so full of smoke that the bottom was beyond the prophet's vision; it was an unfathomable cavernous pit.

While John gazes upon the immense volumes of the rushing smoke, his attention is drawn to the swarms and armies of living objects, flying through the rolling volumes, and issuing out in immense swarms; they light on the earth. The prophet calls them locusts; though of a peculiar shape, and very remarkable in their mission.

Their Form.—They resembled war horses. On their heads were the similitudes of golden crowns. They had men's faces, long hair of women, and the teeth of lions. They had breastplates that resembled iron. The sound of their wings resembled the sound of many chariots of war rushing furiously into battle. They had heads with stings of scorpions. Another peculiarity was that these locusts had a king over them, originating in the same dark pit, while ordinary locusts have no king.

"Locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands." Prov. xxx. 27.

Their mission is equally remarkable. They are locusts in name, but scorpions in nature. The command of their king is, Hurt not the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads. Rev. ix. 4. Their commission allowed them only to torment. That torment was poisonous like that of a scorpion for five months. It was to be so severe that men would prefer death, but would not be gratified.

Their royal commander, by nature a destroyer, controlled his army with despotic power, and infused into them, his own indomitable spirit of torment, to which his mission was confined.

Terms defined and explained:—

a. "Star"—a meteor, or falling star. Falling, or shooting stars are either ordinary meteors, such as may be seen during almost any clear night, a meteorite—a meteoric stone, a solid compound of earth and metal, made luminous by friction, as they pass with great velocity through the atmosphere; or they may be such as are intended for some extraordinary mission, such as directed the Eastern sages to Bethlehem.

b. "From heaven."—Here the term heaven, evidently has its primary signification, as in Gen. i. 8. "And God called the firmament heaven—רָקִיעַ —expanse (blue concave formed of the atmosphere); and שָׁמַיִם (sha-mu-yim) heaven. The prophet, in former visions, had over him a Roman sky, under which was the Roman earth; this appears southeastward, and a little beyond the limits of that empire.

c. "Key."—A key is an instrument to shut or open a lock, by being inserted into it. Every building or place designed for security, has its lock and key. The person that holds the key, has authority, or at least the power to open. To this extraordinary star is given a key, thereby having authority to unlock.

d. "Bottomless pit."—The star had given him the key of what is here translated bottomless pit. The original thought, conveyed by the two Greek words φρεαρ and, αβυσσου rendered in English by the noun "pit," and its attribute, "bottomless," is that with which we have to do. If the two expressions convey the same meaning, the translation is correct, and we have the inspired thought; but, let us see if they convey the same thought. John evidently saw what he called phrearos abussou—translated bottomless pit, and, at other times our translators call it hell. Abuss is defined thus. fr. a intens. and βυσσος bus. for βυθος depth, an abyss, a deep: the receptacle of the dead; the bottomless pit, hell: an abyss of waters, adj. bottomless, unmeasurable, vast.

It is used in the Greek New Testament as follows:—"And they (the demons) besought him that he would not command them to go out into the deep" —τον αβυσσον. Luke viii. 31. "Who shall descend into the deep"—τον αβυσσον. Rom. x. 7.

Seven times in the Apocalypse, the Greek is translated bottomless pit: yet, in Rev. xi. 7, xvii. 8, and xx. 1, 3, there is only one word, αβυσσος, but the place opened by the star has two words to express its meaning, viz., φρεαρ and αβυσσος; when the place is simply named it is called φρεαρ; when its depth is spoken of, the word, αβυσσος is added. When their king is named, (vs. 11) he is called τον αγγελον της αβυσσου. It will be seen, by examination, that these seven do not express the same place. In Rev. ix. 1, 2, it refers to a deep cavernous place on the land, without any allusion to a place of future torment,—a vast pit so deep that its bottom could not be seen was presented to the prophet's vision.

e. "He opened the bottomless pit."—This act shows that the star had control over this deep cavernous pit—to let out upon the earth its poisonous contents. The date of the first two is fixed by this opening; all that transpired before that event was introductory.

f. "A smoke arose out of the pit."—As a literal term, no explanation is necessary: all persons are familiar with smoke; and many have seen the smoke of great furnaces. John must have seen such, or he could not have used the simile. It was a smoke, like that which arose from the plain of Jordan, at the overthrow of the five cities, "Abraham beheld, and, lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace." Gen. xix. 28. The smoke that John saw was a symbol, since it was part of the drapery of a vision; so are all the objects of the vision. The smoke was immense, since "the sun and air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit." Verse 2. This smoke was peculiar since it had life-sustaining elements.

g. "Locusts came out of the smoke."—These are peculiar, since they live in smoke as their natural element. It is not stated, however, whether they are citizens of the cavernous pit, and driven out by the smoke, or the children of the vaporous smoke, through which they were swarming. Perhaps they came out of the pit earth, and grew up, and lived in the smoke.

h. The nature of these locusts.

i. Locusts belong to the east. It is said that their native country is Arabia. It will be of great interest to contrast the literal and symbolic locusts. The Hebrew word אַרְבֶּה (ar-beh) means to multiply, enlarge. The locusts are called by that name because they are so prolific. They belong to a genus of insects, known by the name of Gryllii, which includes three species, crickets, grasshoppers, and the locusts.

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH.

NUMBER TWO.

J. CAMERON.

PROPHECIES OF ISAIAH, JERREMIAH AND EZEKIEL CONCERNING FINAL RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

In consulting the succeeding prophets respecting Israel's restoration to their own land, we shall only make a selection, at once for the sake of brevity, and to concentrate attention on a few testimonies which are deemed so distinct that no more numerical augmentation could possibly add to the strength of their evidence.

"And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots; and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek; and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the isles of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim." Isa. xi. 1-5, 10-13.

Observe two points in this passage. First, WHO are to be restored? It is the outcasts of Israel and the dispersed of Judah. In the reign of Rehoboam ten of the twelve tribes revolted from the House of David, and formed what was called the kingdom of Israel, while the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, constituted the kingdom of Judah. The ten tribes were CAST OUT of the land and carried away to Assyria, about B. C. 678. The captivity of Judah took place 130 years later. A partial restoration of Judah was afterwards accomplished under a decree of Cyrus, king of Persia, on which occasion God set his hand the first time to recover the remnant of his people. The passage under notice at present, however, distinctly predicts the restoration of both Israel and Judah, and that under circumstances of the greatest cordiality and friendship.

The use of the two names Israel and Judah here, it is submitted, inevitably compels us to conclude that the two divisions of the nation are intended. The same may be affirmed of the use of Ephraim and Judah, Ephraim being sometimes used to denote the kingdom of Israel.

Thus Jehovah says by Jeremiah, (xxxi. 9,) "I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born." Notice again, that it is a SECOND interference on the part of Jehovah for the recovery of his people from the various countries of their dispersion, which is here predicted. "The Lord shall set his hand again the second time." The countries from which the people are to be gathered are also highly corroborative of both points just stated—Assyria certainly indicating the locality of the ten tribes, Egypt, Persia, and the islands of the sea, the localities of the dispersion of Judah—thus necessitating another restoration.

It has been asserted that all the twelve tribes of Israel were restored at the return from Babylon. But the historical books of Ezra and Nehemiah, as well as the predictions that preceded that restoration, leave no room to doubt that only the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, with the priests, who were of the tribe of Levi, which was not reckoned as a tribe, were privileged to return to Palestine.

On the proclamation of Cyrus being issued, ("that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled," which only related to Judah), we read that "then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them (that is, of the body of the people) to go up to build the house of the Lord, that is in Jerusalem." Ezra i. 5.

They are again described—"Now these are the children of the province that went of the captivity of those which had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried into Babylon, and came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city." ii. 1.

Note also that although the general term Israel is sometimes used to designate Judah and Benjamin, there are not wanting the means of determining who are meant. For example, in chap. x. 5-9, we find the term "all Israel" in verse 5 limited to "the men of Judah and Benjamin." In verse 9. It is quite possible that a few individuals belonging to some of the other tribes may have embraced the opportunity to return, though there is no mention of it: and this may account for the "sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel" which was offered at the dedication of the house of God. Besides it was a recognition of the divine purpose to "set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people" from the other lands of the dispersion.

Let us now look at one of Jeremiah's prophecies. And here it may be premised that Jeremiah prophesied both of the restoration of Judah from Babylon, and of the final and glorious re-establishment of all Israel in the land of their fathers.

The following passage will be seen to be unmistakably concerning the final restoration, and that for one simple reason—both houses of Israel are repeatedly referred to as being the parties to be restored to their own land, and the certainty of this is attested by the strongest assurances which language is capable of conveying to human apprehension:

"Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and to the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness. For thus saith the Lord, David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel; Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifices continually. And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord, If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season, then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant; that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me. Moreover the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying, Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. Thus saith the Lord: If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth; then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them." Jeremiah xxxiii. 14-26.

It is respectfully submitted to the candid reader that the plain and unsophisticated sense of this passage as it would be understood by an intelligent Jewish cotemporary of Jeremiah, is the only sense which any man or woman in any age is at liberty to put upon it. And that sense is undoubtedly that Jehovah had given his most solemn declaration that the twelve tribes of Israel, ten of which had already been carried into Assyria, should at some future time be gathered out from the nations and be planted in their own land, under circumstances of surpassing favor and glory. If this be not its meaning then may it mean anything which human fancy may please to dictate.

Turn we now to two of Ezekiel's prophecies contained in chapter xxxvii. In this passage the "whole house of Israel" are represented as a heap of dry disjointed bones, saying, "Our bones are dried and our hope is lost; we are cut off from our parts." The whole house of Israel here is not the dead generations of that people, but the generation then existing at the time when the fulfillment of the prophecy takes place—namely, as the prophet declares, when the "whole house of Israel" are placed in their own land."

This is followed by another prophecy which is closely connected with the foregoing, as may be seen by the word "Moreover" which introduces it. The prophet is told to take two sticks or rods and write upon them respectively, "For Judah and for the children of Israel his companions"—"For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions."

The prophet is then told what he is to say when he is asked the meaning of this:

"And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these? Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand. And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes. And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they are gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all; neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of their dwelling-places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them; so shall they be my people, and I will be their God. And David my servant shall be king over them; and they shall all have one shepherd; they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children, forever; and my servant David shall be their prince forever. Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them, and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore." Ezek. xxxvii. 18-28.

There are three things in this prophecy which make it evident that it has not yet received its fulfillment, namely:—

1. Divided Israel are to be made one nation, in the land upon the mountains of Israel, nevermore to be divided into two kingdoms, as they had been before.

2. They are to be saved from their idols, and cleansed from that wherein they had sinned.

3. They are permanently to dwell in this united and prosperous condition, and the sanctuary of Jehovah is to be in the midst of them forevermore.

Observe—The land is expressly described as the land that God had given to Jacob his servant, and not only this, but as the land wherein their fathers had dwelt. Moreover they, the children of Israel are to be taken from among the heathen, or nations, or Gentiles, as the word is otherwise rendered, and gathered ON EVERY SIDE, and brought into their own land, and the Gentiles are to know that Jehovah sanctifies, or makes holy, or separates from other people for his own purposes, that people whom he had formed for himself, and who should show forth his praise, when his sanctuary or temple is placed in the midst of them forevermore.

Again, God is to make an everlasting covenant of peace with them, which shall be the guarantee for all the other blessings bestowed being continued among them. Under this new covenant the people are to be MULTIPLIED, and to dwell in the land, "THEY, and their CHILDREN, and their CHILDREN'S CHILDREN forever."

This, it is submitted, is incapable of being applied to any but "Israel after the flesh." It is impossible to find anything answering to the multiplication of the seed of the whole house of Israel, and their permanent residence in their own land, with their children and children's children, in the church immortalized and glorified, neither marrying nor giving in marriage, but like to the angels of God.

(To be Continued.)

NEWS OF TRAVELS.

J. S. HATCH.

I left home April 20. The first point visited was Moore's Schoolhouse, Kosciusko Co. Met several of the brethren and sisters, some from Pierceton. Had a good meeting.

First Sunday in May brother and sister Wince took me to brother Guffin's, went over on Saturday. Brother and sister A. Wince and others from their neighborhood came to the meeting. During my stay brother J. Lewis died and I stayed to the funeral. Some twenty-five years ago he embraced the gospel and looked forward to the resurrection as the hope for a future life. During his sickness he told his wife he longed for the return of the Lord, and would have been happy if Christ would come so he could meet him without seeing death. He leaves a wife, and I think, three married children to mourn their loss.

From there I went to the Roose Schoolhouse, and had good meetings. Brother Harrison Shearer fell asleep in Jesus during my stay, and I was called to preach at his funeral. I immersed him, his wife, and two others last October. The brethren set me to commenced as soon as he was baptized to live a different life, but he has fallen under the power of death till the last trump shall sound.

I next visited Kingsbury. There are only a few brethren there.

I next visited Brother Henry, on the "Island." Not many attended, the appointment not being understood. Here I met brother Samuel Andrews, of Michigan, also W. R. Gonder, of Michigan. Brother Henry is still battling for the truth. This is an old point where the truth has been proclaimed by Brother R. Corbaley and other faithful workers.

From there I returned to the Roose Schoolhouse, and held meetings two nights. Had good meetings.

Next went to Millwood and held meetings two days. I find quite an interest in some places to hear the truth. There is much to do but few to do it. But very few of our preachers are in the field and they but poorly sustained. I see that another one of our brethren who for years has preached the word, has fallen asleep, (S. G. Clark), so we all will soon pass away. Let us be up and doing. The Lord Jesus will soon come.

For the last three thousand years, it is said, there has stood in the immediate neighborhood of Sparta a gigantic cypress, the very same tree which of old found mention in the pages of Pausanias and other antique Greek historians. It reared its stately head to a height of one hundred and sixty feet above the ground, and its dark foliage overshadowed a space nearly three hundred feet in circumference. It was a source of profit, as well as of pride, to the inhabitants of Sparta, for its world-wide fame annually attracted hundreds of curious tourists from all parts of Europe, whose temporary sojourn in its vicinity brought no small amount of grist to the Spartan mill. Only the other day this venerable sylvan patriarch was ignited by a band of Gypsies while cooking their midday meal under the shade of its leafy branches, and burned to the ground despite strenuous efforts made to save it from annihilation. It would appear that this grievous accident is regarded by the Greek populace as of evil omen to the enterprise in which the Hellenic nation is just now embarked.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAFLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, June 8, 1881.

SOME articles on baptism are deferred for the present. Will continue our own on The Commission when some manuscripts that have been delayed shall have been published.

WE are under special obligations to two of our kind brethren, and a benevolent sister living in Ohio, for some pecuniary aid. The sister sent $10 to the relief fund, and $10 to send out tracts. The two brethren contributed $5 each to our relief fund. May God reward them a thousand fold. We intend to send the tracts for which our sister pays mostly to the Pacific coast for distribution. We shall send some to Brother N. Bond, Washington, D. C. We will try and make the $10 sent by our sister do all the missionary work possible.

THE Conference at Antioch was held as appointed June 3–5, closing on Sunday evening. The attendance was very encouraging—increasing every meeting. Brethren J. M. Stephenson and J. S. Hatch were present and preached to those who convened from time to time. Sister Woodward from Hammond, Mich., attended this meeting. No others from a distance. Two persons were baptized by brother H. Barnhill, Sunday afternoon. Good attention was given to the preaching.

MILLWOOD, Ind., May 28, 1881.
Editor Restitution:

Having received a note from brother Penimore sometime after the debate at Argos, informing me that the brethren had decided that I should write out a report of the discussion; will you please insert a note in THE RESTITUTION of next week, stating that it is in a state of preparation, and will soon be completed.

I would suggest that the brethren at Argos pay for about a hundred extra copies of the issue containing said report, to be distributed among our German Baptist friends, and others who do not take the paper.

JOS. MESSIMORE.

We delay the publication of this report till next week in order to give our brethren time to inform us how many copies they want, as we do not desire to print any more extras than will be required for distribution by our friends. Let us know by the last of this week how many will likely be wanted.

FROM the Chicago Times of May 30, we take the two articles below on the New Revision. Dr. Schaff's connection with the American Committee invests whatever he may have to say with special importance. Brother Read's communication will direct our readers to important changes for the better in some words selected as examples, as well as suggest some particular words that have, in Greek, very distinct meanings that have been obscured by being carelessly translated into English by one and the same word. A second article from Brother Magruder will also appear in our paper. From time to time we will give what may be instructive to our readers on this important subject.

One of the Revisers.

SERMON BY REV. PHILIP SCHAFF, D. D.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 29.—A large audience, including many ministers in attendance at the United Presbyterian synod, filled the First Presbyterian church here this morning. The high reputation of Dr. Philip Schaff as a biblical scholar, and his position as the chairman of the American section of the revision committee, made the occasion of his first address upon the revised New Testament one of unusual interest. The reverend gentleman said:

"I direct your attention to that portion of the word of God contained in the Second Epistle of Paul to Timothy, third chapter, and sixteenth verse: 'All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.' This passage refers originally to the Old Testament, for the New Testament was not then completed; but in a higher, wider sense it applies even more to the New Testament, which rises as high above the Old as the glory of the sun excels the dimmed light of the moon and stars. Taking the Bible, therefore, as a whole, inspired by God, written by men—thus human and Divine at once, like our Savior—I say it is the most remarkable book that was ever written or printed. It is more than a book; it is an institution. It is one of the three fundamental pillars of Christian society, the church of God, the day of God, and the book of God. A holy trinity upon earth, on which our civilization and all that is pure, and good, and noble in our institutions, in our private, public, and national life rests. To destroy any of these would be to prepare the way for a lapse of mankind into barbarism and heathenism worse than that out of which our forefathers were brought by this three-fold agency, the Christian church, the Christian Sabbath, and the Holy Bible. How important, then, that this book should be translated and retranslated into every tongue, and given to every people as it was originally given out in Hebrew and Greek. Retranslation must take place from time to time, whenever the exigencies of languages and of Biblical knowledge make it desirable."

The reverend speaker then touched briefly upon the different translations, the partial Anglo-Saxon; one of the venerable Bede; that by Wycliffe, from Latin into a language newly formed from the union of Anglo-Saxon and Norman-French, which being a translation of a translation, was necessarily inaccurate in many minor particulars; the invention of printing paving the way to the Reformation and awakening a desire to read the Word of God as it fell from the lips of Christ and his apostle rather than in the language of popes and bishops and priests; the translation by Tyndale, first from the original tongues, which was burned by order of King Henry and the bishop of London, on the banks of the Thames, where the foreign Bible house now stands; Coverdale, Cranmer, the Geneva bishops, and finally the King James translations, each being more accurate than the preceding, as the knowledge of Greek and Hebrew became fuller. He spoke of the many excellencies of the King James translation, but said that for the past fifty years there had been a growing demand for a new translation. The reasons for such a revision are especially two:

1. The changes in language; and,

2. The progress in Biblical scholarship.

Every living language changes from time to time. The language of Bede changed to that of Wycliffe, that of Wycliffe to that of Tyndale, that of Tyndale to that of the time of King James; and there have been many changes since then, certain words have changed their meaning to the direct opposite of that formerly expressed by them. The speaker cited verses in which "prevent" is used in the sense of "precede," "let" for "hinder," "carriages" for "baggage," "by and by" for "forthwith," and others of like nature. The second and more important reason, however, is the growth of every branch of knowledge. The forty-seven men who made King James' translation had none of them been in Palestine, and knew little of Biblical geography. They were thus liable to make mistakes, and did make many. Since then Egypt has given up her treasures, Sinai has been explored, Palestine traversed, Babylon and Nineveh have risen from their graves to testify to the truth of the Bible and lend their manuscripts and inscriptions to the explanation of some of its passages. This gain in knowledge should be used to make a good translation better, to bring the English Bible up to the standard of English knowledge, to substitute intelligible modern English words for obsolete ones, and above all to translate from the purer older Greek and Hebrew texts written nearer the apostolic age. The King James version was a translation from manuscripts, and contained the errors that must creep in with frequent copying. Older manuscripts since discovered have been used in the present revision, and many actual errors rectified. "Strain at a gnat" has been changed to "strain out a gnat," and a great many such typographical errors corrected. Two words in the original were both translated "hell" in the King James version—"Hades," meaning the abode of souls after death, and "Gehenna," meaning the abode of the damned. In the revision this has been corrected. So also has the distinction between "devil" and "demon" been brought out. The division into chapters, made by a Roman Catholic cardinal in the thirteenth century, and that into verses, first made by a Paris publishing house in the sixteenth, having been done away with, and the text divided according to sense. Italicised passages, when they were unnecessary and weakening to the true sense, have been discarded. Yet all these changes, this bringing of the English text closer to the true reading of the original, has not, in any wise, interfered with the sacredness of the book. That English Christendom, divided by jealousies, prejudices, and recollections of previous persecutions has been able to unite in this work, surely testifies to the hand of God in it, and that it will be the great bond of union between the different sects. The committee's work is done, and it now rests with the Christian people to say whether the revision shall take the place of the old version, or be used with it, or as a commentary.

The Revised New Testament.

H. V. REED.

The eagerness shown by all classes of society for the revised New Testament is very remarkable, and it must be evident to the most casual observer that some other reason than that of curiosity lies at the foundation of this general demand for light. That the teachings of the Nazarene and his legatees have a powerful influence upon the minds and consciences of men there can be no question; but aside from this, each party is anxious to know whether certain technical words have been omitted from the revised Testament. Those who find their pet phrases retained, will be loud in their praise, while those who find their peculiar terms left out will be equally loud in condemning the work of the revisers. In view of this, we cannot suppose that those having in charge the revision would expunge any word or phrase which strongly supports their own dogmas.

It is highly questionable whether men holding pronounced views upon disputed points of doctrine can be strictly impartial in their efforts to give an exact translation of any book. In their zeal to sustain their peculiar theories they will naturally incline toward those words which will best express their views or give color to their interpretation. We do not attribute this to dishonesty, but to human weakness. By so doing, men seem to think that they are glorifying God. But the truth is better than dogmas, and must prevail. Would it not have been well for those having in charge the revision of the Bible—which, by the way, is an unfortunate phrase—to have called in all classes of revisionists for the purpose of getting at the exact points of difference, and then let that view obtain which expresses the real meaning of the original writer. By doing this, the party spirit would, in a measure, have ceased, and a better and more accurate translation would have been the result. As it is, the different sects and isms will treat the revised edition as a partisan affair and without authority.

This state of things presents another occasion for skeptical persons to attack Christianity itself, and treat it all as a mere superstition; but the candid student of philosophy and sacred literature will hardly dare to trench upon such untenable ground. We have numerous translations of the Hind of Virgin, and many other works of antiquity, and no one calls in question the genuineness or authenticity of these productions. The numerous manuscripts scattered throughout the Oriental world, in so many different languages, and yet so nearly alike, afford a strong proof of the genuineness of our modern text which agrees so closely with all the different manuscripts which have come down to us from ancient times. The trouble is not with the original text, but with partisans who are very tenacious in sustaining certain words which have the sanction of the authorized version, and on which the dogmatists depend. In the main, all of the forty-five New Testament translations into the English language agree. The whole controversy has been about certain words which, it is claimed, do not faithfully represent the original Greek.

Not being a partisan, we can, to a certain extent, investigate the disputed points impartially. We can not, in a short article, review all the points, but will notice a few of the most prominent:

THE WORD HELL.

There are, in the original Greek, three words which are translated in the authorized version by the one word hell. These three words are hades, gehenna, and tartarus. Hades is a compound word, and means unseen. This word occurs eleven times in the New Testament, and never refers to anything beyond the resurrection, but always to the grave or the state of death. See Matt. xi. 23; xvi. 18; Luke x. 15; xvi. 23; Acts ii. 27, 31; Rev. i. 18; vi. 8; xx. 13 (margin) 14. The revisers saw the impropriety of translating this word by the term hell, but they put it into the new version without translation, which is an invasion. Wakefield, in the improved version of 1800, and many other modern English versions, translate hades grave. Dr. George Campbell, who translated the New Testament, says of this word hades that it should never be translated hell, and that it always means the world of the dead whether good or bad, etc.

The word gehenna occurs in the New Testament twelve times, and is translated hell. The revised Testament retains the old translation. To have been consistent, they should have transferred the original word gehenna, as they did the word hades. This would have removed the idea of a place of endless misery from the New Testament. Gehenna is a compound word, and means the valley of Hinnom, south of Jerusalem, once celebrated for the horrid worship of Moloch. The word comes from "ge," earth, and "Hinnom," the name of a man, and never means a place away from the earth. To the Jewish mind, it was perfectly plain, and referred to their system of capital punishment.

The other word is tartarus, and occurs but once (2 Peter ii. 4), and means darkness. The text above does not refer to men, but to lapsed angels, and that, too, before the final judgment. Hence to translate it hell, and thereby leave the impression upon the English reader's mind that it refers to the same place as gehenna, is not fair treatment. The time, the locality, nor the subjects are the same. Then why use the same English word? The ordinary reader is certainly misled by such a translation. It would have been better by far not to have translated the word at all. But we cannot extend our criticism further on this subject.

THE WORD "WORLD."

It is a rule of language that a word should perform the same office in one language that it does in another. Now, there are three Greek words translated into our language by the one word world. These words have distinct and separate meanings in the original, and can not be made to mean the same thing by being translated into another tongue. These words are: Aion, kosmos, and oikoumenee. The first means an age; the second the present order of things, the world proper; while the third means the inhabited earth. To translate, therefore, these words by the one word world, violence is done to the original text, and the common reader is led into the dark. The end of the world always means the end of an age or dispensation, but never the annihilation of the globe or the burning up of the earth itself. If the translators had made a proper discrimination, much confusion would have been avoided; but as it is, the reader is left just where he was before. There is one other word which has been left as it was, but which does great violence to the doctrines of the New Testament, and that is the phrase:

THE GODHEAD.

The reader has been led to infer that this was among the most approved and clearly stated ideas of the original Scriptures. Nothing can be more unfair. The word godhead is not good English. It means nothing in itself and does not convey any idea to the reader. What is a godhead? The idea in the original is simple and beautiful. We will note the three texts wherein it occurs. Acts 17: "Being, therefore, already offspring of God, we ought not to be supposing that which is Divine to be like unto gold, or silver, or stone," etc. (Rotherham). Rom. i. 20: "For his unseen things, from a world's creation are to be clearly seen by the things made being perceived, both his eternal power and divinity." (Rotherham.) Col. ii. 9: "For in him (Christ) dwelleth all the completeness of the Divine nature in a body." The word godhead, like the word trinity, carries with it the idea of a society, which is not the idea of the original. Had the word been left out of the revised Testament it would have removed another impression from the "three-in-one-God" theory. Modern criticism has forced certain interpretations from the sacred text, and it will not be long before doctrinal harmony and Biblical exegesis will expunge from the creeds of men the theories of endless misery, the destruction of our globe, and the heathen dogma of the society in God, or the trinity. No effort on the part of authorized versions will succeed in bolstering up theories which are contrary alike to sound reason and the Scriptures of truth.

Nothing especially new has been brought out by the revised edition; no new doctrine has been made plainer, nothing in the way of textual criticism has been added to our fund of knowledge. The new version may awaken a new interest in some minds, and thereby do good. Aside from certain technical phrases, all of the English translations set forth the same great truths taught by Christ and his apostles. There is no controversy about the duties of everyday life. The beautiful lessons of morality and the law of love and forgiveness are the same in all the translations. Men are not divided into bickering parties upon the great problems of goodness toward each other, and of confiding loyalty to our Father. On all these practical truths there is union and brotherhood. The creeds of men need revision. Councils and synods must modify their decrees, and men and women must revise their lives and make them conform to the sweet spirit of Christ. Then we shall have a revision of living epistles, read and known of all men.

Communications.

THE NEW REVISION OF THE TESTAMENT.

NUMBER TWO.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

Editor Restitution:

Since my last paper we have received a further instalment of the New Revision, embracing the first four books of the New Testament. These, with the preface accompanying, throw much light on the features of the work.

The revisers are careful to say that their task "was revision, not retranslation," and they were constrained by the rules which transmitted them "to introduce as few alterations as possible consistent with faithfulness."

These restrictions undoubtedly detract from the value of their work. No revision is entirely reliable which is not free as well as faithful.

If there had even been a free revision which was also faithful to the original text the vexed controversy as to the meaning of the initial christianizing ordinance of the church of God would have received its quietus by rendering baptizo—dip, immerse, submerge—its only true and real meaning—instead of merely transferring, by new coinage, a Greek word into the otherwise English version.

But this act of bold honesty was, perhaps, too much to expect from men who—most of them—would have found their "occupation gone" had the truth been allowed to appear.

That there are merits and advantages in the revision cannot be denied, and that the faults and defects that we discern are chiefly those of omission, is also true.

We note some of the changes:

From the Lord's prayer, Mat. vi. 13, they omit the words "For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever, amen;" and for "deliver us from evil," they say "deliver us from the evil."

They omit as not the words of Christ Mark xxiii. 14, "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widow's houses, and for a pretense make long prayers; therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation."

They omit as not having been said by Christ Mark ix. 44–48, "Where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched. And if thy foot offend thee cut it off; it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched, Where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched."

They omit as unauthentic the statement, John v. 3, 4, "For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool and troubled the water; whosoever now first after the troubling of the water stepped in was made whole of whatsoever disease he had."

They omit as unscriptural the passage, Acts viii. 5, "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word."

They omit as not scriptural Acts xxiv. 9, "Let us not fight against God." For "Jesus who was made a little lower than the angels," they say "Him who was made for some little time lower than the angels."

For "verily he took not on him the nature of angels," they say "Verily he helps not angels."

For "without controversy great is the mystery of godliness," they say "Without controversy the pillar and ground of the truth is the great mystery of godliness who was manifested in the flesh," etc.

For "grace be with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity," they say "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in uncorruptness."

For "patience (worketh) experience and experience hope," they say "Patience (worketh) probation and probation hope."

For "wisdom is justified of her children," they say "Wisdom is justified by her works."

For "blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake," they say "Blessed were they which were persecuted for righteousness' sake."

For "there is none good but one, that is God," they say "One there is who is good."

For "what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul," they say "What doth it profit a man to gain the whole world and forfeit his life, for what can be an equivalent for his life?"

For "This is my beloved son, hear him," they say "this is my son, my chosen."

For "Hell" they generally say "Hades."

For "what went ye out for to see? a prophet," etc., they read "Wherefore went ye out? To see a prophet? Yea, I say unto you," etc.

For "Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel," they read "Which strain out a gnat," etc.

The following are objectionable renderings in the common version which they retain, the retention of which might seem to argue negligence and inattention:

John v. 31. "If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true," in stead of putting it interrogatively, as the Diaglott, following Boothroyd, Doddridge, Alexander Campbell, and others has done, thus "Though I testify concerning myself, is not my testimony true?"

The same criticism is applicable to verse 37, same chapter, where the speaker is made by improper punctuation to utter an untruth.

Following the common version, which is here very faulty, they read "Ye have neither heard his voice at any time nor seen his form." The context shows that the allusion and citation of proof is to Jesus' baptism by John, Mat. iii, 16, 17, when the voice of God was heard publicly and the form of the Spirit "descending like a dove" was visibly apparent to all the people. All this appears and is harmonious and consistent if rendered interrogatively thus—"And the Father who sent me has testified concerning me. Have you not heard his voice at any time? Have you not seen his form?" (manifestation) at my baptism by John.

Other instances will readily be discovered by an attentive reader on a comparison of the two versions.

I hope our learned, intelligent, and accurate brother B. Wilson—author of the invaluable Emphatic Diaglott—will, from his larger studies and familiar knowledge of the true sources of authority on this question, give to the brotherhood and the public the benefit of his critical judgment through THE RESTITUTION, on the work and labors of these revisers, who merit the grateful thanks of all lovers of the Bible for their labor of love.

LOST MANUSCRIPT.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

About three weeks ago I wrote a reply to a reviewer's criticisms on my article on "Salvation by Faith and Works Combined," and mailed it at Ripley, Ill. The article not having appeared in THE RESTITUTION I wrote the editor in reference to it. He replies through the paper that it has not been received. The best confutation of the perversions and misrepresentations would be the republication of the original article. Very careless indeed must have been the reading of my article to have made such palpable mistakes, both in reference to what I said, and the legitimate conclusions deduced therefrom. Nothing is ever made by misrepresentation or perversion.

If the affirmation that faith and works combined, and the texts and arguments adduced to sustain them is a "phantom of the brain," or is "beating the air," then nearly all our brethren are in the same dilemma. Nay more—the critic is obnoxious to the same charges. He affirms that I have "stated no existing issue." Then he and I must be in perfect accord. If so, why find so much fault with almost everything I said, and every point I attempted to make?

The most cursory reader of my article cannot fail to see that from first to last all my quotations and arguments had just one object in view, viz., to prove that neither faith or works alone will save a man, but that both combined will save him.

The charge that I am on "both sides," or that I teach salvation by works alone, is too absurd, and such a perversion of a single word I uttered, or argument I adduced that it is not worthy a passing notice. Shall it be affirmed that because I said that by the same experts testimony adduced to prove salvation by faith alone I could prove salvation by works alone—that therefore, I either argued or believe that either faith or works alone will save a man?

My arguments are either worthy a fair and candid review or they are not worthy attention at all.

Why will he neither affirm or deny that faith alone will save a man?

I have boldly denied that faith alone will save a man, and given my reasons for thus believing. But he seems to dodge this issue. The charge that because faith and works are coupled together by the copulative conjunction that therefore they are equal conditions of salvation is not true. I affirm as a fact that they are coupled together by the copulative conjunction, and then affirmed upon my own responsibility my faith that they are equal conditions of salvation, not because they are thus coupled together, nor as defining the office of the copulative conjunction, but because they are both commandments of Christ. I know no difference in the commandments of Christ. They all rest upon the same authority. I will leave my reviewer to argue inequality among the commandments of Christ.

To be baptized is as positive a commandment as to repent or believe the gospel. He seems to have no other object in view except to blur over and distort my arguments. All the two cars were designed to represent was the co-operation of faith and works in the salvation of man. It is very natural for men to try to rule out witnesses whose testimony is against them.

I object for one to ruling out inspired testimony and substituting uninspired. I have just as much right to object to Paul as he has to object to James. The position that James was only referring to Abraham's works in offering up Isaac about forty years after he had been justified by faith, is not sustained by the evidence. All James says about faith and works down to the conclusion that "as the body without the breath is dead so faith without works is dead," was addressed to brethren living contemporaneously with himself and designed for all professed Christians as long as his general epistle should be read.

Let every reader turn to the second chapter of James and read for himself. With these remarks I submit the article under consideration which will speak for itself.

OBITUARY.

DIED—May 21, 1881, Sister Maria Gans, wife of Brother David Gans, of Lanark, Ill., aged 55 years, 2 months and 4 days.

Sister Gans was born in Canada, came to the United States when about twelve years of age. She was a member of the German Baptist Church for a number of years, and about twenty-one years ago embraced the One Faith. Since then she has lived and rejoiced in the one faith and hope, and died in full expectation of the life to come with the Master when he comes to establish his kingdom.

Sister Gans had been for about one year suffering from what was supposed to be dropsy; had the fluid removed twice, and after counseling with Dr. G. A. Hall of Chicago, under advisement of Dr. Wales of Lanark, was convinced that she had tumor. Being fully apprised that her life could not last long without a removal of the tumor, on May 13, in company with her husband went to Chicago, and on the 16th, she had the tumor of 48 pounds weight removed.

All indications and symptoms were favorable until the 20th, when reverse set in, and on the evening of the 21st under exhaustion she fell asleep in Jesus, to awaken again with the redeemed when the Master comes.

She was returned home by brother Gans and daughter Monday afternoon, 23d, for burial, and the many people who congregated at the house to see, and to hear the funeral discourse was conclusive evidence of her having had many friends.

The funeral services were conducted by Dr. S. J. Jacobs and O. M. Myers appropriate to the occasion.

She ever was ready to assist in the care of the suffering around her; was an earnest worker in the cause of the Master, a strong advocate and worker in moral reforms, and with patience ever bore her burdens, pain and sickness.

The cross has been borne the battles have been fought, the waitings, the weepings, the burials are o'er. She now retires to rest till Jesus comes to give the happy meetings, to give the crown, to give the victory, and the rejoicings.

O. M. MYERS.

DIED—Of typhoid-pneumonia, at his residence near Bracken, Huntington Co., Ind., on Wednesday, May 4, 1881, Joseph Lewis, aged 55 years and 11 months.

Brother Lewis was born in Rush Co., Ind., where he grew to manhood and was married; from there he removed to the county in which he died.

In the years 1824–5 he heard the gospel of the kingdom, the personal premillenial coming of the Lord, and eternal life through Jesus the Christ by a resurrection from the dead—and embracing the good news held it in all good conscience till the day of his death.

Brother Lewis was a kind and loving husband and father and an esteemed citizen. He left a wife and three children to mourn his death, but not without hope. Funeral discourse by J. S. Hatch.

J. L. WINCE.

Youths' Column.

Perseverance.

One step and then another,
And the longest walk is ended;
One stitch, and then another,
And the largest rent is mended;
One brick upon another,
And the highest wall is made;
One flake upon another,
And the deepest snow is laid.

So the little coral workers,
By their slow and constant motion,
Have built those pretty islands
In the distant, dark blue ocean.
And the noblest undertakings
Man's wisdom hath conceived,
By oft-repeated effort
Have been patiently achieved.

Then do not look dismayed
On the work you have to do,
And say that such a mighty task
You never can get through;
But just endeavor day by day
Another point to gain,
And soon the mountain which you feared
Will prove to be a plain.

"Rome was not built up in a day."
The ancient proverb teaches:
And Nature, by her trees and flowers,
The same sweet sermon preaches.
Think not of far-off duties,
But of duties which are near,
And having once begun the work,
Resolve to persevere.

Real Politeness.

You can do no better thing for yourself than to cultivate a kindly interest in all with whom you come in contact. It strengthens and enlarges your own heart, extends your influence, and gives you the great privilege of being the messenger of good to the needy—and we are all needy of kindness and love—and that which you give comes back to you often many times multiplied.

You can leave no better heritage to your children than that of polite, agreeable manners. I do not mean by this the outward show without the corresponding inward kindliness; but the genuine article, born and living in the soul, and which is acted out in the life.

Real politeness is a passport to the best society. It is not wealth and influence, but it leads on to wealth and influence. It is the key that unlocks many a door to honor, promotion, and prosperity. Seek it for yourself. Teach it to your children.

Bury Me in the Garden.

E. BURRITT.

There was sorrow there, and tears in every eye; and there were low half-suppressed sobbings heard from every corner of the room—but the little sufferer was still; it was just on the verge of departure.

The mother was bending over it in all the speechless yearning of parental love, with one arm under its pillow, and with the other unconsciously drawing the little dying girl closer and closer to her bosom.

Poor thing! in the bright and dew morning it had followed out behind its father into the field; and, while he was there engaged in his labor, it had patted around among the meadow flowers and had stuck its bosom full, and in all its burnished tresses, with carmine and lily tinted things, and returning tired to its father's side, he had lifted it on the loaded cart; but a stone in the road had shaken it from its seat, and the ponderous, iron trimmed wheels had ground it down into the very cart-path—and the little crushed creature was dying.

We had all gathered up closely to its bedside, and were hanging over the young, bruised one; to see if it yet breathed, when a slight movement came over its lips, and its eyes partly opened. There was no voice, but there was something beneath its eyelids, which a Mother could alone interpret. Its lips trembled again, and we all held our breath—its eyes opened a little farther, and then we heard it whisper "Mother! mother! don't let them carry me away down to the dark, cold grave-yard, but bury me in the garden—in the garden, mother."

A little sister, whose eyes were raining down with the meltings of her heart, had crept up to the bedside, and taking up the hand of the dying girl, sobbed aloud in its ears: "Julia! Julia! can't you speak to Antoinette?"

The last fluttering pulsation of expiring nature struggled hard to enable her to utter one more wish and word of affection; its last breath was on its lips as it whispered again: "Bury me in the garden, mother — bury me in the"——and a quivering came over its limbs—one feeble struggle, and all was still.

Christian Standard.

Little Things.

Once in my childhood I was visiting a neighbor's, and while I was there the mother was cutting and fitting those old-fashioned sun-bonnets, with the paste-board next to the face, and the calico sewed and turned over the edge, something like we sometimes do the facing of a dress round the skirt; and always did before braid was used. I never shall forget those bonnets! they were my abomination. And when they were tried on me they made my flesh creep and the shivers run over me. They have improved decidedly in the style of sun bonnets in these latter days. But to my story. Some scraps were lying on the floor, and supposing they were destined for the large, open fire, I picked up some I thought large enough to make little boxes; as we lived in the country we did not get them as often as you little ones who live in town, and my sister and I were very fond of making them for our play-house. Home I went, thinking all was right.

Directly my mother noticed them, she said. "My child, where did you get those pieces of pasteboard?"

I replied. "I picked them up from the floor at Mrs. G.'s."

"Did you ask for them?"

"No ma'am, I did not think they were worth asking for."

"Well, my daughter, put on your bonnet, and go directly back to Mrs. G., and tell her where you found them."

Never, never, can I forget the mortified feeling I had, as it seemed to imply that I had stolen them, but I instantly obeyed, though it was a very painful task. When I reached Mrs. G.'s (they lived about a quarter of a mile from us) and told her, she laughed and said they were not worth asking for, and I was surely welcome, and she was glad if I could make any use of them. Now the burden was gone from me, and I went home with a happy heart.

But some may think my mother too particular about little things, but I can not tell you how often I thank her, as life is bearing me on, for her watchful care, and particularly about little things. Life is made up mainly of them, and if wrong, to what fearful proportions do they grow! "The little foxes spoil the vines." Beware, dear children, of the tiniest wrong-doing—the beginnings—and there will never be a bad, sad ending of great and shocking evil. Pray to God for a new heart, a spirit of heavenly wisdom. Prayer and watchfulness will be your best safeguard against those "little" but happiness-blighting, soul-destroying foxes!

New York Observer.

Birds of the Bible—The Owl.

GEORGIANA KLINGLE.

God has so created the world that even the desert has its living forms to give interest to its dead sands; the frozen zone its creatures, who exist among its mountains and seas of ice; the night has its creatures, rejoicing in the darkness. The bird most associated in our minds with night is the owl, which, though unable to see well in utter darkness, finds its chief pleasure in moonlight or in the dusky early evening. Occasionally an owl belated in its thievish expeditions, is caught by the light of day, and is unable to find its way home; then it becomes an object of ridicule for the whole neighborhood, and the birds, both great and small, hasten to annoy it, all of which it bears with stoical indifference, while its head turns absurdly from side to side and his eyes roll vacantly, but with no sign of any annoyance, until darkness approaches; then suddenly the nearest of the unluckly offenders pays for its frolic with its life. Doleful associations hang about the owl, founded on old-time superstitions, and many a heart, even at this day, trembles with fear when the innocent owl, enjoying the night, happens to hoot in the neighborhood. Its cry is anything but enlivening, and it can scarcely be wondered at that the ignorant should be alarmed at what appears to our ears such mournful cries.

The Bible frequently refers to this distressing habit of the owl. Micah, grieving over the idolatry of Israel, says: "I will make a wailing like the dragons, and mourning like as the owls." Jeremiah and Isaiah, in predicting the desolations to come upon Chaldea, Babylon and Idumea, predicted also that owls should inhabit their ruins: "The screech-owl also shall rest there: there shall the great owl make its nest." The Psalmist, in speaking of his afflictions, says: "I am like a pelican in the wilderness; I am like an owl of the desert." The fondness of these birds for ruinous places is familiar to all travelers in the East, and one may imagine that they delight in the desolation beneath them, as they sit upon some broken shaft, making the night hideous with their voices, or else, entering into the spirit of ruin, they are mourning for the dead past.

There are many varieties of owls, but the most familiar are the horned owl—so named because of its odd feathered formation, resembling horns, on the top of its head—and the screech-owl, with whose notes all dwellers in rural districts are familiar. All the species bear a close resemblance to each other, being thick-set in body, with a round, thickly-feathered head, a hooked bill, and a face at once droll and philosophic, calm and impenetrable. They voraciously swallow the animals they feed upon, whole, and after the flesh is digested, eject the bones and feathers or hair through the mouth. They are treacherous and thievish, so that both by their manner of living and their diet—which consists principally of rabbits, rats and mice,—they are deservedly pronounced unclean. In classifying the birds as clean and unclean, we may see the regard in which God holds the pure and holy; being pure and undefiled, he looks upon evil with loathing. Let us then purify our hearts by God's Spirit, that we may stand before him pure indeed.

Selections.

The Rainbow.

HERE AND HEREAFTER.

WILLIAM LEASK, D. D.

For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.—1 Cor. xiii. 12.

The first thing I have to do at present is to correct a prevalent misapprehension. This verse is popularly understood to mean: "Here (on earth) we see through a glass darkly, but there (in heaven) face to face." Now the apostle did not say that, and did not mean that. Nothing of the kind is found in his writings. Pauline theology is invaluable to us, and we accept it as Divine.

There is no hint here about a change of locality; it is a question of time; it is a question of advancing, of growth, of intellectual and moral development; but it is not a question of change of place.

Paul did not teach that the moment a man dies, with all his imperfections, in his unfinished condition, he becomes perfect and complete in some other world; you will not find anything of that kind in God's Book. Look at the illustrative analogy: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things."

It was the same Paul in the same world; it was a matter of years, of growing experience, of holy culture; but it was the same man. And he adds: "For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." Go back, if you please, to verses 9, 10: "For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come,"—we are not going to it observe—"then that which is in part shall be done away."

And what is he speaking about? Divine charity, love; love is his text, and he talks about it in this way: "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing."

And what does he mean by charity? Love. Then he describes charity; and mark this: "Whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."

Prophecies shall cease when they are all fulfilled; and by prophecy I do not mean the scientific or theological prophecy we have now, for that is all imperfect.

"For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known."

This text is of wide-embracing, far-reaching extent, and I hardly know how to bring the subject before you in the most compact and suggestive manner. I wish you to think of two or three things connected with this great matter. And first I would remind you that God's processes, in both the material and moral worlds, are very slow. If we believe the geologists, his processes in the creation of the world were wonderfully slow. I am not here however, either to vindicate or to oppose geological science; it is a science in which I take great pleasure, although, like everything else, our knowledge of it is partial, and geologists, like all scientific men, differ among themselves, as also do theologians—a proof that we only know in part. We gather our proofs, in fact, from the very thing which at first filled us with surprise and consternation.

God took a long time to fit the earth for the habitation of man, and it is a fact that the world is not finished yet, that the creative and changing processes are going on even now in the mighty ocean and throughout many parts of the earth. You speak often about the changes of the seasons. You tell us your old-fashioned summers and winters are gone. What does it mean? It means, if you will seriously think of it, that the creation is not completed, and will not be completed until the glorious words issue from the throne of Omnipotence: "Behold, I make all things new."

The tabernacle of witness in the wilderness was but a type, a pilgrim, foreshadowing a resting-place—the temple. But the temple was made by hands, and served only for a time. The heathen razed it to its foundations; a second was built, and it, too, fell. We look for a city which hath foundations whose Builder and Maker is God. We look for perfection. Now we live in an imperfect world, suitable enough for an imperfect race; an exposed house, rocked with storms and earthquakes; suitable enough for an imperfect tenant, ignorant, defiled, and feeble; an earth passing away to give place to a new one; mortal man passing away to give place to an immortal. Now change, then calmness, quietness, and lasting peace; now wars and wild tumults, then the battle-field is unknown, the sword and spear are things forgotten, the Prince of Peace reigns—reigns here, mark that! We have not the least hint of change of locality. And I tell you faithfully, brethren, that, if we are not Christians now, whatever a baseless "Universalism" may say, there is not a Heaven in the universe that can make us better. God is forming character here, and upon character exclusively depends what men will be hereafter.

Secondly, we come to man, the occupant of this wonderful world. What is he now? It is not wise to affect a mock humility. Undoubtedly we are imperfect beings. We have headaches and heartaches, pains and disappointments and vexations, burdens and troubles of many kinds.

What does it all mean? Why, these things actually determine our present condition. We are not yet perfect, and everything around us partakes of the character that belongs to us mentally and morally.

I say it is no use to affect humility; the best plan is at once to admit that morally, intellectually, physically, we are not perfect in any true sense. At the same time do not forget the counsel I have often given you; whilst you do not pretend to a humility of which you are not conscious, do not forget that by God's grace you are what you are.

Do not go to the throne of grace, you who love Jesus Christ, telling him that you are wretched sinners. This is poor praise to him for saving you; but go to the throne of grace with profound thankfulness, glorying in your Savior. And then, what about your prayers? Whilst adoring God for redeeming love, let us ask grace to reach forward to higher heights in the Christian life, for we have yet much to learn.

It is a very remarkable fact that Christians often seem to forget the very condition of their existence as Christians; namely, faith.

What is faith? Faith implies imperfection. It means that we are trusting in Christ that he will complete the work he began in us. Faith! Watch that little child taking its mother's hand, or grasping its mother's dress; that is faith. The child is conscious that its mother loves it, and that the mother's love is strong to protect. So I trust in my Father, God; and that trust means that I am weak, and that he is strong, and has things to give me which he will give me as I am capable of receiving them. The loving Lord lets me take hold of his hand or the hem of his garment, and I am upheld by his strength. We believe, the interpretation of which is, that we have not yet reached manhood, but are growing up in Christ.

And then, all this time, now, we are at school. Little boys do not like school. Of course not. Who ever yet liked the thing that was best for him in this world? Without Divine education we do not choose that which is good for us. It is distressing to be plunged in grief; it is saddening to have to wipe tears from one's eyes. But, brethren, it may be that that grief is gladness in the making, and that those tears by-and-by will crystallize into gems and sparkle upon your foreheads in the new age.

Now that these things are taking place we are at school learning to read, and the first lesson that the Christian learns consists of just four letters, AB—BA, Abba; but, having learnt that lesson and having power to utter the word, and to have the feeling that the word implies, then you place yourself in God's school, and say you are prepared to go through with your tasks and bear your burdens, his Christ, your Savior, helping you.

Now we get the discipline, the invaluable spiritual teaching. Man cannot become what God intends him to be without personal experience. My experience may help you a little, but only your own experience can bring the lesson home to you effectually. So many of those things which are of course annoying, vexatious, and painful, become through their teaching invaluable parts of that moral discipline which will by-and-by culminate in the "then," the day which is coming.

"Now" we are in the same world with the devil and his angels; the great adversary of God and man, the prince of the powers of the air, the god of this world is our watchful foe. People talk foolishly about the devil being "in hell." He will by-and-by be imprisoned for a time; but now he is dangerously near us.

Look at Christ in the wilderness; what does it mean? It means that he was going through every kind of temptation to which we are liable, and it means that we, too, are in the wilderness now, being tempted. But through grace we are furnished with weapons, with armor, with defence against his wiles. God knows his subtlety, and has given us the coat of mail in which we are to resist the adversary, helmet, breastplate and shield.

We have all that "now." It is a characteristic of this dispensation of mingled light and darkness, joy and sorrow, smiles and tears.

But what is the meaning of school? Surely it is not intended that the boy and the man are to continue at school always. Surely school means something which is temporary. The doors of the school will close when the boy has gone through his primary education; for there is no such thing as being thoroughly educated. What a boy acquires at school he employs in business in manhood. So of the school of God. It is preparatory to something which is coming when all will be known. "Now we see through a glass, darkly: but then face to face."

Let me now proceed for a short time to show you the other side of this question, and then my object will be gained.

Brethren, if you and I determine to bear our burden like brave Christian men and to accept our discipline like loving children; if we make up our minds resolutely to accept the "now" with all its groans and pains and mysteries, we shall not be disappointed in our hope of the "then."

What is the peculiar glory "then?" Face to face! I shall see TRUTH as it is! Why, brethren, that is worth worlds! Truth as it is; not through colored glass, not by guess work, but as it is! Oh! to see things as God sees them! We cannot "now;" we shall "then."

And the Scripture proceeds upon the principle that when we see things as God sees them we shall glorify him for all that we have seen of storm and tempest in times long gone past; we will not have to guess at truth, to translate and compare, but we shall get the benefit when "then" comes of the great lessons we are learning "now." If any of you, my hearers, are strangers to God in Christ, and if you were transported to the "then" this moment, that is, if Christ should come to-day, you would miss the glory of Christian manhood, because you have not been trained in the school of faith, with all its valuable lessons and culture and discipline. If you are to stand then face to face with Christ without shame, as the apostle John sublimely puts it, you must now be in fellowship with him by faith; you must often speak to him now, and take your burden to him now.

Never was there a greater delusion than the mournful popular one: "If we get to heaven we shall be all right." It is false! It is the fraud of the adversary, one of the wiles of the devil. You would be all wrong if not Christ's, and would long to get out of that holy place if it were possible for you to ascend there. Heaven would be a consuming fire to the man who had not been in the purifying furnace before. We should value the discipline of the now because of its glorious connection with the then. "Then shall I know even as also I am known." Wonderful declaration!

Our Lord reveals the grand issue thus: "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

Spotless, brilliant, Christ-like. Redeemed men, at last in the spotless image of their glorious Redeemer! Now death, then life; now our props are stricken down from us, our earthly hopes are blasted; then we shall say what the Queen of Sheba said to Solomon, the type of the Prince of Peace: "It is a true report that I heard in mine own land . . . but the half was not told me." "We will see him as he is." We shall be like him, is all the apostle can say. That is all! But O! such an all! Heaven's language fails, for earth's ear is dull.

Now, once more, brethren, let me remind you that there is an inseparable connection in God's purpose between the now and the then. I have touched on that in passing, but I must dwell upon it a few moments.

My meaning is just this. Now by faith in Christ our Redeemer we get rid of the bondage and corruption of sin, but its effects are with us still. Now we are afflicted and chastened and are being sanctified; but the purest amongst us, who lives in constant communion with the Son of God, has his spots and stains. Now we are safe, as safe as we ever can be; but we are not yet out of the battle-field. We are exposed to the fiery darts of our adversaries, who accuse us before our God day and night.

There is, as the apostle tells us, sorrow, tribulation, death, everything against us: but they are not able to kill us, for Christ is our life. The storm is raging outside, but we are in the Divine asylum; the dangers are near us, but the Omnipotent Hand has hold of us.

Now God means this connection between the imperfect and the perfect to give us important instruction. Let us look. I see a multitude in brilliant robes with symbols of victory, a very splendid company. Who are they? Their dress is glorious as sunbeams; their songs of victory ring through the heavens; the beauty of their countenances is like morning light. Who are they?

"These are they which came out of great tribulation." Then are we to infer that that tribulation was a wondrous blessing to them? We are.

What is that brought out of a terribly heated furnace? Gold. Why? To impress upon it the badge of the Queen, and then it becomes current coin of the realm, legal, valuable. Brethren, think it not strange that gold purified in the furnace should be improved by the process. God's vessels in the Temple of Solomon were all of gold, beaten gold; mark that! The lamps and the lampstands were all one piece of beaten gold. Gold is the resurrection metal. God's children then, when they shine forth, will be the beaten gold of his everlasting treasury, one forever with the Son of his love.

So, if we would have the hereafter with all its unspeakable joys, we must accept the here, with all its tears and groans; for salvation by grace does not set aside holy discipline. You sometimes say you cannot be God's children because he deals so roughly with you. I will tell you a secret; you are rough yourselves; and it is because you are his children that he deals so with you. These things are trying to flesh and blood, but flesh and blood will not inherit the kingdom, but the man that had flesh and blood and derived eternal profit from the trial, he will be perfect then. He is a child now; he will be a man then. When that which is perfect is come then the partial will cease.

And, lastly, not only is there this inseparable connection between the present and the future in God's infinitely wise purpose, but he is working now toward the grand issue; and the grace which is given us now will culminate in the glory when Christ shall come. Do not forget that. It is the grand, glorious, blessed truth of Scripture that Christ shall come.

We are not going to him when we die; he is coming for us that we may live forever. He said so, and we believe him.

Dear friends, let us endure if we be in the furnace, it is a happy sign; we shall get out of it by-and-by vastly benefited. Why complain of this brief trial? What are threescore years and ten to eternity?

"The trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." Amen.

Scientific American.

MANUSCRIPTS ON WHICH THE BIBLE REVISION IS BASED.

In a sermon on the revision of the Bible, Rev. Dr. Rylance, of St. Mark's church, this city, made the following interesting statement respecting the existing early manuscripts of the New Testament. The learned doctor spoke also approvingly of the new version, remarking that the revision was necessary in order that the common people as well as the learned might understand exactly on what ground they stood. Hitherto it has been thought that every word of the English version of the Bible was inspired; this belief is passing away as the people become educated and know that no work of a translator can be absolutely perfect. The autographs of the apostles have long since faded and disappeared. All we have to depend upon for our translations are copies, easiest versions, translations, and the quotations made by the fathers of the church. The manuscripts of the New Testament are of two kinds—the uncial, the oldest class of manuscripts, written in capitals and without punctuation, and the "cursive" manuscripts, so called from their being written in a running hand that began to be used in the tenth century. Those of the old class were written between the fourth and tenth centuries, the others after the tenth century.

Of the old there are 130 in existence; of the new about 1,500. The very old and very valuable manuscripts are only five. Of those the Alexandrian Codex was originally discovered at Alexandria, and was sent to King Charles I., in 1628. It is now in the British Museum. Nothing is known of the origin of this, but it is usually assigned to the middle of the fifth century. It is much mutilated, twenty-four chapters of the first gospel, two of the fourth, and eight of one of the epistles being missing. The next is the Vatican manuscript, supposed to have been written in the fourth century. A copy of this was never made till 1808, when a fac simile was issued. The condition of this is much more perfect. The third manuscript is that in the National Library at Paris, whither it was brought by Catharine de' Medici. This had been overwritten—that is, the parchment had been used for other writings; but, spite of that, the original has been deciphered. It is assigned to the early part of the fifth century. The fourth manuscript is that now at Cambridge. This is the least valuable, as it is much mutilated. It belongs to the sixth century. The manuscript found in 1844 in the Convent of St. Catharine on Mount Sinai by Tischendorf, and copied by him in 1859, is the most valuable of the five, as it contains the New Testament complete. This is supposed to have been written in the fourth century. None of these most valuable authorities were consulted in any of the English versions of the Bible, even in making that of King James' time. The Latin Vulgate, the plentiful cursive manuscripts, and the translations were used. Errors like the Doxology at the end of the Lord's Prayer had crept into the translations, even into the Syrian, which was as old as the second century. The Latin Vulgate was probably an excellent translation, as it must have been made within a few years of the death of St. John. The changes that have just been made have only been made when the weight of authority left no doubt of their necessity. The text is not a question of taste, of like and dislike, but of historic testimony. I expect to see the corrected version win its way into the confidence and the respect of the English speaking people.

NOTICE.

Some preaching brother must visit Yankton, Dacotah. Who will go and who will bear the expense of the visit? Mrs. Julia Yose is there alone. She has lately embraced the truths of the gospel, and desires baptism. Everything they had was swept away, so she can make no return for the visit; but it is the Lord's work, and he will richly reward.

Address Julia C. Yose, Green Island, Nebraska.

Sister Lewis is left in destitute circumstances, and her children are unable to render her any material aid; on this account she asks the church to contribute something to meet her present necessities, and to help her pay two poor girls who served in the family during the sickness of her husband. Money donated to this end will be gratefully received.

Address Harriett Lewis, or W. T. Guffin, Bracken, Huntington County, Ind.

J. L. WINCH.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

My address until further notice will be 886 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Pictorial Description
—OF THE—
Tabernacle in the Wilderness,
ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES,
—BY JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,
—OR—
STAR PROPHECIES
Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1889.

—BY M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 76 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Poetry.

EIGHTY YEARS.

MRS. M. O. PAUL.

[WRITTEN ON THE OCCASION OF THE DEATH OF FREDERICK WINANS.]

A dear old patriarch, rich in sacred lore,
And priestly in the path he pressed,
Who rang these precepts o'er and o'er,
Is gathered to his rest.

Gone! like a shock of fully-ripened corn,
That bends beneath its weight of gold,
That only waited for the Reaper's hand
To garner in its wealth untold.

Gone! like a marshal fallen on the field,
Who led strong veterans on
With clarion notes, that never yield
Till the victory is won.

Gone! as a great ship finds its portal,
After the toss, and surge, and strain,
This voyager finds a quiet haven.
Its trouches land again.

Gone! as a grand, triumphant song,
That, rising full of strength and prayer,
Stops in its trumpet-tones so strong,
And dies on the evening air.

Gone! like a psalm that is sweetly ended,
At the close of a long refrain,
When the tremulous tones are softly blended
In a plaintive minor strain.

Gone! like the close of a sweet old story,
That has held us entranced by the way.
Gone! like the flame of crimson glory
That lights the departing day.

How wisely did he gather Heaven's treasure up,
And fill the human chalice to the brim!
Then round and round he sent the sacred cup—
How many drank the heavenly wine with him!

He passed the common things of life as folly's show,
As theirs, mocking every form of bliss;
He lifted up his heart from things below,
For he had found a country better far than this.

His faithful eye could pierce beyond this little life,
His steadfast mind could grasp the things unseen;
How trifling seemed this "little while" of strife
To living pastures ever fresh and green!

Fall, wondrous mantle, O'er sons kindly form,
That like — yet life's path to tread,
That he still may live tho' we e'er may mourn
For the dear departed dead.

Austin, Ill., May 2, 1881.

Communications.

THE ONLY TRUE GOSPEL.

W. I. CROCKETT.

Nearly nineteen hundred years ago, there appeared upon the earth One of whom the prophets and bards of Israel had sung in immortal strains. From Nazareth he passed into the arena of life "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief;" yet bearing to the world a message of joy. He was the preacher of righteousness, the herald of the "Glad Tidings" of that Divine kingdom spoken of by Daniel, that shall break in pieces all earthly kingdoms and itself stand forever.

Christ himself bore witness that he was sent into the world to preach the "kingdom of God." To preach of a kingdom that while as he testified before Pilate, was not of the kosmos or world then existing; yet nevertheless was destined to occupy the land of promise, the scene of his sufferings, and triumphant resurrection, and from thence to spread over the whole earth, until the knowledge of the Lord should cover the land, as the waters cover the deep.

The same message that Christ sealed with his blood, he commanded his disciples to bear before the world; that whosoever would believe and obey its truths should have life eternal. 'Tis of this gospel that the apostle Paul speaks so forcibly in the first chapter of Galatians. As it is the proclaimer of life, whoever substitutes another gospel substitutes instead of life, death.

Not even an angel from around the throne of the Great God himself is exempt from the fearful penalty of preaching another gospel save that which Jesus and his followers preached. The Galatians had received this true and only gospel and they were warned by the apostle not to be led by any other.

But why should any one desire to pervert the way of life as clearly laid down in the Word of God? Why should there be proclaimers and followers of "another gospel?" 'Tis a phase of the perversity of human nature difficult to account for. Yet we witness its truths. We see men every day, who (though moral and religious in feeling) utterly ignore the teaching of Jesus—utterly disregard the voice of Paul, and follow that seductive system of error that proclaims immortality the possession of every one, no matter how frail intellectually or morally. This is directly contrary to the teaching of the "gospel of the kingdom" which promises:—

1. Eternal life by a resurrection from the dead. See 1 Cor. xv.; Phil. iii. 20, 21; John xi. 25.

2. Honor and glory in a kingdom of earthly locality, and heavenly constitution. Matt. viii. 11; Dan. vii. 27; Rev. v. 10.

The land upon which this kingdom will first be organized, is the land promised to Abraham.

He by faith received the promises, and through his faith as many as become of like faith will be blessed with him, by a glorious inheritance in the kingdom of God. This is plainly proven by the words of Paul in Gal. iii. 9–29.

It surely hath never entered into the mind of man to conceive the glory that God has reserved for those that love him. And all his unutterable blessings are secured to us upon the simple conditions of belief and obedience.

We are not called upon to embrace a system that abounds in infatuations against the wisdom and justice of God, as does the popular doctrine of eternal torment; we are not asked to embrace a doctrine self contradictory; but one that originated with the fall of man and will end with his redemption from sin and death. The glorious gospel that Jesus preached, that Paul preached, that we must preach if we hope to be accepted, is harmonious throughout. It does not teach a punishment or reward before judgment: it does not invalidate the solemn promise of God to Abraham in giving the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, by proclaiming another inheritance beyond the skies; but the author supports the literal promise in the plainest language throughout. Christ the seed to whom the promises were made, is to return to earth to establish his kingdom, as surely as he was once here. Said the angels to the sorrowing Galileans:—"Why stand ye gazing into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

And not only here, but in numerous other places in the Bible do we see the plain and unmistakable evidence of his return. This is the crowning beauty of the gospel: for at the coming of him who stilled the tempest, and commanded the attention of all men by wonderful miracles; at his coming, the gospel will have fulfilled its mission and have ushered in to man, glory, honor, and immortality.

He who says that Abraham and the faithful who have died, are now enjoying his wondrous weight of glory, are now realizing God's promises; he who says this, though he may speak with angelic utterance, and be able to write title after title around his name, and to concentrate to himself the admiration of the whole earth; such a one is not a preacher of the gospel, but a perverter of it, and under the curse of Paul the inspired servant of God. And not only reproved of him but accursed of God. The Bible forces me to write this. I dare not trifle with a matter of life and death. I dare not for the sake of a false "charity," tamper with the Divine truths of the Word of God, to make them fit the peculiar notions of men more prone to be guided by the thinkings of the flesh, than by the inspired page.

If a person tell me in direct contradiction to the Bible, that Christ is now reigning on David's throne; I am forced to the conclusion that such a person understands not the gospel. Is not Jerusalem yet the abode of the alien? Are not its courts profaned by the Gentiles? Are not its temple and walls in ruins? As long as this is its condition, all may be assured that Christ reigns not on David's throne.

When the breaches made by the profane hand of unbelievers in the walls of Jerusalem, are closed up, when the ruined, and waste, and desolate spots are inhabited and made to bloom in the freshness of the "restitution of all things;" then will David by a resurrection from the dead, behold with his own eyes the glory of his house; exalted above the hills, the diadem of the whole earth.

This is no fanciful theory, 'tis sober truth. The idea that the grand prophecies of Jerusalem's future, refer not to the literal city, but to a mythical city beyond the clouds, is both false and delusive.

Some may say:—"What difference does it make whether Jerusalem be in heaven or on earth, so we get there?" 'Tis a child's question. The Word of God has not left it for us to determine where the rest for his people will be; he has not said in all his Word that any way will do to take, so we reach that rest: far from it. "I am the resurrection and the life." "I am that bread from heaven,"—said Jesus. Think you that another way, another life will take the place of this? Will bread not from heaven, fill those who hunger for righteousness? Let every honest heart answer.

If left with us to choose the manner in which we will worship God, if left with us—be assured the Bible is useless. But is it so? Is the Bible given for naught? Are its soul-comforting truths, and sublime principles unnecessary for the salvation of the human race? Who will say it?

The Bible is the revelation from God to man. Of what? Of his will. Of his plan of salvation. Is it not so? Then if this be truth what folly to guinsay it. What folly to try to please God by another way than that he has defined. God is merciful, but he must be obeyed. God is just. His ways are not as our ways, but higher, millions of times higher, and brighter, and better. Who, then, has the right to dictate to this God? Have you or I? If God purposes to establish his kingdom on the earth, in the land promised to the fathers, if he purposes that through this kingdom alone will the gift of eternal life be granted—then does it not follow beyond all controversy, that whosoever is ignorant of this teaching must be in the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity? Are there many ways to life eternal? Are there many doors to the mansion of life? If so where does the Bible teach it?

What says the apostle?

"There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Eph. iv. 4, 5.

One hope! what is it?

The "Hope of Israel." This same apostle who wrote to the Ephesians, was bound for such a hope, and when accused before Agrippa, he confessed that "Israel's Hope" was the "hope of the promises made of God unto the fathers." Would you know what those promises are? Read carefully God's dealing with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and David. They believed, nothing doubting, Jehovah's Word.

One faith! what is it? Paul writing to the Hebrews calls it "the substance of things hoped for the evidence of things unseen." What hope you for, since faith is the substance of hope? Immortality? "Israel's Hope" alone tells you how it may be obtained. It promises to all who obey and continue in well doing, eternal life. Not now! Not at death! But in that day of light when the powers of darkness will be scattered, and the chains of death be broken. Will you accept such faith, such hope?

The apostle also says:—"One baptism." Not a hundred different modes but simply, "one baptism." This must be understood for 'tis for the forgiveness of our sins.

I have heard persons speak of "modes of baptism." They know nothing about it. It is just as sensible to speak of modes of hope, or modes of faith.

You may say:—What is baptism? Is it not immersion? That depends entirely on the faith of the person immersed. Baptism is not simply immersion, nor is immersion always baptism. To immerse a person in water without regard to faith, and hope, is as little benefit as an ordinary ablution. In fact 'tis nothing else. Baptism is an act of obedience begotten by the faith of the gospel, in the observance of which, our sins are blotted out, and we rise from the water new creatures in the sight of God. But it is absolutely necessary that we be immersed, for it has been Divinely ordained to represent the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, to a crown of endless life.

These things Paul preached. These things the Galatians believed; but so depraved and weak is human nature, they needed continual exhortation to prevent them from turning from the glorious things of life to the husks of Pagan philosophy. Paul distinctly informs them that he is not made an apostle by man, but by God and our Lord Jesus Christ.

He seems to do this to call their attention to the fact that the only true gospel is of God, in contradistinction to the false and fleeting things they were in danger of being beguiled by. So jealous does he seem for the honor and glory of the gospel of Christ that he even ascends to the throne of God and pronounces a dreadful curse against any one of God's own messengers who might dare to proclaim another gospel. And if even angels dare not preach contrary to that which Paul preached, what shall we say of those who styling themselves "called and sent" of God—refuse to listen to his Word, ignore his commands, and dub all "presumptuous fanatics" who ask for a patient and impartial hearing wherever the "law and testimony" speak.

Pope has well described the pride and conceit of such in the line:—"Fools rush in where angels fear to tread."

There are many who seemingly care little whether they preach Christ's gospel, or man's. Educated in some particular dogma they think it their duty to "stick to it," saying:—"So my heart is right in God's sight I will be accepted, no matter whether I think the soul mortal or immortal, or whether Christ comes to earth again or not, or whether I am Pagan or Christian; at all events I will be saved and that is all I care for."

Oh what a specimen of the wisdom of this world which is foolishness with God. What a specimen of the "vanity of the "carnal mind" that is not subject to the law of God, neither, indeed can be.

If any man's heart is "right" in the sight of God, as the favorite phrase goes, that man has done what God commanded. That man has believed or is willing to believe and obey the truth at all hazzards. His heart is good and honest, and to such is the promise of endless life. But to say that a man can believe, what he in his miserable conceit may think best; to say that such a one be he a D. D. or the humblest that breathes ... at heart right in the sight of God; is certainly a most startling anomaly. Was I all right in the sight of God when he "breathed out threatenings and slaughter" against the followers of Christ? Does he not convict himself of blind zeal that profited nothing? Of what benefit is zeal to you, to me, to any one, apart from the knowledge of what God will have us to do? Talk of zeal! Who are more zealous than the poor wretches that sacrifice their lives to stocks and stones? What does it avail? Nothing, and why? Because they, like the Jews, going about to establish their own righteousness have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God.

What a sad truth! What a commentary on the weakness of the flesh.

"Man on his brother's heart has trod—
Man is man's mortal foe!
Man is antagonist to God—
This do I know."

And yet how strange that the way by which this terrible state of things may be removed, how strange that it above all others is so unpopular with man. True, the gospel does not appeal to the vanity of man; that may be one reason so many reject it. Its teaching abhors the pride of life, the lust of the flesh, and appeals to our noblest faculties. It promises those things that were created to gratify love, and faith, and hope. It was not preached to please man, to gratify his fleshly propensities but to save him. For this reason I say the gospel is unpopular, strange as the reason may appear. Read Gal. 1st and 10.

The vanity of the human mind is so great, that 'tis more pleasant to have vanity gratified, with the majority, than to be saved. Christ requires obedience, childlike faith, and crucifixion of worldly lusts.

A complete exchange of things temporal which are seen, for things eternal yet to be realized.

The Christian must wait for his good things until the appearing of his king. He cannot enjoy pleasures of worldly lusts now, and hope to enjoy the blessedness of eternity.

Yet he is by no means deprived of pleasure now, but not what the world calls pleasure, for his greatest enjoyment lies in the performance of his master's will. That system that permits the thinking of the flesh to run riot under the cover of "innocent pleasure," is the fruit of another gospel than Christ's. Those things that are pure, peaceable, and without hypocrisy, can only be begotten by the Word of Truth which is the way of salvation. Whence sprang Catholicism and its daughters but from perversion of the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ?" Even in the apostles' days this leaven of unrighteousness was at work and soon began to poison those, who having tasted of the "bread of life" turned away to the filthy and abominable theories and practices of minds unenlightened by one single ray of light from above.

If men wished something to please their carnal desires, these perverters could supply it. Immortality said the Pagans, must be in possession of every man, and this heathen dogma was seized upon by those reprobates to the cause of Christ, and made the chief feature in their new gospel: because, forsooth 'twas not so "repugnant" to the mind of man as lying in the grave till the resurrection as the apostles taught.

This spurious error has passed current so long, that it is thought foolish to call it in question. But he who would be approved of God must weigh all things by his Most Holy Word, and whatever is found wanting must be cast out, no matter if the philefest of our earthly treasures.

Whoever does not leave father or mother, or sister, or brother—for my sake and the gospel's, said Jesus—is not worthy of me.

Seek to please God first; such a course will please all who are of "good and honest hearts," and the displeasure of all others is as dross. It is not the Christian's vocation to please men, but God: and now as in the days of the apostles, if we please men, (using the word as Paul used it) we cannot be servants of Christ.

Oh that we could fully realize the importance of our duty to God not only in preaching the gospel, but in keeping inviolate its glorious precepts. Oh that men might through our light brethren, glorify our Father in heaven.

We have been exhorted to keep our garments pure and unspotted from the world, and to live soberly and righteously, to the end that we may be prepared to meet him who is our life.

If we while proclaiming "truth" practice error, what better is our condition than the alien? Does not the gospel teach us how to live, as well as define our faith and hope? Yea: and if a question arises as to the propriety of certain actions is not the Bible given us to answer it?

Paul in writing to the Thessalonians (2d chap.) says:—

"For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because when ye received the Word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe."

The word of the gospel of truth is certain to bring forth good fruit, if the soil upon which it falls is good. It becomes the monitor of life, and leads us aright. And with such a monitor, what a glorious life is ours. What a sublime future lies before us if we will only conquer. Let the world contend for the baubles of fame, we have other aspirations, other work to perform. The night is lowering, but above the angry clouds of God's wrath on the nations see you not the dawn? The morning cometh, the morning without clouds, when Jehovah shall cause Zion to awake and gird itself with light.

And when the great king shall reign upon his throne, when Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, shall sit down in the kingdom of God, what a scene will that be when the children of those who pervert the way of the Lord shall come and confess, "surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanities, and things wherein there is no profit."

But we are invited to come to the fountain and live, to enter into the path that leadeth beyond the vail of mortality to eternal life. No one can make the words plainer, or more urgent than they are written on the "inspired page."

"The Spirit and the bride say, come. And let him that heareth say, come. And let him that is athirst, come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Church of God, will commence on Friday, June 17, in the grove near John T. Spaid's, and continue over Sunday. All of the Abrahamic faith, and the people in general, are respectfully invited to attend. Brother Spaid lives near High View, Frederick Co., Va., and any one interested may address him or John D. Good at that place. All from a distance will be cared for during the meeting.

N. J. MORGAN.

The Lord willing I will be at Schrieberville, Clinton Co., Ind., the second Sunday in June, and hold a grove meeting, as Brother Keever may appoint. And while in the county I will hold other meetings as brethren may think best. Will be at Schrieberville Friday before, and commence meeting in the evening.

J. S. HATCH.

The brethren of Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois, will meet at Adaline, Ill., on the Chicago & Pacific branch of the Milwaukee & St. Paul R. R., on Friday, July 1, and continue over Sunday.

By order of Committee,
J. M. GLOVERLY.

The Semi-annual Meeting of the Christian Association of Iowa will convene at Irving, Tama county, the Lord willing on Thursday, July 7, 1881, and hold over Sunday. It will be a tent meeting, and brethren throughout the state are cordially invited to be present with their tents. Churches please remember to send one delegate for every ten members or fraction over five. Brethren from abroad are invited to be with us. A good meeting is hoped for. Brethren Reed, Stephenson and Whitsell have been invited to help minister to the inward man. Provisions will be on the ground for sale to provide for the outward man. Let us have a general turnout to this meeting, the inclement weather having interfered with the last two meetings.

G. R. CHOWN, Pres.
JOHN FITZ, Sec.

A LETTER

TO A BAPTIST MINISTER ON THE LITERALITY OF

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN,

The Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the

THRONE OF DAVID

—AND—

KINGDOM OF ISRAEL

Together with Strictures on

Mr. Courtney in "THEODOSIA."

—BY DANIEL HOWARD.—

A Capital tract for those desiring information on the subjects discussed. Send to this office for it, and after reading send it to your neighbor.

PRICE ELEVEN CENTS EACH.

THE TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881.

—By H. V. REED.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send Orders to
SAMUEL WILSON,
918 N. 3rd Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Also for sale by
THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

A NEW TRACT!

CIRCULATE IT!

REASONS WHY

I Believe the Bible to be the Word of God; or an

Unanswerable Argument

—AGAINST—

Infidelity AND Atheism.

The foregoing is the title of a Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburgh, Pa.,

—BY DR. J. H. THOMAS.—

It is a large size Sixteen Page Tract, and can be had at the Office of

The Restitution,
PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

Price Five Cents Each, Twelve for Fifty Cents or Thirty for One Dollar.

A Letter to a Friend!

—BY MRS. C. G. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—BY J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 1$ for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND THE—

BIBLE Vindicated.

—BY A. J. EVOLANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in Ladoga would be well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 1$ for 20c., or 3$ for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a NEW Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Pentecostia" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 80c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PRIMER. Suitable for whole schools. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 6000 Baptists, in type. 3. Immortality. 4. The King and Son of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 5c., or assorted packages of 100, 25c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c.; 50 for 50c.; 100 for 75c.

The Manner of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, fo-will: the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Macgruder.

Resurrection. Austin Cattle. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is It True? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What Is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Laing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 25 for 40c.

Is It Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 15 for 50c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of resurrection. J. D. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 15 for 50c. or 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Jonah Peirce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss. D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 8 for 25c. or 40 for $1.

Dan Evangelist Can Reckon Better. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 15 for $1.

Evangelism concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout in harmony with Bible teaching. 32 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiv. 64 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 80 pages, price 15c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidences upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 25c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Bateman, Congregational minister, and W. Kellaway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Bateman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death is wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and dust. Cloth 50c., paper 30c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Durham. Strictly a book for all time. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 128 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.40.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are aptly and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 318 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.25; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—EDITED BY—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—BY BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of ancient critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Distinctive and explanatory Foot notes, and a copious collection of references.

The different rendering of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built, and with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on large paper, 896 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MAN

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE.

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 26, 1881, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 4$ for 50c., or 3$ for $1.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

Officers of Board of Directors:
B. A. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. E. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

Executive Committee:
CHARLES PALMER. W. RAILSBACK.
I. D. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....Editor.

Special Contributors:
J. M. STEPHENSON. B. WILSON.
J. P. WEETHEE. J. A. EDMONDS.
WILEY JONES. G. M. MYERS.
A. D. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 15, 1881. NO. 23.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to The Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the first principles, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

FEATURES OF THE NEW REVISION.

Transcribed Words.

NUMBER THREE.

G. M. MYERS.

It is generally known that out of the twenty-three occurrences of the word hell in the King James rendering of the New Testament writings that ten of these occurrences come from the Greek word hades. Once this word hell comes from the Greek word tartaroo, by the Greeks a supposed department in hades, and twelve times it is derived from gehenna, a valley joining Jerusalem on the south.

This word hell in its ten occurrences in the King's version, derived from hades is retired and hades itself is transcribed to take its place. Apparently our revisers were dissatisfied with the word hell as a rendering of hades. And here we might digress sufficiently far to say that the world in general has grown dissatisfied with the word.

Once in signification this word hell sufficiently approached the idea contained in hades as to define it; but the word hell has been abused, and its meaning corrupted until it is no longer suitable as a definition.

But why have we not a rendering? Was it because no word or words in the English language could be found as suitable, or were our revisers fearful as to results? But since we are to have no new rendering of the word, then hades transcribed is by far preferable to the word hell, since the word hell has become so much abused, and its now popular definition is so far removed from its radical.

But the word hades in the Old Testament occurs sixty-six times. It is once, into Greek a translation of the Hebrew word dumah—silence—Psa. cxv. 17, and sixty-five times it is a rendering of the Hebrew word sheol. In the King's version its English rendering is three times pit, thirty-one times grave, and thirty-one times hell.

Now if in the old book we are to have a uniformity in reading this much-abused word, hell, will be entirely retired, as these words—sheol, hades—are the only words from which hell is derived.

But to the mind of the reader now comes the questions: What does the word hades signify? What word or words should we have had as a rendering of hades?

Of the versions which I have at hand, Rotherham, Geo. Campbell, Living Oracles, Tafel, H. T. Anderson, Norton, Sawyer, Improved Version, Darby, Diaglott, Wesley, Trenchler in Revelation and Bagster transcribe the word hades; Noyes and Bible Union give underworld, Improved Version also gives death; Wesley, Rheims Version, and Tafel in some cases, give hell; Living Oracles in one or two occurrences give unseen; Wakefield, Murdock, Macknight, and Improved Version in some cases give grave.

Here we discover that with those who are willing to attempt a rendering that the renderings are various. Circumstances would have to determine for us as to the most plausible.

But when we come to a definition of the word, radically and etymologically, it is easy, significant and unmistakable. Etymologically the root of the word is Eidoo, which signifies to see, or to know. Next with the privative a as a prefix its signification is reversed to unseen, unknown. Then with the aspirate given to the privative a, it becomes ha, the letter iota—i—becomes a subscript, and with the various inflections we have hadou, hadein, hades. Etymologically, radically and literally, unknown, unseen, as a verb. Then as a noun the unknown, the unseen, that which is beyond knowledge and out of sight.

Next we invite attention to a scrap of history as introductory to a further study of this word. We quote from Prof. Randall's notes of a visit to the city of Memphis, Egypt, in Feb. 1861. He says:

"Recall once more the wandering imagination, and cast the eye along yonder plain, skirted by the sandy desert beyond. Here was the famous Acharusian lake: now a solitary marsh and a dirty pool of water are all that remain. Here was a beautiful sheet of water, fed by canals, its shores ornamented by shady groves and beautiful parks. These were the waters over which the dead were ferried to yonder tombs and sepulchres, the number and multitude of which attest what swarms of the living must once have been congregated about us. To this lake the embalmed corpses were brought. Forty-two persons, constituted judges, ranged themselves around the remains of the departed one.

"Has anyone aught to allege against the character of the deceased?"

In the scales of justice his life was balanced. If it was proved he had spent a life of dissipation and vice, transit was denied him till his friends could atone for him. Those Elysian Fields and those quiet shores of the departed were for the good alone. If accepted, the ferryman received the pious freight and bore it beyond the flood. It was these Egyptian funeral rites that gave rise to the beautiful fables, that were afterwards refined and improved by the Greeks, of the river Styx, Charron and his boat, and the Elysian Fields."

And we might add that they gave rise to much of modern song, for instance:

"The billows swell, the winds are high,
There's one more river to cross."

And—

"Yonder, o'er the rolling seas
The shining mansions rise."

But to the history again, as we have gathered from others, when there was a final refusal of transfer across the lake the corpse was returned to its original home, and persons were employed to mourn for and with the relatives. This process was called Tar.

As the Grecians largely believed in the immortality of the soul—or professed so to believe—they borrowed this whole scenery and process from the Egyptians and transferred it to what they called the spirit-world; and as the dead were put out of sight as to body, and also as they supposed as to soul they used hades as indicative of where they had gone.

Thus they taught that the souls of all, good and bad, went into hades, the unseen, the unknown. But into hades they carried all of the Egyptian scenery—lake, Elysian Fields on one side, and Tar on the other; the souls of the good in the Elysian Fields, and the souls of the bad in the Tar—Tartarus.

This is one of the beautiful fables of which Randall speaks.

Without any authority whatever is the transfer of a literal scenery laid in literal transactions with the Egyptians, into the so-called spirit-land. It is authority unwarranted. The Greeks and the world combined to assist can never give the link of connection between the two to justify the act of transfer.

But now as the word hades so often occurs in our Bibles, as a rendering of the Hebrew sheol into Greek, and is to be transferred into our English text, it is of importance that we understand it. But what more shall we say of it? What more can we say of it? From fallible man, the word in its very signification shuts itself up from any insight into it or the condition of anything transferred to its dominions.

How can fallible man look into anything that is unseen? How can he know anything about that which is unknown and unknowable? Therefore the ancient Greeks were entirely incompetent to talk about the condition of things in hades. It was all unseen, unknown to them, and therefore all they could say was speculation. Likewise fallible moderns are the same.

Therefore for further information, information as to the condition of things in hades, we do not propose to ask of Lexicons. Inspiration, and inspiration alone must settle for us this question.

But at this point it becomes necessary to institute the inquiry what goes into hades that renders this word so interesting to us? It is asserted and claimed largely that at death the spirit of man goes there. Can this be correct? What evidence is there that such is the case? Has any creditable one ever been eye witness to that effect? Does inspiration state that such is the case? We know that many claim that inspiration so teaches. But the question is, Where in inspiration is it taught? We reply nowhere by positive statement or inference. And more, to the contrary, we have the statement made that "Then (at death) shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God (as it was) who gave." Eccl. xii. 7. Here then we dismiss this point as beyond controversy settled by inspiration.

Next does the soul go to hades? This asks for a definition of the word. Then we will remark that the word soul in both the Hebrew and Greek languages is Onomato-poetic in signification. Like many words in our language it has in it a natural signification. Especially is this the case with our verbs. In speaking them we make a noise as near like the movement which the word signifies as possible. Thus of the Hebrew nepesh, and the Greek psuche, the first syllable is made by inhalation and the last is made by exhalation—hence a breathing.

This is the phonetic and the etymological signification. To this agrees Gesenius, Parkhurst, Fuerst, in their Hebrew Lexicons; Greenfield, Grover, Authone, Pickering, Liddell & Scott, and Parkhurst in their Greek Lexicons. Then it would not be claimed that soul primarily goes to hades.

Again, by figure, we have the word which denotes the action put for the thing acted upon. Thus the word soul primarily signifying the act of breathing is put for the thing breathed. Naturally this becomes a secondary definition and is so given in Greenfield, Grover, Authone, Pickering, and Liddell & Scott. But it is with no good degree of propriety, for with any interest claimed that the soul in the sense of breath goes to hades.

And as a secondary signification of the word again, the word soul, which primarily signifies the act of breathing, is sometimes put for the thing which performs the act, and hence a breath breather—man.

But to exhaust the meaning of the word, and which several significations cover its every occurrence in the Bible we will add a third; it is, Where the word denoting the action is made to denote the effect produced upon the actor by the thing received. That is the effect produced upon men by the reception of the breath. This effect is life. Gen. ii. 7.

But it will not be claimed that an effect when it ceases to exist goes into hades. Therefore that which signifies soul and goes into hades must be that which is last above given as a secondary signification—man, or a breath breather.

This statement is further borne out and rendered certain by the light of inspiration. We will give a few references.

1. When word was brought to Jacob that Joseph was slain, he exclaimed, "For I will go down into the grave (hades) unto my son mourning." Gen. xxxvii. 35.

2. "And Jacob said, My son shall not go down with you; for his brother is dead, and he is left alone; if mischief befall him by the way in the which ye go, then shall ye bring down my gray hairs in sorrow to the grave" (hades). Gen. xlii. 38.

3. "And if ye take this also from me, and mischief befall him, ye shall bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave" (hades). Gen. xliv. 29.

4. "And thy servants shall bring down the gray hairs of thy servant—our father—with sorrow to the grave" (hades). Gen. xliv. 31.

Now question—Can it be anything else than the soul in the sense of body that goes into hades? One who has been a living soul as in Gen. ii. 7, and become a dead soul—dead body, as rendered in Num. xix. 26; ix. 6-10. Most assuredly it will not be claimed that the so-called disembodied spirit or soul either wears off the hair the man had in life.

But furthermore at this point we read of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, with their rebellious associates going into hades. Num. xvi. 30-33: "But if the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit; then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord. And it came to pass, as he had made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave asunder that was under them: and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses, and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods. They, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them: and they perished from among the congregation."

Here are a few points of note:

1. Men go down into the pit—hades.

2. Live men go down into the pit—hades.

3. Houses went down into the pit—hades.

4. Hades is in the earth.

But one more text as to locality. Job xvii. 16, says: "They shall go down to the bars of the pit (hades) when our rest together is in the dust." With these texts before us it is not very difficult to tell where inspiration puts hades, and what goes into it.

One more point we desire to notice before we dismiss this subject. It is touching the condition of things that go into hades.

Inspiration alone must settle this point as fallible man can only know with certainty as inspiration will reveal.

Then "to the law and to the testimony." Job says:—

1. Chapter x. 20-22: "Are not my days few? Cease then, and let me alone, that I may take comfort a little, before I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death; a land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order; and where the light is as darkness."

It is true that the word hades is not in these verses, but all critics agree that it is of, hades, that Job is here speaking. Job's language here is quite a comment upon hades. Most assuredly it is no desirable place. It is no better than the grave. Can it be anything but the grave?

2. Job desired to be hid and to be kept secret in the grave—hades. "Oh that thou wouldst hide me in the grave (hades). That thou wouldst keep me secret till thy wrath be past."

3. Job expected the grave (hades) would finally become his house and that while there he would dwell in darkness, that he would dwell in corruption, that he would dwell with the worm, and that he would dwell in the dust. "If I wait, the grave (hades) is mine house; I have made my bed in the darkness. I have said to corruption Thou art my father; to the worm Thou art my mother, and my sister. And where is now my hope? As for my hope, who shall see it? They shall go down to the bars of the pit (hades) when our rest together is in the dust." xvii. 13-16.

David writes of hades and says:

4. "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave (hades) who shall give thee thanks?" Psalms vi. 5.

5. Again he sets forth the thought that men go into hades like sheep, i. e. as sheep go into hades so do men lie down there. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave (hades), death shall feed on them, and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning, and their beauty shall consume in the grave (hades) from their dwelling. But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave" (hades). Psalms xlix. 14-15.

6. One more quotation from David we will make, and one in which he sets forth the thought that those who go into hades cannot praise God. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence" (hades). Ps. cxv. 17.

7. In conclusion upon this point we will give one more quotation, and from Solomon. He says: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave (hades) whither thou goest." Eccl. ix. 10.

This is conclusive. It needs no summary. It needs no further comment.

COROLLARIES.

But now since the above inspiration was written of condition in sheol-hades without reference to departments there, then it covers all the departments.

As conclusive truths then.

1. It shows unmistakably that the language of the Savior concerning the rich man, Luke xvi 19-25, could not have been literal, but figurative. A figurative construction is the only possible solution of the text.

2. It shows conclusively the condition of the thief who was crucified with Jesus, if the punctuation in the King James and in the new version is correct. That day then they went into the Greek Paradise in the Greek hades, and hence their condition was while there as above described. The Savior arose out of hades, see Psalms xvi. 10; Acts ii. 27, 31, and left the thief there.

3. The angels who kept not their first estate, but were cast down to tartaroomai—the other supposed department in hades—have been, as I am in like condition, notwithstanding all that has been said and written concerning them as demons and as scape goats for so-called spiritual manifestations. They, and all others who go into hades—

1. Rest under the shadow of death.
2. Are in a land or state of darkness.
3. Are in a land where there is no order.
4. Are in silence.
5. Are where they know not God.
6. Are where they cannot praise God.
7. Are where there is no work.
8. Are where there is no device—reason.
9. Are where there is no knowledge.
10. Are where there is no wisdom.

It is needless to say more upon this point.

REVISED VERSION.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Editor Restitution:

I received from Gen. Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, now residing in New York City, a copy of the Revised Version of the New Testament, Oxford edition, 1881, published by Henry Frowde, Oxford Warehouse, 7 Paternoster Row, London; and C. J. Clay, M. A., Cambridge Warehouse, 17 Paternoster Row, London; Long Primer Crown, 8 vo. 496 pages. Also, the Companion to the Revised Version, explaining the reasons for the changes made on the authorized version, by Alexander Roberts, D. D., Professor of Humanity, St. Andrews, and member of the English New Testament Company, with Supplement by a member of the American Committee of Revision;—a book of 218 pages. I have just finished the reading of both volumes through. I have examined, also, the principal marginal readings;—a severe task for the time allotted me.

I do not like to infringe upon the rights of brethren Magruder and Myers, or to anticipate any of their intended criticisms; still, as I pretend to have some knowledge of the original Scriptures, it might be expected that I should have an opinion, and that I should desire to express that opinion. I leave to others, more competent, the labor of condensing, or simmering down my remarks. I do not presume that my opinion will produce a ripple in the popular Christian world; sectarianism is more powerful than the truth. The Revision now before us affords ample proof of that fact. The English Committee was composed of fifty members, the American, thirty; in all, eighty persons of distinguished learning and ability. They had about 150,000 varieties of New Testament readings, while there were only 80,000 in the last century. The Revision consumed about ten years.

"No attempt has been made to modernize the style of the Authorized Version. On the contrary, innocent archaisms"—to use an expression which was frequently on the lips of the Company—have invariably been allowed to stand. It was felt these tend to give a dignity and solemnity to a translation of the Scriptures, and that to change them into the language of present everyday life would have been to insure loss instead of gain."—Roberts.

The Anglo-American Committee call their Revision, "The noblest monument of Christian union and co-operation in this nineteenth century. And herein is the finger of Providence."

They congratulate themselves, in having made ten thousand alterations without having changed any important doctrine. In other words, they have left undisturbed, creeds, confessions, and sectarian boundaries.

In reading the results of their ten years labor I have been forced to ask, What has been the gain of Christian truth? What advantage or superiority over our Common Version? Ten thousand changes, and not one disputed point settled. Of one thing I am exceedingly thankful; or of three things:

1. That I have been so situated in life, as to learn to read and investigate God's own words—the original Scriptures.

2. That I am so freed from creeds and sectarian trammels as to investigate for myself and freely to express the results.

3. That we have a paper (THE RESTITUTION) where such results can be published without the sanction of iron-bound sectarian committee.

Some of my reasons for so speaking will be found in the following points:

1. Baptism.—Anglicized, not translated. Does any one suppose that those eighty men of profound learning did not know its translation? Sectarianism would not allow its translation—and we have it ANGLICIZED!

2. Hell.—This word has two words in the Greek, hades and gehenna. The English and American Committees were divided on this point till the Apocalypse was reached; then the English Committee yielded to the American, and substituted the Greek word hades for hell in many passages, but leaving the word hell where the Greek word is gehenna. Is hades a translation? or is it left untranslated? In this way the doctrine of eternal hell torments is let alone. Why? Sectarianism will not allow the truth to appear. Every person of intelligence knows that the word hell does not mean what it once meant, sheol—hades and hell originally had the same meaning. This truth is kept back.

They define hades—"the spirit-world or the realm of the dead."

Gehenna—"the state and place of torment, or hell."

Does anyone suppose that Jesus and the Greek philosophers attached the same theological meaning to the word hades? We may go to the Greek, for etymology, but not for theology.

"Anathema, and Maranatha" (1 Cor. xvi. 23) are not translated in the text. Maranatha is translated in the margin (our Lord cometh).

3. Soul, is, in many places, rendered correctly in the text, "For what shall a man be profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and forfeit his life? or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?" Matt. xvi. 26. So rendered in Mark, and in Luke, it is life and himself, or his own self.

4. Devil and Demon.—One devil (Diabolos)—many demons, or evil spirits. Here they have made a distinction.

This list might be extended to almost any limit, but these are sufficient for specimens. I never expect to see a correct authorized version of the Bible; church interests are too powerful. We may as soon look for denominations to disband.

Selections.

Dawn of the Morning.

A GREAT WONDER.

How true it is that God's mercies are older than man's boasted progress in science. We are accustomed in these latter days to glorify the magnetic telegraph, and to speak with great self-complacency of this wonder of the nineteenth century. What can be more astonishing than the fact that a message may be transmitted around the whole world on wire?

But the people of Palestine, in the first century, witnessed the working of something far better than any modern wonder. A "healing word" is sent instantaneously a distance of twenty-five miles. Behold its effect! There in the sick chamber of a family belonging to the upper class, honored and respected, surrounded by all the comforts of life, lies a child. For days and nights they have watched the progress of the disease. It baffles the skill of all the physicians, and defies the efforts of kind friends and neighbors. At last, with broken and bleeding hearts, they give up in despair. They have exhausted the last remedy, and still the child grows worse. Is there no hope? Can mortal skill suggest no restorative? Have we done all that can be done to save our darling?

"Yes," say the parents, "we have done all that we could, and O, how willingly would we give o'f our possessions for the restoration of our dying boy."

Says one, There is still hope. Physicians cannot save him. Medicine can do him no good; but there is One who is far greater and wiser and better than all physicians. He attended a marriage not long ago, and while there converted, for the benefit of the guests in attendance, six large vessels of water into excellent wine. That man can save your child."

The agonized father acts upon the suggestion, and starts at once for Cana of Galilee. He makes no apology for his rudeness, but rushes at once into the presence of the Miracle Worker. His manner indicates to all his terrible earnestness.

"Come down to Capernaum at once, for my son is dying," is the touching request.

"Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe," is the ambiguous response.

The anxious nobleman needed a gentle reproof. Here he had rushed into the presence of him who had power to open eyes, unstop ears, still waves, and raise the dead, and yet in his heart he limits the power of Jesus, and seems to think that nothing but his actual presence can do any good to the dying child. He has faith enough to go to Jesus, but seems to doubt his ability to send help so far. He repeats the request.

"Sir, come down ere my child die."

The response is, "Go thy way, thy son liveth."

With the utterance of these words there goes forth a power that is felt in that distant sick chamber. To the astonishment of the attendants a sudden and miraculous change takes place. The pulse becomes regular, the skin moist, the eyes natural, the limbs strong, the voice right, and the dying child leaps up from his couch.

Next day the father, strong in the faith that the Savior's word is true, is delighted to hear, as he approaches the house, "Thy son liveth!"

"At what hour began he to mend?" asks the nobleman.

"Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him."

Thus the ruler reasoned: "Yesterday in Cana, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I besought Jesus, and here in Capernaum, twenty-five miles distant, at one o'clock precisely, the fever left him."

Is it any wonder that this man and his whole house believed? May not the same incident serve to establish our faith in the ability of Jesus, who is still the Lord of life? Yes, more, as there not similar responses to the prayers of God's people now? Can we not detect these wonderful coincidences on every page of the history of prayer?

God has placed the foot of the ladder, reaching to heaven, with angels ascending and descending, at our very feet. It is our duty to pray for our sons, daughters, brothers, sisters, husbands, wives, fathers, mothers, and friends, and while we are yet speaking God will hear and answer.

Far from being despondent at temptations, the Christian should hail them as his glorious opportunity. He should shake off the deadly sin of sloth, and break through their ranks as they beset the hill-side he is clambering, realizing that he shall grow stronger as he mounts. He should, indeed, count it all joy when he falls into divers temptations.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, June 15, 1881.

We omit writing much editorially to give the room to correspondents.

If hard words are not kept out of articles the articles will be kept out of THE RESTITUTION.

HAVE not had time to read some books sent to the office. Will try to peruse and notice as soon as possible.

BROTHER G. M. MYERS—Should be pleased indeed to attend the Conference at Adeline, Ill., but cannot promise with certain assurance. Will see how the way opens.

SOME very long manuscript articles have come to hand that we have not found time even to read. Will our brethren please write short, pithy, practical articles for awhile. Long articles must of necessity be delayed.

Communications.

NOTES ON THE REVISED VERSION AND ITS MARGINAL READINGS.

NUMBER ONE.

WILEY JONES.

The following are some of the improvements found in the Revised Version. I have put the marginal readings in parentheses:

Matt. iii. 11. "I indeed baptize you with (or, in) water." In this place the Greek en plainly means "in," and should have been so rendered. It is some satisfaction, however, to find that meaning given to it in the margin.

Matt. iv. 23. "The gospel (or, good tidings) of the kingdom." This, at the first occurrence of the word "gospel" in the apostolic writings, is a very good and timely definition of that word.

Matt. vi. 34. "Be not therefore anxious for the morrow." This conveys to the modern English reader a much better idea of the Greek than the old expression, "Take no thought for the morrow." It is that anxious and corroding care that springs from doubts and misgivings, which the Savior here condemns.

Matt. x. 39. "He that findeth (or, found) his life (or, soul) shall lose it; and he that loseth (or, lost) his life (or, soul) for my sake shall find it." This indicates that the soul is but the natural life. According to the popular idea of the soul, it would be incongruous and contradictory to say, "He that loseth his soul for the sake of Christ, shall find it."

Matt. xiii. 39. "The harvest is the end of the world (or, consummation of the age)." Here the margin ought to have been substituted for the text, to keep the English reader from supposing that the Greek word for "world" is the same in this verse as in verse 38. In the latter it is kosmos, and in the former aion.

Matt. xvi. 26. "For what shall a man be profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and forfeit his own life (or, soul)." Here, again, the natural life is made synonymous with the soul. And this agrees with Job xii. 10,—"The soul of every living thing," which implies that every living thing has a soul.

Matt. xix. 28. "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." The punctuation here is an improvement on that of the American Bible Union, 1866, and brings out more clearly the important truth that the regeneration and the apostolic reign over Israel will not occur till "the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory;" and this he will not do till he "shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him," as we prove by Matt. xxv. 31.

Matt. xxiv. 33. "When ye see all these things, know that he is nigh, even at the doors." The pronoun "he" is an improvement of thrilling interest in this text, for by comparing it with Luke xxi. 31, we see that the kingdom cannot come until Christ himself shall come, for the same signs are made to indicate the nearness of both. Hence, the church now present is not the kingdom.

Matt. xxviii. 19. "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Justice has here at last been done to the preposition eis, into, which by King James' translators, and even by the American Bible Union, was so unjustly suppressed. An action done "in the name" of a person, may mean simply by the authority of that person, as in the name of the king, or of the commonwealth, that is, by the authority of the king or commonwealth. And so this phrase in the great commission has heretofore been interpreted by many. But henceforth let all our opponents acknowledge what we have long been contending for,—that baptism produces a change of state or relationship, introducing persons into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Thenceforth, so long as they walk "in the Spirit," they are also "in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. viii. 9; 1 Thess. i. 1; 1 John iv. 16. For this is the difference between the Greek prepositions represented by into and in: the former signifies motion from without to within, as, "he walked into the house;" the latter signifies the subsequent idea of rest or being contained within, as, "he reposed in the house." As before Noah went into the ark he was out of it, so before one is baptized into the relationship expressed in the commission he is out of it,—an alien and a stranger from the covenants of promise. It is water baptism referred to here, because it is something which the apostles themselves were to administer. In this version I find not the slightest hint of spuriousness concerning Matt. xxviii. 19. Nor do I remember having ever once found it once marked spurious in any version or any language. We may safely pronounce it as genuine as the stars in the firmament. There is no ground here for the three-clipping theory, for the baptism here commanded is guarded in its meaning by being defined and illustrated under the symbol of birth,—it is designated as being "born of water." John iii. 5. Now just as by the act of being once born a child is ushered into all of his family relationships, however many they may be, so by the act of once emerging from the water the penitent believer is ushered into the sacred relationships which the Christian sustains to Father, Son, and Spirit. Because the three names are not afterwards expressly mentioned in connection with baptism, we are not hence to infer that the apostles ignored or violated this explicit command of the Master, for at all times and in all matters they were very careful to "remember the words of Jesus." Acts xx. 35. Jews, and Jewish proselytes, would have no objection to baptism to God the Father. But "the name of Jesus Christ" was that at which they stumbled (Rom. ix. 32), and hence when the historian would indicate that a Hebrew or proselyte had made a thorough submission to the new dispensation, he would think it enough to say that he had acknowledged Christ's name. The rest was then easy to believe, and was therefore left to be inferred.

The pronoun "them" (autois) is not of the same gender as "nations" (ethne) in the Greek, and therefore must refer to some such noun as disciples (or taught ones) understood. This refutes infant baptism, for it indicates that only the taught are to be baptized. The two different words, in the commission, mathēteusate and didaskontes, are rendered "teach" and "teaching," in the common version, but they show that two kinds of instruction are to be given, the one before baptism, and the other afterwards. This would, of course, be impracticable in the case of infants. Thus we find the great commission clearly prohibiting pedorhantism. Other important alterations of the old version are to be noted in some future paper, the Lord willing.

"PERFECT THROUGH SUFFERING." Heb. ii. 10.

HELENA M. HUNT.

Those who are truly endeavoring to follow in the steps of the Divine Master, soon begin to find that it is through much tribulation that they will be called to inherit the kingdom. Through sufferings will they be perfected even as he was, and that to learn to endure all things for his sake is one of the lessons we have to learn day by day. It is hard to see the Lord's hand in our bitter sorrows, and to bring ourselves to say it was a loving Father that sent them; a Father who in mercy corrects us—in mercy bereaves us, and in tender love takes all most dear away from us, and leaves us desolate.

But so it is, we have been building up some idol and putting it in the place of God—whether it be a desire for fame, for riches, for honors, or perhaps some cherished object that has taken the first place in our hearts; and we have little left to give him who died for us.

The Lord knows well that only some sad awakening from our dreams will ever make way for us to yield ourselves wholly to him, and in love he shows us the worthlessness of what we have so highly valued. The vanity of fame, the evanescence of riches and honors, the faithlessness of friends—past kindnesses forgotten—the little things that make up the sum of daily life, little neglects, little careless words that wound, little loving words left unspoken—all teach us not to put our trust in anything in this life, for it is not our rest.

"He healeth the broken-hearted," says the Psalmist, "and bindeth up their wounds." Thank God for the truth of that promise—of all God's promises.

What we need is less of self; less of value on earthly objects, more of love to Christ; more dependence upon his care who doeth all things well; and when we fully realize that our Father sends the trials, peace and content will surely follow, for we will have learnt that all we set our hearts on in the past was only vexation of spirit, but the Lord helped us through all, and will keep those in perfect peace whose minds are stayed on him.—In our Eternal Home

"All the way by which he brought us,
All the grieving that he knew,
All the patient love that taught us,
We'll remember evermore."

Boston, Mass.

Youths' Column.

A Child Doing Good.

A little girl I am indeed,
And little do I know:
Much help and care I yet shall need,
That I may wiser grow.
If I would ever hope to do
Things great and good, and useful too.

But even now I ought to try
To do what good I may:
God never meant that such as I
Should only live to play,
And talk and laugh, and eat and drink,
And sleep and wake, and never think.

I may, if I have but a mind,
Be good in many ways;
Plenty to do the young may find
In three and busy days:
And would it be, though young and small,
If I were of no use at all.

One gentle word that I may speak,
Or one kind loving deed,
May, though a little poor and weak,
Prove like a tiny seed;
And who can tell what good may spring
From such a very little thing!

Then let me try each day and hour
To act upon this plan:
What little good is in my power,
To do it while I can,
If to be useful this I try,
I may do better by and by.

Once it happened that a old Scotchman was taking his grist to the mill in sacks thrown across the back of his horse, when the horse stumbled and the grain fell to the ground. He had not strength to raise it, being an aged man; but he saw a horseman riding along, and thought he would ask him for help. The horseman proved to be a nobleman who lived in the castle hard by, and the farmer could not muster courage to ask a favor of him. But the nobleman was a gentleman also, and not waiting to be asked, dismounted, and between them they lifted the grain to the horse's back. John—for he was a gentleman too—lifted his cap and said: "My Lord, how shall I ever thank you for your kindness?" "Very easily, John," replied the nobleman; "whenever you see another man in the same plight as you were in just now, help him, and that will be thanking me."—Baptist Courier.

The Family.

No other earthly circle can be compared with that of the family. It comprises all that a human heart most values and delights in. It is the center where human affections meet and entwine, the vessel into which they all pour themselves with such joyous freedom.

There is no word which contains in it so many endearing associations and precious remembrances, but in the heart like gold. It appeals at once to the very center of man's being—to his "heart of hearts."

All that is sweet, soothing, tender, and true, is wrapt up in that one name. It speaks not of one circle nor one bond; but of many circles and many bonds; all of them near the heart.

The family home, the family hearth, the family table, family habits, family voices, family tokens, family salutations, family melodies, family joys and sorrows; what a mine of recollections lie under the word! Take these away, and earth becomes a mere church-yard of crumbling bones; and man as so many grains of loosened sand, or at best, but as the fragments of a torn flower, which the winds are scattering abroad.

A Word Fitly Spoken.

DR. ADAM CLARKE.

A stranger who was sojourning as a teacher, called upon my father, and requested permission to examine some of the boys; I was among the number. My father, by way of relieving the feelings of the man, said:—"That boy is very slow at learning; I fear that you will not be able to do much with him." My heart sank. I would have given the world to have been as some of the boys around me. The man spoke with kindness; gave me some directions, and, laying his hand upon my head, observed—"this lad will make a good scholar yet." I felt his kindness; it raised my spirit; the possibility of being able to learn, was, in this moment, and for the first time impressed upon my mind; a ray of hope sprang up within me; in that hope I lived and labored; it seemed to create power; my lessons were all committed to my memory with ease, and I could have doubled the effort had it been required. From this period, Adam never looked back, and never paused. The same quickness of perception, and tenacity of memory, discoverable from the first dawning of intelligence as applied to other things, now accompanied his pursuit of learning; he was no longer like the animal tampering round the same spot, in consequence of the chain by which it is bound; he became like the racer; there was progress in every moment: he sped over the course with prodigious swiftness, and he felt the pleasure of it himself.

A Brave Lad.

A few years ago a boy who was left without father or mother, went to New York alone and friendless, to get a situation in a store as errand boy, until he could command a higher position; but this boy had been in bad company, and got in the habit of calling for "bitters" and cheap cigars.

On looking over the paper he noticed that a merchant on Pearl street wanted a lad, and he called there and made his business known.

"Walk into my office," said the merchant, "and I will attend to you soon."

When he had waited upon his customer, he took a seat near the lad, and espied a cigar in his hand.

"My boy," said he, "I want an honest and faithful lad, but I see you smoke cigars, and in my experience I have found cigar-smoking lads to be connected with various evil habits, and if I am not mistaken you are not an exception to the rule. You will not suit me."

Johnny hung down his head, and left the store; and as he walked the street a stranger and friendless, the counsel of his mother came forcibly to his mind, who upon her death-bed had called him to her side, and placing her hand upon his head, said to him:

"Johnny, I am going to leave you. You well know what misery your father brought upon us, and I want you to promise me, before I die, that you will ner touch a drop of the poison that killed your father."

The tears trickled down Johnny's cheeks. He went to his lodgings, and throwing himself upon his bed, gave vent to his feelings in sobs that were heard all over the house.

But Johnny had moral courage, and before an hour had passed he had made up his mind never to touch another drop of liquor nor smoke another cigar. He went back to the merchant and said:

"Sir, you very properly sent me away this morning for habits that I have been guilty of; but I have neither father nor mother, and although I have done what I ought not to, I have now made a solem promise never to drink another drop of liquor nor smoke another cigar; and if you will only try me it is all that I will ask."

The merchant was struck with the decision and energy displayed by the boy, and at once employed him. At the expiration of five years this lad was a partner in the business, and he is now quite prosperous.

New York Observer.

Birds of the Bible.—The Partridge.

GEORGIANA KLINGLE.

The partridge is found in almost all parts of the word. It is exceedingly pretty, being beautifully shaded in brown and ash, with delicate markings, streaks and spots of saffron, buff, and dark chestnut colors. There are usually about ten or fifteen in a convey or brood. Very shy, indeed, are all partridges, and they have need to be, for hawks and dogs are always on the alert to find them. They build their nests in May, amid dry grass and leaves, and lay from fifteen to twenty-four eggs. In warm countries they are said to breed twice a year. The partridge is select in the choice of its food, subsisting entirely upon grain, seeds, insects and berries; to this delicate taste we owe the flavor of its flesh, which is always in high favor. Their sagacity in saving their young is one of their chief characteristics, and so effectually do they manage that the sportsman is frequently misled. Upon the approach of an enemy, the mother bird utters certain notes of warning understood by the young, who dart under leaves, or places of shelter, while the mother flutters and struggles along the ground, as though wounded, going further and further away, until the pursuers are led completely away from the young, when she darts under the foliage, and, when the danger is over, makes her way back to the frightened little ones. Traps are also a fruitful source of danger to the partridges. I have heard of a lad who, long ago, set a trap for the partridges and watched it unsuccessfully many days. At length a whole convey in the trap greeted his eyes. He was overjoyed with his success, and sat down to view his prize. The shy, pleading looks of the pretty birds disconcerted him. He took out one, hoping to disarm sympathy, and let it go. Still the innocent, frightened eyes pleaded with him. He opened the trap and let them all go, casting the trap away.

The partridge is mentioned twice in the Bible. The first passage reads: "The King of Israel is come out to seek a flea, as when one doth hunt a partridge." To understand this passage, it is necessary to recollect that in the Holy Land not only our familiar variety is found, but a species abounds in the mountains, which, though unable to fly well, having long legs, runs rapidly. This species is still hunted over the mountains by the Arabs, who run them down and take them alive or kill them with sticks. The second passage reads: "As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool." The meaning of this passage has been disputed, but it is supposed to refer to the habit of the partridge, which leads it to take possession of and set upon deserted nests which come in their way, and so can be compared to the man who wears himself out trying to hatch pleasure from ill-gotten gains; but though he wear himself away, the reward fails, for his riches are like the inanimate eggs which the partridge tries to warm into life. The partridge, late at night, after other birds are at rest, runs up and down, with the restless cry, "Churr, churr," taking pains when none are needed, like the miser who takes no rest, but rises early and lies down late, seeking happiness and finding none.

Jews Items.

FOREIGN.

EARTHQUAKES.—IN SWITZERLAND.

GENEVA, June 11—A very perceptible earthquake shock occurred in the valley of the upper Rhone on Thursday, and extended as far as this city.

IN SCIO.

SCIO, June 11—A renewed shock of earthquake in this island to-day overthrew a minaret and several ruined houses. Two men were injured.

News comes from Van that an earthquake devastated 34 villages in Armenia.

News from Iceland states that the winter has been harder than ever known, the thermometer in March having fallen as low as 36 deg. Reaumur below zero. The population suffered severely, numbers of cattle and sheep perished.

Dispatches received in Liverpool from Melbourne announces the massacre in New Guinea of a number of missionaries. On Mar. 7, they were attacked by the natives at Kato, in the district of Port Moresby, Hula, and four of them, with two of their wives, four children, and two servants, were killed. No provocation was given, but it is stated that the perpetrators of previous massacres on the coast had not been punished, and this is looked upon as the main cause of this outbreak.

The following from upper Silesia three months ago throws light upon the enormous arrivals at Castle Garden: "No grain, no potatoes, no food for cattle, no seed for sowing. Snow and cold without, hunger and sickness within." Soup houses and public kitchens have been started in 17 villages.

AFRICA.

EXPLORING PARTY MASSACRED.

ADEN, June 12—An Italian exploring party, which started from Assab Bay, Abyssinia, consisting of a subaltern officer, ten sailors, and four soldiers, have been massacred in the interior. The full particulars are not yet known.

A BATTLE.

ORAN, Algeria, June 13—An official dispatch received here states that General Dolrie defeated a body of insurgents, killing 50. The French had two wounded.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., June 10—Mrs. Abraham Lincoln's physician has given up all hopes of her recovery. Her strength is gradually failing. For the last two days her mind has failed. She does not recognize her most intimate friends.

Late telegrams indicate that the people of Ireland are as nearly in a state of rebellion against the English government as they can be without organization, leaders or weapons. Affrays between the authorities and the people are of daily occurrence, and lives have been sacrificed.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

HAMMOND, Mich., June 7, 1881.

Editor Restitution:

The Michigan State Conference was held at Watson Corners, commencing Thursday evening, June 2, and lasted over Sunday, and was attended by a large audience.

Brother L. Chase was with us and done most of the preaching, which was able and eloquent. Social meetings were held at which the brethren cast their united voices that they intended to reach the golden shore of immortality.

The people of Watson (at large) are the most liberal people we have yet met with.

Conference closed with the Lord's Supper, each feeling his spiritual strength renewed.

Now we're journeying through the valley,
Where our dearones sleep so sweet;
By and by we hope to meet them
In the bright and golden streets.

E. N. WOODWARD, Sec.

OBITUARY.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Darlington, Ont., May 23, 1881, Sister Annie Mitchell, consort of Brother R. B. Mitchell, aged 47 years, and 10 months, after an illness of two days, during which time she was insensible.

Sister Mitchell had for years expected she would pass off in this way, and whilst visiting at our house last fall, she wished to know if I would come if sent for to preach a funeral sermon. My answer was, yes; and distance nor other appointments prevented. She was born in England, came to Canada before her marriage, and was with her husband a number of the Methodist church for a number of years. They were immersed by the writer about 13 years ago, into the name of Jesus Christ, and united with the Church of God in D. of which they have since been members.

By her death brother Mitchell has lost a good wife, children an excellent mother, the church of God one of its most valuable members, the writer one of his true friends, and the community a good neighbor. After we had laid her aside in the grave, the writer delivered a sermon to a large congregation, predicated on 1 Cor. xv. 26.

R. V. LYON.

P. S.—Stopped with the brethren First day. On Sunday our chapel was filled, many could not get in. Spoke in the morning and afternoon. Had the honor of immersing Mrs. Corker, into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. This church is a pattern for all to imitate. Called on a few of the loved ones in Toronto, but am now at my own quiet home for a few days.

Fraternally, R. V. L.

The earliest division of the New Testament into verses was that made by Euthalius, Deacon of Alexandria, A. D., 462; the division of the Old Testament into chapters dates back to the thirteenth century, some assigning it to Cardinal Hugo, others to Stephen Langdon, Archbishop of Canterbury. The first English Bible divided into verses was published at Geneva in 1560. King James' Bible, which has been in general use since 1610 up to the recent revision, was prepared at the suggestion of Dr. Reinolds. In July, 1604, King James wrote a letter intimating the appointment of fifty-four scholars for the preparation of the revision, and instructing the Bishops that whenever a living of £20 became vacant, they should inform his majesty of the circumstance, in order that he might recommend one of the translators to the patron. This was all that James did on behalf of the translation which bears his name. The expenses seem to have been borne by Barker, the printer and patentee, who paid the sum of £3,500. Of the fifty-four scholars who had been nominated to do the work, only forty-seven undertook it, and their names have not been preserved. These forty-seven were divided into six companies, two of which were to meet at Westminster, two at Cambridge, and two at Oxford. The final revision of the whole was conducted in London by two delegates from each of the six companies, and they were engaged daily for nine months. It is to these twelve men, therefore, the world is indebted for the arrangement of the King James Bible. Later editions of the Bible, with notes and annotations, bear the imprint of the publisher and show under whose direction the work was printed.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Church of God, will commence on Friday, June 17, in the grove near John T. Spaid's, and continue over Sunday. All of the Abrahamic faith, and the people in general, are respectfully invited to attend. Brother Spaid lives near High View, Frederick Co., Va., and any one interested may address him or John D. Good at that place. All from a distance will be cared for during the meeting.

N. J. MORGAN.

The Lord willing I will be at Scircleville, Clinton Co., Ind., the second Sunday in June, and hold a grove meeting, as Brother Keever may appoint. And while in the county I will hold other meetings as brethren may think best. Will be at Scircleville Friday before, and commence meeting in the evening.

J. S. HATCH.

The brethren of Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois, will meet at Adeline, Ill., on the Chicago & Pacific branch of the Milwaukee & St. Paul R. R., on Friday, July 1, and continue over Sunday.

By order of Committee.

J. M. CHUFFELTY.

The Semi-annual Meeting of the Christian Association of Iowa will convene at Irving, Tama county, the Lord willing on Thursday, July 7, 1881, and hold over Sunday. It will be a tent meeting, and brethren throughout the state are cordially invited to be present with their tents. Churches please remember to send one delegate for every ten members or fraction over five. Brethren from abroad are invited to be with us. A good meeting is hoped for. Brethren Reed, Stephenson and Whitesit have been invited to help minister to the inward man. Provisions will be on the ground for sale to provide for the outward man. Let us have a general turnout to this meeting, the inclement weather having interfered with the last two meetings.

O. H. CROWN, Pres.

JOHN FITZ, Sec.

The Church of God of Montague and Wise Counties, Texas, will hold their annual Conference at Valentine Springs in Montague County, commencing Friday, August 12, 1881, at four o'clock, P. M. The place of meeting is four miles south of Forestburg, sixteen miles south of St. Joe, sixteen miles southeast of Montaguetown, thirty miles west of Gainsville, and twenty miles north of Decatur. We invite every body that feels an interest in the word of God to come over. Brethren coming from a distance will go to brethren Hodges, Grimes, or Sowers, who live near the meeting place. We want all the preaching brethren we can get. Any preaching brother who can come will please address me at Sunset, Wise Co., Tex., and we will help him come.

T. T. DOYAL.

Wayland's Memoir of Judson.

Dr. JUDSON'S VIEW OF CONVERSION.

Dr. Judson believed that when any man becomes a Christian, or real disciple of Christ, a specific moral change takes place in his spiritual nature. The essential elements of this change are, a deep and universal sorrow for the sins of his past life, an entire renunciation of all hope of salvation by any merits of his own, an unreserved surrendor of himself to Christ, relying on him alone for pardon and acceptance with God, and an earnest desire to live henceforth in obedience to all the requirements of the gospel, and that these spiritual exercises terminate in a radical change of moral character, leading to a pure and to a holy life.

The trustees of the cemetary at Jordans, in Buckinghamshire, England, where rest the remains of William Penn, have definitely set at rest the hopes of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania people, by refusing to entertain any plan for the removal of his dust to this country. It is over 150 years, since Penn was buried, and an attempt to move the body, if at all practicable would be without precedent. The sect of Quakers has always allowed its love of simplicity to prevent any display at funerals and the graves of its members are generally unmarked. Many Quakers in England and America would be scandalized by the removal of Penn's body and its pompous reinterment, beneath the dome of the gorgeous new public building, in Philadelphia. It is only a few years since his great grandson marked the spot where his body was placed with a simple headstone, bearing the inscription, "William Penn, 1718."

Poetry.

"IF WE KNEW."

If we knew, when walking thoughtless
Through the noisy, crowded way,
That some pearl of wondrous whiteness
Close beside our pathway lay,
We would pause where now we hasten,
We would often look around,
Lest our careless feet should trample
Some rare jewel to the ground.

If we knew what fortune were faltering
For the shade that we should fling,
If we knew what lips were parching
For the water we could bring;
We would haste with eager footsteps,
We would work with willing hands,
Bearing cups of cooling water,
Planting rows of shading palms.

If we knew, when friends around us
Closely press to say good-bye,
Which among the lips that kissed us,
First would breathe the darksome lie,
We would clasp our arms about them,
Looking on them through our tears,
Tender words of love eternal
We would whisper in their ears.

If we knew what lives are darkened
By some thoughtless word of ours,
Which had ever late among them
Like the frost among the flowers!
Oh, with what sincere repentings,
With what anguish of regret,
While our eyes were overflowing,
We would cry, forgive! forget!

If we knew! alas! and do we Ever care or seek to know
Whether bitter herbs or roses
In our neighbors' gardens grow?
God forgive us! lest hereafter
Our hearts break to hear him say,
Careless child, I never knew you,
Pass my presence far away.

Communications.

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH.

MEMBER THREE.

J. CAMERON.

THE NEW COVENANT TO BE MADE WITH THE HOUSES OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.

Having presented a testimony from each of the prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel by way of a sample of the prophetic word as to the final restoration of Israel to their own land, I would ask the reader's attention to another testimony from Jeremiah on a point contained in the passage quoted from Ezekiel, that concerning the everlasting covenant.

I deem this an important point from the fact that it is treated of by a writer in the New Testament, whose testimony shall next come under consideration.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast. And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord. In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge. But every one shall die for his own iniquity; every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord; but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more. Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves roar; The Lord of hosts is his name; if those ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me forever. Thus saith the Lord, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth be searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord." Jer. xxxi. 27–37.

Notice here that under this new covenant the sins of the nation—the house of Israel and the house of Judah—are to be remembered no more by Jehovah, and also that Israel's ultimate permanance as a NATION is to be equalled only by the stability of the ordinances of heaven—the sun, moon, and stars.

Judging from the terms of this prediction as quoted from Jeremiah, it would never strike an impartial reader that this covenant was to have any direct relation to any other than the nation of Israel.

"I will make a new covenant with the HOUSE OF ISRAEL and with the HOUSE OF JUDAH; not according to the covenant that I made with THEIR fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt."

This new covenant then is to be made with the descendents of those who left Egypt.

But it may be supposed by some that in Heb. viii., this covenant is transferred from Israel natural to Israel spiritual—so-called.

Let us see the precise object the apostle had in view in quoting this prediction from Jeremiah. Paul had been showing the superiority of Christ to Moses, and in doing so mentioned the fact that he was "the mediator of a BETTER covenant." Now Moses was mediator of the covenant made between Jehovah and the nation of Israel at Sinai. But how could it be shown that the Mosaic covenant was inferior to that of which Christ was mediator? by the testimony of one of their own prophets. Jeremiah, who had predicted the establishment of a new and better covenant between God and the whole house of Israel, and so afforded the most conclusive evidence of the imperfection of the first. But let us hear the apostle himself:—

"But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant which was established upon better promises. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then had no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenants and regarded them not, saith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel, after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord, for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old, is ready to vanish away." Heb. viii. 6–13.

But has this covenant no relation to the church? some may be ready to ask. To this it must be replied, yes it has; not directly, however, but indirectly. It has been alleged to be "a great error to look for the restoration of the fleshly seed of Abraham who rejected the new or second covenant when it was offered to them by Peter on the day of Pentecost, and afterwards by the apostles wherever they went. On account of their rejecting it, destruction came upon the nation to the uttermost. They cannot again have it presented for their acceptance nationally, seeing that the middle wall of partition has been broken down, and in Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Greek." But there never was a greater mistake than Peter or his fellow-apostles ever made any offer of anything to any people in a national capacity. They had no authority for doing such a thing. Their commission was to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature—that is, as individuals.

On Pentecost the new covenant is not once mentioned; and at the gate of the temple a covenant is referred to, but it is a covenant which had been made with their fathers hundreds of years before.

On the other hand, however, the rejection of the Messiah by the Jews a few weeks before was a national act. The Sanhedrim met as the recognized executive authority of the nation on two occasions; first to consult as to the death of Jesus; second to put him on trial, and adjudge him worthy of death. See John xi. 47; Matthew xxvi. 59–66.

If the nation were to be offered forgiveness under the New Covenant for this act, the offer must have been made to the Sanhedrim, and not to a gathering of individual Jews as at Pentecost. But we have no record of any such offer.

Besides, it is worthy of note that whatever was offered to the Jews on Pentecost, they cannot justly be said to have rejected it. Three thousand accepted it in the same day: and a short time afterwards the same offer was accepted by five thousand; and a little later still it is recorded that a "great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." But in all this there is nothing national, but a considerable number of individual Jews accepted Jesus as the Christ.

The New Covenant, however, was provisionally dedicated or purified by the blood of Jesus. But in the wisdom of God this blood was to effect other objects besides the dedication of the covenant, namely, the remission of sins; and that not merely the sins of the nation as intimated in the prophecy, but, as indicated by Jesus at the institution of the supper, the sins of all who should become his. Hence Paul quotes the portion referring to the remission of sins to show that where there is perfect provision made for this (as there was in the offering of the body of Jesus once for all) there is no necessity for any more offering for sin. Heb. x. 14–18.

It is thus evident that Paul does not quote the prophecy to show that it was fulfilled, but simply to show the superiority of Christ to Moses, both as being the mediator of a better covenant, and as by his one offering making perfect forever them that are sanctified. The parties with whom the covenant is to be made, so far from being explained by the apostle to be any other than the literal descendants of Abraham, are expressly said to be "the house of Israel and the house of Judah," and the prophecy is introduced by these words of the apostle, "FOR FINDING FAULT WITH THEM, HE SAITH. Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant," etc. A reference to the prophecy shows that the fault was with the people of Israel and with no other people, and so Paul is thus seen to have had no other idea in his mind than that which was in the mind of the prophet, namely, that the new covenant was to be made with the very people named in the prophecy—the twelve tribes of Israel, who had previously been defaulters.

But still more clearly to show that this prophecy has as yet had no fulfilment, it is only necessary to observe the time stated by the prophet at which it is to be accomplished. The passage we are considering forms part of a continuous prophecy beginning (chap. xxx.) "Thus speaketh the Lord God of Israel, saying, Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book; for, lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people ISRAEL and JUDAH, saith the Lord, and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it. And these are the words that the Lord spake concerning ISRAEL and JUDAH. For thus saith the Lord," etc.

In chapters xxx. and xxxi. the words concerning Israel and Judah are continued. At verse 33, of chap. xxxi. it is written, "But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel. AFTER THOSE DAYS, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people."

Now this is the new covenant, and the time of its coming into operation is said to be "After those days." After what days? Certainly after the days mentioned in various parts of the preceding "words that the Lord spake concerning Israel and Judah," and which I have quoted above from chap. xxx. 3, and which are reiterated at chap. xxxi. 27, which has also already been quoted.

Observe here the explicit statement that it is after the house of Israel and the house of Judah have been builded and planted in their own land, that the writing of the law in their hearts is to be effected under the new covenant.

Before leaving this important testimony it may be well to note how strictly the "God of Israel" has hedged round the promise of Israel's ultimate restoration against being misunderstood. By the last passage quoted it is expressly declared to be the self-same people that God had watched over to pluck up and to break down, and to throw down, that are to be again planted. And more than this even, the same faithfulness to his word that caused Jehovah to pluck up and to break down, is pledged for the building and planting: "LIKE AS I HAVE WATCHED over them to pluck up . . . SO WILL I WATCH over them to build and to plant saith the Lord."

This is repeated in different terms in chap. xxxii. 42, "For thus saith the Lord, Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them," and should be accepted by every candid inquirer as the strongest assurance that, however much appearances may be against it, God will yet be justified before all the earth in his choice of Israel as his own peculiar nation.

It is proper to explain here that while the new covenant is to be established AFTER the people are restored to the land, it is pretty plain that the old covenant does not entirely vanish away until the establishment of the new Deut. xxx. shows that the final restoration is to be effected on condition that the people adhere to the provisions of the old covenant; for, says Moses, "when thou shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice according to all that I command thee this day, that THEN the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity."

Here is an interesting prophecy of Ezekiel which may serve to throw some light on this point:—

"As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: and I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein you are scattered, and with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant; and I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me; I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord." Ezekiel xx. 33–38.

The covenant here spoken of is in operation while Israel is in "the wilderness of the people," and before they enter their own land; and as it is termed neither the new nor everlasting covenant, it must be the covenant originally made with the generation that came out of Egypt, and was, along with the prophecy of Moses, re-delivered to the generation that actually entered Canaan.

It is worthy of suggestion, here, that this temporary re-delivery of the Mosaic covenant to Israel during their re-gathering, shall be part of the work of Elijah the prophet, who is to "restore all things," and of whom the last of Israel's prophets uttered the following remarkable prediction, forming the closing words of the Old Testament:

"Behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts. Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments. Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord; and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." Mal. iv. 1–6.

CHAPTER IN EXPERIENCE.

S. ROXANA WINCH.

"I love the Lord because he has heard my voice, and my supplications, because he has inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live."

Since grasping the precious truths of the Bible, relating to Christ's near coming and reign, in all their grandeur and beauty as a matter of personal interest to me, it has been my constant and earnest prayer, that I might be made an humble instrument in God's hands for blessing and saving men,—not because I am worthy, not because of any fitness in and of myself, but because God has graciously looked upon me, in my lost and undone condition, and, giving Jesus as a propitiation for my sins, has taken them all away. That wondrous love melts my heart. I could not save myself. I could in no way reach, through my own works, the glories of the coming kingdom.

No robe, that I might buy, would hide my guilt, no law would give me life. But God proffered One who could save. He showed me the works, that if done, would bring me to the glory. He gave me a robe that was washed in blood, to cover and justify, and reached out to me as a gracious gift, the life that is to come.

Can I hide all this in my heart? Can I refuse to do aught for him who has done so much for me? Oh! I feel as if, were all my life spent in working for him, I would even then be an unprofitable servant. I can do nothing to repay him for the great love whereby he has worked out my salvation, but that love constrains me, to make every effort in my power to bring others to the cross.

I have had my eyes opened to see the riches of God's grace, and I want other eyes to be opened. I have come to feel the worthlessness of all that the world seeks after, and enjoys, and I want others to realise it too. Better the beggar's rags now, if we may have the riches of the by and by. Fine houses and splendid apparel will be but dust, when Jesus comes. Vast estates cannot be held by any tenure of time. All things be counted but dross if we would win Christ.

I am so glad that I ever heard of Jesus, that I was shown the path of life through him—was led to believe, that in him is the resurrection and the life—the glory, the kingdom, the everlasting blessing of the ages to come,—that God gave me the courage to take the first step in the path of obedience, and the strength to go out in my faltering way to work in his vineyard. For the last two or three years, but more particularly during the last month, it has been the great desire of my heart to know, from the Lord, that my offerings and sacrifices were accepted at his hands.

Like the prophets of old, I would prove him but once, that I might be sure, he was using me for his glory, and he encouraged to go on. But when the answered prayer was mine, it was too much, I sobbed and cried like a child.

I had told the blessed news to a dear young friend and with her arms around me and tears in her eyes she had said, "I am so glad to have known you, so glad to have found the truth." For this, I thanked my Heavenly Father again and again—it was the first proof that my prayer had been heard.

A few days later, a letter came from a young sister in Baltimore, telling me how my words had helped and comforted her, and shortly thereafter another, picturing how rough railroad men in the car shops of that city were touched and helped and cheered by what I had written for the paper.

During the time intervening between these two letters, my cousin came. Her early life had not been blessed by religious training. Her husband had no faith in either God or the Bible. In all the years of her married life, there was nothing to help her upward. She tried to believe in the salvation of all, but there was no satisfaction, no rest, no foundation of trust in the view.

Sometime during the past summer she fell into the slough of despond. The faith, already so weak, seemed forsaking her altogether. She was in utter despair.

Just at that time some extra RESTITUTIONS were sent me. God put it into my heart to mail one to Julia. Her eye caught an article in it (she does not remember by whom written) on the destiny of man. It created a perfect revolution of feeling. Here was something reasonable, something that her faith could lay hold of with assurance. God was not going to torment his creatures forever and ever, but would willingly save all who would come to him through Christ. Jesus was the resurrection and the life, and it was right that he should be the King of earth, in the grand and nearing future. She saw the glory of the coming reign, the inestimable weight of the treasure laid up for the child of God, and all earthly things became but as dust in the balance. The things that she once desired:—the grand and beautiful earthy home, with all its pleasant surroundings,—that it seemed to her heart would make her perfectly happy, was nothing now,—nothing to "the city of golden pavements," where her God was all in all.

Do you wonder that I rejoice with her, that she has found the way, the truth, and the life?—rejoice that God has heard and answered my prayer?

Oh! thank him, I thank him, I thank him, that he has given me such great proof of his love. My heart is full of melody and praise. I love him because he has heard my voice and my supplications and has inclined his ear unto me. As long as I live, I will call upon him. I will praise him while I have any being.

And I know dear brothers and sisters, that you will rejoice with me, and be encouraged to go on, having this new assurances that our God is one that hears and answers prayer. If made in accordance with his will. He will not give us a stone when we ask for bread, but will fill us with good till our cup shall overflow.

It is right that we should sometimes tell in this way our own personal experience in being led—that other hearts may come to trust in God as one that is still caring for and blessing his children. He wants us to feel that he is near, and that all the time, as we go forth in accordance with his word, to meet and sing and pray together, or to teach the precious truths that we hold, that he is with us and will uphold.

For sometime before our little church was organized in Pierceton, I felt more than ever before, that it was my duty to work for God. I said to myself—"I am only an earthen vessel, but God can make use of me. He has filled me with water that has quenched my thirst, and I may lead others to the well; I have tasted the living bread; I may break it to the perishing; I have unloaded my burden at the cross, and I can invite others to come, that their burdens may fall; I have felt the greatness of the love shown me; I would lead others to feel it. I have been taught in the schools of sorrow and affliction. I would have others learn the same blessed lesson. I have proved the strength of the Christian's armor, I want others to put it on. I have been tempted and overcome. and I would have others overcome. I have fallen and been raised, I want others to trust. I have proved for myself that the gospel is God's power unto salvation, I want others to make the same test of its value. I have found help and healing, I must bring others to the one who is mighty to save, to the uttermost all that come unto God by him; show them the bread, the love, the cross, the pardon."

The "Go work in my vineyard," is a command enjoined upon me. It does not matter that I am slow of speech and of a faltering tongue—that words and tongue fail me—I must obey orders, I have bread and I must feed the starving—there are many sick, I must deal out to them the healing balm.

I see the danger of man, I note the swift approach of the hour of doom that shall seal the destiny of those whom I know and love, I hear the coming storm, and I would fain guide them to a hiding-place where they may be safe.

I can do but little, but that little must be done. No word must be left unsaid that may bless and save.

It is a solemn responsibility that rests upon me, and not upon me only, but upon all them also who have named the name of Christ. Everyone is individually responsible to God, for the manner in which his work is done. In some place, or way, the lamp of life must be held up by his hands, that the lost may see, and turn back to God.

We know the uncertainty of life, the importance of the judgment; and the danger of putting off the day of salvation, and thinking of this, with what force and emphasis should all our appeals be made? How should we urge men to flee to Christ? In season and out of season should the message of the Lord be sounded in the ears of men.

No shame, nor fear of persecution, should stand in the way, "we must fill up in our own bodies the sufferings of Christ." We may come into trial, we may have our names made as the filth and the offscouring of the earth. We may be brought very low, but it is all that we may lift others up. God would have us humble, he would try, and discipline and trouble, that we may know him and may know ourselves. We can look up out of the darkness and the toil to him. It is better that "we walk in the dark with God than to walk alone in the light."

Our sympathies can only go out for the suffering, when we have suffered ourselves. In trial and sorrow we gather the fruit that shall endure unto life eternal. While losing earthly things, we lay up treasure beyond. The heart that has been under God's anvil, is the one to pour oil and wine into other broken hearts. In enduring the shame comes the greater courage, in bearing the anguish—the strength to work for the miserable, the poor, the lost.

We bear precious seed. It does not matter about the vessel in which it was carried, God's strength is made perfect in weakness. The grasp of an Almighty hand can bring into tune the feeblest instrument. The Most High can make the child, the fisherman, the gatherer of sycamore fruit, or the herdsman of the mountains, all subservient to his glory.

The word of the kingdom may be sown by the humblest child of God. He who has found the rich treasure can tell how he found it. He who has been to the feast can tell others about it. He who knows for himself, in his own life, and heart and mind, the worth of the gospel, will not hesitate to speak. In some way the blessed truth will burn its way out, in some way it will come to the ears of men of what God has done for him. All these things must be known by experience. We must have proved God, or we can never touch the hearts of men. We must have believed, have obeyed, and have felt the grace of pardon, before we can "go weeping to our toil," and sow the seed "that is to bring forth abundantly for the eternal harvest days."

Then we may not shirk the work that God has put upon us. In whatever way he calls us to work we must obey. Step by step we must move forward. We may see no results, he may hide from our eyes all that we have done. We may never know what God has wrought through us, until, beyond the toil and the tears, we see those whom he has seen fit to bring into the fold, through our instrumentality—safe in the kingdom. If we save but one in a lifetime, that one will be a crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus. That one will be saved forever, and will be a source of joy through all coming ages.

God chooses the foolish things of this world to confound the wise. The bent and infirm old woman could baffle and confuse the brazen infidel, "Our Leader never lost a battle." The message that we bear is his, and with such a leader and such a message, we may expect to win. "He might have chosen princes for his work, but he has chosen us," that the glory may be his. "The base things of the world and things which are despised hath God chosen * * * that no flesh may glorify in his sight." We are weak and all our glorifying must be done in him. Of ourselves we can do nothing. Through Christ that strengtheneth us we can do all things.

Then my dear brethren and sisters, stand ready to do God's bidding. Let the flesh be crucified, the will subdued. Do not say the burden is too great, the work too hard. Say to God, "Here I am, send me," and go where he sends, willingly and gladly doing the appointed work. Fear not the rich, nor turn aside from the poor. Your voices may be faint at first, but as you go on, the warning notes will ring out like a trumpet's blast. "The day of the Lord is near, it hasteth greatly!" "Escape for your lives—tarry not in all the plain!"

Ears will be found to listen, hearts will be made to feel—other tongues will proclaim through your means, the unsearchable riches of Christ. You sing "I love to tell the story of Jesus and his love." Do you mean it? Do you love to tell it to those who need to have it told? Do you do all you can, each one of you, to spread the truth? You know that it is the truth that saves—that unbelief reaches never God's rest—that theories and systems and creeds and traditions of men, have in them no power to heal.

Teach men to build upon the living rock, to keep the sayings and commandments of Jesus, that they may have a house that will never fall, then will you be approved of God, and be given abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

My address until further notice will be 366 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

THANATOPSIS,

—OR—

The First and the Second Death Scripturally Considered.

—BY WILEY JONES.—

A neat tract of 36 pages. Price, one copy 10c.; 12 copies $1; 100 copies $5. Postage stamps taken for fractions of a dollar.

Send orders to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker confesses in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a heavenly bond-word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c.; cloth 60c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MAN

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE.

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. H. TICE.

This is the article that appeared in THE HERALD OF JAN. 26, 1881, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 12 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

Poetry.

THE OLD EARTH.

"The earth given signs of age, disease, and sickness. It yields its increase grudgingly, and demands an exhorbitant fee beforehand, in toil and sweat from the husbandman. It has all terms, or paroxysms, when it rouses the ocean into a tempest, and makes sport of navies, strewing the shore with the wrecks and carcasses of men. It rocks a continent, or sinks an island; shaking massive cities into countless fragments, and burying its wretched inhabitants in indiscriminate ruin! anon it writhes and groans in mortal agony, and finds relief only by disgorging its fiery bowels, burying cities and villages in burning graves. The earth is old and feeble, and must needs groan on, until it renews its prime."—Maurice and Doolittles of the Present Life.

Old Mother Earth is wan and pale,
Her face is wrinkled o'er;
Her locks are blanched, her heart is cold,
Her garments stiff with gore:
With furrowed brow and dim red eyes,
With trembling steps and slow,
She marks the course that first she trod,
Six thousand years ago!

The Earth is old, the Earth is cold,
She shivers and complains:
How many winters fierce and chill,
Have racked her limbs with pains!
Direst tempests, lightning, flood, and flame,
Have scarred her visage on,
That scarce we deem she bloom'd so fair,
Six thousand years ago!

Yet cometh now the youthful Earth,
And lightly tripped along
To music from a starry choir,
Whose sweet celestial song
Through Nature's temple echoed wild,
And soft as streamlets flow,
While sister spheres replied with her,
Six thousand years ago!

And many happy children there
Upon her breast reclined,
The young Earth smiled with aspect fair,
The heavens were bright and kind;
The azure cope above her head
In love seemed bending low;
O happy was the youthful Earth,
Six thousand years ago!

Alas! these children of the earth
With hate began to burn,
And Murder stained her beauteous robe,
And made the young Earth mourn.
And age, heavy age, still
Have bowed with gathering woe
The form of her where life was joy,
Six thousand years ago!

Old Earth! dear Earth! thy tender heart
Bewails thy chosen ones;
Thou look'st upon the myriad graves
That hide their gathered bones;
For them, by day and night, thy tears
Unceasingly must flow;
Death chilled the fountain-head of life
Six thousand years ago!

Old Earth! old Earth! above thy head,
The heavens are dark and chill,
The sun looks coldly on thee now,
The stars shine pale and still;
No more the heavenly symphonies
Through listening ether flow,
Which swelled upon creation's earth,
Six thousand years ago!

Weep not in bitter grief, O Earth!
Weep not in hopelessness!
From out the heavens "a still small voice"
Whispers returning peace.
Thy tears are precious in the sight
Of One who marks their flow,
Who purposes of mercy formed,
Six thousand years ago!

Thy days of grief are numbered all,
Their sum will soon be told;
The joy of youth, the smile of God,
Shall bless thee as of old,
Shall shed a purer, holier light
Upon thy prayerful brow,
'Twas beamed upon thy morning hour
Six thousand years ago!

Thy chosen ones shall live again,
A countless, tearless throng,
To make creation's voice anew,
And swell the choral song.
Go, Earth! go wipe thy falling tears,
Forget thy heavy woe;
Hope died not with thy first-born sons,
Six thousand years ago!
—Knickerbocker.

Communications.

TRUTH IS MIGHTY AND WILL PREVAIL.

JOSEPH MESSIMORE.

Editor Restitution:

Having, the other day, received a notice from Brother Fenimore that the brethren at Argos had decided that I should write out, for THE RESTITUTION, a report of the discussion held at Argos from the 25th to the 20th of April last, between Brother Fenimore and Mr. Drennen, I feel it my duty to comply with their request so far as my ability will admit. Yet, not having any notes as data to base such report on, I cannot promise anything like a full report, as I will have to depend entirely on my memory.

I would say then, that the result of the first proposition, "Resolved, That trine immersion is essential to Christian baptism," was as follows:

Mr. Drennen opened the discussion by reading the proposition, and saying that he was going to affirm and prove this proposition beyond all successful contradiction.

He then started out, and devoted his first half hour in proving the existence of one eternal God as the Creator and preserver of the universe: and that he consisted in three persons, which constituted the one God.

To all of which Brother Fenimore then replied, by saying that the Father and the Son were one in the same sense that the apostles, as well as all true believers are one. For the proof of which he cited John xvii. 11, 20–22.

"Holy Father, keep through thine own name, those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are," "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." "And the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one." Showing that this argument was stronger in favor of single, than trine immersion.

2. Mr. Drennen's next argument was based on the commission as given by Matthew according to the common version. He claimed that this was an elliptical sentence, and that if the ellipsis were filled up, it would read thus:—

"Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and baptizing them in the name of the Son, and baptizing them in the name of the Holy Ghost."

He commented on the text thus:—Baptizing them in the name of the Father. And in the name of the Son; what? And in the name of the Holy Ghost; what? Just as if the text read, Baptizing them in the names of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

But Brother Fenimore showed very conclusively there are no three names referred to in the text, to baptize in, or into: for this very best of all reasons: that the noun "name" stands in the singular number, and is not repeated before each proposition. I presume that Mr. Drennen saw this: hence his persisting in saying that this was an elliptical sentence; so that he might add in the noun name.

Brother Fenimore, however, showed very clearly that it was no ellipsis. And to make his case doubly strong he brought to his aid Dr. Conant, one of the best scholars and linguists in the known world.

Showing conclusively that the expression, "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," is a single complex adverbial element, of the second class, modifying "baptizing." And the three prepositional adjuncts, "of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," constitute one complex adjective element, modifying the noun "name;" thus showing by whose authority the baptizing was to be done.

Thus, Brother Fenimore showed plainly that we are not to be baptized separately into the name of the Father; then into the name of the Son; and lastly, into the name of the Holy Spirit. And this he very beautifully illustrated by a reference to a firm which formerly operated in Argos, viz. Railsback, Caffel & Co.

He showed that an agent doing business for this firm, would simply do such business in the name of the firm Railsback, Caffel & Co.,—and not, first in the name of Railsback, then in the name of Caffel, and lastly, in the name of Co. Thus, having to make the contract three times, with three separate individuals respectively. This would be sheer nonsense.

But having utterly failed in proving trine immersion from this text, Mr. Drennen next referred to 1 Peter iii. 21.

3. Mr. Drennen claimed that, as the ark was three stories high, and as the upper story constituted Noah's department, he had to pass through the two lower departments to get to the light in salvation's room. And that therefore we must be baptized into the name of the Father, to represent Noah's entering into the basement of the ark. And then we must be baptized into the name of the Son, to represent his entering into the second story. And thirdly, we must be baptized into the name of the Holy Ghost, in order to represent his entering into the third story, or "salvation's room."

Wonder whether there was no salvation in either of the other departments! If not; how were the beasts and the birds saved?

Brother Fenimore then asked him how he proceeded with his candidate after he had baptized him in the name of Father. How did he get him out of that name, in order to baptize him into the name of the Son? And again; how did he get him out of the name of the Son, in order to baptize him into the name of the Holy Ghost?

Brother Fenimore then supposed that Mr. Drennen left his candidate in the name of the Holy Ghost, in order to represent Noah's salvation in the ark's upper story.

He then cited Acts iv. 10–12, where Peter declares that there is no other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved; but the name of Jesus the Christ.

He also showed that Peter's comparison, or similitude did not consist between the different departments of the ark, and the number of actions in Christian baptism; but in Noah's being saved from the antediluvian world, by water, and the sinner's being saved from sin. Citing Peter's language, "eight souls were saved, (in the ark,) by water. The like figure whereunto baptism doth also now save us," 1 Peter iii. 20, 21.

4. Mr. Drennen next claimed that the Lord's suffering being called a baptism, was indisputable evidence of trine immersion. As it is said by some of the evangelists, that while in the garden of Gethsemane, Jesus fell on his face and prayed three times.

Brother Fenimore admitting the figure of immersion, but denying the inference of trine, or triple immersion: from the fact that the Lord's suffering was a unit—a continued scene of suffering. Commencing in mental suffering—anguish and agony, some days before his betrayal, and ended when he said, It is finished: inasmuch that on the night of his betrayal, while Judas went to gather up the mob to take him, he went a little ways from his disciples to pray; and this he did three times. And Matthew says that he fell on his face the first time as he prayed.

Brother Fenimore very truly said that his going to prayer did not constitute his suffering: but that it was on account of his suffering that he prayed the Father, that if it were possible, to let this cup pass. Hence the inference was stronger in favor of single than trine immersion.

5. Mr. Drennen's next argument was inferred from 1 Cor. x. 2, where Paul speaks of the children of Israel having been baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea. Or as Luther renders it, "With the cloud and with the sea."

Now, in order to make an argument out of this text, Mr. Drennen reasons as follows, viz:

That there were three actions in accomplishing this baptism, namely:

1. The congealing of the water.
2. The Israelites marching into the sea.
3. The cloud passing over them.

He did not have three baptisms here, but simply three actions constituting one baptism.

Brother Fenimore replied that there was but one baptism or immersion in the case; and so far as the number of actions to bring it about, was concerned, there were even more than three. As for instance:

1. Moses stretched out his rod pointing to the sea.
2. The east wind blew.
3. The water separated and rolled back.
4. The water was congealed.
5. The cloud rose up from behind the congregation and passed over them.
6. While the cloud was over them they marched in between the walls of congealed water; and thus they were immersed, by six actions.

Hence no proof for trine immersion, in this figure.

And right here I remember another of Mr. Drennen's arguments, which was as follows, viz:

He claimed that the Greek verb baptizo was a frequentative verb. That is; it always represented a plurality of actions. And as proof of this assertion, he cited the case of Naaman—the leper. Recorded 2 Kings v. 10–14. Text reads thus:—"And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean." . . . . "Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God," etc.

Mr. Drennen said that this was the only occurrence of the word baptizo in the Septuagint version of the Old Testament Scriptures. And a more suicidal effort he could scarcely have made than to cite the above text.

It was very conclusively shown by Brother Fenimore, that if, as Mr. Drennen argued, the word baptizo implies a plurality of actions, so that trine immersion could at all be inferred from it, Naaman must have plunged himself twenty-one times in Jordan, to constitute seven baptisms.

And Mr. Drennen, in order to be consistent with his teaching, when he takes his candidate into the water to baptize him into the name of the Father, he must dip him three times. And then to baptize into the name of the Son, dip him three times more. And lastly, to baptize into the name of the Holy Ghost, still dip him three times more.

But Mr. Drennen also referred to John iii. 5. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of God."

Now, says Mr. Drennen, as in a natural birth there must be a begottal, conception, and a coming forth, so in baptism there must also be three actions to correspond with those three acts. And this is represented in trine immersion. To which Brother Fenimore replied as follows:

If there is any analogy between a natural birth and baptism, it must consist in this: That through the preaching of the word, the seed is sown in the heart, faith lays hold on it, and thus the individual is begotten by the word of truth, and in baptism, "Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." James i. 18; 1 Peter i. 23.

But lastly: Mr. Drennen inferred trine immersion from the title written by Pilate and put on the cross over Jesus:—"JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS."

Because the above was written in three different languages, he inferred trine immersion from it.

I have forgotten what disposition Brother Fenimore made of this, or whether he noticed it at all. But certainly it has as much bearing on baptism as the tenth verse of the sixth chapter of Genesis; which reads as follows:

"And Noah begat three sons: Shem, Ham, and Japheth."

Powerful argument!

This completes Mr. Drennen's Scriptural arguments in favor of trine immersion. The balance of his time he devoted in proving, by history that trine immersion has been practiced from the apostles' time down to the present. Or in other words, as he said, to trace trine immersion, through history, from the present time, to the apostles'.

Brother Fenimore showed from Mr. Drennen's own authors that it could not be traced back further than to the commencement of the third century, and that in connection with trine immersion, any amount of corruption and perversion of the true gospel was found in the church then. He also showed that even the earliest of Drennen's authors that mentions trine immersion condemned it himself in admitting that it was doing somewhat more than the Lord required. Thus it appears that Mr. Drennen utterly failed in every attempt he made to sustain the proposition.

Lastly, I will give a short synopsis of Brother Fenimore's negative arguments on this proposition.

His first argument consisted in the fact that Jesus, right in immediate connection with his last commission to his apostles, commanded them to tarry in the city of Jerusalem till they should be endued with power from on high; that is, till they should receive the Holy Spirit. The Comforter that Jesus had promised them: and which should guide and lead them into all truth; and bring all things to their remembrance whatever he had told them. And now having gone to Jerusalem, and waited for this promise till the day of Pentecost; when they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak as the Spirit gave them utterance.

They now having their understanding opened, that they might understand the Scriptures, and having received the Holy Spirit, to guide and lead them into all truth, it is remarkably strange indeed, that we have no account of any of them ever baptising into three separate names, as Mr. Drennen claimed the proper mode of baptism to be. He showed conclusively that there were no three names referred to, or implied in Matthew's rendition of the commission: that all there was in it was simply an expression of the authority of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. And this authority being all vested in Jesus: Peter, on Pentecost commanded the convicted Pentecostians to "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ." Acts ii. 38; x. 48. "He commanded Cornelius and his household to be baptized in the name of the Lord." Acts viii. 14–16. When the apostles heard that Samaria had received the word, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Spirit: for as yet he was fallen on none of them: "Only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Brother Fenimore's second argument was founded on the fact that Christian baptism symbolizes the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus, the Christ. And as proof, he cited the following texts:

Rom. vi. 3, 4. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."

Col. ii. 12, 13. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." "And you, being dead in your sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, forgiving you all trespasses."

From the foregoing Brother Fenimore very logically inferred that, as we bury the dead, and not the living, in order to carry out the figure it would be necessary for the sinner to become dead to sin—stop sinning by a reformation of life: then in the act of baptism be buried in the similitude of Christs burial, in which he is quickened or made alive, and comes forth, or is raised from the watery tomb, to a new life: or, "To walk in newness of life."

Then, in order to exhibit more clearly to the audience, the fallacy of trine immersion: put the following questions:

Was ever the practice of burying the dead three times, known anywhere? In Miami county, where I live, it is the practice, said he, to bury the dead but once.

When Mr. Drennen takes his candidate into the water for to baptize him, and dips him once, is he now quickened or made alive? If so, why does he bury him the second and third times?

He said it did not look reasonable to bury a resurrected—living person. But if the individual is not quickened—made alive in being buried the first time—why raise him up? Why raise a dead person, simply for to bury him the second, or third time? Thus showing that trine immersion entirely spoiled the figure.

Brother Fenimore's third negative argument was founded on Rom. vi. 5. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

Here Brother Fenimore asked whether it would look sensible for a farmer to go to work and plant his corn, then dig it all up, plant it a second time, then dig it up again, and plant it a third time. Those, together with the absence of either precept or example for such a practice, were the chief objections of Brother Fenimore against trine immersion as Christian baptism.

The foregoing report of the first proposition of the discussion held at Argos, Ind., April 25th, between Mr. Drennen and Brother Fenimore, is respectfully submitted.

Selections.

FALL OF THE TEMPLE.

The Jews who were in the Temple uttered a piercing cry of horror, when they first beheld the fire issuing from that sanctuary, which they esteemed the most august and most holy place upon earth, in which all their feelings of veneration and piety were concentrated, and with the preservation of which they had lately associated their strongest hopes of deliverance from the arms of their heathen invaders. The terrified spectators in the city returned the lamentation when they saw the holy mountain enveloped in flames; and many, whose strength and power of utterance had been almost destroyed by the famine, opened their lips on a more in shrieks of uncontrollable anguish. The hills around Jerusalem echoed the dreadful tumult which was made by the noise of the irresistible flames, the crash of falling buildings, the shouts of infuriated legions, and the groans of those who sank into the conflagration, or were transfixed by the sword. An unsparing carnage was made of many thousands of the Jews; for the Temple, it should be remembered, was the place of worship not merely of a single city or province, but of a whole nation; and a great multitude had assembled in it this very day, trusting to the declaration of an impostor or enthusiast, who had promised them that they should receive some extraordinary tokens of deliverance. The impious rulers had suborned many false prophets, for the sake of reviving the hopes and supporting the courage of the people; and now the end of their delusions had arrived. Josephus says that the blood which was shed seemed sufficient to extinguish the fire, while the number of the slain appeared greater than that of the slayers, so prodigious were the heaps of dead that over covered the ground. Old and young, women and children, soldiers and priests, were massacred indiscriminately.

The seditious leaders with their troops fled, during the tumultuous conflict, into the outer court of the Temple, and afterwards escaped into the Upper City. Some of the priests defended the Holy House until the last moment, tearing up the spikes which were on the top of it and hurling them at the Romans. As the conflagration spread two of the most eminent threw themselves into the flames, and the rest retreated to a wall, which was eight cubits thick, where they were able for a time to defy the attacks of the Romans. Famine, however, compelled them to surrender in a few days, and Titus refused to spare their lives, alleging that the priests ought not to survive the Temple in which they served. At the first assault, about six thousand of the mixed multitude who had been surprised in the Temple took refuge in one of the cloisters of the outer court; but the exasperated Romans set fire to it, and forced them to perish in its ruins. They began to burn all the cloisters, gates, and other parts of the spacious edifice, which had hitherto resisted their destructive attacks. Even the treasury chamber, where the Jews had deposited great stores of money, vestments, and other valuable property, were consumed. But the love of plunder was not quite absorbed in the rage of destruction; for the soldiers enriched themselves to such an extent, that in Syria the price of the pound weight of gold was diminished one-half.

A LETTER

TO A BAPTIST MINISTER ON THE LITERALITY OF

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN,

The Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the

THRONE OF DAVID

—AND—

KINGDOM OF ISRAEL

Together with Strictures on

Mr. Cumings in "THEODOSIA."

—BY DANIEL HOWARD.—

A Capital tract for those desiring information on the subjects discussed. Send to this office for it, and after reading send it to your neighbor.

PRICE ELEVEN CENTS EACH.

THE TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 22, 1871.

—BY H. V. REED.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the life of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mortals may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send Orders to

SAMUEL WILSON,

918 N. 41st Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by

THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

A NEW TRACT!

CIRCULATE IT!

REASONS WHY

I Believe the Bible to be the Word of God; or an

Unanswerable Argument

—AGAINST—

Infidelity AND Atheism.

The foregoing is the title of a Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburgh, Pa.,

—BY DR. J. H. THOMAS.—

It is a large size Sixteen Page Tract, and can be had at the Office of

The Restitution,

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

Price Five Cents Each, Twelve for Fifty Cents or Thirty for One Dollar.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness,

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—BY JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1900.

—BY M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 32 pages, 20c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications will keep on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,

Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PRIMER. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by MILLS. 3. Spirits, in 1880. 4. Immortality. 5. The Kingdom of God. 6. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 7. The Two Advents. 8. What is Religion. 9. The Restitution. 10. Destiny of the Wicked. 11. Baptism. Ten copies 5c., or assorted packages of 100, 35c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 25c; 50 for 45c; 100 for 80c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Magruder.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Laing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

2c. each, or 25 for 45c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each, or 25 for 50c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Lloyd. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each; 25 for 55c, or 50 for $1.

The New Birth. Josiah Peirce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each; 5 for 10c, or 25 for $1.

Die Evangelium der Heiligen Gotter. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.

10c. each, or 12 for $1.

Evangelical Doctrine of the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 32 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. W. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiii. 64 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, of the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 32 pages, price 10c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, Critics, Lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 25c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "the hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible" by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead, between the Rev. E. C. Beardsley, Congregational minister, and W. Kellaway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead are all in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Beardsley. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 60c., paper 40c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of York. Exactly the book for the times. 350 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 128 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.40.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 200 pages, cloth $1.

A Letter to a Friend!

—BY MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—BY J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 20c. each, or 12 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—BY BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the ideal Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear word-for-word English translation based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built; any one with this work can readily judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 900 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND THE—

BIBLE Vindicated.

—BY A. J. EVCHANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting the enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 10 for 30c., or $1 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
E. A. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
H. K. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
P. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
I. C. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON. B. WILSON.
J. P. WEETHEE. J. A. SHOOPS.
WILEY JONES. H. M. MYERS.
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Bro Meatless Article.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 22, 1881. NO. 24.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and his immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Fifth, or First Woe Trumpet. Literal Locusts. Symbolic Locusts--Their Attributes. 1, Power of Scorpions. 2, Shape. 3, Heads. 4, Faces. 5, Hair. 6, Teeth. 7, Breastplates. 8, Sound of their Wings. 9, Tails. 10, King. 11, Mission. 12, Its Duration.

No. 72.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Locust—literal.—"The larger legs bluish; the upper side of the body and upper wings brown, the former spotted with black, and the latter with dusty spots. The back is defended by a shield of greenish blue; the under wings are of a light brown, tinctured with green, and nearly transparent. It has a large open mouth; in the two jaws of which it has four teeth, which traverse each other like scissors, being calculated, from their mechanism, to gripe or cut. The general form and appearance of the insect is that of the grasshopper, so well known."—Bagster.

They fly in vast clouds, covering an area at times of 200 square miles, and so densely crowded as to darken the sun.

The locusts come out of the earth in the month of June. Dr. Shaw says that in Barbary, no sooner are the locusts hatched than they collect themselves into compact bodies, each a furlong or more square, and marching directly forwards toward the sea, they leave nothing behind them, eating up everything that is green and juicy, not only the lesser vegetables, but the vine likewise, the figtree, the pomegranate, the palm, and the apple tree; even all the trees of the field."

The great importance of properly understanding this (to many) obscure prophecy, will justify other quotations, so far as they present clear illustrations.

A German chronicle of the ninth century says, So great a multitude of locusts passed over that country from the east, during two months, that they often obscured the rays of the sun for the space of a whole mile; and when they alighted, in one hour consumed everything that was green upon 100 acres, or more."

Volney says, "The quantity of these insects is incredible to all who have not themselves witnessed their astonishing numbers; the whole earth is covered with them for the space of several leagues. The noise they make in browsing on the trees and herbage, may be heard at a great distance, and resembles that of an army in secret. The Tartars themselves are a less destructive enemy than these little animals. One would imagine that fire had followed their progress. Wherever their myriads spread the verdure of the country disappears; trees and plants stripped of their leaves and reduced to their naked boughs and stems, cause the dreary image of winter to succeed in an instant to the rich scenery of spring. When these clouds of locusts take their flight, to surmount any obstacles, or to traverse more rapidly a desert soil, the heavens may literally be said to be obscured by them."

A modern traveller says, "Standing near the town of Gibraltar, and looking eastward I saw a dense cloud slowly advancing toward the Spanish shore, and darkening the sun as it passed, when, suddenly it burst, and there fell such a vast multitude of locusts as exceeded the thickest storm of hail or snow that I ever saw. All around me was immediately covered with these crawling creatures, and yet they continued to fall so thick, that with the swing of my cane I knocked down thousands. There was not, in a day or two, the least leaf to be seen on a tree nor any green thing in a garden."

Locusts constituted one of the plagues of Egypt. "And Moses stretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, and the Lord brought an east wind (blowing from Arabia) upon the land all that day, and all (that) night; (and) when it was morning the east wind brought the locusts. And the locusts went up all over the land of Egypt, and rested in all the coasts of Egypt; very grievous (were they); before them there were no such locusts as they, neither after them shall be such. For they covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened; and they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees which the hail had left; and there remained not any green thing in the trees or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt." Ex. x. 13-16.

Symbolic locusts.—John has delineated their nature and special mission. His narration we propose to follow. Their nature is given under the following heads:

1. They have the power of scorpions.—These are locusts by name; in nature they are scorpions. An author gives the following distinction between locusts and scorpions:

"Locusts, it is well known, never attack man, but only the fruits of the earth, on which he lives; scorpions, on the other hand, do not attack the fruits of the earth, but animals only; and their sting is seldom fatal, except in the hottest climates, particularly Africa."—Cott. Bible.

Scorpion, in Hebrew, is עקרב—ak-rab—compound word, formed of עקר (ak-kar) to harrass, and רב (rab) to increase.

The Greek word is σκορπιος (skorpios) composed of σκορπιζω—I disperse, or shoot, and ωψ (ops) poison. The Greek expresses the act; the Hebrew its effects.

Scorpions are mentioned in Deut. viii. 15; Ezek. ii. 6; Luke x. 19; xi. 12; Rev. ix. 3, 10. They are found in dry and dark places, under stones and in ruins, chiefly in warm climates. They are carnivorous in their habits, and move along in a threatening attitude, with tail elevated. The sting, which is situated at the extremity of the tail, has at its base a gland that secretes a poisonous fluid, which is discharged (shot) into the wound by two minute orifices at its extremity. In hot climates, the sting occasions much suffering, and sometimes alarming symptoms."—Smith.

2. Their Shape.—"Like unto horses prepared unto battle." In Joel ii. 4, it is said, "The appearance of them (is) as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run."

Such is the resemblance that an Arab thus speaks' "Their heads are like to those of horses, their breast to that of a lion, their feet to those of a camel, their belly to that of a serpent, their tail to that of a scorpion, and their feelers to female hair."—Niebuhr's Arabia.

3. "On their heads (were) as it were crowns like gold."—Crowns like gold, not of gold. In color only, for it would be absurd to say that they were like gold in form, substance, or in any other quality, except that which was apparent to John's eye. They were crowns in shape, in color like gold, or yellow. They had on their heads what seemed to be crowns in form, and as they were yellow, he said they were like gold.

4. "Their faces were as the faces of men."—Their faces were like men, since they were clothed with beards, this was a mark of אשה's badge of nature to distinguish the gender.

5. "They had hair as the hair of women."—They had long hair which gave the appearance of women, as to their hair.

6. "Their teeth were as (the teeth) of lions."—They were large, strong, far apart and long. They were very distinct to the eye of the prophet, when occupied in their mission; they grinned with fierce delight.

7. "Breastplates, as the breastplates of iron."—They were of the color of iron. The same remarks that were made relative to the crowns are equally applicable to the breastplates. In giving the description of these two parts of their armor the prophet uses the language of simple eye-judgment; as if he had said, I do not know the composition of their crowns and breastplates, but they look like (in color) gold and iron.

Such is evidently the force of the two Greek words ως (os) and ομοιος (omoios).

8. "Sound of their wings."—It was the sound of war chariots, of many horses running to battle; chariots drawn by many horses rushing furiously into conflict. The word translated battle, is πολεμων (polemon), and signifies war; composed of a series of battles. It is a generic term. Here it may have both shades of meaning. John hears the sound of conflict. Their noise described in Joel ii. 5, "Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array."

Volney says, "The noise they make in browsing on the trees and herbage, may be heard at a great distance, and resembles that of an army in secret, marching without music."

9. "They had tails like unto scorpions."—Their tails were in form and position (elevated) like scorpions.

Their stings, like those of scorpions, were in their tails, at the extremity. John saw these stings while occupied in their work of torment.

10. "They had a king over them."—This is a distinctive feature. "The locusts (literal) have no king, yet they go forth all of them by bands." Prov. xxx. 27. But these locusts had a king.

Wherever symbols are used to illustrate and foreshow great events, extraordinary attributes are added to make the analogy complete. It is so in the visions of Daniel, relative to the wild beasts. Eagle's wings are given to the leopard, and a monster is created to symbolize the fourth monarchy.

God follows the same course in other visions shown to John. The woman (true church) is sun-clad, and star-crowned, and furnished with eagles wings. His wild beasts are all monsters, for the reason that no one beast had, by nature, all the attributes necessary for the intended analogies. This method of adding attributes is very clearly illustrated by these locusts. They have such a variety of additional attributes that John, after calling them by the name of locusts is obliged, in order to be fully understood, to explain a multitude of extraordinary features, as if he had said, They are locusts but so singular in appearance and work that I must describe them more fully.

They are locusts, but they are not allowed to hurt grass, nor tree, nor any green thing; they are locusts, it is true, but they must torment the wicked, and those only. They are locusts, but in shape they were war horses, had crowns resembling gold in color, men's faces, women's hair, lion's teeth, iron breastplates, scorpion's tails with stings in them, and a king over them. And who was their king? He was the messenger of the abyss out of which had issued the smoke and these extraordinary locusts. His name is given in Hebrew and Greek.

The Hebrew אבדון (abad-don) destroyer; from אבר (a-bad) destroy.

The Greek Απολλυων (Apollyon) destroyer; from Απολλυω (Apollyo) I destroy.

He is their king, and had his origin in the pit, and was in his nature, a symbolic locust.

11. Their Mission.—That they should not kill, but that they should torment; but only those men who had not the seal of God in their foreheads. This torment was to be like the scorpion's sting, and so severe that men would prefer death to such a life.

12. Its duration.—Their power was to hurt men five months. The locusts are limited to the five warmer months. They pair off and soon die. These five months belong to the scale of symbols; are on the symbolic chart.

Time is easily reduced, as agents. If the life of a beast symbolizes and measures the life of an empire, the time, or duration of that empire must be very much reduced on the symbolic scale; at least a year must be reduced to a day.

So as to the locusts. The duration or time of the empire must be reduced to the time denoted by the locust torment—five months or one hundred and fifty days. This is a very important law.

FEATURES OF THE NEW REVISION.

NUMBER FOUR.

H. K. MYERS.

The new version of 1 Peter iii. 17-22 reads as follows:

"For it is better, if the will of God should so will, that ye suffer for well-doing than for evil doing. Because Christ also suffered for sins once, the righteous for the unrighteous, that he might bring us to God; being put to death in the flesh, but quickened in the Spirit; in which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which aforetime were disobedient, when the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved through water: which also after a true likeness doth now save you, even baptism, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the interrogation of a good conscience toward God, through the resurrection of Jesus Christ; who is on the right hand of God, having gone into heaven; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him."

Thus I have given these verses at length that we may see the whole connection unbroken, but desire only to notice the changes made in verses 18 and 19.

But why this rendering in verse 18—"Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened in the Spirit?" Can this be the sense of the original text? An appeal to other versions at this point gives us no new light or aid; nor do they confirm us any the more as to whether this or the King's Version is the nearer right. Of those of the text which we have at hand, the New Version, Rotherham, H. T. Anderson, Noyes, Sawyer, Darby, Alfred and Lachmand give "in" while the King's Version Rheims, Bible Union, Improved Version, Diaglott, Wesley, Macknight and Living Oracles give "by." Thus authorities are well divided, and while thus, we will have to simply pair them off and judge of the text from the light of its context, and reason.

But now of the text and its original words we will remark:

1. That for either the word "in" or "by," in the original there is no representative word. In case either one of these words is introduced into the English text, that one must be selected by the translator which best suits his taste and conception of the apostolic idea. Possibly this has been done by all of the translators above referred to. But more of these words "in" and "by" when further along.

2. The word rendered "quickened" is Potetheis—a passive participle first aorist tense of Poieco. This word is defined—"to do, make, cause, effect, accomplish; to labor, work, toil; to mould, form, fashion, shape, produce; to compose, write; to use, treat, do with; to get, procure, obtain, acquire; to keep, preserve, fulfill; to enact, appoint; to put, place, set; to put a case, suppose, grant; to live, abide, tarry, dwell; to avail, signify, be officacious or powerful."

From this word we have in our text, Jesus "quickened" or "made alive."

There are two important features yet manifest about this word to which we desire to call attention.

1. In form the word is passive, and therefore represents the act of making alive not as being performed by the Savior upon himself, but as being performed by another.

2. Liddell & Scott say, the word represents an external act, an act performed upon an external object. Therefore an act done by the Father upon the Son to make him alive. This then suggests the action of the Father in the work performed upon the Son. Now the question arises, has the apostle made this action of the Father a matter of special mention or not? If he has then the supplied word must be "by" to denote that action, and the following word "Spirit" must refer to God's Spirit as his agent employed in the work! But to the contrary, if the apostle has made no reference to the action of the Father in giving life from the dead to Jesus, then the supplied word may be "in" and the following word "Spirit" must refer to Jesus. Here, as above stated, is the issue, as to the text of this verse.

But if no reference is here in the text made to the action of the Father in bringing Jesus to life from the dead, and the text is made to read: "Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened—made alive—in the Spirit," then we have a few questions to suggest.

1. Are we to understand that Jesus from the date of death on the cross till made alive and raised from the dead, was dead in spirit? The reading implies at best this much. But aside from this text the Bible nowhere represents spirit disembodied as being either dead or alive. It represents spirit as going to God who gave it but says nothing as to its being dead or alive, conscious or unconscious, only as it was before connection with the body.

If this reading be true, it is also disastrous to the idea of Jesus in spirit remaining alive and going and preaching between his crucifixion and resurrection. But to meet and to refute that idea we would not like to adopt this reading unless every circumstance would lead us to believe it correct. Nothing is ever gained by meeting error with error.

2. Question again, with this reading before us, when could the preaching referred to in v. 18 have been done? It represents the preaching as not having been done through an agent, but in person. With this point before us, while it could not have been done between crucifixion and resurrection, could it have been done either before or after crucifixion and resurrection? We see no possible opportunity, answering all the demands in the case.

3. But next, can the apostle here be understood with this reading to be arraying antithetically, flesh and spirit—teaching by this that before crucifixion Jesus lived upon the plane of flesh, was upon the plane of flesh, and as a flesh man crucified, and then at resurrection began as a spirit man, upon the plane of spirit to live? This is more plausible than the former position. This is exactly the facts in the case as to the plane of flesh and the plane of the Spirit as applied to Jesus. Made of the seed of David, of the seed of Abraham, like his brethren and therefore flesh on the one side of death, and raised to the power of endless life on the other side. Sown corruptible, mortal, natural; raised spiritual, mortal, incorruptible. And so with his brethren. This would be our exposition of the text were it not that with it we would have to encounter in part the same difficulty as lastly named above, and have Jesus to do the preaching this side of his resurrection.

But why object to this position as to the time of preaching? We answer, because these parties to whom the preaching was done are in the text represented as having lived, and as having disobeyed in the days of Noah before the flood. But at this point again we are met with a few questions from the world.

1. Could not this preaching by the Savior have been done to these persons as disembodied spirits?

We reply, first that we know nothing of the condition of disembodied spirits; the Bible is entirely silent on this subject; only that the spirit returns to God who gave, and when it returns it must be as it was when it was there before.

Secondly, should we assume that while there it is conscious, preaching to it would be entirely superfluous, as "In the presence of God there is fulness of joy, and in his presence are pleasures forever more."

2. But again may not this preaching been done while the spirits are in hades?

We reply no, first because there is not one single text in the Bible that represents the spirit of good or bad at death as going to hades, but it "returns to God who gave it."

Secondly, Jesus in hades could not have preached. For as saw in our last article, in hades it is all darkness; it is the shadow of death; it is without order; it is where there is no remembrance of God; it is where there can be no praise to God; it is where there is no work; it is where there is no reason; it is where there is no knowledge; it is where there is no wisdom. Therefore while there Jesus could not have preached; and for the same reason they could not have heard or acted.

But the fact in the case is that these parties lived before the flood and were then disobedient. But the word disobedience implies law, and law implies proclamation. Therefore the proclamation—preaching—of the law to these parties must have antedated their action; their action—disobedience, was in the days of Noah before the flood and therefore the preaching must have been done in the days of Noah. But this could not have been done by Jesus in person before he had an existence. Therefore we are constrained to accept of the King's Version rather than the new; to believe the word "by" a better word than "in" to supply, and that the word Spirit refers to the Holy Spirit rather than Jesus, or the Spirit of Jesus. With this and 2 Peter ii. 5, 1 Peter ii. 10, 11 before us we think the text is sufficiently plain.

We have written this and our preceding article rather lengthy and expository but will promise brevity on the other texts we desire to notice.

Selections.

Correspondence Toledo Blade.

ANGLO-SAXON INCH VS. FRENCH METER.--CURIOUS REVELATIONS FROM OLD EGYPT.

WASHINGTON, June 6.

The energetic opposition of some of our citizens to the introduction of the French metrical system of weights and measures is resulting in some curious information which otherwise would hardly have reached the mass of the people. The advocates of the meter point to it as scientific and comprehensive, and hold that all other systems are empirical and absurd.

But our old Anglo-Saxon methods bear the test of close scientific examination much better than was expected, and it would not be at all surprising if the tables should yet be completely turned on the French savants and the meter should finally succumb to the inch and the liter to the pint.

So long ago as the administration of Gen. Washington, Mr. Jefferson, then Secretary of State, was empowered by Congress to look into the question of weights and measures, and report as to what should be done to improve them. He found, greatly to his surprise that the wine gallon and the wheat gallon bore a scientific relation to each other, and was of the same weight. He says:

"The pound Troy contains 5,760 grains, of which 7,000 are required to make the pound Avoirdupois. The relation between them is therefore as 576 is to 700, or 144 to 175. It is remarkable that this is exactly the proportion of the ancient liquid gallon of Guild Hall (224 cubic inches) to the corn gallon (272 cubic inches). It is further remarkable that this is also the exact proportion between the specific weight of any measure of wheat and the same measure of water."

But the advocates of our Anglo-Saxon system go further and profess to believe that it has a wider scientific basis than the metric system, and that it goes back to the philosophy of ancient Egypt and has its root in the measurements and engineering of the great pyramid.

That marvelous structure is composed of ten millions of tons of solid masonry and covers about thirteen acres of ground. The stone appears to have been brought down the river from the cataracts in floats, and the material in it is sufficient to build a wall one foot thick and four feet high 3,000 feet long.

It is clear that such a structure required many years of labor, and a plan of engineering that must have been acted on continually from the beginning and carried out to the close.

It has been thought that this great work was intended as a tomb for one of Egypt's ambitious kings. But recent researches seem to put this idea out of the question. If it was for a tomb it would have inscriptions or symbols to show it, but none such exist without or within. It has a hidden entrance, and a curious passage to the center, where there are two or three small chambers known as the King's chamber, the ante-room, the Queen's chamber, etc., all of which show measurements which are very remarkable and indicate an amount of mathematical and astronomical knowledge which this age has not ascribed to so early a period of the world—for it is certain that the pyramid was built more than two thousand years before the birth of Christ.

But the fact which most concerns this discussion is that the measures used in constructing it were the old English measures, to which our race has been accustomed from time immemorial—that is to say the inch, the span and the ell or cubit—and it is contended by some enthusiasts that the monument was built to be the permanent illustration of these measures together with their corresponding weights.

But whatever may have been the purpose of the building, the correlation of the various parts and its connection with astronomical facts may well challenge the admiration of out time. If these are mere accidents they are certainly very remarkable accidents and none the less interesting because they are accidents. A few examples must suffice.

If you take the length of the four sides (9,131 inches each) at the base (36,534 inches) and convert it into a circle the radius of that circle will be the height of the pyramid—5,813 inches.

If you take the length of the base on two sides, convert it into a circle, the diameter of the circle will be the height of the pyramid.

If you take the length of the ante-chamber (116.26 in.) and call it the radius of a circle (the spoke to a wheel) the circle or rim of the wheel will contain as many inches as there are days in the year, and the exact fraction which makes an addition necessary every four years.

This ante-chamber floor stands on the 50th course of mason work. If you multiply its length, 116.26 by 50, it will give 5,813, the exact height of the building in inches. If you double the length of this room it expresses the height in ells or cubits, of 25 in. each.

The length of the base (each side) in inches is 9,131, and when converted into ells or cubits of 25 in. each, the result will be 365.25, equal to the days in the year and the fraction of six hours.

The advocates of the metric system claim as a great merit that it is carefully scientific and based on the quadrant of a meridian, but one of its friends—Prof. Barnard—confesses that this is not a merit. He says: If the work was to do over again the French metric system ought to adopt, and doubtless would adopt, not their superficial earth measure, but the pyramid axial expression of the cubit, on account of its immense superiority in fact and in geometric idea;" that is to say, a straight line measure should not be based on a curve as the meter is. The axis of the earth (its diameter) is a straight line, its length easily ascertained, and measures 500,000,000 in. or 20,000,000 cubits. Its relation to the pyramid may be inferred from the fact that Mr. Petrie, in 1877 undertook to calculate the distance of the sun from the two measurements. He took the height of the pyramid (5,813 in.) as a radius, the spoke of a wheel, the rim of which made a certain circle. Of course the diameter of his circle was twice the length of his radius, that is 5,813x2—11,626.

He then took another circle (the circle of the earth) and multiplying the two diameters together (11,626 and 500,000,000) the product in miles was 91,840,270.* But the earth was then regarded by astronomers as being 95,000,000 miles from the sun and he hesitated to proclaim the result as an ascertained and reliable measurement. But it appears from the observations made at the last transit of Venus that the distance now accepted by astronomers is 91,840,000 miles, or 270 less than by the measure thus derived from the pyramid.

I have not space to refer to the measures of capacity, which are, however, said to be as clearly established as the lineal measures. But the coincidence in relation to the pyramidal measures and our coin, which was noticed not long ago in the Scientific American, is too curious to be passed over. Dr. Quinlby, who first called attention to it, wrote to the mint to know why the weights regulating our coin were adopted. He was informed that it was because coin of that particular weight was current in the trade of eastern Asia. There is, therefore, a probability that those measures were derived from the east. However that may be, the length of the King's chamber in the great pyramid is 412½ in.—the number of grains in our standard dollar; and its breadth is 206½ in., or the number of grains in our half-dollar.

These are samples of a good deal more in the same direction. If they do not settle the metric question, they increase our respect for the engineers and mathematicians of those olden days, and rather suggest that development since then has been in the wrong direction.

The metric system, notwithstanding the error pointed out by Prof. Barnard has made its way rapidly, and is now used, through compulsory legislation, in France, Belgium, Holland, Greece, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Germany, Columbus, Venezuela, Equador, Brazil, Peru, Chili, the Argentine Republic and Uruguay.

The Frenchman is very desirous to have his system adopted by other nations, and the subject was before our Congress two or three years ago and strongly urged by its friends. But the Anglo-Saxon race still clings to its old methods, and neither England nor the United States is in much danger of making its use compulsory. It is, however, an open question with our Congress, which has already made it legal, but without compelling its use.

BUCKEYE.

*The height of the pyramid is 5813 British inches. When this altitude is multiplied by the typical numbers of the pyramid—10 raised to the 9th power—we have

5,813
1,000,000,000

5,813,000,000,000 Inches Sun's distance
5,000 484,916,000,000 Inch Sun's distance

91,840,277 miles.

The correspondent of the Blade errs in using pyramidal inches which would give a result considerable less for the sun's distance in English miles.—[EDITOR RESTITUTION.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, June 22, 1881.

As in our enlarged form we can only issue four numbers each month the next RESTITUTION will be published July 6, and the present number has been delayed two days.

THANATOPHIS, a tract written by Bro. Wiley Jones, and advertised in another column, is a very excellent little work on the First and Second Death which our readers will do well to procure.

A BOOK entitled, Bible Terminology Relative to the Future Life, was lately sent us from the Bible Banner office. So far as we have found time to read the work we find it praiseworthy. We shall notice more fully hereafter. It is our present impression that it will be an important accession to the literature of human destiny.

IN communications "we are full and abound" just at present. Demands on our time have prevented us from even reading some long articles that we have received. Will read and use all suitable articles as fast as we can and give that variety to our paper that is desirable for every public journal. Please write only short, pithy, practical articles for awhile till some of our longer communications are disposed of.

The Bible Defended and Atheism Rebuked, by A. B. Magruder, has just been received. As many of our readers are aware, this book is a reply to R. G. Ingersoll's Lectures—"Mistakes of Moses"—"Skulls"—"What Must We Do to Be Saved?"—and other Atheistic burlesques of all that is divine and sacred, by the great misleading Coryphens of the unbelieving hordes of the present time. The work comes to hand just as we are going to press, and we have only time for a short glance at its pages. This most cursory look, however, convinces us that Brother Magruder need have no misgivings in submitting his work to the public. The book is for sale by the publishers, R. J. Hale a Son, No. 17 Murray street, New York, at 50 cents a copy. We hope to be able to advertise it for sale at this office in our next paper.

Communications.

NEW TESTAMENT REVISION.

Errors and Omissions Affecting the Sense.

NUMBER THREE.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

Among the "Principles and Rules agreed to by the Committee of Convocation" to the revisors was the seventh: "To revise the headings of chapters and pages, paragraphs, italics, and punctuation." They seem to have paid little attention and bestowed small care on the important duty of punctuation, the consequence of which is obscuration and even contradiction in the sense of the English text, which is much to be lamented.

We know by experience how much the sense of written language is affected by punctuation; how complete indeed is the change of meaning effected thereby.

I noted in my last number two examples of this in John v. 31,37, where, by omitting the interrogative, which the context and the facts of the case prove to be the proper form of speech, the Great Teacher is made to say the very opposite of what he really declared.

Another example occurs in Mark xiv. 37–42, where by retaining the faulty punctuation of the common version, they make the Savior exhort his waiting disciples—Peter, James and John—to "sleep on and take their rest," while in the same breath he commands them to "arise and be going!" A palpable inconsistency and absurdity, resulting from wrong punctuation, which appears almost incredible in view of ripe age, approved learning and scholarship, and after more than ten years' labor and experience in the work of revision.

Let the reader turn to the passage in question, and to the parallel passage in Mat. xxvi. 37–48, and he will see that both the sense and the context imperatively demand the interrogative punctuation, which is alone consistent. Read thus—"Do you sleep on now? Is this a time to take your rest? The hour is come—arise, let us be going," every contradiction is avoided.

How true is the proverb of the wise man: "Great men are not always wise, neither do the aged judge with discretion."

Such obvious blunders show inattention and negligence by these revisors that we would not have suspected, and detract in no small degree from the value of the work.

It cannot be said that such mistakes are trivial, for every blunder or blemish in such a book gives an occasion to the adversary, supplies him with a weapon of attack, and weakens, to that extent, the authority and value of the Blessed Volume for human salvation.

AN IMPORTANT OMISSION.

Editor Restitution:

In justice to Brother Fenimore, with regard to the Argos debate, I feel myself under obligations to make the following acknowledgement:

In my anxiety for closing my report of said discussion, as it was getting somewhat lengthy, I forgot to note one of Brother Fenimore's strongest objections against trine immersion, viz: that founded on Eph. iv. 5. "One Lord, one faith, (and) one baptism."

He said: One is not three. And if, as my friend admits, to baptize, means to dip, or immerse, then we may substitute "dip," or "immersion," in the above text: and we have, "One Lord, one faith, (and) one dip, or immersion." And consequently not three.

Brennen—The apostle was not here speaking of the action of baptism; but of the name of the ordinance, hence it should read, "One baptizing," or "dipping." So this is no argument against my position.

Fenimore—But Paul is speaking of the institution of baptism itself; and not of an abstract name: hence he says: there is one baptism. Whereas, if he had simply referred to the name of the ordinance he would doubtless have said, "There is one name to dipping, or immersing."

But granting my friend all that can be gathered from the expression, "One baptism," by admitting it simply to refer to the name of the ordinance; then we have "baptism" representing the name of an action—one action, and not three. For the noun "baptism" stands in the singular, and not in the plural number: hence cannot represent the name of a plurality of actions. So that my friend gains nothing by taking this turn.

As the above topic came into my memory again, after having sent my report to THE RESTITUTION office, I felt it my duty to forward the above.

JOSEPH MESSIMORE.

Selections.

The Messenger,

PARTAKERS OF THE DIVINE NATURE.

WM. WATSON.

God in his goodness holds out the prospect of blessing and inconceivable exaltation as the reward of a faithful adherence to his will—as the inducement to the sinner to quit his evil way. His book is not limited to denunciations of sin and threats of punishment, but it seeks the way to every heart. For while the warning voice is necessary to some which says, "Flee from the wrath to come," the hope, the promise of being made "partakers of the Divine nature" is an inducement which must appeal to the imagination, the wants, and the heart of all.

To be made "partakers of the Divine nature," (2 Pet. i. 4,) is one of the most gracious, expressive, and awe-inspiring of the promises of God—so justly termed "great and precious" by this apostle. To creatures born of Adam's race, whose term of existence is likened unto a dream of the night—and that not always a dream of joy—a promise such as this comes to refresh our wearied spirits, and animate us to renewed efforts in perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord. And in its contemplation is to be found the best antidote for evil tendencies among us.

There are two things which must go together. The one is but the complement of the other. The one is that great and precious promise referred to, of being like him in bodily constitution, appearance, powers, etc. And the second is a likeness we must now possess before we can attain the other. We must be like him (Jesus) now in our moral nature. God has not promised anything for those who will not become like him in that sense. And notwithstanding the popular doctrine to the contrary, we believe that it is no part of his purpose, nor does it seem reasonable to suppose, that he will clothe with the divine attribute of immortality, those who will not bear his likeness now in their moral nature, in their walk and conversation. They who shall be made partakers of eternal life shall only be those who are capable of showing the divine image in both ways. And moral excellence is first required of those who love him, and who desire to be made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light.

It is difficult, perhaps impossible, to express in words anything like a due sense of the greatness and the glory that is implied in these words, so full of the mighty love of God—"sons" and "heirs of all things," "partakers of the Divine nature." No man hath seen God at any time, for no man can see his face and live. How utterly and inconceivably changed must they be, who, partaking of his nature, shall see his face and live.

Our ideas of the Divine nature are necessarily very crude; and it is only from the manifestations and the power of that infinite and unseen Spirit that our impressions are formed. Our power to grasp the idea of the infinite is indeed very small, and consequently our attempts to realize what God is are utter failures. We cannot see him now, and it is only possible for us to know anything of him through his works and through his word.

Let us consider then, briefly, some of the wonderful attributes of that Great One who has so condescended to call his erring creatures to be partakers of them in some way.

"God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth." That is the Shorter Catechism expression of the being and perfections of God; and it is a scriptural one in all its points. Our Lord teaches us: "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." And as to the eternity of his being, we have such expressions as used by Moses in blessing Israel, Deut. xxxiii. 27—"The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." Again, Psa. xc.—"Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God." "Canst thou by searching find out the Almighty to perfection?" And David also, was so deeply impressed with the omnipresence of God that he says—"Whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, surely the darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me; . . . . . the darkness and the light are both alike unto thee."

His power is "almighty." "His wisdom is infinite." When the Lord passed by Moses on Mount Sinai, this was the proclamation before him—"The Lord, the Lord God merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth." And surely in this fair and beautiful world we have unbounded evidence of his power and goodness. Should that not be sufficient then beyond our earth, all around us, are countless shining witnesses of the immensity, the infinitude, of the power of God.

Words will fail of themselves to convey to our minds anything like a sufficient idea of this One. "Immensity," "infinity," fail to impress us; they are mere words; we have no adequate idea of their meaning in reference to God. But look and think—think of this world of ours, the wonders of all kinds it contains, then turn your gaze heavenward,

"Beyond the confines of unmeasured space,
And void unmeasured stretches vast—
Where great mysterious worlds from mass condensed,
Diffuse around them soft and genial rays—
A realm remote, where earth is all unknown!
Where groups of stars innumerable shine,
For purposes decreed by him who made,
But which no human mind can ever sound!
Roll on, ye worlds, and speak to man the truth
Of God's eternal power and wisdom vast!"

And thinking of him who made them and ordained the laws by which they are governed, and whose purpose they so unerringly fulfil, we shall exclaim with the Psalmist of old, truly "his ways are past finding out," "his greatness is unsearchable."

But, yet, God has called us, so weak, so sinful, so insignificant, to be the partakers of a nature utterly incomprehensible to us now. "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God."

But how shall we, who are liable to death, enter into this glorious state? It is by a change to the living saints, sudden and complete; to the dead by a glorious resurrection.

It has been before observed that moral likeness to God must precede this to qualify us for the reception of this grand physical change. He has cleansed us in his own Son. We are to remain clean, purifying ourselves even as he is pure—for without this no man shall see the Lord. It is most important, then, that they who have put on the Lord Jesus Christ should form a just estimate of the work they have to do, and the reward to be won.

To most it may seem an easy thing to do all that is required of us. Just as at the beginning of a race one feels fresh and strong, but during the running the strength gets tired more and more, the breath is short, and the way longer and rougher than was anticipated; so it is in Christian experience. Our race is not won because we have started in it. It has to be finished; and by and by we begin to feel that it is not such an easy matter after all to be a Christian. The only burden laid upon us is to learn of him who is meek and lowly in heart. And it would be easy were there no temptations in or near us to do things contrary to our profession as children of God. But that is where the difficulty and the danger lies. We have to lay aside our likings and dislikes, and all unhallowed desires, just as the runner lays aside his more cumbrous garments. And this laying aside of self is quite needed, for we are naturally more influenced by immediate surroundings and natural feelings than by ideas of a future life which are not based upon anything within sight or experience. It is needful, therefore, that we should cast aside many things that impede our progress in the way, that we may be endued with that which is more in keeping with the new profession. All our hope depends upon the manner in which we acquit ourselves in following after his righteousness, and in fashioning our lives in conformity with that of the Son of God.

This promise is to us so great that it may well include all the rest. To be made like him who is holiness itself who is all-seeing and all-powerful; like him, the Creator of the ends of the earth, and worlds upon worlds beyond our ken; like him, whose infinitude of being and goodness is beyond our words to describe, is a destiny fitted to fill every heart with amazement and deepest joy. It is the heritage of the weakest and youngest of us.

How difficult it is to grasp the idea of eternity of being! But that is ours. Think of all the good we think we could accomplish if we only lived long enough now, and how different it will be when the fear of death—the cutting off of our days—shall be taken away, and the summer of eternal youth shall have risen upon us.

Our ideas of these things now are dwarfed and darkened by experience of earthly things. The shadow of earth's little day is upon us. The reality, I feel sure, shall break upon us with a fulness of glory and joy now undreamed of.

When we think of the joy of living forever, we naturally associate with it the fellowship of our friends. Life itself, unless this goes with it, is sometimes not to be desired. There is a story of a certain man who had been confined for a long time in that great prison, the Bastille, so long, indeed, that his generation had all passed away.

He entered the prison a young man; was torn away from loving friends and a happy home. When at last a kind hand liberated him, it was to find everything changed. He was an old man now, knew no one, was known to none. He had outlived all his friends, had no home, and in sickening despair he entreated to be taken back to the companionship of his dungeon. This beautiful world, with its light, its air, its society, had now no charm for him. The sweetness of life had lost its savor. He had no friends. This life alone may not be desirable. But God has provided everything requisite to make that life the most happy that can be imagined.

In the first place it cannot be anything else where he is, for "his presence fills each heart with joy," and in him we have the best of friends. And if the fellowship of hearts is so needful to our full enjoyment of this life, shall he not also provide the means whereby it shall be enjoyed to the fullest extent in his kingdom, where nothing shall divide them?

In that kingdom there is also the promise of the position of kings and priests unto God, which will satisfy the most worthy ambition. That rule shall be entirely different from the rule of man now.

Its circumstances, its subjects, its objects, are entirely different. The rulers will be all righteous, for they are the approved children of God—partakers of the Divine nature. The subjects, too, are those who have passed through the fire of tribulation, which shall have purged from them the sediment and the ingrate. This is the reward of our high calling. It is life—eternal life; it is glory—eternal glory; it is a kingship and a priesthood to which there is no succession! And what more? It may be possible to guess, but not to know. We see now darkly, as through a glass; but then shall not God our Father lay open to the admiring gaze of his children the treasures of his universe? Our part, then, is, seeing we have set before us such truly great and precious promises, to be diligent, to make them sure in fulfillment, "making our calling and election sure."

Edinburgh.

News Items.

JEWS MOVING INTO SPAIN.

MADRID, June 18.—Sixty thousand Jews are expected to immigrate to Spain in consequence of the decision of the Government allowing Jews expelled from Russia to come to Spain.

A report has reached Calcutta from Central Asia that large bodies of Russian troops are assembling on the borders of Kashgar, and that a conflict with the Chinese troops cannot long be averted.

A hundred persons were killed and sixty injured by the earthquake which which recently devastated a number of villages in the Pashalic of Van, Armenia.

PARIS, June 20.—The army of occupation in Tunis has been fixed at 10,000 men.

The relations of the Porte with the French Embassy at Constantinople are still very strained in consequence of the Tunis affair. The French Ambassador was unable to obtain an audience with the Sultan to present a complimentary message from President Grevy before he departed on his furlough.

BOMBAY, June 20.—Official advices have been received from Candahar announcing that the Ameer's forces defeated the troops of Ayoob Khan with heavy loss, on the 18th inst., at Mutiz Safed. The Ameer's loss was trifling.

DUBLIN, June 20.—Quietness prevails throughout the country. The farmers have harvested the biggest hay crop known for fifty years, and the root crops promise to be unprecedentedly abundant.

RETURN OF A GREAT COMET.

CINCINNATI, O., June 18.—Intelligence has been received by Professor Stone, of the Cincinnati Observatory, that Dr. Gould, of the National Observatory of the Argentine Republic, has just discovered a large comet. He believes it to be the return of the great comet of 1807.

The great comet of 1807 excited much interest among scientists and not a little alarm among the superstitious. There is no satisfactory record as to its discovery; but both Bissel and Herschel observed its orbit and made various calculations. The diamater of its nucleus as measured by Herschel was found to be 538 miles. It was taken to be peeriodic, and Bissel, the eminent German astronomer, calculated its return in 1,684 years.

"THE CYCLOPEDIA WAR."

The Cyclopedia War and the Literary Revolution are working wonderful and happy results for the readers of books, and searchers after knowledge. The great "Library of Universal Knowledge," is announced to be completed, ready for delivery to purchasers, the early part of July. It is probably the largest and most important literary work this country and the century have seen. It is based upon Chambers' Encyclopedia, the last London edition of which is reprinted entire as a portion of its contents, a large corps of American editors and writers adding thereto, a vast amount of information upon about 15,000 subjects in every department of human knowledge. Chambers' Encyclopedia, whose distinguished merit is universally known, is the laborious product of the ripest British and European scholarship, but being a work of foreign production it has been naturally deficient in its adaptation to the wants of American readers. In this new form it is most thoroughly Americanized, and becomes at once the largest and most complete encyclopedia in the field, at a mere fraction of the cost of any similar works which have preceded it, containing about 10 per cent. more matter than Appleton's Encyclopedia, at less than one-fifth its cost, and 20 per cent. more than Johnson's Cyclopedia at a little more than one-fourth its cost.

The superlative value and importance of this great Encyclopedia, however, lies especially in the fact that it is brought within the reach of every one who aspires after knowledge and culture. It is really a library of universal knowledge. It brings a liberal education easily within the reach of every plow-boy. Every farmer and every mechanic owes it to himself and to his children that such a cyclopedia shall henceforward form a part of the outfit of his home. To the intelligent man in every walk of life a Cyclopedia is indispensible. It is issued in various styles, in 16 large beautiful octavo volumes, varying in price from $15 the edition in cloth, to $25 for the edition in full library sheep binding. Liberal discounts even from these extraordinary prices are allowed to clubs, and the publishers, besides, propose during the next two months to distribute $10,000 cash in special rewards to persons who forward clubs of five, ten, or more subscribers. The American Book Exchange, 764 Broadway, New York, are the publishers, who will send sample pages and full particulars free on request.

WHO WILL PROVE LOYAL?

S. BONANA WINCE.

It is the time of trial. The evil days are upon us. Satan is striving, if possible, to deceive the very elect. Many are denying the Lord that bought them. The love of some is waxing cold. Who will stand at the post where the Lord has placed them? Who will endure unto the end? Who will prove loyal to God and to his truth? The days of martyrdom had no severer tests than those are to which we are to be subjected now. Pride and ease and pleasure stand at the door, to lure us away from God. There is danger that we forget our high calling in listening to the siren voices.

I pray earnestly that the little few may be kept by the power of God through faith unto the salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. Break asunder the fetters; let faith win the victory.

We can walk in the humble paths with the humble Nazarene, for a little while, if we may but win the eternal weight of glory.

May God keep us all.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The brethren of Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois, will meet at Adeline, Ill., on the Chicago & Pacific branch of the Milwaukee & St. Paul R. R., on Friday, July 1, and continue over Sunday.

A general invitation to the brethren is extended.

By order of Committee.

J. M. GLOTFELTY.

The Lord willing, I will be at Samuel Andrews on Friday before the first Sunday in July. Friday before the second Sunday in July at the Roose schoolhouse, or as brother Roose may appoint. Can fill another appointment on the third Sunday if the brethren at some other point desire me to hold a meeting.

J. S. HATCH.

The Semi-annual Meeting of the Christian Association of Iowa will convene at Irving, Tama county, the Lord willing on Thursday, July 7, 1881, and hold over Sunday. It will be a tent meeting, and brethren throughout the state are cordially invited to be present with their tents. Churches please remember to send one delegate for every ten members or fraction over five. Brethren from abroad are invited to be with us. A good meeting is hoped for. Brethren Reed, Stephenson and Whitesit have been invited to help minister to the inward man. Provisions will be on the ground for sale to provide for the outward man. Let us have a general turnout to this meeting, the inclement weather having interfered with the last two meetings.

G. R. CROWN, Pres.

JOHN FITZ, Sec.

The Church of God of Montague and Wise Counties, Texas, will hold their annual Conference at Valentine Springs in Montague County, commencing Friday, August 12, 1881, at four o'clock, P. M. The place of meeting is four miles south of Forestburg, sixteen miles south of St. Joe, sixteen miles southeast of Montaguetown, thirty miles west of Gainsville, and twenty miles north of Decatur. We invite every body that feels an interest in the word of God to come over. Brethren coming from a distance will go to brethren Hodges, Grimes, or Sowers, who live near the meeting place. We want all the preaching brethren we can get. Any preaching brother who can come will please address me at Sunset, Wise Co., Tex., and we will help him come.

T. T. DOYAL.

A LETTER

TO A BAPTIST MINISTER ON THE LITERALITY OF

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN,

The Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the

THRONE OF DAVID

—AND—

KINGDOM OF ISRAEL.

Together with Strictures on

Mr. Courtney in "THEODOSIA."

—BY DANIEL HOWARD.—

A Capital tract for those desiring information on the subjects discussed. Send to this office for it, and after reading send it to your neighbor.

PRICE ELEVEN CENTS EACH.

THE NEW OF HERMON.

Palestine is a land of mountains. Eminently conspicuous among these rise the three peaks of Hermon on the northeast border, their snowy crowns glittering in the sun, being visible in almost any point in the promised land, the trusted land-mark of travelers in all the regions between the Jordan and the sea. There are the Hermons (not "Hermonites") of which David, in the sweet forty-second Psalm, sings: "O my God, my soul is cast down within me! Therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan and of the Hermons." Palestine is also a land of dews. It is very dependent on them. Destitute of rains for many months at a time, it relies for securing crops on the heavy fall of dew which is nightly secured by its multitude of mountains. Hermon is no more conspicuous in the sight than in the peculiar abundance of its dews. They become rain for the thirsty land. "The dew on this mountain is proverbially excellent and abundant. "More copious dews," says Tristram, "we never experienced than on Hermon. Everything was drenched with it, and the tents were small protection. The under sides of our mackintosh sheets were drenched in water, our guns were rusted, dew-drops were hanging everywhere." Mr. Porter states: "One of its hills is appropriately called 'Father of the Dew,' for the clouds seem to cling with peculiar fondness round its wooded top."

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

My address until further notice will be 386 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

THE

TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881.

—BY H. V. REED.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send Orders to
SAMUEL WILSON,
3018 N. 21st Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Also for sale by
THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

A NEW TRACT!

CIRCULATE IT!

REASONS WHY

I Believe the Bible to be the Word of God; or an

Unanswerable Argument

—AGAINST—

Infidelity AND Atheism.

The foregoing is the title of a Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburgh, Pa.

—BY DR. J. H. THOMAS.—

It is a large size Sixteen Page Tract, and can be had at the Office of

The Restitution,

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

Price Five Cents Each, Twelve for Fifty Cents or Thirty for One Dollar.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1888.

—BY M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages, 16c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARNES.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns," whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Poetry.

"WHAT CAN I DO FOR JESUS?"

S. ROXANA WINCE.

I'll bear the burden, Father,
That thou hast laid on me;
The weary and the faint ones,
To bring in prayer to thee!
Oh! help me still in weakness,
The hailing to restore;
To lead with hand untiring,
The lost to mercy's door.

The time of lifting cometh;
O save the precious grain!
Through sieves of trial shake it,
And purify with pain.
I feel the burden on me,
I cannot put it by:
Still, still with earnest pleading,
To lift for those my cry!

Our trust in princes faileth,
Th[illegible]rm is vain,
But [illegible]ed is mighty,
[illegible] bless yet again:
Oh! keep thy children safely;
Let them to duty stand,
Firm, set against the evil,
Till they reach the goodly land.

Pierrefonds, Ind., June 8, '81.

Communications.

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH.

NUMBER FOUR.

J. CAMERON.

NEW TESTAMENT ON RESTORATION OF ISRAEL—PAUL'S TESTIMONY.

But some one may say:—This ultimate restoration of Israel to the Divine favor, and re-establishment of them in their own land as God's peculiar people, in a national sense, is all very well as far as Old Testament prophecy is concerned; but did not Israel, according to the teaching of the New Testament, forfeit their national privileges by their rejection of the Messiah? This is an important question and demands serious consideration by all who would have their faith resting on the sure testimony of God. Let us therefore inquire what saith the New Testament as to the casting away of Israel.

In writing to the Romans (ix. x.) Paul says—"Israel hath not attained to the law of righteousness, because they sought it not by faith, but by the works of the law." Whereas, "the Gentiles have attained to the righteousness which is of faith." After mentioning that Israel might have been aware of this, inasmuch as it had been indicated by the prophets, he asks—"Hath God cast away his people? God forbid, (literally—it cannot be) for I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. GOD HATH NOT CAST AWAY HIS PEOPLE WHOM HE FORE-KNEW," OR FORMERLY ACKNOWLEDGED as his peculiar nation. After showing, from a circumstance in the history of the nation in Elijah's time, that God was even then reserving a remnant to himself, when appearances afforded no hope even to Elijah; and that likewise in Paul's day there was a remnant according to the election of grace—he says—"Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; that the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded. That is, a select portion of Israel hath obtained the righteousness which is of faith, but the great mass of the nation are blinded, and have stumbled at the stumbling-stone of salvation through faith. Not that salvation through faith was a new thing, for all the worthies of past ages are to inherit the promises through the FAITH and patience they possessed in their mortal life; but Israel had exalted the law to the place of faith in the promises of God as a means of saving righteousness, and hence the blindness of the nation to see that a law which was never intended to give life, must necessarily fail to do so.

Having admitted the blinding and stumbling, the apostle then supposes one of his Jewish kinsmen to ask—"Have they stumbled that they should fall?" that is, Have the great bulk of the nation sinned so grievously as to have placed the nation beyond the mercy which according to the prophets, God has in store for them in their national capacity? It cannot be, responds the apostle. But another thing has taken place through their stumbling—"Salvation is come to the Gentiles to provoke them (the Jews) to jealousy." As if he had said, the nation is doubtless doomed to desolation until the second coming of the Messiah according to his own prediction (Matt. xxiii. 39) but not one individual Jew shall be condemned except for his own personal rejection of the Messiah. The believing remnant is thus a guarantee for the ultimate fulfillment of God's promises to the nation, just as ten righteous persons would have saved Sodom from the Divine judgment. The casting away of the nation is thus seen to be of temporary duration; and so Paul reasons—"If the casting away of them (the blinded, stumbling mass of the nation in their national capacity, even as represented by their accredited rulers) be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, that is the most of the nation when the times of restitution shall have arrived—but life from the dead? After a strong caution to the Gentiles to beware lest they also be cut off, the apostle refers to the temporary nature of this national blindness in very plain terms:—"Blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: (or delivered, that is, in the political sense as a nation. with many individuals in the higher sense) as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant with them when I shall take away their sins."

It is important in this apostolic utterance to observe here the ultimate deliverance of "all Israel," in the turning away of their ungodliness in connection with the new covenant. This is precisely the doctrine of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, as already shown in treating of Heb. iii. We have also the explicit testimony of Isaiah, from whom Paul is quoting in this letter to the Romans, corroborating Jeremiah and Ezekiel as to the literal descendents of Jacob being intended here by the term "all Israel:"

"And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; My Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever." Isa. lix. 20, 21.

This covenant is to be made with Israel in their mortal fleshly condition, and to be kept not only by the generation with whom it is to be made, but by their children and children's children. This cannot by any possibility be understood of the immortalized saints in the glorified state, but must refer to "all Israel" in the plain and obvious sense of the words. The New Testament is thus seen to teach nothing as to the final casting away of Israel, but rather asserts their ultimate restoration to the Divine favor as the peculiar nation of God. And the Old Testament, as if anticipating the notion that would be entertained by the Gentile world as to Israel's being cast off as the Divine nation, makes special provision against such an idea, and gives the strongest assurances that Israel should not be utterly cast away. What could be a stronger guarantee than this:—

"Therefore, fear thou not, O thou my servant Jacob neither be dismayed O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished. For thus saith the Lord, Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous. There is none to plead thy cause, that thou mayest be bound up: thou hast no healing medicines. All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they seek thee not: for I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased. Why criest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable for the multitude of thine iniquity: because thy sins were increased, I have done these things unto thee. Therefore all they that devour thee shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey. For I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord; because they called thee an Outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after. Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling places; and the city shall be builded upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof. And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small. Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them. And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them; and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the Lord. And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." Jer. xxx. 10-22.

Selections.

N. Y. Witness.

VISIT TO THE PYRAMIDS.

REV. HENRY M. GOODELL.

CAIRO, Egypt, April 10.—Replete with interest, indeed, is this genuinely oriental city, with its quaint bazaars, indescribable street scenes, and wonderful medley of human life; but we could not long forbear a visit to those mighty monuments of the past—the pyramids. And so, bright and early on the last day of March, while the air was still cool and refreshing, we started out on the excursion.

The distance is about eight miles, and travelers generally take carriages, or provide themselves with donkeys. As soon as you approach, the donkey-boys, waiting near the Esbekeeyah Park, they rush towards you pell-mell, each trying to to strike a bargain first. The rival merits of the wee, gray steeds are clamorously set forth, causing much fun and merriment on both sides. "My donk, good donk," says one. Another, with a broad grin, shouts, "My donk, he speak Englees; he very good;" while a third cries, "My donk name Yank' Doodle. Have my donk?"

We crossed the Nile on a new and elegant bridge just west of the city, known as the Kasr-el-Nil, constructed by the Khedive for the use of the Prince of Wales in 1868. Just above the bridge is the beautiful island of Rhoda, once covered with gorgeous palaces and temples, now adorned with fine residences and blooming gardens. Here grow in luxuriance the fig, orange, lemon, lofty palm, acacia and wide-spreading tamarisk. On this island tradition says the infant Moses was discovered by Pharaoh's daughter, as she came down to the river's brink to bathe, attended by her maidens.

Every little while we would meet a long train of camels or donkeys, heavily laden with new-mown clover to be sold in the city.

At Ghizeh we turned to the right and soon entered a long straight avenue of acacias—the new road built in honor of the Prince of Wales. The crops along the way were luxuriant, although in our own country at the same time of year nature is still dormant. The clover was knee-high, the wheat and barley already golden. In some fields were tethered large numbers of fine Arabian horses, the tents of their keepers pitched near by.

Distances are very deceiving in this remarkable climate. Again and again we thought we had accomplished our journey within half or three-quarters of a mile. The vastness of the objects before us contributed to this effect; and then, in this land of eternal sunshine, the atmosphere is so transparent and crystaline, the power of vision is greatly heightened, so that when we stood upon the pyramids and gazed around as it seemed as though the whole earth was embraced in one view.

Our attention was first attracted by the sphinx, that strange combination of man and beast, human in its weariness, sorrow, and benignity, divine in its immensity. There it lies, in an attitude of eternal repose, its sleepless eyes ever looking right on towards the rising sun, a guardian genius in the midst of mighty sepulchres.

The view from the summit of Cheops is peculiar to Egypt, and one of the grandest in the whole world. Beauty is heightened by striking contrasts. And here you see at one glance a fertile valley of perennial green full of life, light and happiness, side by side with the boundless desert, an arid waste of burning sands, over which reign death and desolation. You are standing upon and among the very oldest monuments of antiquity, the outlines of whose enduring forms are faintly discernible in the dim misty dawn of the human race; you behold in the magnificent panorama at your feet the life and work of the present age.

But your thoughts naturally linger with the scenes of the past. Beautiful as is Egypt to-day, what must it have been in the age of Abraham, Joseph and Moses. Then, this ever-green valley, through which threads the Nile like a bright silver cord, teemed with a population of millions. It was the cradle of human civilization. The arts and sciences flourished, stupendous feats of engineering were successfully accomplished. Many of our boasted new inventions were known to these ancients, and some of their wonderful arts in color and embalming are lost, perhaps forever. Where now you behold only verdant fields and picturesque ruins, in that day there stood, in proud glory, a magnificent assemblage of cities, temples approached by avenues of colossal sphinxes, palaces, obelisks, elegant bridges and causeways, splendid boulevards shaded by long lines of over-arching acacias, monuments, sepulchres. The river and its interminable net-work of canals and water-courses, myriads of miniature lakes were all alive with gay barges, proud galleys and slender boats, their white sails fluttering in the breeze. Mighty armies led by thousands of war-chariots were marshalled upon the plain. Egypt—populous, powerful, cultured—was in her glory and first among the nations.

At last, we stood at the base of the pyramids, those mountains of stone, petrified mysteries of an age long dead and gone. Very simple in form, only a regular pyramidal mass of granite blocks, and yet so many thousands have come from afar to visit them, so many countless multitudes have read and thought of them, their very immensity, antiquity and mystery awaken the deepest interest. There they have stood locked in awful silence between the lifeless shadowless desert and the hot blank sky, witnesses to the sublime drama of a world's history. Palaces could be be built with the money science has expended in exploring and measuring them, the curious have penetrated to their very heart and found only two or three empty, silent chambers, the literature on this subject would fill a library. They are surmised to be many things, but they are known to be—only pyramids.

They are the best earthly symbols of eternity. Like colossal breakwaters, they have resisted the ever-beating waves of time as revolving cycles and dynasties have come and gone. That noble race, who built the palaces and temples of Memphis four thousand years ago, declared them to be old. When the sceptre passed out of Egypt, and Persian conquerors stood beneath their shade, they knew no change, save the loss of their exterior, polished marbles. While Greece grew from infancy into manhood, and sent forth her Macedonian hero to humble the world, and Egypt's crown was laid down in the dust, they stood unmoved. When Rome proudly "sat upon her seven hills and from her throne of beauty ruled the world," they were still the same, with perchance a few more scars. And when glory utterly deserted the Nile valley, and her noble sons became a race of slaves, they remain majestic mourners of the past.

But we did not think of all this there in the noon-day sun, the hot sirocco wind blinding our eyes with dust and sand, our spirits harrassed by impudent Bedouins, dogging us at every step.

Cheops, the largest of the pyramids, covers an area of about eleven acres. Its base is perfectly square, and exactly in line with the points of the compass; its perpendicular height 460 feet. Originally its area must have been nearly thirteen acres, and its apex twenty feet higher, for the outer layer of stones has long since been removed and at the top there is a level space, about twenty feet square. The stones are not all of the same size, but each successive layer is about three feet and a half high, and set in about the same distance, so that, with some difficulty, you can ascend the 206 steps to the summit.

All is silent now as the tomb, but one day how many human hands were at work on this rocky plateau, how many, many strokes of the hammer to fashion all these hard blocks of hard granite, what wonderful engines for hoisting such weighty masses to their lofty resting-places. Then kings were reverenced as if divine; the common people were slaves, and the lives of millions were spent to aggrandize the life of one.

The entrance to this mysterious structure is on the north side at the sixteenth step. A crowd of ragged, dirty, lazy Arabs are generally lying around, ready to press upon you their services, and clamoring for "backsheesh." The interior has been so often and so minutely described, that I will not go into details. The guides, with lights, conduct you through various passages, descending and ascending, leading you first to the Queen's Chamber, an empty, desolate room, seventeen feet long, fourteen wide, and twelve high. The ceiling and sides are of polished granite. When, ascending an inclined plane about 120 feet, you reach the King's Chamber, thirty-seven feet long, seventeen wide and twenty high. This room contains one solitary object, a sarcophagus, hewn out of a solid block of granite, seven feet and a half long, three feet three inches wide, and three and a half high. On account of its size, it must have been placed in this chamber when the pyramid was being built. We were told there was also a subterranean passage, and to one side of a certain passage there is a dark chasm called the Well, which is said to descend to a great depth, finally connecting with the lower passage.

And right over there to the northeast was the land of Goshen, where once the children of Israel, that peculiar people, made bricks without straw, groaned beneath the tasks and smarted under the lash of cruel oppressors. What mighty miracles were witnessed along this river. When God, who had heard every cry of the distress, every wail of anguish, for so many generations at last, when the fulness of time had come, led them forth with a mighty hand and outstretched arm.

As the long ages pass by there comes to us memories of the queen of beauty and luxury, whose soft charms led captive the brave generals of great Rome; of the first of the Cæsars when Alexandria became celebrated as a seat of commerce, arts and learning. Hither in flight came the Child of destiny; and his religion overturns the ancient worship and buries in oblivion the nation's hieroglyphic lore, while the solitudes of the Thebaid are peopled with devout hermits. Later came the tread of Mohammedan invaders, carrying sword and flame; and the doom of this once noble country is sealed—there falls upon it the heavy pall of ignorance, superstition and moral darkness.

Oh! Egypt, once so happy and glorious! With one foot upon the seven mouths of thy mighty river, another upon Ethiopia, and thy head in the clouds. What a history is thine! But thy glory and grandeur are departed. These stately columns and obelisks, these ruins of grand temples, most of all these mountains of enduring granite are all that remain to tell the passing traveller of what thou once hast been.

Youths' Column.

Redeem the Time.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

Redeem the time, for fast life's sands are flowing,
And while the cool sweet breeze of youth is blowing,
And wisdom's voice beyond the mountain's call,
The golden grains, unheeded fall.

Unheeded fall—and we with staff are bending
Our faltering footsteps, to the graveyard tending,
And weary eyes turned backward o'er the way,
See, gone beyond recall, life's little day!

Wide Awake.

The Baby's Prayer.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

"Lord, bless papa, mamma, Daisy,"
The baby prayed to-day,
"Kitty, Rose, and old black Thomas,
—What else o'all I say?
I can't tink of nuffin mo-ah,
(Stoopid work to pray!)
'Hush,' for what I'd like to know, now,
You old Mamma Gray?
Ain't I prayed, and p'rayed, and p'rayed
Time 'n time again?
I've forgot the way to end it—
Why don't you tell me true?
For whose sake, mamma—say?
I'm—so—s'eepy—oh, I 'member—
For Pity's sake, Amen."

Who chides the child? I kiss and hush.
Silent I join the group down-stairs
That rest and linger by the fire
To laugh at Baby's prayers.

"And what did Baby say to-night?"
But low I answer with grave brow;
"She prayed for Rose, and you and me—"
I cannot tell them now!

How full the mood the child has drawn
And pressed upon a musing heart!
Amid the happy household chat
I sat like one apart.

My thoughts, like prayers, more solemnly:
"O Lord," I say, "the great, the wise,
The weak, the miserable, are
All children in thine eyes.

"We take the name of thy dear Son
Daring, upon a trembling lip;
The cup thou givest us, we lift,
And shrink, and taste, and sip.

"And try to say, 'For Jesus' sake;'
Dear Lord, the babe is wisest when,
Fearless and clear, she pleads with thee
'For Pity's sake, Amen.'

"Oh, truer than the sacred phrase
That time from Christian years has spun,
Is he who prays, nor questions if Pity and Christ are one!"

Longfellow's First Poem.

When our great poet was nine years old his master wanted him to write a "composition." Little Henry, like all children, shrank from the undertaking. His master said:

"You can write words, can you not?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"Then you can put words together?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then," said the master, "you may take your slate and go out behind the schoolhouse, and there you can find something to write about, and then you can tell what it is, what it is for, and what is to be done with it, and that will be a composition."

Henry took his slate and went out. He went behind Mr. Finney's barn, which chanced to be near by, and seeing a fine turnip growing up, he thought he knew what that was, what it was for, and also, what would be done with it.

A half hour had been allowed to Henry for his first undertaking in writing compositions. In half an hour he carried in his work, all accomplished, and the master is said to have been affected almost to tears when he saw what little Henry had written in that short time.

MR. FINNEY'S TURNIP.

Mr. Finney had a turnip,
And it grew behind the barn;
And it grew, and it grew,
And the turnip did no harm.

And it grew, and it grew,
Till it could grow no taller;
Then Mr. Finney took it up
And put it in the cellar.

There it lay, there it lay,
Till it began to rot;
When his daughter Lizzie took it,
And she put it in the pot.

Then she boiled it, and boiled it,
As long as she was able;
Then his daughter Lizzie took it,
And she put it on the table.

Mr. Finney and his wife,
Both sat down to sup;
And they ate, and they ate,
Until they ate the turnip up!

Learning in Youth.

Daniel Webster once told a good story in a speech, and was asked where he got it.

"I had it laid up in my head for fourteen years, and never had a chance to use it till to-day," said he.

My little friend wants to know what good it will do to learn the "rule of three," or to commit to memory a verse of the Bible.

The answer is this: "Sometime you will need that very thing. Perhaps it may be twenty years before you can make use of it in just the right place; but it will be just in the right place sometime. Then, if you don't have it you will be like the hunter who had no ball in his rifle when the bear met him."

"Twenty-five years ago my teacher made me study surveying," said a man who had lost his property, "and now I am glad of it. It is just in place. I can get a good situation, at a high salary." The Bible is better than that; it will be in place as long as we may live.

London News.

Great Wall of China.

The great wall of China was measured in many places by Mr. Unthank, an American engineer, lately engaged on a survey for a Chinese railway. His measurements give the height at eighteen feet. Every few hundred yards there is a tower twenty-four feet square and from twenty to twenty-five feet high.

The foundation of the walls is solid granite. Mr. Unthank brought a brick from the wall, which is supposed to have been made two hundred years before the time of Christ.

In building this immense stone fence to keep out the Tartars, the builders never attempted to avoid mountains or chasms, to save expense. For thirteen hundred miles that wall goes over plain and mountain, and every foot of the foundation is in solid granite, and the rest of the structure solid masonry. In some places the wall is built smooth up against the bank, or canyons, or precipices, where there is a sheer descent of one thousand feet. Small streams are arched over, but in the larger streams the wall runs to the water's edge, and a tower is built on each side.

On the top of the wall are breastworks or defenses, facing in and out, so the defending forces can pass from one tower to another without being exposed to the enemy from either side.

To calculate the time of building, or cost of this wall is beyond human skill. So far as the magnitude of the work is concerned, it surpasses anything in the ancient or modern times of which there is any trace. The pyramids of Egypt are nothing compared to it.

New York Observer.

Birds of the Bible—The Pelican.

GEORGIANA KLINGLE.

The pelican is mentioned five times in the Bible—in Leviticus and Deuteronomy, where it is named among the unclean birds; in Psalms, when David compares his sorrow over the condition of his country and her altars to the pelican, which sits in mournful attitude in the most desolate places, as though overwhelmed with grief; and in Isaiah and Zephaniah, the last two translated cormorant.

David says: "My heart is smitten, and withered like grass, so that I forget to eat my bread, by reason of the voice of my groaning, my bones cleave to my skin; I am like a pelican in the wilderness."

The pelican is a native of Africa, though it is known in Asia and America. It has been recently seen upon the lakes of Gennesaret and Merom in Galilee. It is something like the goose in color and the shape of its body and neck. Its bill is from fifteen to eighteen inches long, is of a greenish color, varying toward the end to a reddish blue, and hooked downward. To the lower part is attached a bag, said to be capable of containing fifteen quarts of water. In this bag water is carried to a distance and placed in some rocky basin, for its own use or that of its young, but it often meets the needs of thirsty camels and of men. The pelican also uses this bag as a means of carrying the fish caught in the seas, and it is said to be capable of holding sufficient fish to feed sixteen hungry men. This bag wrinkles up when it is not filled, but by thrusting the hand into it its true capacity may be discovered. The bag is covered with a downy substance soft as satin.

The thick plumage of the body is ash-colored; the eyes are small in proportion to the head; its flight is slow, except when excited by hunger. When in pursuit of food, the pelican flies about thirty feet above the water, with the head on one side, so that it looks down with one eye, until it perceives a fish, when it darts upon it with unerring aim, and, storing it for future use within the deep pouch, it rises in the air to watch for another fish.

The pelican can be domesticated, and is said to enjoy music and the society of man. I heard of a pelican that lived forty years at the court of the Duke of Bavaria, where it was considered quite intelligent.

It is said that the Emperor Maximillian had a tame pelican, which always attended the army in its progress and lived in its domesticated state for about eighty years.

Three Good Lessons.

I was eleven years old, said Mr. S., an eminent American merchant, when my grandfather had a fine flock of sheep which were carefully tended during the war at those times. I was the shepherd boy, and my business was to watch the sheep in the fields.

A boy who was more fond of his book than the sheep was sent with me, but he left the work to me, while he lay under the trees and read. I did not like that, and finally went to my grandfather and complained of it. I shall never forget the kind smile of the old gentleman as he said:

"Never mind, Jonathan, my boy; if you watch the sheep you shall have the sheep."

"What does grandfather mean by that?" I said to myself. "I don't expect to have sheep." My desires were moderate. I could not exactly make out in my mind what it was, but he had been to congress, in Washington's time, so I concluded it was all right, and I went back contentedly to the sheep.

After I got into the field I could not keep his words out of my head. Then I thought of Sunday's lesson: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things."

I began to see through it. "Never you mind who neglects his duty; be you faithful, and you will have your reward."

I received a second lesson soon after I came to New York as a clerk to the late Mr. T.

A merchant [illegible], who knew who I was, came to buy goods, and said:

"Make yourself so useful that they cannot do without you."

I took his meaning quicker than I did that of my grandfather. Well, I worked upon these two ideas until Mr. R. offered me a partnership in the business.

The first morning after the partnership was made known Mr. S., the old tea merchant, called to congratulate me, and said:

"You are all right now. I have only one word of advice to give you. Be careful whom you walk the streets with."

This was lesson number three.

And what valuable lessons they are! Fidelity in all things; do your best for your employers; carefulness about your associates. Let every boy take these lessons home, and study them well. They are the very foundation stones of all character and honorable success.

THANATOPSIS,

—OR—

The First and the Second Death Scripturally Considered.

—By WILEY JONES.—

A neat tract of 36 pages. Price, one copy 10c.; 13 copies $1; 100 copies $6. Postage stamps taken for fractions of a dollar.

Send orders to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

29-4

Poetry.

JESUS COMES.

D. T. T.

Hark! a mighty swelling sound
Filleth all the air around;
Voices shrill, and loud and high,
Waft it upward to the sky!
Higher yet the strains ascend,
And with angel's anthems blend!
Heaven and earth repeat the strain:
"Jesus comes, and comes to reign!"

Sun, in solemn darkness veiled,
Moon, whose midnight glory paled,
Stars, in myriads falling fast,
As the leaves 'mid autumn's blast,
Roarings of the storm-naked sea,
Kingdoms in perplexity—
All take up the rushing strain:
"Jesus comes, and comes to reign!"

Deep with sin the world is stained;
Long the tyrant Death has reigned;
Long the earth has groaned aloud;
Lo! the church has sadly bowed:
See in the absent Lord will come,
And reveal the Eden home.
All creation wakes the strain:
"Jesus comes, and comes to reign!"

Haste the day, and speed the hour,
When with awful pomp and power,
And with trumpet's rolling rocket,
Christ shall come in glory crowned!
Then shall Paradise be here!
Then shall beauty bless and cheer.
Voices ring o'er earth and main:
"Jesus now reigns to reign!"

Communications.

REPORT OF THE SECOND PROPOSITION OF THE DEBATE HELD AT ARGOS, IND., APRIL 25th TO 29th, BETWEEN W. J. B. FENIMORE AND T. W. DRENNEN.

JOSEPH MESSIMORE.

Question:—Resolved, "That everything that pertains to man, in death becomes unconscious."

Brother Fenimore opened the discussion at 10 a. m. on the 27th of April, 1881, by reading the above proposition and defining the same as follows, viz:

Man is a creature composed of dust according to Gen. ii. 7. Mortal; consequently subject to death. Also, death was defined as being a cessation of life. Hence, a state of unconsciousness, and devoid of all knowledge of anything. The following texts of Scripture were then cited, with many others, bearing on the subject. He said that he thought the surest way to learn something about the nature of man, was to read the Bible history concerning the creation of man. Hence he read from the good old book, the following narrative:

"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Gen. ii. 7.

Remarks.—From the above it will be seen that "man"—the whole man, was formed from the dust of the ground: a complete, perfect man; except life. The breath of life—that principle which gives life to and animation to all living creatures, being infused into his lungs, through his nostrils, he became, or as Paul says, was made a living soul, a living man,—living person, living creature.

Now, take the breath or spirit of life away from a living soul, and he becomes a dead soul. "If he (God) set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together; and man shall turn again unto dust." Job xxxiv. 14, 15.

Brother Fenimore asked, When God speaks to man, does he address the man, or only the house in which the man lives? He then took it for granted that the intellectual, intelligent man was addressed. He then introduced the Law given to man in the garden of Eden.

"And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Margin. "Dying thou shalt die." Gen. ii. 16, 17.

Brother F. was very particular here to impress the audience with the idea that this law was given to the intellectual man, and not that in which he dwelt: and that it could only be applicable to the intelligent man.

He then read from the good old book the following:

"And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." Gen. iii. 17.

Remarks on the above.—Brother F. said: Here the intelligent man, Adam, was addressed. And the same personal pronoun "Thou" that was addressed, was charged with having eaten of the forbidden fruit.

Query:—Do immaterial, intangible, incomprehensible, immortal souls eat the fruits of material trees?

The same "thou" was also doomed to eat in sorrow all the days of his life, of the products of the earth. Either the intelligent Adam that was here addressed, must have ceased to live, or he must, to this day, be eating, in sorrow, of the earth's products.

Verse 19. "In the sweat of thy face thou shalt eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

Remarks on the above by Fenimore:—Observe, the same personal pronoun "thou" which has Adam for its antecedent is still the subject of address: and the same person is here told that in the sweat of his face he should eat bread, till he should return to the ground: that he (not his body, or house) was taken out of the ground: that he was dust, and that he should return to dust. (And here I would say that the personal pronouns, of either masculine, or feminine gender, when referring to man, are never applied, in the Holy Scriptures, to anything but the human organism which was formed of the dust of the ground, and made a living soul.—J. M., reporter.)

Brother Fenimore next referred to Adam's death, as recorded in Gen. v. 5. "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years; and he died." Showing that when Adam died, he ceased to live. Not simply moving out of the old house, and going to live somewhere else, in a disembodied state; as a houseless wanderer!

I do not remember whether Brother Fenimore cited Isa. xxxviii. 1, in connection with the last named text, or not: but do recollect of his using it sometime during the discussion: and I will introduce it right here:

"In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order: for thou shalt die and not live." Thus proving to a demonstration that when a man dies he ceases to live.

Having now shown that man was made of the dust of the ground, that he was mortal, and subject to death, and that in dying he ceased to live, Brother Fenimore next proceeded to show his condition in death by citing the following texts. He said that the state of death was a state of silence, darkness, and forgetfulness.

Proof:—"The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Psa. cxv. 17; see also, Isa. xxxviii. 18, 19.

Job x. 22. "A land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order; and where the light is as darkness."

Psa. lxxxviii 10-12. "Will thou show wonders to the dead?" "Shall the dead arise and praise thee?" "Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction?" "Shall thy wonders be known in the dark, and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?"

Answer to the above.

"In death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave, who shall give thee thanks?" Psa. vi. 5.

Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to the earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

Query:—How much does a man know when all his thoughts have perished?

Answer:—"the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not anything. . . . . Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished." Eccl. ix. 5, 6.

Verse 10. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, (Hebrew sheol,) whither thou goest."

Brother Fenimore then asked the question, How much consciousness would a person have, who had neither love, nor hatred, nor envy, nor wisdom, nor thoughts, nor memory, nor any knowledge?

Mr. Drennen did not seem to be very ready to answer. He however brought up, and urged many objections against the foregoing; the chief of which I will present to the reader.

His first half hour, as in the first proposition, was nearly all devoted to the establishing of his Triune God, upon which he attempted to base a triune man; because man was created in the image of God. In order to prove this, he referred to 1 Thess. v. 23. "I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Here, said Mr. Drennen, we have positive proof that man is composed of three separate, and distinct parts, viz: Spirit, soul, and body. And the unconsciousness that my friend has so much to say about, is all predicated of the body, so that the soul and the spirit may, and do survive the death of the body. Hence we read: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the soul unto God, who gave it."

Fenimore—There is no text within the lids of the Bible that says anything about a soul going to God at the death of the body. And my friend is sadly mistaken in supposing that the text cited by him from 1 Thess. proves that man consists in three separate entities. As it will appear from a glance at this text, that Paul does not here refer to single individuals separately, much less to three distinct living entities in one man. Paul is here addressing the whole church at Thessalonica: and hence, if he wished to address them as separate individuals, he would have said: I pray God that all your spirits, and souls, and bodies, be preserved blameless, etc., provided he had believed my friend's theory of a triune, or tripple man. But this not being Paul's language, we know that he wished to convey no such an idea.

What idea, then, did he wish to convey?

Answer:—This is one of Paul's beautiful figures of speech, in which all three of the words "spirit," "soul," and "body," are used in a secondary sense. Thus: "I pray God your whole spirit, (disposition; temper,) and soul, (life; department; demeanor; conduct,) and body, (church; society; organization,) be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Will Mr. Drennen tell us in his next speech, which is the intelligent part of man? whether it is his spirit-man, or the soul-man, that survives the death of the body?

Drennen—I claim that there is an outward man, which is the body; and an inner man, which is the soul, or spirit; for Paul says: "Though our outward man perish, yet our inward man is renewed day by day." And although the word "spirit" occurs in Eccl. xii. 7, instead of "soul," I do not see that it makes any difference, as the two words are synonymous, and mean the same thing.

Fenimore—I deny that the two words "soul" and "spirit" are synonymous, or that they are used interchangeably in Holy Writ. Neither are they ever translated from the same original word. And that they do not mean the same thing, one citation from Paul is sufficient to show.

Heb. iv. 12. "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

From this we see that the soul, and the spirit, are two separate and distinct things: for how could they be separated, or divided asunder, if one and the same thing? This settles that point forever.

And that the word "soul" is here used in a primary sense, and refers to the human organism, is evident from the reference to the joints and marrow, which are constituents of the body. And "spirit" is equivalent to the "breath of life" in Gen. ii. 7. That which made man a "living soul," and gives life and animation to all living creatures: to the horse as well as to man. Job calls it the "Spirit of God" in his nostrils. Margin: The breath which God gave to him. Job xxvii. 3. This is what returns to God at the dissolution of the man, and is not a part of the man, any more than of the horse, or of the elephant.

"Then shall the dust return unto the earth as it was, and the spirit unto God who gave it." Eccl. xii. 7; Job xxxiv. 14, 15; Psa. civ. 29; cxlvi. 4.

And as regards my friend's outward and inward man, about which he has so much to say: we will call on Paul, and let him explain himself.

"For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; . . . . that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man: that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." Eph. iii. 14, 15.

"In whom (Christ) also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession." Eph. i. 13, 14.

"For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father." Rom. viii. 15.

"Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. viii. 9.

"To whom (the saints) God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory." Col. i. 27.

From this we see that none but the children of God are in possession of any such inner man. It being simply the indwelling of Christ through the spirit, by faith; constituting our hope. Hence, though our outward, or physical man perish, or decay, our inward man—hope, is renewed—strengthened, day by day, as we are nearing the fruition of our hope.

Drennen—The narrative of the rich man and Lazarus also presents us with an unanswerable objection to my friend's proposition of the unconsciousness of the dead. Here we have the rich man dead and buried, and in hell—hades, looking over a great gulf, seeing Abraham with Lazarus in his bosom, who had died before the rich man, the latter holding quite a lengthy conversation with Abraham.

Fenimore—The difficulty with my friend lies in this, that he views this as a narrative of literal facts. Now let us read from the good old book with that idea before us.

Luke xvi. 19-22. "There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. and there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores, and desired to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover, the dogs came and licked his sores. And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried, by the angels, into Abraham's bosom. The rich man also died, and was buried."

Query:—Who was the beggar that died?

Answer:—Lazarus.

Q.—And then what became of him?

A.—He—the beggar—Lazarus, was carried into Abraham's bosom.

Q.—And where was Abraham?

A.—In the cave of Machpelah, in the field which he purchased of the sons of Heth.

So this identical same beggar, Lazarus, who lay at the rich man's gate, and full of sores, when he died, was picked up, sores, putrifaction and all, just as he was, and carried into Abraham's bosom, in the cave of Machpelah. For, mark you the very same person that died was carried into Abraham's bosom.

But the rich man also died and was buried, and in hell he (the same rich man that died and was buried) lifted up his eyes; and seeing Abraham far off, he called to him, and began to talk with him, asking him to send Lazarus to cool his (the rich man's) tongue. All this, with the idea of its being a narrative of literal facts, is simply ridiculously absurd.

Drennen—It is not to be supposed that the putrid body of Lazarus was carried into the literal bosom of Abraham, or that the body of Dives was tormented in hades. But that the spirits of both went into hades; which is described by Josephus as having two departments, for the abodes of the spirits of the righteous, and the wicked respectively: that of the righteous being called Paradise; the other Tartarus.

Fenimore—I expected that my friend would abandon his theory of this being a narrative of literal facts. Now he has Abraham's bosom to represent Paradise. This at once destroys the literality of the case.

Jesus here addressed the Pharisees; and without a parable spake he not unto them. Matth. xiii. 33; Mark iv. 34.

The fact in the case is simply this: Jesus here, by a figure of speech, is graphically setting forth the suffering condition of his people, as well as the more favorable condition of the Gentile nations who will forsake their idolatry, and accept the gospel of Christ.

Mr. Drennen then read the whole narrative, substituting Jewish nations for "rich man," and Gentile nations for Lazarus, in order to make Brother Fenimore's views look as ridiculous as possible.

Fenimore—Truly, with the idea of literal death this would seem ridiculous and absurd: but no more so than my friend's theory. But death is here simply used in a metaphorical sense, as also nearly all other words. Hence the whole matter is simply a metaphor: and cannot be applied individually to any person. It is simply a national death; hence the individuals composing such nation may still continue to live. Let Lazarus represent the Gentiles; his sores, their moral pollutions and corruptions; the dogs, the Samaritans; the crumbs, the little fragments of light and knowledge which they incidentally got from the Jews, the death of Lazarus, the dying of the Gentiles to idolatry; his being carried into Abraham's bosom, their reception of the gospel from the hands of the messengers of the Lord. Thus being carried into Abraham's bosom, by coming into the relation of the covenant of God with Abraham. And thus they were comforted.

Also, with regard to the rich man: Let him represent the Jews; that is, the two tribes—Benjamin and Judah. And the five brethren, each representing two tribes, and we have the whole house of Israel represented by the rich man and his five brethren. Now let the rich man represent the destruction of the Jews' nationality; his being buried, the impossibility of their returning to their nationality till the fulfillment of Gentile times; and his suffering in torment, their suffering condition during their dispersion among the nations. And thus all the seeming difficulties will at once disappear from the text.

Here Brother Fenimore commented at some length upon Rom. xi., showing the breaking off of the Jews and the grafting in of the Gentiles: winding up on the 15th verse. "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?"

Mr. Drennen also referred to the transfiguration of Jesus, as an objection against the unconsciousness of the dead. After reading the narrative, he remarked: "Here we have positive evidence of the consciousness of the dead. For Moses had been dead hundreds of years before this scene transpired: and yet he was there. Of course we don't suppose that his body was there. But Moses, as well as Elias was there: talking with Jesus."

Fenimore—My Friend Drennen says that Moses was present at the transfiguration, but his body was not there.

Now, who was Moses? Let us read again from the good old Book.

"So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord. And he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor." Deut. xxxiv. 5, 6.

Query:—Who died?

Answer:—Moses.

Q.—Who was buried?

A.—And he (the Lord) buried him.

Q.—Who was the "him?"

A.—The body.

Q.—What is the antecedent of the pronoun "him?"

A.—Moses.

Then Moses died; Moses was buried: and if Moses was on the mount of transfiguration, he was there bodily. But in coming down from the mount Jesus charged his disciples to tell the vision to no man. So Jesus calls the scene a vision. And I believe that it was a vision. A panoramic view. A miniature representation of the kingdom as it will be in the age to come, in power and glory.

Here Brother Fenimore gave a glowing description of the kingdom, as predicted by the prophets. This was really a feast to the true believer.

Mr. Drennen also referred to Paul's man who was caught up to the third heaven, to Paradise. Here, said Mr. Drennen, we have positive proof that a man can leave the body. or Paul would have known that he had not been out of the body: but he says that he did not know whether he was in, or out of the body.

Brother F. answered: Paul also called this a vision. And although it seemed that Paul scarcely understood the matter, there was one thing certain, and that was, that the man, whether Paul himself, or some other man, was not dead, and so this was no argument against the unconsciousness of the dead.

He also referred to Wilson's word for word translation, showing that the proper rendering would be "snatched away."

He then showed from 2 Peter iii. 5-13, that the third heaven was not the upper, of a three-story heaven, but that it was only the third in point of time.

Mr. Drennen also referred to Zech. xii. 1. "The Lord, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him."

Here, said Mr. Drennen, we have conclusive evidence that there is a spirit in man. Hence this is another argument against the elder.

Fenimore—I freely admit all there is in this text. But does it teach that there is a deathless entity spirit put into the man, that survive the death of the real man—the human organism, and continues to live, as a conscious living entity? Nay, verily. But it does teach that the spirit—mind of man is formed within him. Man was formed of the dust of the ground, and God infused into his lungs the breath of life, and man became a living, thinking, and acting soul. Thus God formeth the spirit of man within him: by putting in motion the whole machinery of the human organism. Hence the mind, or spirit of man, referred to by the prophet, is simply the result of the action of the brain. Stop this machinery, by taking away the breath of life, and the man ceases to think. Yes, "In that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4.

Drennen next referred to Job xxxii. 8. "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."

On this text he remarks: Here we are plainly taught that it is not the body that does the thinking, but the spirit: hence it is the intelligent man. "The inspiration of the Almighty giveth them (the spirits) understanding."

Fenimore—This text being of the same import with that in Zechariah it was fully explained in my remarks on that text. But my friend here makes a most egregious blunder in making "spirit" the antecedent of "them," which I will here notice briefly.

"Spirit," in the text is singular, whilst "them" is plural. Therefore "spirit" cannot be the antecedent of "them." For personal pronouns must agree with their antecedents in gender, person, and number.

Now let us see whether we can find the antecedent of "them."

Man, in the text is used in a general sense: referring to the whole human race: hence, although singular in form, it is plural in sense. hence the antecedent to "them." Thus: "The inspiration (inbreathing) of the Almighty giveth them (man) understanding."

I had almost overlooked the thief on the cross. This was one of Mr. Drennen's most reliable arguments against the unconsciousness of the dead. He claimed that Jesus had promised him that he should be with the Savior in Paradise that day. The day on which Jesus was crucified. Hence he must be conscious in death; assuming at the same time that he must have died on that day; because his legs were broken. But he failed to give us any definite statement as to where Paradise was. However, after quoting largely from Josephus, who locates it in some subterranean cavern, he fixed it in the third department of a three-story heaven: as I suppose, to correspond with his ideal salvation-room in Noah's ark.

Fenimore—As my friend is very indefinite as regards the locality of Paradise, I will have to guess at it. I suppose that after all he does not differ much from the generality of Christian professors on that point as he has repeatedly cited Solomon: "Then shall the dust return unto the earth as it was, and the spirit unto God who gave it."

Now, that the disembodied spirits of the Savior and of the thief, were not together in heaven on the day of the crucifixion, as is generally supposed, is evident from the following facts:

1. It cannot be proven, but invariably assumed, that the thief died on that day.

2. After his resurrection. Jesus said to Mary: "Touch me not, for I have not yet ascended to my Father and to your Father; to my God and to your God."

But the whole of this theory is based on one erroneous punctuation point. And my friend well knows that punctuation was not inspired; hence not to be relied on. But let us look at this text, written without the comma, and it stands thus: "Verily I say unto thee to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise."

Now this may be punctuated in two ways: expressing opposite ideas. Place the comma after "thee," and it conveys the idea that the thief should be with the Savior in Paradise.

But place it after "to-day," and it simply becomes a question requiring a negative answer. Thus: "Verily I say unto you to-day, shalt thou be with me in Paradise?" The most natural answer is: no. And this is the stand taken by some of the best critics of to-day.

Now, I believe that the Savior's answer, when properly construed, harmonizes with the thief's request. And what was that? Let us see.

"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

I believe that the Lord will remember him when he comes into his kingdom: which is still yet in the future. Hence this case affords no argument against my proposition.

This closes my report of the discussion held at Argos, Ind., April 25-29, lasting four days only, instead of six, as previously announced. The last proposition not being discussed.

MAN.

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE,

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in THE RESURRECTION of Jan. 20, 1881, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 11 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESURRECTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PEARLS, suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Adam Barclate, in 1666. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies &c., or assorted packages of 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of scripture.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Magruder.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony to see the subjects of salvation.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Laing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or 25 for 40c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? H. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Second Coming and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 15 for 25c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hopf. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. B. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c, or 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Josiah Peirce.

Hope for the Well. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c, or 25 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each; or 15 for $1.

Evangelical Concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wm. Jones.

The Restitution of the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout in harmony with Bible teaching. 48 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiii. 64 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 80 pages, price 15c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject from the moral law, general theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 20c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.25.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading features of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

A Letter to a Friend!

—BY MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—BY J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 10 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—BY BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Illustrated and Explanatory Foot Notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament for the translations on which each of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so rendered in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on finest paper, 966 pages, cloth $4.50, library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED
—AND THE—
BIBLE Vindicated.

—BY A. J. EYCHANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in reach of such boroughs will do well to get this tract, as it will aid you in combating this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 12 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
E. A. DUNGANS ..... President.
CHARLES PALMER ..... Vice President.
E. E. BARNHILL ..... Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN ..... Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAUSBACK,
I. O. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN, ... EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, R. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, C. M. WYERS,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 6, 1881. NO. 25.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

His Proximity. Fifth, or First Woe Trumpet continued. Birth and Life of Mahomet to his Flight from Mecca. The Spread of the New Religion. Conquest of Arabia. Death of Mahomet. His Successor. First Three Caliphs.

No. 73.

J. P. WEETHEE.

History.—We are now prepared to sketch that part of profane history, which, in our view, covers the period of the First Woe. No part of the Christian era contains a record of events that have produced a greater change in the world's history, civil and religious. It marks the birth of a New Religion, and a New Empire—the Mahometan Religion, and the Empire of the Saracens. It will be interesting to trace their origin and growth.

Mahomet, from his birth to his flight from Mecca.—Great empires have arisen, whose history finds no place in the Bible. The Bible outlines the history of one family; others are named, only as their acts are associated with the "holy people." The metallic image is the embodiment of those nations. The stone, increased to a mountain, is a symbol of the holy family. The empires of China, Zingis (Tomugin), and Tamerlane, are not named; they were outsiders, and were not particularly associated with God's people. The Mahometan Empire, composed of the empires of the Saracens, or Arabians, and the Turks, was principally within the boundaries of Christendom, and always has been, and still is, the sworn enemy of Christ and his religion. It is necessary, therefore, that this empire have a conspicuous place on John's prophetic chart; especially as it was God's chosen agent for the subversion of the Greek division of the Roman empire.

The name of the empire (Mahometan) is quite appropriate, since Mahomet gave being to its elements, and by means of his new religion, infused into the empire an indomitable spirit, and a vigorous and protracted vitality.

Mahomet was a native of Mecca. His parents were obliged to struggle with poverty. The place of Mahomet's birth had much to do in shaping his character. The city of Mecca was the capital city of Arabia, the head of the state, and the chief seat of its Pagan worship. Though it was by far the most sacred city of Arabia, still its location for any other than commercial purposes, was extremely forbidding. "It is built of mud and stone, in a plain two miles long by one mile broad, at the foot of three barren mountains; the soil is a rock; even of the holy well of Zemzem, the water is bitter or brackish; the pastures are remote from the city, and grapes are transported above seventy miles."—Gibbon.

The tribe of Korish reigned in Mecca during the youth of Mahomet. They officiated at the heathen altars in the Caaba or great temple, which had been standing six hundred years, and was held sacred by all the tribes of Arabia.

Before we dismiss our hasty sketch of Mahomet's native city, let us take a distant bird's-eye view of Mecca and its surrounding country; the people and their occupations, about the close of the sixth century.

On a low sunken plain of about two square miles, at the bases of three desolate mountains, which form the sides of an abyss, is located the most sacred city of Arabia. With a population of 200,000 inhabitants, and 40,000 dwellings pressed into so small a space; the smoke ascending from so many dwelling fires, the entire view would be that of a deep pit, sending up a smoke like that of a great furnace. Add to this the moving too and fro of the people as they are occupied with their secular and religious duties, and the simile is perfect; for such a view would resemble locusts issuing out of the smoke of a deep pit.

This will demand further notice in our application. Some notice was necessary to illustrate the life of Mahomet.

The mother of Mahomet was left an indigent widow while her son was yet a boy. Not being able to care for him he was taken by his paternal grandfather, and educated as a merchant. He was taken into Syria, and performed other excursions while attending to the duties of his vocation. In this manner the sphere of his knowledge was amplified.

His occupation introduced him to men of various religions. The Jews were numerous in and around this division of Arabia. There were many Christians in Syria and in Abyssinia, to which countries there was constant intercourse. In this way he became familiar with the writings, or at least with the doctrines of Moses and Jesus, and compared these views with the Sabaean creed of his own country.

Mahomet's grandfather dying, he was left to the charge of Abu Taleb his oldest son. With Abu Taleb his uncle, Mahomet continued for many years, following his usual occupation, that of a merchant.

He was introduced to Khadijah, a widow of wealth and nobility. He became her factor, and finally her husband.

By this marriage he took his rank among the first nobles of Mecca. This was one of the great events of his life. It was the mould of his future destiny.

Being raised to opulence he had more time for study and reflection. He had been educated in the Sabaean creed, the worship of the sun, moon, and stars. This system had in it much to elevate the mind; still it was a system of idolatry, since it was the worship of the creature rather than the creator.

This religion had a ritual, a priesthood, a temple, and 300 idols, of man, eagles, lions, and antelopes. "The family of the Hashemites, from whence he (Mahomet) sprung, was the most respectable and sacred in the eyes of their country."—Gibbon.

The grandfather of Mahomet was in the line of the priesthood, which had been acquired through great injustice and force by the tribe of Korish. An idolatrous priest by right, Mahomet was not chained to one system, but he had considered the claims of Moses and Jesus as great lawgivers. While contemplating the systems he formed the design of establishing a new religion; or as Mahomet expresses himself: "Of replanting the only true and ancient one (religion) professed by Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus, and all the prophets, by destroying the gross idolatry into which the generality of his countrymen had fallen, and weeding out the corruptions and superstitions which the latter Jews and Christians had, as he thought, introduced into their religion, and reducing it to its original purity, which consisted chiefly in the worship of the one God."

He first resolved, as a matter of necessity, to disciple the members of his own household. Retiring with his family to a cave, about nine miles from Mecca, where he had often retired before, (Mount Hara) he made known his secret mission to his wife Khadijah, stating that the angel Gabriel had just before appeared to him, with the glorious intelligence that he was appointed the Apostle of God.

Khadijah heard the message with great joy, "swearing by him in whose hands her soul was, that she trusted he would be the prophet of his nation," and told immediately what she had heard to her cousin Werakah Ebu Nawfal, who, being a Christian, could write in the Hebrew character, and was tolerably versed in the Scriptures; and he readily came into her opinion, assuring her that the same angel who had formerly appeared unto Moses was now sent to Mahomet."

The age of Mahomet was now about forty years, at which is dated the beginning of his mission. He first made efforts to gain other converts by persuasion in private, since he yet feared public exposure; especially in Mecca, the chief seat of Arabian idolatry. All his own family, including domestics, soon became converts. His cousin and pupil Ali, son of Abu Taleb, was then numbered with his disciples.

Abu Bear, a man of the first standing in the family of the Korishites, was the next convert. Abu Beer persuaded five other nobles of Mecca to embrace the new religion. These six men, with a few others, were the fruits of Mahomet's first three years' labor. They, with his own family, and Ali (afterward his vicar,) constituted the church of his secret mission.

With this holy guard the new apostle and prophet felt able to show himself more openly. At a feast made by Ali for his relatives, where there were gathered about forty, Mahomet made his first public sermon, which is the following:—

"I know no man in all Arabia who can offer his kindred a more excellent thing than I now do to you; I offer you happiness, both in this life and in that which is to come. God Almighty hath commanded me to call you unto him. Who, therefore, among you, will be assistant to me herein, and become my brother and my vicegerent?"

For a time, no one moved. At length Ali arose and said, "I will be thy assistant," and severely threatened those that should oppose him. Mahomet then embraced Ali very tenderly and "desired all who were present to hearken to and obey him as his deputy, at which the company broke out into a great laughter, telling Abu Taleb that he must now pay obedience to his son."

We are particular in noticing the rise of Mahomet and his new religion—

1. That the reader may contrast the lives of Jesus, the true prophet, and Mahomet, the false prophet, and their religions. These systems now exist, and are held sacred by half of the human family.

2. Because they are now, always have been, and will continue to be antagonistic.

3. Because it is required to make the analogy in the Apocalypse more distinct. Many of our readers have not leisure to peruse the original histories, and therefore, will be aided by our condensed sketches.

Mahomet was heard with attention while he confined himself to his new system; but so soon as he made an attack upon their idolatry, obstinacy, and hardness of heart, the people turned against him with implacable hatred.

The conflict of Mahomet with the national religion was now fully commenced and its forces began to marshal against him.

The Koreishites were the officers and guides of the national opposition. They desired Abu Taleb to use his influence with Mahomet to have him desist from his wild and ruinous scheme. An effort was made by Abu Taleb to discourage Mahomet, stating as a reason, that if he persisted he would involve in ruin all his friends and relatives.

To his uncle he replied: "If they set the sun against him on his right hand, and the moon on his left, he would not leave his enterprise;" and Abu Taleb, seeing his resolution, prudently desisted from any further effort, but promised to stand by him against all his enemies.

The Koreishites, defeated in their measures, resorted to force. The followers of Mahomet not being any longer safe in Mecca, sixteen of them, in the sixth year of Mahomet's mission, by his permission, fled into Ethiopia. Others followed, in all eighty-three men, eighteen women, and some children.

The king of Ethiopia treated them kindly, and refused to surrender them to the Koreish, though demanded.

Persecution spread the views of Mahomet among the tribes of Arabia, so that in six years the number of his disciples began to be quite formidable.

In the seventh year a league was formed against the Hashemites (the tribe of Mahomet) binding themselves to contract no marriages, nor have any dealings with them, which covenant was reduced to writing and laid in the temple.

This divided the Hashemites, the most of the tribe followed Aba Taleb. The copy of the league laid upon the Caaba, was all eaten by a worm except the name of God, and was thus made void.

About the eighth year of the mission, Mahomet was thrown into deep affliction and mourning by the loss of his uncle Abu Taleb, and his wife Khadijah.

The removal of these two persons induced the Koreishites to renew the persecution.

Mahomet, sixty miles east of Mecca, sought a refuge; but finding none, he returned again to Mecca.

In the twelfth year of his mission he made his night journey from Mecca to Jerusalem, thence to Heaven, on Al Borak (a beautiful ass), guided by the angel Gabriel. He had there an interview with Adam, Moses, Abraham, and Jesus Christ, who acknowledged his superiority, which was confirmed to him by the Deity himself.

This fiction would have caused the total ruin of his cause had it not been for two circumstances:

1. Abu Beer vouched for the truth of Mahomet.

2. Medina gave him a cordial invitation to remove to their city.

Expelled from Mecca, he fled to Medina.

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH.

NUMBER FIVE.

J. CAMERON.

NEW TESTAMENT ON RESTORATION OF ISRAEL—TESTIMONY OF JESUS.

But while disposed to admit that the testimonies adduced from Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Paul, seem very favorable to the ultimate restoration of Israel some may yet be dubious about accepting any testimony unless it can be corroborated by the Great Teacher himself. Let us inquire, then, what can be learned from the teaching of Jesus on this subject.

In describing his mission to the world, Jesus declared that he was sent to preach the kingdom of God (Luke iv. 43), and that he was sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Matt. xv. 24. This is equivalent to saying that he was sent to Israel to preach the kingdom of God to them. Well, Israel knew of only one kingdom of God, and that was the kingdom which God had established over the descendents of Jacob. And Jesus, in preaching the kingdom of God, gave no countenance to the idea that it was any other kingdom than that with which they were familiar. But more than this, Jesus chose twelve, and afterwards seventy, of the lost sheep of the house of Israel and sent them to preach among the same people the same kingdom of God, and there is no mention in the commission of any directions he gave them to guard them against leading their hearers to suppose that they were preaching that kingdom of God with which they were already acquainted. Hence it is a fair conclusion that both Jesus and his apostles preached the kingdom of God in the only sense which the previous revelations warranted, namely, the restoration of the Israelitish Theocracy. And this is corroborated by the effect this preaching had on the mass of the people—"The common people heard him gladly"—and would have taken him to make him king if he had allowed them.

But there is still more direct proof that Jesus preached the kingdom of God in the Israelitish sense. He promised the thrones of the house of David to the twelve apostles, to be fulfilled in the regeneration WHEN THE SON OF MAN SHOULD SIT ON THE THRONE OF HIS GLORY, when they should judge the twelve tribes of Israel. Matt. xix. 28. In the East to sit on a throne and judge was the prerogative of royalty, as many passages abundantly testify.

Thus:—"A king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Jer. xxiii. 5.

The people said to Samuel—"We will have a king over us, that we may be also like all the nations, and that our KING may JUDGE us, and go out before us and fight our battles." 1 Sam. viii. 19, 20.

And that these promised thrones are not mere judgment-seats is evident from another testimony in which they are expressly connected with the possession of a kingdom:—

"I APPOINT UNTO YOU A KINGDOM as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom AND SIT ON THRONES judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Luke xxii. 29, 30.

In the interval between the two occasions when our Lord gave this promise of twelve thrones to his apostles, he uttered, in their hearing, a pointed intimation of the period at which he and they should realize the sovereignty over Israel, that is, when he should sit on the throne of his glory. His words are, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, THEN shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. xxv. 31.

It has been attempted to set aside the plain sense of this promise by the statement that Jesus did not say he should then sit "for the first time" on the throne of his glory, and that the promise has been fulfilled to the apostles in virtue of the commission they received to teach the disciples all things commanded by the Lord, and by means of the letters they wrote to the churches. But those who make these objections overlook the fact that there are two thrones—the Father's throne in heaven, and the throne of David on earth. Our Lord was distinctly promised the throne of his father David which was also God's throne on the earth. He has been meanwhile exalted to the throne of God in heaven which never was and never shall be, the throne of David. The occupancy of both thrones in succession is entirely overlooked by such objectors, although so plainly declared by Jesus himself in his letter to the angel of the church of the Laodiceans—

"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."

Note the plain distinction between what our Lord calls "my throne," and the Father's throne which he calls "his throne." The assertion that the apostles received the fulfillment of this promise in the exercise of authority among the churches is groundless, for the simple reason that the promise apportions one apostle to each tribe, an arrangement of which the history of the church, as recorded in the New Testament, is utterly silent. The fulfillment of this promise, in the literal sense, is therefore, inevitable.

When Jesus was about to ascend to his Father's throne, after he had been, for forty days subsequent to his resurrection, teaching his disciples things pertaining to the kingdom of God, they asked him, "Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" This question did not imply any doubt as to the CERTAINTY of the event referred to, but simply expressed anxiety as to whether the time of accomplishment had arrived. And the answer of Jesus confirms this view, for he confines his answer strictly to the question of time, and casts no doubt on the certainty of fulfillment. "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power. But (meanwhile) ye shall receive power," etc. This restoration of the kingdom again to Israel is obviously reserved to the times of the RESTITUTION of all things spoken by the prophets, until which times Jesus the Messiah is retained in the heavens, from which, however, he will be sent, when those times shall have arrived as Peter testified to the Jews at the beautiful gate of the temple. And Paul when charged by the Jews before King Agrippa, declared his hope to be identical with that of the twelve tribes of Israel, with this in addition that he looked for its being realized through Jesus the Messiah, who had been raised from the dead and exalted to the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting till his enemies are made his footstool.

Thus the testimony of the Old and New Testaments combine to prove that the purpose of God is to establish a condition of matters on the earth under the personal administration of Messiah and the saints, in which restored Israel, in covenant with Jehovah as his peculiar nation, and the other nations of the earth blessed in Abraham and his seed the Messiah, shall exhibit the spectacle of a world redeemed from the bondage of both civil and ecclesiastical despotism, and rejoicing in "the liberty of the glory of the sons of God;" a liberty compared with which the "liberty of the glory" of the most enlightened governments of the present age will appear to be worse than Egyptian bondage.

ONE NAME, NOT THREE.

J. H. THOMAS, M. D.

The name of the Father, and the name of the Son and the name of the Holy Spirit is one name, not three. This is evident from the fact that aside from this one name there is "none other name given under heaven among men whereby we can be saved." Acts iv. 12. Therefore when a believing individual is "immersed into [eis into] the name (not names) of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," (Matt. xxviii. 19) he is introduced into the one all-saving name called by Moses—"this glorious and fearful name Yahweh Elohim" (Deut. xxviii. 58) rendered in the common version, "The Lord thy God;" but according to the best critics, among whom was the late Dr. Thomas, meaning in good English, "I will be mighty ones, or Saviors," or as expressed by Moses to Israel (Exod. vi 7), "And I will take you to me for a people, and I will be to you a God [Elohim] and ye shall know that I am the Lord your God [Yahweh Elohim]," which put in good English makes Moses tell Israel that Yahweh is he who will be their mighty ones or Saviors. Moreover he also tells Moses to tell Israel that Yahweh (I will be) is his memorial name forever and that he will place it somewhere on this earth. See Exod. iii. 12; Deut. xii. 5, 8–11. Solomon and David tell us that place is Jerusalem—on Mount Zion, which David says "is beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion the city of the Great King." We learn then from Moses, Solomon and David, that the uncreated self-existent Deity is to become a multitude of mighty ones, judges or rulers, all being sons of Deity, hence all being constituent parts of, and bearing the one Yahweh name placed on Mount Zion in Jerusalem, the city of the Great King.

This company of mighty ones is the manifestation of Deity by his Spirit—the Yahweh Spirit, of whom Jesus is the first-born, the head of that body, or company of mighty ones bearing the Yahweh name.

The process then by which Deity will manifest himself as Yahweh, or he who will be is called by Paul the "Mystery of Godliness," God manifested in flesh, perfected in Spirit, preached unto the nations, believed on in the world, received up in glory and was spoken of Jesus the head of the body who was begotten of the Yahweh Spirit and after his baptism was not only "God manifested in flesh" but was the manifestation of the name—the beginning of the one Yahweh name by being the first of the "mighty ones" who are to dwell at Jerusalem; hence he says to Peter, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," and again he says, "I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world." Jesus then having been begotten by the Spirit, and having manifested God in the flesh by the exhibition of his character, and the manifestation of his name, was born of Spirit by a resurrection from the dead to die no more, and so became Spirit; being perfected by the Spirit he was the manifestation of Yahweh not only in character but also in nature, being as the apostle says,—the express impress of the Father's substance, therefore the beginning of that glorious and fearful name which Deity has declared he will place at Jerusalem.

Christ being our example, it follows that he who is begotten by the Spirit by a comprehensive understanding and hearty belief of the things concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ and has been immersed into the only saving name, which is the name of the Father, and the name of the Son, and the name of the Holy Spirit, and being raised from the dead to die no more, or changed to incorruptibility at the coming of Christ is perfected in Spirit, a manifestation of Deity both in character and nature—one of the mighty ones that Deity declared to Moses he would become, and hence a manifestation of the one Yahweh name.

There are three distinct expressions in the Greek representing three different conditions, or acts, which have been confounded by the translators, if we may credit the decision of able critics. I refer to the expressions eis to onoma; en tw onomati; epi tw onomati.

The first of these expressions—eis to onoma—means into the name, incorrectly rendered in the common version "in" or "on the name." Hence Matt. xxviii. 19 should read "immersing them (eis) into the name," etc. John i. 12 should read, "To them gave he power to become sons of God even to them that believe (eis) into the name of the only begotten Son of God." John iii. 8 should read, "He that believeth not is condemned already because he hath not believed (eis) into the name of the only begotten Son of God."

The second expression—en tw onomati—means in the name signifying "by the authority of;" for example, see John v. 43, "I am come (en) in the name (that is, by or with the authority) of my Father." John x. 25, "The works that I do (en) by the authority of my Father," etc. Acts iii. 16, "(en) by the authority of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk."

The third expression—epi tw onomati—means upon the name; with a view to the name, or for the name; for example, Acts ii. 38, "Repent and be immersed every one of you (epi tw onomati) for, or with a view to the name of Jesus Christ." We consider this the meaning of the apostles' words: by being immersed for the remission of sins they would become the bride of Jesus and so be entitled to his name which was the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Again, Acts iv. 17, Threaten them that they speak no more (epi) upon this name.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sententious.

Gratitude is the memory of the heart.

One of the most effectual ways of pleasing and making one's self loved is to be cheerful; joy softens more hearts than tears.

Abba, Father, I entreat thee
In the name of thy dear Son;
Have compassion on my weakness:
Let thy will, not mine, be done.

The greatest and grandest reformer that ever lived was Jesus of Nazareth, whose precepts and principles of virtue and morality will stand through all time and eternity.

"Thinketh no evil." How very, very far short are we of that standard. As the pigmy dwarf shrub of the lowlands is to the majestic mountain pine, so are we to this moral nobility of soul.

Extraordinary afflictions are not always the punishment of extraordinary sins, but sometimes the trial of extraordinary graces.—Matthew Henry.

The gilded walls of palace halls,
Earth's music soft and low,
Can soothe no troubled, weary souls,
Can hush no cry of woe.

It is not of so much consequence to be thought an honest man as to be one. Such as do not mind the approbation of other people, but only aim at deserving it, take the surest way to obtain it.

After all, the best version of the Bible is the translation of it into daily life. Every time this is done, there is indeed a revised and truly authorized version of the Book of God. May the Holy Spirit prompt his people everywhere to multiply these personal editions of his Scriptures!—George Dana Boardman.

Christian character is not an act, but a process; not a sudden creation, but a development. It grows and bears fruit like a tree, and like a tree it requires patient care and unwearied cultivation.

Lord Chatham, who was almost as remarkable for his courteous manners as for eloquence and public spirit, has thus defined good breeding: "Benevolence in trifles, or a preference of others to ourselves in the little daily occurrences of life.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, July 6, 1881.

A LETTER postmarked Martinsburg, Texas, June 18, 1881, and containing stamps to the amount of one dollar has come to hand, but it does not contain the least slip of paper to either make known the sender's name, or what to do with the remittance.

SOME time ago a sister in Nebraska sent five dollars here to aid brother J. M. Stephenson in making a visit to her vicinity. This money was returned by mail to the writer according to the very best directions we had. Names were almost impossible to decipher.

SINCE our last paper was sent out one of the most saddening occurrences that ever falls to the lot of journalism to record has transpired. As all our readers are by this time fully aware the President of the United States, James A. Garfield, was shot by an assassin on Saturday last, in Washington, and most fearfully, if not mortally, wounded. At the date of our going to press the advices from Washington are as favorable as could possibly be expected, causing hopefulness in the minds of many; while, on the other hand, it is the opinion of others, well qualified to judge in the case, that the wounds will finally prove fatal, and that the President cannot survive the inflamation that must occur as a necessary result of the laceration of the internal parts particularly of the peritoneal membrane. The next three or four days will no doubt determine whether the issue shall be life or death with the fearful probability, humanly speaking, that it will be death. Still, while we thus write, we are hoping against hope. Our trust is in God who raises the dead, and if nothing short of a miracle can safe the life of the much honored President, God is as powerful as ever, and holds in his hands the issues of life. We raise an humble fervent prayer that God will bring up from the very grasp of death, him, the continuance of whose life seems so necessary in the present crisis of National affairs. We do hope that we shall not have to chronicle the death of the Chief Magistrate of this nation in our next, but trust that we shall be permitted to record that he has been delivered from the hand of the grave. GOD REIGNS.

P. S.—Since writing the above the following has been received direct from Washington. It is now 10 a. m., July 6:—

"WASHINGTON, D. C., 8:30 A. M.

The President passed a very restful night and says he feels better than at any time since Saturday. Pulse below 100. His physicians feel much encouraged.

D. W. BLISS, M. D."

Selections.

Chicago Tribune.

THE REVISION.

A Criticism by the Rev. S. I. Conser, of Baltimore.

The Chicago Tribune containing the new version of the New Testament complete has been received, and I can but say that any newspaper that will publish a complete copy of the New Testament in any one number deserves universal patronage. I think with you that Chicago has a live press.

Complying with your wishes, I will say that the new version is a decided improvement upon King James', both as to arrangement and conformity to the original. Still it is not perfect. Take, for example, the Greek word hades. This word occurs in Matt. xi. 23, and xvi. 18; Luke x. 15, and xvi. 23; Acts ii. 27–31; 1 Cor. xv. 55; Rev. i. 18, and vi. 8, and xx. 13, 14, and is translated hell, always excepting 1 Cor. xv. 55, where it is improperly rendered grave. Hell is the English synonym of the Greek hades, and hades is the equivalent of the Hebrew sheol. The meaning of one will then determine the meaning of every one. Sheol is translated in the Old Testament hell thirty-one times, grave thirty times, and pit three times. Sheol literally means rapacious, insatiable. It is derived from shaal,—to ask, to crave. It is equal to the Latin orcus rapax. See Prov. xxvii. 20; Isa. v. 14.

Sheol is not a place, but rather a state or condition of a place. Unlike the grave (keever), which is local and may be plural. Sheol is never so used. There is but one sheol, and that everywhere. It is a state (not a place) of darkness and gloom (Job x. 21–22), of inaction and silence (Eccl. ix. 10; Isa. xxxviii. 18). It is not a place or state of conscious happiness or misery, but a state of unconscious silence and inactivity. The Greek equivalent is hades. In the Septuagint sheol is rendered hades sixty times out of sixty-three. Originally it may have meant the grave, but as all are not in the grave, yet all are in sheol or hades, it came in time to designate the unknown state of the dead, irrespective of their condition. Sheol comprehends keever, the grave, but not vice versa!

Hades is derived from "a" aspirated "ha," not or primitive, and "idtes," to see,—hence the unseen, the dark unknown.

A (state) of deepest shades, unpierced by human thought
The dreary regions of the dead, where all things are forgot.—C. Wesley.

Sheol, hades, hell, all mean legitimately the dark unknown, concerning which the most piercing eye and acute ear can get no information. A state where there is

No sense, no sound,
Where utter nothing dwells.—Pollock.

In the few authenticated resuscitations from death's dark domain or the confines of hell that are recorded in the New Testament, a significant silence concerning the interregnum prevails. Why is this, if the dead are conscious? Let the Bible answer. Eccl. ix. 5.

In all cases where sheol in the Old and hades in the New Testament occur, they signify the week—helpless—the dark unknown. Now, hades has its equivalent in the Anglo-Saxon Helan, to hide, to conceal, and our English hell, and though Dr. Campbell thinks hades should never be rendered hell, it was because modern theologians have perverted a harmless word. With popular superstition we have nothing to do; we use it in its Scriptural sense as the representative of the Greek hades. No theologian need have any trouble in understanding or in explaining those terms to the uneducated. But the revisers bury this Biblical term in the dark recess of the Greek language, and on this subject the English reader is left without a revelation, for in every place where hades is translated in King James' version it remains untranslated in the new version. That death and hell are occasionally personified and addressed as conscious, active entities is true, but because "death shall feed on them" (Psa. xlix. 14), and "hell hath enlarged her (nephish—soul), or stomach to grind to dust its victims" (Gen. iii. 19), we are not to conclude that death or hell is a physical, carnivorous monster. Such personifications are common in all languages, especially the Hebrew, where mountains and hell sing and clap their hands (Psa. lv. 12), where blood cries for vengeance (Gen. iv. 10), where trees choose kings (Judges ix. 14), and all nature is made active and vocal. And so in the classics, sheol, hades, and hell are made tumultuous with their dumb inhabitants. Nevertheless, it remains true that their etymological meaning is the covered, the dark, the silent, the unknown. Notwithstanding the vagaries of Spiritualism, and the fetish ghosts and ghouls of dilapidated graveyards, the Scriptural fact remains that "the dead know not anything." Eccl. ix. 5; Job xiv. 21.

From these facts we conclude that the revised version is defective in translating gehenna into hell, which it is not, and not translating hades into hell, which it is. But inexplicable as it may appear, the revisers do attempt to translate or rather metamorphose gehenna into hell, words as foreign to each other as King Agrippa is to loving kindness. Gehenna is a Hebrew word Greekized as any other proper name might be. There is no such word in the Greek classics. It is simply a geographical term, derived from the Hebrew Gee, land or valley, and Hinnom, a man's name, like Abb's Valley, Virginia, or Brush Valley, Pennsylvania, terms well understood by the inhabitants of those places and vicinity, but nowhere else. Like all geographical terms it has no generic meaning, and no equivalent in any other language. It may be translated into Greek by spelling it with Greek letters as gehenna, and so into English as Gee-Hinnom or Hinnom's Valley, but it is not a Greek or English term. It is as purely a local term as Chicago. See Josh. xviii. 16; Jer. xix. 2.

Whatever Christ may have meant besides a literal civil retribution, he certainly never used gehenna as an equivalent for hades or hell. Like the Hebrew Gee-Hinnom, so the Greek gehenna might be anglicised into Hinnom's Valley or remain untranslated, but never rendered hell. As well might the revisers have translated Jericho or Galilee hell. But a place of perpetual torment being given "where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched," gehenna may by a bold metaphor symbolize such a place, still it is difficult for the unsophisticated to comprehend what effect either worms or fire can have on immaterial and immortal souls. Whatever metaphorical meaning, if any, Christ may have had in the maledictions of gehenna is the greater mystery since none of his apostles made any allusion to the subject. We certainly think the revisers were not justified in translating gehenna, a specific geographical term, by the generic metaphysical term hell.

If the revisers are consistent in their rendering of the Old Testament, then the term hell will be substituted by the Hebrew sheol or the Greek hades, and hell will disappear from the English Old Testament, as it now has in half the places in the New Testament version.

The next revision will then leave gehenna untranslated, and so the Christian Scriptures will be clear of hell. Universalism, however, will gain nothing by this, as the destiny of the impenitent is not affected by Gee-Hinnom or gehenna, but by numerous other terms and phrases.

Should it be alleged that hell has so changed its meaning as not to be a synonym for hades, then how is that Greek term to be translated? Is the English language so poor as not to have a suitable word or phrase wherewith to anglicize hades? If not, why leave it untranslated? Must every reader study Greek or have a Greek scholar to read for him? And if the eighty wise and good reviewers are unable to translate it, then of what use is such a word in the Bible?

S. I. M. CONSER.

Chicago Tribune.

A CRITICISM.

NORRIS FARM, NEAR LA MOILLE, Ill., June 23.

I am away from my library, sitting in a pine grove, and do not know that there is in a Hebrew book within miles, except a copy of the Psalms that I chance to have with me, and yet I venture a word of criticism upon the able article of S. I. M. Conser, of Baltimore, that I have just found in the Tribune of last Sunday.

Speaking of the Hebrew word sheol, —translated hell in the Old Testament, —he says: "Sheol literally means rapacious, insatiable. It is derived from shaal—to ask, to crave." I had all along supposed that the noun sheol came from the verb sha-al—to dig; hence the idea of that which is hollowed out, or of the grave; and then metaphorically, to seek, to inquire; and hence the idea of the unseen, the hidden, the mysterious, that belong to death and the unknown world. Indeed, I think the word sheol may be very properly translated by giving this as the primary meaning. And this would agree with its Greek equivalent hades, which literally means the unseen. I do not care just where he gets the idea of the "rapacious and insatiable," either from the Hebrew or the Greek. Of course, what I say here is from memory, and that not from a very recent examination.

But this little criticism does not affect the value of Mr. Conser's able article; and I agree with him in what he says about the revisers leaving the word hades untranslated, and rendering gehenna, hell. They are both proper nouns; and certainly our word Hell—which formerly meant to cover or conceal, and thus agreed with the Hebrew and Greek—does not properly translate gehenna, which is simply Gee-Hinnom, or the Valley of Hinnom.

H. W. THOMAS.

(NOTE.—The Hebrew verb שאל—shaal—from which the noun שְׁאוֹל—sheol—is derived, has, according to Gesenius, two distinct significations. He says that the verb means—I. To dig, to excavate, to hollow out; hence, שְׁאוֹל—Hades; pr. a hollow place under ground. From the idea of digging comes readily that of searching out, inquiring." II. "To ask, to ask for, to demand, etc."

On the noun he says—"As to the etymology, שְׁאוֹל comes from the root שָׁאַל, I. and is i. q. שָׁשַׁל, a cavity, a hollow subterranean place; just as the German Holle, hell, is originally the same with Hohle, a hollow, cavern, and Latin coelum is from Greek κοίλος—hollow. The usual derivation has been from the notion of asking, demanding, root שָׁאַל. II. Since Orcus lays claim unsparingly to all alike, whence the epithet orcus rapax."

It will be seen from this, that Gesenius favors the signification of something excavated.

Davidson, in his Lexicon, seems to favor the meaning of rapacious craving. Our English word grave is derived from the verb grave, to cut, to carve, and signifies a place cut in the ground as the receptacle of the dead.—ED. RESTITUTION.)

Prophetic Times.

TOKENS OF THE JEWISH HORIZON.

P. J. J. WARSCHAWSKI."

At his first coming the Christ of God appeared in great humiliation and in poverty; so poor was he that, while "the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, the Son of Man had not where to lay his head." But at his second coming the Lord shall appear in his glory. For "the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

And there are signs of his coming at the present moment. Indeed, if we, with Bible in hand and the recent events spread out before us like a curtain, cannot discern the signs of our times, we are not in much better position than were the Jewish people of old.

While they held in one hand the sacred volume, every page of which was emblazoned with the names and titles of Messiah, they sadly erred in thrusting him out with the other when he appeared at the appointed time.

From what is actually taking place before our eyes, we cannot help noticing how prophecy, with reference to Israel's return and the approach of the Lord's advent, is most remarkably reaching its climax.

Witness the latest phenomenon on the Jewish horizon, and you cannot regard it in any other light than that "the time to favor Zion, yea, the set time is come."

I am alluding to a remarkable paragraph which appears in a contemporary as follows:

"Mr. Schick, who holds the appointment of Surveyor of Buildings in the Holy City, has lately issued a very instructive report. He tells us that ruined houses have been restored or rebuilt by individuals and companies, and buildings on the Peabody plan have been erected by associations. But this is not all. The streets, we are told, are now lighted, and for an Eastern city, kept most exceptionally clean. The aqueduct from the Pools of Solomon has been restored, and the water brought thence to the city. . . . . The sanitary department is under the control of a German physician. Bethlehem and Nazareth are eagerly emulating the progress of the capital. In the latter place windows are becoming quite frequent. It is asserted that there is a fixed resolution on the part of thousands in Prussia to make the country as hot as possible for Jews, and it is not unlikely that this may, in a measure, increase the already considerable number now returning to Palestine, more especially as the German Jews are already a power in Jerusalem."

Zion's prolonged wail is thus receiving a divine and gracious answer in the prophetic words: "And Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me. Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee."

Thus much for God's part on behalf of his beloved city and his ancient people Israel, his promises being ever faithful ever sure.

But is there not in all this a voice like a trumpet blast, directed to the church of Christ everywhere, regarding that self-same city and that self-same nation? Listen! "Go through, go through the gates, prepare ye the way of the people, cast up, cast up the highway, gather out the stones, lift up a standard for the people."

If ever Israel needed the message of salvation proclaimed to them through a crucified and gloriously risen Savior, how much more so when many of the synagogue votaries are beginning to hunger after something more substantial than the Rabbinical husks can afford them! The seed of the word has long been scattered broadcast, and there exists abundant proof that in the hearts of many sons and daughters of Abraham, numbering in the east central part of London alone (where our missionary efforts are chiefly directed) nearly six thousand souls, the same has taken deep root.

The missionary efforts, therefore, to lead some of our Jewish brethren, at this almost eleventh hour, to him whose glory we, as his disciples and stewards, eagerly hope soon to behold—it may be sooner than we anticipate—should certainly, meet with every encouragement and Christian sympathy from all who are longing for his appearing; so that they who have long been toiling on and "sowing in tears," may at last be enabled, especially when there exists the possibility, of reaping in joy.

Oh! what will the harvest be?

Missionary to the Jews.

News Items.

TUNIS, July 4.—Grave apprehensions are felt for the safety of Europeans at all coast towns, as the rising of rebel tribes is extending.

The Arabs at Sfax have driven out the Europeans and occupied the forts. If the latter are not speedily surrendered, the French will bombard them. The Arabs pillaged the city. Three persons were killed and twenty wounded.

The Archbishop of Tunis, who is an Italian, has been requested to resign. The French Archbishop of Algeria will succeed him. This has caused a painful impression.

LONDON, July 4.—Bradlaugh, the Atheist, will not be admitted as a member of Parliament this session, as the bill which proposes affirmation to be used by those who object to oaths has been laid aside until next session.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 4.—The harvest is expected to be very good throughout the Russian Empire.

Heat, hail, gales, thunder storms, and terrible tornadoes have made havoc north, south, east, and west during the past few days. Superstitious people, who connect the appearance of a comet with physical disasters, must have been confirmed in their terror when they saw trees uprooted and houses levelled by these cyclones, churches lifted from their foundations and shattered into splinters, barns set blazing, and cattle killed by the terrific and incessant lightning, hail scourging whole villages, and laying waste the harvest for miles, and reservoirs bursting under the sudden deluge of rain.

Communications.

EPHESIANS V. 32.

E. S. HARDING.

"This is a great mystery."

Christ and the church a great mystery in Paul's day, a great mystery still, and will remain such until the manifestation of the sons of God. Now knowing in part, seeing through a glass darkly. It doth not yet appear what we shall be. There is now the mysterious working in and working out of redemption, unseen, known only by faith, existing in us a mystery. Its manifestation awaits Christ's appearance. Then we shall see him and be made like him. We have an earnest now; then we shall have an exceeding eternal weight of glory.

I cannot speak save only as God hath spoken: to interpret I must compare Scripture and Scripture.

Our life now is hid, we possess the germ. As the oak in the acorn is a mystery, so the new creation in us baffles finite minds; reason is lost in its endeavors to solve the problem of plastic power in the vegetable and animal kingdom.

So eternal life in man is by faith. To be born again is to be conceived of the Spirit, thus we have a Savior, according to the Scriptures born of the Spirit, raised from among the dead, as a first-fruit.

God's law in grace is the law of association. In Adam all die—in Christ all are made alive. There is an order of association in both. Abel and Cain by the one. Just and unjust of the other. In Christ the believer is declared just, and in Christ he receives the newness of life and holiness and power.

The natural mind discerns not, neither is it possible for it to understand spiritual things. The first man sees, the second man believes; the one of the earth earthy sees death, the other of things unseen believes in life from the dead. Christ's resurrection is the first-fruit of the believers. The first-fruit is a part of the fruit—a sheaf taken where more of the same kind remained. After all is gathered only the stubble is left unto the end.

We are not infinite yet, we only know in part. It is a great mystery, the church is as one, members one of another, Christ its head and it is by virtue of union, the one body gathering, growing in fullness, the concepting state, embryo formation, "Till we all come into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." The process of recovery and glorification is carried on in mystery to its goal, when resurrected from among the dead we see him as he is, then that which is in part shall be done away, we shall be like him, to behold his glory revealed in us. The mystery is in the resurrection, even we ourselves within ourselves are sighing, ardently desiring, in birth-pangs the redemption of the body —the church, the body of Christ, bone of his bone, flesh of his flesh. Is it not a great mystery, that of spiritual bodies? What shall be the conditions, the circumstances, the necessities, and capacities of beings thus perfected, thus glorified. As was our Lord after his resurrection, soon for forty days we shall be individual personalities with sensible manifestations of sight, and touch and discourse, for purposes of ministry and enjoyment. This all lies in the mystery, beyond the power of our elucidation, as we know only by faith of the terms involved or of the very existences spoken of. We know this, that when the mystery unfolds, it will be a death blow to evil, and the reinstatement, the reinstallation of God. "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, he will dwell with them, God himself shall be with them, and be their God." So then, that resurrection will prove a birth into all the glories of Divine Sonship! that resurrection will impart an incapacity of death! that resurrection will usher into—the Kingdom, Eternal Life. Unveiled Sonship! "This is a great mystery! but I speak concerning Christ and the church."

OBITUARY.

DIED—At Bloomer, Wis., Jan. 27, '81, Orva A. only son of brother and sister M. and L. Tatman, aged eight years, two mo., and twelve days.

The funeral was from the Congregation church. Words of comfort by the writer from Heb. ix. 27, 28. This is the second time death has entered this family within a year, but this time it has taken the father's pride and the mother's joy. Little Orva was a noble and a beautiful child, but our brother and sister sorrow not as those who have no hope, knowing that the power of the king of terror has been broken by the resurrection of our Lord from the dead, and we believe that Orva will come again from the enemy's land, when Rachel's children shall "come again to their own border."

MRS. A. C. SEDGWICK.

DIED—At Aurber, Wis., Dec. 25, '81, Maud, infant daughter of George and Etta VanEschow.

Funeral services at the house of the grandparents, R. Hills, by the writer, from Jer. xxxi. 16–17. It is seldom we see a brighter bud or a more promising child than little Maud; but she sleeps in the family burying ground, near the remains of her great grandmother, the first wife of our esteemed brother, Wm. B. Putman, and as we looked upon the grave of this aged saint and thought of the trials and hardships, the cares and the sorrows she had endured as she traveled through life's journey with the companion of her youth, contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, our heart's desire ascended to God to speed the time of our promised redemption, to bring that morning of joy that shall be undimed by tears, that blessed state where death shall never be known.

MRS. A. C. SEDGWICK.

DIED—At Magnolia, Wis., June 11, '81, Eva A. wife of Don Osborne, and youngest daughter of brother and sister I. and L. Worthing, aged 28 years.

By this pursuit of divine Providence many hearts are made sad, a loving husband with bright prospects for future happiness, sees her who was the light and joy of his home-circle, suddenly cut down—falling a victim to a disease that love nor medical skill could overcome, while he is left to mourn not only his own loss but also for the little son who may never know a mother's love. This is indeed a sore affliction not only to the husband, but also to the aged parents and the two remaining sisters. She was a loving wife, a tender and dutiful daughter, an affectionate sister, and a warm-hearted friend, and with all her noble and good qualities she had as few faults as fall to the common lot of those of her years. She will be missed by her many acquaintances and mourned for by a large circle of relatives. The funeral was held at the Methodist Church, and the living were addressed from Psalms xxx. 5: "Weeping may endure for a night but joy cometh with the morning."

MRS. A. C. SEDGWICK.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

My address until further notice will be as follows: Until July 16, direct to Irving, Iowa, care of Levi Marsh. From that time direct to Mayville, Cloud county, Kansas.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing, I will be at Samuel Andrews on Friday before the first Sunday in July. Friday before the second Sunday in July at the Roose schoolhouse, or as brother Roose may appoint. Can fill another appointment on the third Sunday if the brethren at some other point desire me to hold a meeting.

J. S. HATCH.

There will be a basket meeting July 10, near brother Grady's, on Big Creek, Kan., nine miles northwest of Erie.

Also a basket meeting July 17, near J. B. Rees', in Wilson Co., Kan. A general invitation is given to all to come. Brethren lay aside the toil and labor of life, and let us have a good time at both meetings.

By order of the Church.

JOHN POORE.

The Semi-annual Meeting of the Christian Association of Iowa will convene at Irving, Tama county, the Lord willing on Thursday, July 7, 1881, and hold over Sunday. It will be a tent meeting, and brethren throughout the state are cordially invited to be present with their tents. Churches please remember to send one delegate for every ten members or fraction over five. Brethren from abroad are invited to be with us. A good meeting is hoped for. Brethren Reed, Stephenson and Whitesit have been invited to help minister to the inward man. Provisions will be on the ground for sale to provide for the outward man. Let us have a general turnout to this meeting, the inclement weather having interfered with the last two meetings.

O. R. CHOWN, Pres.

JOHN FITZ, Sec.

The Church of God of Montague and Wise Counties, Texas, will hold their annual Conference at Valentine Springs in Montague County, commencing Friday, August 12, 1881, at four o'clock, P. M. The place of meeting is four miles south of Forestburg, sixteen miles south of St. Jno, sixteen miles southeast of Montaguetown, thirty miles west of Gainsville, and twenty miles north of Decatur. We invite every body that feels an interest in the word of God to come over. Brethren coming from a distance will go to brethren Hedges, Grimes, or Sowers, who live near the meeting place. We want all the preaching brethren we can get. Any preaching brother who can come will please address me at Sunset, Wise Co., Tex., and we will help him come.

T. T. DOYAL.

W. J. B. Fenimore will hold a Grove Meeting at Kings Corner, Clinton Co., Ind., commencing at eleven o'clock on Saturday, July 9, and continue over Sunday. Brethren and friends are invited to come. Bring your dinners and horse feed and stay for two discourses on Sunday. Bring your hymn books and have some good songs. Come one, come all.

DR. J. A. THURMAN.

The Annual Assembly of the Church of God will commence on Friday, Aug. 5, at the house of the brethren in Winchester, Va., and continue over Sunday, which will be the first Sunday. All of the Abrahamic faith, and the people in general are respectfully invited to attend. All from a distance will please notify the writer in due time, and we will meet them at the R. R. depot, and take care of them during the meeting, and longer if they will stay, as we love the communion of the brethren in Christ.

N. J. MORGAN.

The Piedmont Advent C. C. will meet with the church at Tabernacle, Caldwell county, N. C., Aug. 7, and continue three days. Tabernacle is 18 miles from the R. R., Hickory being the nearest depot. Persons coming on the cars will go from Hickory to the conference by means of private conveyance.

JACOB J. HAUSHAW, Sec.

A. B. MAGRUDER'S REPLY

—TO—

R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE BIBLE DEFENDED AND ATHEISM REBUKED.

A Reply to R. G. Ingersoll's Lectures, "Mistakes of Moses," "Skulls," "What must we do to be Saved," etc.

Contains one hundred and forty-two pages, neatly printed on good paper, and good plain type, neat paper cover.

Price Fifty Cents per copy.

SEND TO THIS OFFICE FOR A COPY.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—BY JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

MAN

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE,

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 26, 1881, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 12 for 50c., or 25 for $1.

Poetry.

WHY ART THOU SAD!

W. I. CROCKETT.

Why art thou sad, O pilgrim waiting one?
Why art thou bowed beneath a weight of care?
Why dost thou pause thy pilgrimage began,
To breathe again earth's poisonous perfumed air?
Lift up thine eyes though they be dim with tears.
Can't see no glory in the coming years?

Cast off thy sadness, let the world be sad,
Put on thy strength to conquer in the strife:
Come dry thy tears, to-morrow thou'll be glad,
And drink from out the heavenly fount of life.
Go place thy care upon the Just and true.
Who have his promise: He will care for you.

Hast seen the moon upon the van of day,
Pierce through the dusky thin of night?
Hast seen the pests of darkness flee away,
Before the gorgeous panoply of light?
Be true, faint not, another morn thou'll see,
The glorious morning of Eternity.

Communications.

REPLY TO INGERSOLL.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

Editor Restitution:

Please allow me to state for the information of the brethren and others interested, that my reply to Ingersoll's lectures is now out in a neat, well bound, covered pamphlet of 142 printed pages, and that the copies subscribed and paid for (to this date 402 copies) have been sent to the proper postoffice address, by mail, or in some cases where the packages were bulky, by express.

In some few cases, the transmission is delayed by request of subscribers about to remove, etc. If by inadvertence or oversight, any were omitted in the supply I hope such will apprise me by letter or post card, and the failure will be rectified.

Many of the subscribers have generously donated some part of the copies to which they were entitled, with the purpose of creating by their sales a fund to defray cost of advertising, postage and expressage, and some other small incidental expenses, to insure a large circulation, and to pay for paper, press work, etc., of a second edition from the stereotypes which have been prepared for that purpose, if such edition should be warranted by the ready sale of the remainder now on hand. It is too soon to tell how the book will sell, but we have no reason to fear that it will not be favorably received, judging from the greeting it has met from the few persons which have had time to notice it.

In some instances brethren have written to authorise retention of some of their copies to be sold on expense account AFTER they had been forwarded by the publishers. In such cases will those subscribers kindly dispose of these surplus copies, if practicable, and remit proceeds to me by mail, or apprise me that they are held subject to my order.

As I have from the beginning undertaken this grateful task—this high honor—of standing up for the word of the Lord, and "contending for the faith once for all delivered to the saints," from no motive of personal gain, but as the advocate and defender of the household of faith, and as obeying the mandate of God, "to be ready always to give a reason for the hope we cherish, and the faith that is in us," against all blasphemous Philistines who presume to defy the Lord of Hosts, I thank God and take courage that he has put it into the hearts of so many of his people to help in this common cause, and that our humble task of gladly bearing testimony to his truth has been so far accomplished.

"The Bible Defended and Atheism Rebuked," however humble its merits, possesses at least this value, that it is the free and fearless testimonial of the "Little Flock" of God's faithful ones to whom it is "his good pleasure to give the kingdom." We crave no higher honor, no greater reward; and we do not fear that he will despise our little offering—all honor and blessing to his holy name, through Jesus, his Son, our Savior.

With me it has been a work of faith as well as a labor of love. May God's blessing make the little work a means and a harbinger of saving to many in this perverse and gain-saying generation.

Stephens City, Va.

STAND FIRM,

J. F. WAGONER.

Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ, that whether I come and see you or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel.

The above earnest injunction was sent to the Philippian brethren over eighteen hundred years ago. The zeal of a faithful and uncompromising advocate of the gospel urged upon the church at Philippi four things of the greatest importance to a high development of Christian character.

1. Conversation becoming the gospel.

2. A state of affairs in the church showing harmony among the brethren.

3. Firmness in devotion to the truth, and—

4. Unity in the faith of the gospel.

It was necessary THEN for these elements to be found in the church, it certainly can be no less a necessity NOW. And if when so recently organized, and under the pure and correct instruction of an inspired apostle the church needed the above earnest injunctions, what shall we say when so far removed from these favorable circumstances, when error rendered almost sacred by hoary age has fastened its fangs upon the pure unadulterated truth, should it not be urged upon all who profess to be representatives of the ancient faith?

Neither the truth nor its requirements have changed since Paul wrote urging such duties upon the brethren. The same firmness, the same unity, the same pure and holy conversation, the same good order in the church are as essential to Christian character now as they were then. If no compromise could be made then with error, neither can it now. If truth could then be readily distinguished from error, so it can now.

That there is a dangerous tendency to compromise with error may be seen from the reports that are given by some who give accounts of their labors.

Recently something like the following appeared in THE RESTITUTION. "The Methodists and Baptists invited us to preach in their churches;" and the writer adds, by way of explaining this strange procedure, "that extreme views have ceased to be urged." The writer does not state I believe which party holds the extreme views, hence one is left to infer that both parties have yielded a little and thus have united.

Brethren remember that extreme views began early in the history of the Bible. The first extreme views we find are stated about thus:

God's extreme views as to man's destiny—"Ye shall surely die."

The extreme views of the serpent as to man's destiny—"Ye shall not surely die."

Now for these two parties to unite it would be necessary for these extreme views to yield and unite upon some middle ground. Suppose one should say, "Well, I believe that part of the man dies, I did say that the man died, but I will take that back for the sake of a union with you."

"Well, as you have yielded a point for the sake of union, I will also yield. I believe that the man does not die, but will say that part of the man dies."

Thus the two parties unite, but both abandon extreme points. Now it is through such compromises that the serpent's lie is more potent in the religious world to-day than all the positive declarations of God's holy word. Through such compromises every grand truth of the Bible is swept from the religious creeds of the churches.

Through holding "extreme views" I have been for twenty years debarred from the houses of worship of the world's religious bodies. It is true that propositions have been made to me to lay aside extreme views and then I could be welcome. Away with this compromising spirit. It will shut many out of the kingdom of God. There is no truth found in the Bible of so little importance that we can exchange it for error.

Let no false notion of charity tempt you to throw the mantle of sincerity over the errors of your fellow men. Do your duty plainly and yet kindly. Dare to preach the truth though it offend your dearest earthly friend. Remember the many solemn injunctions placed upon those who handle the word of the living God. If an angel from heaven would be cursed for perverting the gospel, shall we not boldly warn those who although sincere and honest are yet perverters instead of preachers of the gospel.

Shun not to declare the whole counsel of God. Reprove, rebuke with authority. Preach the word fearlessly. Do not be afraid of offending people by telling them the plain truths of the Bible. God nowhere requires you to respect error. Call things by their right names; don't include the religious fanaticisms of the world in terms used to express Christianity, for Christianity is one thing, and worldly religion is quite another.

Who can but admire the fearless yet plain and truthful statements found in the article on "The True Gospel," by Brother Crockett? Such language is demanded.

Let us go forth in the last struggle for truth with this inscribed upon our banners:

"No compromise with error."

Yours for the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Denver, Ind.

Youths' Column.

The Children's Song.

FRANCES R. HAVERGAL.

God of heaven hear our singing:
Only little ones are we.
Yet a great petition bringing.
Father, now we come to thee.

Let thy kingdom come, we pray thee:
Let the world in thee find rest:
Let all know thee and obey thee,
Loving, praising, blessing, blessed.

Let the sweet and joyful story
Of the Savior's wondrous love
Wake on earth a song of glory,
Like the angel's song above.

Father, send the glorious hour;
Every heart be thine alone.
For the kingdom and the power
And the glory are thine own.

Visitor.

The Snow Prayer.

A little girl went out to play one day in the fresh new snow, and when she came in she said:

"Mamma, I could'nt help praying when I was out at play."

"What did you pray my dear?"

"I prayed the snow-prayer, mamma, that I learned once in Subbath School: 'Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.'"

What a beautiful prayer! And here is a promise to go with it:

"Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow." What can wash them white? The Bible answers:

"They have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

Only One.

Hundreds of stars in the pretty sky;
Hundreds of shells on the shore together;
Hundreds of birds that go singing by;
Hundreds of bees in the sunny weather.

Hundreds of dewdrops to greet the dawn;
Hundreds of lambs in the purple clover;
Hundreds of butterflies on the lawn;
But only one MOTHER the wide world over.

S. S. Classmate.

Home Politeness.

A boy who is polite to his father and mother is likely to be polite to every one else. A boy lacking politeness to his parents may have the semblance of courtesy in society, but is never truly polite in spirit, and is in danger, as he becomes familiar, of betraying his real want of courtesy.

We are all in danger of living too much for the outside world, for the impression we make in society, coveting the good opinions of those who are in a sense a part of ourselves, and who will continue to sustain and be interested in us, notwithstanding these defects of deportment and character.

We say to every boy and to every girl, Cultivate habits of courtesy and propriety at home—in the sitting-room and the kitchen, as well as in the parlor, and you will be sure in other places to deport yourself in a becoming and attractive manner.

When one has a pleasant smile and a graceful demeanor, it is a satisfaction to know that these are not put on, but that they belong to the character, and are manifested at all times and under all circumstances.

Addie in Little Christian.

About Doves.

The carrier dove has been made famous in history and poetry for its remarkable feats and great usefulness.

During the wars of the ancient Romans, the crusades, and others, they were very useful in carrying news from the besieged cities. The message was written on very thin paper and fastened under the wing, tied to the leg, or put in a thin gold box and tied about the neck. Sometimes they were caught by the hawks of the besieging army, and the message fell into the hands of the enemy.

Carrier doves fly about twenty-five miles per hour, though some have attained a far greater speed.

The turtle dove has ever been regarded as the emblem of tender affection. Its gentle, soothing notes win the sympathy and love of every hearer.

The species that is most common and with which we are more acquainted is the rock dove. It is so named because it builds its nest in rocky caverns rather than in trees. It is so strongly attached to its rocky home that even after several generations have never known anything but wood houses, the young that escape from the dovecote will sometimes seek the rocky cave to which the bird's nature directs him. They can be made quite tame, however, and from the rock dove have sprung all the varieties of domestic doves.

The management of the dovecote has become quite an art, and may be made quite profitable. The eggs are laid in three days, and hatched in fifteen more; the female sits on the nest by night, and the male during the day. Those which the keeper wishes to mate should be shut up together when quite young, and in a short time they will become so strongly attached that only death or removal will separate them.

My little cousin had a pair of doves which became great pets in the family. They would play with the children, follow them from house to house, light upon their shoulders, and eat from their hands, and even the baby would stretch out her little hands for the cooing doves, and nestle them in her arms.

This was all very nice, but the children were not satisfied until they had taught them to come into the kitchen. Their mother told them the doves would be troublesome if they got into this habit, and so it proved. Sometimes it was very embarrassing to have the creatures come flying right into the dining room when they had company.

One day when they were seated at the table Carrie went to get a custard pie that was set on the bread shelf to cool.

"Oh, you naughty, naughty doves!" exclaimed Carrie, as she entered the pantry.

Her mother hastened to see what she was laughing so heartily about, and behold! right in the middle of that pie stood both of the doves, having a fine time. Of course she was annoyed, but could not help laughing at the comical situation.

Audubon describes a beautiful dove which lives on the coast of Florida. Its cooing is so peculiar that every one asks, "What bird is that?"

A man who had once been a pirate said that the soft and melancholy cry of this dove, heard about the wells the pirate crew had dug in one of those Keys, awakened in his heart feelings of penitent sorrow. So deeply was he moved by the soft notes of the birds, the only soothing sounds he had heard while in his wild course, that he determined to desert his ship and try to escape. He returned to the well, and listening to the cooings of the Zenaida dove, prayed for mercy and became an honest man.

The dove is the chosen type of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, which descended in bodily shape like a dove and rested upon the head of Jesus as he was baptised by John.

Let us open our hearts and let this heavenly Dove come in and abide with us, and then the blessed fruits of the Spirit will abound in our lives, and bring peace and gladness to our hearts.

Selections.

Evangelist.

JERUSALEM.

REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

I am never weary of studying the every-day life of these dwellers in Jerusalem. Every color, kind, and costume are represented in the streets. The streets themselves are about as wide as the hall of an average house in America—except "David" and "Christian" streets, which reach the remarkable width of about fourteen or fifteen feet! In these two thoroughfares a few dim lights are hung at night; in all the other alleys, the few persons who venture out at night carry their own lanterns. Many of the streets are arched over with heavy stone, and look like long vaults. Through these streets pour a steady stream of foot-passengers, camels, and donkeys, so thick and confused that one must walk circumspectly or he will be run over. As to the filth of these thoroughfares, it is so amazing as to even make New York seem clean in the comparison. One excuse for this chronic nastiness is the scarcity of water, for all that the inhabitants have to rely upon is the rainwater, which falls during about three months, and is preserved in cisterns for use during all the rest of the year. Into the sides of these narrow streets are let a series of rooms (or caves) about ten feet square, which constitute the shops and stores of the metropolis of Judea. In one room works a blacksmith, with an anvil and an iron vise like ours. In the next shop a closely veiled Turkish woman is buying a silk dress; there is only space for the salesman and about six customers. Next to the dry-goods shop is a grain market with heaps of wheat, sesame, rice, and barley on the floor. A woman is filling a half-bushel with barley and squeezing it down with her hands so that she may furnish "full measure, pressed down and running over." So does every little act throw light on the Scripture in this land of the Bible.

Next to the grain market is an ancient khan, on whose seats are a group of country folk, some smoking their narguilehs, and some fast asleep. (These Orientals lie about fast asleep, in the mosques, in the streets, on the camel's back, or anywhere.) Behind the seats in the khan are a dozen donkeys being fed on barley straw. It must have been in the subterranean room of just such a khan at Bethlehem that our blessed Lord was born. Probably the khan at Bethlehem belonged to the descendants of David, so that Jesus was born on the actual spot where Ruth, Jesse and the Psalmist one resided. Next to the khan we come to a shop in which a cotton-dresser, with a clumsy instrument like a one-stringed harp, is dressing raw cotton from Egypt. Next to him is a money-changer and he is probably a Jew. Along through the crowded streets push and press a motley throng of Jewesses with white cotton mantles over their heads—of bare-legged Arabs—of Armenian priests with slouching black hoods—of Greek priests with caps like a section of stove-pipe—of Franciscan friars in grey robes with a rope tied around their waists—of turbaned Turks and occasionally a Bedawin chieftain from the desert. I saw one splendid-looking fellow to-day well mounted, and carrying a spear twelve feet long. Occasionally we meet an Arab woman bearing a bag on her back hung by a cord across her forehead. Out of the bag peeps a baby Ishmaelite six or eight months old. The Jewish women and the fellaheen generally go unveiled. The Turkish and the Arabs, too, of the higher castes wear a thin gauze veil.

The Jews compose about one-third of the population of the city. They live on or about Mount Zion, are of the most bigoted type, and a large number of them are dependent on the gifts of Sir Moses Montefiore and other rich Jews in Europe. From this class it is difficult to make converts to Christianity; but Bishop Barclay, Mr. Kelk, Mr. Friedlander, and others, are working hard with their church and day-school—and they have succeeded in gathering about two hundred proselytes into "Christ Church." I looked into the chief synagogue on Mount Zion the other day. About a dozen gray-bearded Israelites were studying the Talmud. Some looked like Abraham—and some like Shylock. In about such an edifice our Lord stood up to expound the prophecies of Isaiah and Nazareth. As I was passing through the Jewish quarter I heard the hum of children's voices, and went into one of the principal schools. Upon the floor and upon low seats were a crowd of boys sitting cross-legged, swinging back and forth, and all repeating something that sounded like "alah-alah-lah-lah-lah" in a rapid roll. Their teacher was smoking a cigarette, and kept up as steady a clatter as his pupils. In some rooms they were studying the Pantateuch; in others they were busy over their arithmetics. Their school-books were well printed.

No society is doing more good in Jerusalem than the German deaconesses of Kaiserswerth. They have an admirable school for Arab girls called the "Talitha cumi"—outside of the Jaffa gate. Bishop Barclay took me out to their interesting anniversary on Wednesday. The children sang sweetly, and Baron Munchausen (the German Consul) and others delivered addresses. On that same evening I addressed a missionary meeting in the English chapel on Mount Zion; it seemed much like a "monthly concert" service at home. Probably the early prayer-meeting in the "upper room"—into which descended the baptism of the Holy Spirit—was held very close to that spot.

New ideas are working into Palestine. A new city is going up on the west side of Jerusalem, outside the gates. Along the turnpike to Jaffa runs the telegraph wire, and on the plain of Sharon stands the large "Jewish Agricultural College," surrounded by a model farm and thrifty nurseries. Bethlehem is a thriving town—largely it is nominally Christian—and it carries on extensive manufactures in mother of pearl. The Bethlehemites brought back from our Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia about seventy thousand dollars as the net profit of the sale of their beautiful wares. If Palestine was only delivered from the tyranny of the Sultan, or was ruled by such a man as the Pasha Rouff (the Governor of Jerusalem), it would rise rapidly into a new era of economic progress. The Sultan's touch and tread are death.

I began this letter at Jerusalem, but I finish it at beautiful Jaffa. I came down yesterday—in company with three Armenian pilgrims—in about ten hours, resting one hour at Ramleh. The road for wagons is very fair. The village of "Soba," on a lofty height, contests with "Abou Gosch" the right to an identity with ancient Kirjath Jearim. Either may be the right spot, and much may be said for both. The last hour of my ride—among the enchanting orange-groves near Jaffa—was the finest oriental picture I have seen in Judea. The oranges—of which three millions a year are produced here—are in their luscious perfection. Figs, brilliant pomegranates, and stately palms line the road. Troops of camels and picturesque travelers pour along. Before me rose Jaffa on its hill-top, and beside it sparkled the blue Mediterranean. The memory of Dorcas and of Peter and of Cornelius added new sweetness to the fragrant air.

At this excellent "Jerusalem Hotel" of Consul Hardegg—which stands amid an ocean of bright flowers—I meet Mr. Armstrong of the British "Palestine Exploration" corps—on his way to join Captain Conder for a trip of research beyond the Jordan. To-morrow I sail—God willing—for Beyrout. I have spent two weeks in Judea; but the hot weather and other sufficient reasons prevent my going into Galilee. I have seen the best representative places in Palestine, and am quite content that the last spot of this sacred soil on which my delighted eye can rest shall be beautiful Joppa, with its background of Sharon, and the distant mountains about Beth-Hor.

Washington Post.

ANSWERS TO INGERSOLL.

A Virginia Layman takes Issue with the "Great Infidel"—His Line of Argument—A Position Sustained with Force and Logic—The Author Handles the Lecturer Without Gloves and Personally.

Mr. Allan B. Magruder, of Stephens City, near Winchester, Va., has just published a reply to Col. Ingersoll's several lectures, in the form of a pamphlet or small book of 140 pages. Mr. Magruder, who signs himself a layman and Bible student, plainly states in his preface and introductory his reason for writing this little work. He does not believe, in the first place, that contemptuous silence is any answer to the assertions of the Pagan prince; and, secondly, he calls attention to the fact that the challenge to that gentleman published in the Post of December 19, 1880, was not taken up. [Mistaken.]

It is a fact, perhaps, that a majority of the replies to Ingersoll are of a character to make us wish that the writer had not undertaken the task. This cannot be honestly said of Mr. Magruder's book. While it makes no claim to great literary merit, it is yet well written, in some places forcible, and strong in tone throughout. The writer seems possessed of a quick insight into the weak points of his opponent, and knows how to present them to the best advantage.

There are certain chapters in the book in reference to the design of God in creation, the future rulers of the nations, and the Bible in the light of reason and revelation, etc., which, not having directly to do with Col. Ingersoll, need not be discussed in this article. They are, however, necessary component parts of the whole, and are so interwoven with the plan of the book as to preserve the author from the charge of wandering away from his subject or begging the question.

Mr. Magruder does not attempt to maintain or vindicate the creeds and systems of the Catholic and Protestant religions. That issue, he says, is not before us. His motto is, "One thing at a time," and this one thing is God's word and the vindication, as therein declared, of God's ways to man. He devotes the opening chapters to a general view of Ingersoll's methods of attack. His conclusions may be summed up in the following sentences:

"It is the weak device of a shallow reasoner to characterize a creed or practice opprobriously, and then to assume that his opponent undertakes the championship of the obnoxious tenet and proceed to disprove and demolish it. Such it would seem is Mr. Ingersoll's method of dealing with the Bible. He concludes that when he has refuted the church creeds, as he fondly believes he has, he has overthrown the Bible also, which he assumes to be identical with them. Let him try the Bible doctrine on its own merit."

In reference to Mr. Ingersoll's ignorance of the Bible, Mr. Magruder quotes the well-known anecdote of Lord Lyttleton and Gilbert West, who, having become imbued with infidelistic sentiments and believing the Bible to be a myth, undertook to attack what they believed to be its most vulnerable parts, viz: the conversion of Paul and the resurrection of Christ. A lengthy and patient investigation led them into an exactly opposite belief, and, like honest and truthful men, they wrote in defense of what they intended to disprove. Accordingly, Lyttleton's "Conversion of Paul" and West's "Demonstration of the Resurrection of Christ are masterpieces of their kind, both in fact and argument. Mr. Magruder intimates that Mr. Ingersoll might profit by their experience if he would follow their example of diligently reading the book he assails.

Mr. Magruder then proceeds to discuss what seems to be Ingersoll's "most formal and elaborate" lecture, "Some Mistakes of Moses" and claims that the simplest way to answer it is simply to call for the proof. As, however, this mode might not be conclusive to every one, he points out twelve assertions inside of thirteen pages which are unwarranted and deliberately false, especially the statement that "there is not one word about woman in the Old Testament except the word of shame and humiliation." Nor does Mr. Ingersoll's latest lecture, "What Shall We Do to Be Saved?" escape Mr. Magruder's probing, penetrating knife. To quote from the book: "On page 39 he (Ingersoll) says that the passage in Mark xiv. 16, which teaches salvation by faith, is 'the most infamous passage in the Bible; Christ never said it, no sensible man ever said it.' 'It is a frightful declaration.' Yet on pages 82-87 he gives his creed as well as his gospel in answer to the question: What must we do to be saved? He says: 'I believe in good fellowship, good friends,' etc. 'I believe in the gospel of cheerfulness, in the gospel of intelligence, of education, of liberty, of forgiveness to each other, in the grand religion of humanity,' and adds: 'That is what I believe in.' All this from a man who indignantly denounces salvation by faith as illogical, absurd and even frightful—a man, as we have seen, who takes not a step in mental, moral or physical life except by faith as the motive power. Verily, such a man writes his own epitaph and follows as chief mourner at the funeral of his own reputation."

After disproving certain assertions in this lecture, as to what the gospels say and do not say, by citations from the Bible itself, Mr. Magruder refers to Mr. Ingersoll in the following words:

He deals with superficies, not with solids. He declaims, he does not discuss. He asserts, he does not prove. He does not reason, but he rants. He never deliberates, he dogmatizes. He does not investigate, he invents. His imagination has been cultivated at the expense of his reasoning faculties. The propensities and emotions predominate. They keep in abeyance the moral sentiments. Such men are superficial philosophers, who take up or oppose a position without consideration, as a man tosses of a glass of beer without being thirsty. They do not think, weigh or measure. They accept what they find to be in harmony with their governing impulses and propensities, and are borne along without resistance on the tide of the passions and emotions. All logical inquiry, all searching analysis, all study of the causes and reasons and end of things is irksome to them. If they ever heard, they do not heed the pithy truth, "Who must investigate do must believe." They walk by, feeling not by faith, and are impelled only by what they see and hear. Now, not then; the present gratification, not to-morrow's reward, forms the motive power of their actions. Destitute of faith, they do not believe that it can take hold of any future good. They deny that it is either "the substance of things hoped for or the evidence (conviction) of things unseen." To believe demands some thought, some investigation. Disbelief, or rather unbelief, is simpler and easy. Hence, all such men are Atheists; it is their only creed, or no creed.

Not the least interesting chapter in the book is the argument that eternal punishment is not eternal pain. Mr. Magruder's idea is that the damnation, or literally, condemnation, spoken of in the Bible, means death. To prove this he brings up innumerable texts, while passages of Scripture apparently inconsistent with it are, to say the least, ingeniously explained. He claims that at the final judgment those who merit it will be given eternal life and happiness, and those who are condemned "receive for the deeds done in the body a punishment according to their works and die the second death, by being remanded back to their parent dust, there to stay forever." He argues that as death is the highest punishment inflicted for disobedience to human law, so it will be the highest for disobedience to the Divine law. Now, this idea is not altogether original, Rev. C. K. True * having advanced it some years ago; nor is analogy always good reasoning, but Mr. Magruder presents his case in a strong light.

*We are before True.

Poetry.

JOHN MILTON ON HIS OWN BLINDNESS.

SELECTED BY H. BOND.

I am old and blind—
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown,
Afflicted and deserted by my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old, and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme! to Thee.

O! Merciful One!
When men are farthest, Thou art most near.
When friends pass by, my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is beaming toward me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling-place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee
I recognize thy purpose, clearly shown;
My vision thou hast dimm'd that I may see
Thyself: Thyself alone.

I have sought to fear:
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred; here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling, where feet of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in the radiance of thy sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go:
Shapes of resplendant beauty round me throng.
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When heaven is opening on my sightless eyes;
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
The earth in darkness lies.

In a power clime
My being filled with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift Divine;
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire.
Lift by no skill of mine.

Communications.

A SECOND EXODUS, TRAINING AND RECONSTRUCTION OF THE TWELVE TRIBES OF ISRAEL.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

The prophet Isaiah says, "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river and shall smite it in the seven streams and make men go over dry-shod. And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people which shall be left from Assyria: like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt." Isa. xi. 10–12, 15, 16.

Thus a second Exodus is clearly and unmistakably taught for the twelve tribes of Israel such as has not been realized since the return from Egypt under the leadership of Moses. This second Exodus will continue forty years, during which the rebels shall be purged out, leaving none but the loyal and obedient to be organized into the kingdom of their Messiah. God by the mouth of Micah, says:—

"Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage which dwelle solitary in the wood, in the midst of Carmel: let them feed in Bashan and Gilead as in the days of old. According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I show unto him marvellous things. The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might; they shall lay their hands upon their mouth, their ear shall be deaf. They shall lick the dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like worms of earth: they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of thee. Who is a God like unto thee that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage. He retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy. He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us; he will subdue our iniquities; and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea. Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob and thy mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old." Micah vii. 14–20.

"As I live saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out will I rule over you. And I will bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye were scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant. And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me. I will bring them forth out of the country wherein they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord." Ezek. xx. 33–38.

From the foregoing we may deduce the following conclusions:

1. God will gather the children of Israel together out of all countries wherein they have sojourned into the wilderness of the people; and will feed them with the rod, and plead with them in judgment, and purge out from among them the rebels.

2. That none shall be brought into the bond of the covenant, and enter into the land wherein their fathers had sojourned except loyal men, who will submit to the test, and develop the requisite characters.

3. That the foregoing disciplinary process will continue "according to the days of their (fathers') coming out of the land of Egypt," which were forty days, each day a year.

4. That the nations shall be confounded, and fear the Lord God; and their enemies shall lick the dust

5. That the Lord will have compassion on his people, pardoning their iniquities, and passing by their transgression, retaining not his anger forever; because he delights in mercy, which would not be the case if the same Israel who had been cast away and sojourned and sinned in the enemy's land should not be restored to their own land, never to be plucked up or removed therefrom again.

Judah in its ordinal relation to Israel will be restored first, and then be the instrumentality through whom Israel shall be restored. In this respect the last will be first, and the first last.

Zechariah says, "The Lord shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah. In that day shall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is feeble among them in that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them. And it shall come to pass in that day that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem. And I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one is in bitterness for his first born. In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon. All the families that remain shall mourn apart, and their wives shall mourn apart." Zech. xii. 7–11, 14.

From the foregoing we learn:

1. That Judah will be saved first.

2. That all nations gathered against Jerusalem will be destroyed as a prerequisite to Judah's national deliverance.

3. That being clothed with the power of the Elohim the feeblest individual will be as David, Israel's mighty chieftain, and that numerically they shall be as David's royal house, or as the angel of the Elohim, who being empowered, David before whose prowess all nations will be overthrown.

4. They will behold him whom their fathers had pierced, which awful crime they had endorsed, the same as the thousands whom Peter addressed on the day of Pentecost had done; and in deep contrition they will repent; and that Christ will pardon their sins and acknowledge them as his people is evident (1.) from the fact that he will bestow upon them the spirit of grace and supplication and (2.) they will recognize in the crucified one their long expected Messiah, and in the language put in their mouth by the prophet they will exclaim, "Lo this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Isa. xxv. 9.

Christ did not leave those eight dreadful woes to scath that people for ever. He will not have them to grope their way in darkness forever. Hence he left them a cheering promise which should be eclipsed with superstition and crimsoned with blood until the star of their national hope shall arise in full orbed splendor to guide them to their sceptered and crowned King. Thus will they see and weep over the great mistake of their nation in scorning the humble habiliments of the manger, the swadling clothes (his first ensign of royalty); and will accept with pride and glory their many crowned King of kings and Lord of lords; while all kings and nations hasten to do him homage. They will now abjure their allegiance to Cæsar and take the oath of allegiance to King Jesus. They will then revoke the homicidal curse upon their own guilty heads and the heads of their guiltless offspring. Christ will now appear as they expected him at his first advent. The reason they rejected him then will be the reason they will accept him when he comes again. Then they rejected him because he was not a king, now they will accept him because he is a king. Now they can see him rejected here because he was not a king. They will now see and understand the apparently contradictory character and history of Christ as portrayed in the 22d Psalm.

In this Psalm is placed in striking contrast the humiliation and exaltation, the cross and the crown, the crown of thorns and the diadem of power and dominion: the suffering and the glory.

I have already observed that Christ did not leave this strange and wonderful people to wander in hopeless exile forever. Hence he said, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you ye shall not see me hereafter till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Thus, the same race of people who rejected Christ at the first advent will accept him at his second advent. They will not only recognize in him their long expected Messiah, but will hail his messengers who come in his name, or who are invested with authority to execute his behest. Paul when speaking of the natural branches of the tame olive tree says that they should be grafted in if they continued not in unbelief. That they will believe when the demonstration is given is evident from the foregoing evidence. It is also evident from the following language of Paul. Referring to the natural branches, he says:

"For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?"

This is language which Paul could not have used unless he had known that the same people who were cast away will be received back again. That their blindness was not to be perpetual, but having been removed they shall see is further evident from the following language:

The apostle continues, "I would not brethren that you should be ignorant of this mystery, lest you should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." Rom. xi. 15, 22.

Thus teaching that the blindness was limited to "the times of the Gentiles;" and that then it shall be removed, and then they shall see. And that they will then believe and turn away from their sins is evident from the following language of Paul. He continues:

"For this is my covenant when I shall take away their sins."

The Redeemer will pardon their sins then only on condition of their turning away from their sins. Thus reads the text quoted by Paul:

"And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; my Spirit which is upon thee, and my word which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever." Isa. lix. 20, 21.

Thus, the word of the Lord is to remain in the mouth, or be believed and proclaimed by the descendents of Jacob forever.

In the 37th chapter of Ezekiel it is declared that after Israel is gathered from all lands wherein they had transgressed they will be cleansed (or pardoned) from all their transgressions in the enemy's land.

By reference to the first of this article it will be seen that after their restoration to the border of their own land, and before they are permitted to enter therein, all the rebels must be purged out; thus leaving none but the faithful, the obedient and the loyal. These are required to bind themselves by a solemn covenant to maintain their allegiance to David's royal Son—they and their children's children forever. Thus, none but believing, obedient, loyal Israel, will be organized into Messiah's kingdom.

In the light of these plain declarations of Scripture what becomes of the sneers and derision against the Jews because they are unbelieving and murderers of their Messiah? Did not three thousand of the same class of Jews believe, obey, and obtain pardon on the day of Pentecost? Wherein were those any better than these? Not a whit. There will be much advantage every way in that day in being a Jew; and much disadvantage in being a Gentile. Then the tables will be turned. There is much disadvantage in every way in being a Jew in this dispensation, and much advantage in being a Gentile. There must therefore be a future dispensation when this shall be reversed.

Paul asks, "What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there in circumcision?"

He answers, "Much every way; chiefly because unto them were committed the oracles of God." Rom. iii. 1, 2.

Had they listened to the voice of their own oracles they would have received the despised Nazarene as their Messiah; because they testified of him. John v. 39.

Circumcision is a national sign of the right of citizenship in the commonwealth of Israel. And when restored to their own nationality, they alone will have this badge of citizenship. Gentiles then not having this national sign or badge, will not be entitled to the privileges and immunities of those natural born citizens, unless like Gentiles under the jurisdiction of the ancient commonwealth of Israel, they are circumcised and obey the law of adoption under the new covenant which God will make with the house of Israel in times of restitution.

Paul, referring to his brethren and kinsmen according to the flesh, whose condition is so hopeless during the "times of the Gentiles" that he would be accursed with Christ for their salvation says that to them "pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed forever." Rom. ix. 1–5.

Now, unless after having been alienated from God they shall subsequently to Paul's day be adopted into the family of God and receive the promises and glory covenanted these declarations of the apostle never can prove true. But when brought back from their captivity, cleansed from all their transgressions in the enemy's land, and the new covenant is made with the whole house of Israel, and they shall be united into one nation never to be removed, planted in their own land never to be plucked ort of it; when God shall acknowledge them as his people and they shall acknowledge him as their God; and when they shall be exalted to be a nation of kings and priests through whom all nations shall be blessed, then will all the glory, promises, and covenants of God concerning Israel as his chosen nation be fulfilled.

Paul not only expresses his heart's desire, but utters a prayer of faith when he says, "My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved." Rom. x. 1.

If that was a prayer of faith it will be answered, if it was not a prayer of faith he will fall under his own condemnation; for he says, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Rom. xiv. 23.

He has recorded the answer to this prayer:

He says, "And so all Israel shall be saved." Rom. xi. 26.

But a Jew hater is ready to exclaim, What! save the murderers of our Lord?

Christ prayed for his Father to forgive his murderers, because they did not know what they were doing. Luke xxiii. 34.

Paul offers in extenuation of the sins of the Jewish nation the following plea. He says when referring to this very class of Jews:

"But their minds were blinded; for until this day remaineth the same vail untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament; which vail is done away in Christ. But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is upon their hearts. Nevertheless when it (Israel) shall return to the Lord the vail shall be taken away." 2 Cor. iii. 14–16.

When the times of the Gentiles have closed, this vail will be removed and they shall see their long expected Messiah, and hail him as their Redeemer who returns to Zion to remove this vail of unbelief by giving them the demonstration that he is their Messiah; and they will mourn over their sins and he will pardon their transgressions: "and this is the covenant he will make with them when he takes away their sins." And Christ will acknowledge them as his people, and they will acknowledge him as their Lord—all of which has been abundantly proven in the foregoing article.

Monitory.

The Critical Event of Life.

Many of the errors of life admit of remedy. A loss in one business may be repaired by a gain in another; a miscalculation this year may be retrieved by special care the next; a bad partnership may be dissolved, an injury repaired, a wrong step retraced. But an error in marriage goes to the very root and foundation of life. The deed, once done, cannot be recalled. The goblet is broken, and the wine of life is wasted, and no tears or toils can bring back the precious draught. Let the young think of this, and let them walk carefully in a world of snares, and take heed to their steps, lest in the most critical event of life they go astray.

Nature's way of bringing beauty and order out of chaos is to flood darkness with light. We shall never get beyond this method by any spasmodic pyrotechnics, which, no matter how popular for the time, only serve to make the darkness more visible when their artificial coruscations are withdrawn. The work among the children yields a much larger dividend on our investment of time and toil than is afforded by our work among the drinking class. We may as well face that fact and learn its lesson thoroughly. When I see our schoolboys stunting their growth and drying up their brains with smoke; when I discover that their very cigars are soaked in alcoholic liquors, and they are baited with beer and enticed into saloons by music and by games; when I am told of their degeneracy in scholarship, so that the percentage of girls who graduate and who take honors is steadily gaining on that of boys, it seems to me that towards the children we have been strangely, if not culpably, negligent as temperance workers.

"The Patience of the Lord."

GEORGE MACDONALD.

You are tender-hearted, and you want to be true, and you are trying to be; learn these two things: Never to be discouraged because good things get on so slowly here; and never to fall daily to do that good which lies next to your hand. Do not be in a hurry, but be diligent. Enter into that sublime patience of the Lord. Be charitable in view of it. God can afford to wait; why cannot we, since we have him to fall back upon? Let patience have her perfect work, and bring forth her celestial fruits. Trust to God to weave your little thread into the great web, though the pattern shows it not yet. When God's people are able and willing thus to labor and wait, remember that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day; the grand harvest of the ages shall come to its reaping; and the day shall broaden itself to a thousand years, and the thousand years shall show themselves as a perfect and finished day.

Evangelical Messenger.

Be Decided for God.

Here is a complete incompatibility: "No servant can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Let those who desire the salvation of their souls, over remember the impossibility of serving both God and mammon, and be decided for God. Do not imagine that you can please both the world and God, or that you can set your affections both on things on earth, and on things in heaven.

Whoever or whatever chiefly engages our thoughts, interests, or affections, and influences our actions, may be called our master. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever. Again we say, remember that there is a complete incompatibility between the service of God and the service of mammon, or any other supreme object of regard. The man who makes religion give place to his temporal interests is a man of the world and not a servant of God. The truly pious man gives his chief attention to religion, and makes his temporal concerns give place to his spiritual, making all subservient to the salvation of his soul, and the interests of the cause of Christ.

THANATOPSIS,

—OR—

The First and the Second Death Scripturally Considered.

—By WILEY JONES.—

A neat tract of 36 pages. Price, one copy 10c.; 12 copies $1; 100 copies $5. Postage stamps taken for fractions of a dollar.

Send orders to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

9-4

THE TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881.

—By H. V. REED.

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

And Orders to

SAMUEL WILSON,
2018 N. 22nd Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by
THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

A NEW TRACT!

CIRCULATE IT!

REASONS WHY

I Believe the Bible to be the Word of God; or an

Unanswerable Argument

—AGAINST—

Infidelity AND Atheism.

The foregoing is the title of a Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburgh, Pa.,

—By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.—

It is a large size Sixteen Page Tract, and can be had at the Office of

The Restitution,

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

Price Five Cents Each, Twenty for Fifty Cents or Thirty for One Dollar.

A LETTER

TO A BAPTIST MINISTER ON THE LIFE-ABILITY OF

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN,

The Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the

THRONE OF DAVID

—AND—

KINGDOM OF ISRAEL.

Together with Strictures on

Mr. Courtney in "THEODOSIA."

—By Daniel Howard.—

A Capital tract for those desiring information on the subjects discussed. Send to this office for it, and after reading send it to your neighbor.

PRICE ELEVEN CENTS EACH.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

About to be the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare collection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns," whose merit is of a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmody" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ANTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1900.

—By M. L. Knapp, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent (postpaid) to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PEARLS, Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ. by KING Baptists. In 1000. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thought for Thinkers. 6. The Two Adams. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Heaven. Ten copies 50c., or assorted packages of 100, 30c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 10c; 50 for 25c; 100 for 40c.
The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.
Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, in—all: the Theological and Bible use.
Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Magruder.
Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"
Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.
What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.
The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Laing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 25 for 60c.
Is It Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? R. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 75 for 25c.
Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. R. Heyl. Well suited to inquiring minds.
Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. B. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c. or 25 for $1.
The New Birth. Joseph Peirce.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Which is right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promises made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 3 for 10c. or 30 for $1.
Our Evangelical Age Sketches Stories. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 75 for $1.
Evangelism concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.
The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 36 pages, price 10c.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. P. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xii. and xxiv. 36 pages, price 10c.
Primitive Christian Faith. C. P. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, as the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 60 pages, price 10c.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 48 pages, price 10c.
Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c. cloth $1.
Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational minister, and Wellcome, both of Ky., and Wellcome, both of Ky., and Wellcome, both of Ky.,

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
E. E. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. E. MARSHALL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSBACK,
J. U. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, B. WILSON,
J. P. WESTHEK, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, G. M. MYERS,
A. B. MAGOFFIN.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 13, 1881. NO. 26.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other Kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. First We Trumpet continued. Life of Mahomet. His Flight. His Reception at Medina. Military Operations. Conquest of Arabia. The Death of Mahomet. Reflections.

No 73

J. P. WESTHEK.

Flight to Medina.—An assembly of the Koreishites and their confederates was convened by the chief of the Republic of Mecca, to decide upon the fate of the prophet. "It was decided that a sword from each tribe should be buried in his heart, to divide the guilt of his blood, and baffle the vengeance of the Hashemites."

Mahomet, informed of the decree, left his house near midnight, with only one companion (Abubeker), and entered the cave of Thor, where they continued three days.

During this time the Koreishites searched every haunt for the prophet, but failed to discover his refuge. They came to the mouth of the cave, (miles from the city) but seeing a pigeon's nest by, and a spider's web over its mouth, they did not enter.

"We are only two," said the trembling Abubeker. "There is a third," replied the prophet, "It is God himself." The Koreishites leaving "Mahomet and his companion were on their way toward Medina. They were overtaken by the emissaries of the Koreish, from whom they were redeemed by prayers and promises. In this eventful moment, the lance of an Arab might have changed the history of the world."—Gibbon. (Man is immortal till his mission is ended.)

"The flight of the prophet from Mecca to Medina has fixed the memorable area of the Hegira. (July 16, A. D. 622), which, at the end of twelve centuries, still discriminates the lunar years of the Mahometan nations."

Medina henceforth became the mother of the new religion. Had it not been for her care and protection the Koran would not have been, neither should we have read of an empire of the false prophet; nor should we have had any Eastern question for solution.

A spider's web changed the history of the world. Medina became the prophet's first throne, his military life began at that holy city. Some of her noblest citizens, on their pilgrimage to Mecca, had been converted by the preaching of Mahomet; and, returning, spread the new doctrine in their own city.

In this manner a body of zealous believers had sprung up in Medina. "Seventy-three men and two women of Medina held solemn conference with Mahomet, his kinsmen, and his disciples; and pledged themselves to each other by a mutual oath of fidelity. They promised, in the name of the city, that if he should be banished, they would receive him as a confederate, obey him as a leader, and defend him to the last extremity, like their wives and children. 'But if you are recalled by your country,' they asked with a flattering anxiety, 'will you not abandon your new allies?' 'All things,' replied Mahomet with a smile, 'are now common between us; your blood as my blood, your ruin as my ruin. We are bound to each other by the ties of honor and interest. I am your friend and the enemy of your foes.' 'But if we are killed in your service, what' exclaimed the deputies of Medina, 'will be our reward?' 'PARADISE,' replied the prophet. 'Stretch forth thy hand.' He stretched it forth and they reiterated the oath of allegiance and fidelity.

Their treaty was ratified by the people, who unanimously embraced the faith of Islam; they rejoiced in the exile of the apostle, but they trembled for his safety, and impatiently expected his arrival.

After a perilous journey along the sea coast, he halted at Kobe, two miles from the city, and made a public entry into Medina, sixteen days after his flight from Mecca. Five hundred of the citizens advanced to meet him; he was hailed with acclamations of loyalty and devotion; Mahomet was mounted on a she-camel, an umbrella shaded his head, and a turban was unfurled before him to supply the deficiency of a standard."—Gibbon.

Being surrounded by his fugitives from Mecca and his auxiliaries of Medina, Mahomet began to exercise the regal and priestly offices; and from a Divine judge, or one that professed to be the Parakleto promised by Christ, there could be no appeal.

In the sixth year of his royal priesthood, he had an armed force of fifteen hundred disciples in the field, all bound by solemn oaths to do his will."

The secret of Mahomet's power is expressed in the following:

"It was in the same camp that the deputy of Mecca was astonished by the attention of the faithful to the words and looks of the prophet, by the eagerness with which they collected his spittle, a hair that dropped on the ground, the refuse water of his lustrations as if they participated in some degree of the prophetic virtue. 'I have seen,' said he, 'the Chosroes of Persia, and the Cesar of Rome, but never did I behold a king among his subjects, like Mahomet among his companions.'"

Mahomet was their visible god, their king, their priest, and their familiar companion; an army, burning with the fire of such religious fanaticism, is invincible.

Armed with civil, and (as he claimed) with Divine authority, Mahomet assumed a more haughty demeanor, and his revelations partook of the same spirit. As a sovereign he claimed the right of making peace with civil governments, or of declaring war against them.

Mahomet at first undertook to propagate his views and gain converts by the power of persuasion, which resulted in his banishment. It is now revealed to him, from the supreme tribunal, that he should, henceforth make use of the sword, "to destroy the monuments of idolatry, and, without regard to the sanctity of days or months to pursue the unbelieving nations of the earth."—Gibbon.

The battle cry during three centuries, during the existence of the Arabian or Saracenic empire, was: "The Koran—tribute, or the sword."

During the remainder of his life, he waged a religious war. Abulfeda, in his history of Mahomet says, "The private arsenal of the apostle consisted of nine swords, three lances, seven pike or half-pikes, a quiver and three bows, seven cuirasses, three shields, and two helmets, with a large white standard, a black banner, and twenty horses."

Striking contrast between the armor of Mahomet and Jesus; so of their acts; for history says that Mahomet was personally engaged in "nine battles or sieges; and fifty enterprises of war were achieved in ten years by himself or his lieutenants."—Gibbon.

Arabs, in hopes of plunder, or Paradise, flocked to his standard from all quarters, and the sayings of Mahomet inspired them with a frenzied enthusiasm. "The sword is the key of heaven, and of hell; a drop of blood shed in the cause of God (Mahomet's cause), a night spent in arms, is of more avail than two months of fasting and prayer; whosoever falls in battle, his sins are forgiven; at the day of judgment his wounds shall be resplendent as vermilion, and odoriferous as musk; and the loss of his limbs shall be supplied by the wings of angels and of Cherubim."

Mahomet's first battles were with the Koreish of his own native city, Mecca. He usually fought against vastly superior numbers, but in most instances was victorious.

The Koreish made many attacks on Mahomet and his capital, but finally, after many severe losses, acknowledged their inability to overthrow the prophet.

Mahomet was friendly to the Jews at the beginning of his operations, and made choice of Jerusalem for the place of his first house of prayer; but their obstinacy made him their implacable enemy to the end of his life. He confiscated the property of the Jews at Medina, and drove them into Syria as exiles. He made war against the Jews in all parts of northern Arabia, and plundered their towns. They had refused to acknowledge Mahomet as their Messiah, and had joined the Koreish, his deadly enemies; two unpardonable sins in the prophet's estimation.

The fall of Mecca completed the conquest of Arabia. This was accomplished, partly by the sword, and in part by a stroke of policy.

In the valley of Honain, near Mecca, the fate of Koreish domination, and Arabian idolatry was decided. The contest was severe and bloody. Mahomet, after the battle of Honain, went sixty miles east of Mecca, to a paradise of Arabia, Tayef. "The fertile spot of Tayef was supposed to be a piece of the land of Syria detached and dropped in the general deluge." After a siege of twenty days Mahomet retired with songs of devout triumph, and with prayer for the conversion and protection of the city.

Mecca was converted to the cause of Mahomet by a present of 2300 camels and 20 ounces of silver to Abu Sophin, the commander of the city, and republic, and great liberality to the citizens.

Deputies were immediately sent to the prophet from Tayef to implore his clemency, who thus addressed Mahomet:

"Grant us, O apostle of God! a truce of three years, with the toleration of our ancient worship."

"Not a month, not an hour."

"Excuse us at least from the obligation of prayer."

"Without prayer religion is of no avail."

They submitted; and their temples were demolished, as well as those of all Arabia.

"His lieutenants, on the shores of the Red Sea, the Ocean, and the Gulf of Persia, were saluted by the acclamations of a faithful people; and the ambassador, who knelt before the throne of Medina, were as numerous (says the Arabian proverb) as the dates that fall from the maturity of a palm tree. The nation submitted to the god and the sceptre of Mahomet; the approbrious name of tribute was abolished; the spontaneous or reluctant oblations of arms and tithes were applied to religion; one hundred and fourteen thousand Moslems accompanied the last pilgrimage of the apostle."—Gibbon.

The first conflict of the Saracens against a foreign enemy, was at Mute, in Eastern Palestine. It was their first battle with the Christians of the Greek empire. It was hotly contested, and bloody. The Arabians retired without being defeated.

Mahomet declared war against Heraclius, the Greek emperor, and marched toward Damascus with 10,000 horse and 20,000 foot. His lieutenant, Caled, "the sword of God," spread the terror of his name, and the power of the prophet over all the tribes from the Euphrates to the head of the Red Sea.

Mahomet's career was limited to the conquest of Arabia. This accomplished; the Koran completed; his doctrine and policy, being well understood, and his plans matured, and the elements of a vast empire being prepared, Mahomet, after appointing Abubeker (his father-in-law) his successor, sickened, and after an illness of fourteen days, expired A. D. 632, at the age of sixty-three years.

REFLECTIONS.

1. No one human being has equaled Mahomet in his dominion over man. The Koran, the child of Mahomet's brain, is still the law of empires, and the lamp of a sensual Paradise. Mahomet spent much time in a mountain cave near Mecca, while forming his new system. It is said that he called to his aid a Jew and a Christian. There is nothing, however, in the Koran, that might not have been learned by ordinary intercourse with men advocating the Jewish and Christian systems.

It is madness to attempt to trace any analogy between Jesus and Mahomet, or their systems of faith and practice. Mahomet was simply a man, having the corrupt passions and practices of a degraded man. Jesus was the man Christ Jesus.

On his sayings and doings we design no comment. Let any man read the lives of Jesus and Mahomet without feeling the contrast. Their systems, also bear an equal contrast; yet Mahomet had his mission, and for more than twelve centuries that mission has been doing its fearful work among the nations.

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH.

NUMBER SIX.

J. CAMERON.

NEW TESTAMENT USAGE OF THE TERMS ISRAEL, JACOB, AND JEW.

Let us now look at several passages in the New Testament where the terms Israel, Jacob, and Jew occur. And first let us take the announcement of the angel to the mother of our Lord:—

"And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 30-33.

The subjects of the Christ's reign are here said to be "the house of Jacob." This phrase is used to designate those parties whom the Christ is to "reign over," not those who are to "reign with" him. This is a distinction which cannot be overlooked without causing the greatest confusion in the mind of the plain reader of the Bible. To "reign over" persons shows that they are in the position of subjects of a kingdom. To "reign with" another is to occupy the position not of subjects but of rulers, exercising sovereignty. The "house of Jacob" are however the subjects of the Christ's reign when he occupies the throne of his father David. They cannot therefore mean the church; for, the church is to "reign with" Christ—to "sit with him in his throne." They are described as "the poor of this world rich in faith and HEIRS (not subjects) of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love him." At the same time they are at present the disciples of this Anointed King who is their Lord and Master. They are now the servants of him who has promised to share with them the throne of his glory. As the apostle expresses it—"Of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ." Col. iii. 24.

But if "the house of Jacob" may mean something else, why may not Jesus and Mary in this passage be understood in an entirely different sense from that they universally bear in the Scriptures? It would be easy to "spiritualize" the virgin and her child into some ethereal idea quite foreign to the plain message of the angel, and thus reduce the gospel of our salvation to a splendid myth, only varied to suit the fancy of the many minds engaged in such handling of the word of God.*

There is no ground in the passage, then, for departing from the Old Testament meaning of "the house of Jacob." That meaning is well known—the descendents of the grandson of Abraham—the twelve tribes of Israel. It is remarkable that when this people were first constituted the kingdom of God on their deliverance from Egypt they were designated by this very term used by the angel—"the house of Jacob."

"Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob and tell the children of Israel. .... If ye will obey my voice indeed and keep my covenant .... ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests and an holy nation." Exod. xix. 3-6.

This usage is kept up in the subsequent history and also in the prophecies. Thus in the Psalms (cxiv. 1-3):—

"When Israel went out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language; Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion. The sea saw it, and fled: Jordan was driven back."

Jeremiah thus remonstrates with the people:—

"Hear ye the word of the Lord, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel. Thus saith the Lord, What iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain? Neither said they, Where is the Lord that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, that led us through the wilderness, through a land of deserts and of pits, through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death, through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt?"

And Isaiah thus predicts their restoration (xiv. 1):—

"For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land: and the strangers shall be joined with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob."

*"The following remarks on this passage by a converted Jew, Mr. Hillel Herschell, minister of a congregation of converted Jews in London, are extracted from a lecture delivered in Edinburgh in April 1855: 'We find that the angel communicated to Mary three distinct predictions respecting the son she should bring forth: 1. 'He shall be great.' 2. 'He shall be called the Son of the Highest.' 3. 'The Lord God shall give him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.' Luke i. 32, 33. Now since then the child was literally born, so that the language, thus far, was not allegorical but literal. But who could have conceived when he was the babe of Bethlehem that the first prediction concerning him would be fulfilled—'He shall be great.' When he afterwards lived a private life of sorrow and suffering, who could have conceived that his greatness was to be such that the greatest potentates of the earth should call themselves by the name of this Jesus of Nazareth? Who could have supposed that he should be called the Son of the Highest? If we had stood in Jerusalem and had seen the Sanhedrim arrayed in all their glorious majesty, and heard them with all solemnity, condemn him as a blasphemer because he said, 'I am the Son of God,' could we have supposed that after 1800 years, education should make so much progress that everywhere, though imperfectly, friend and foe should acknowledge him as a Divine being? Even that papist system that makes the virgin immaculate has only power to do so from the divinity. Who could conceive that the greatest nations under heaven should recognize him as the Son of the Highest? Yet such is the case, and that literally not figuratively. Now comes the third prediction. This has not been fulfilled, and forthwith we find out at once that we must adopt some very refined theological definition—the throne of David means the heart of man; the reign over the house of Jacob means his spiritual Israel. What must we come to if an angel does not mean what he says? Any honest tradesman would turn any one out of his place of business who said one thing and meant another. If an angel from heaven coming, not to a school of divinity students and philosophers, but to a simple Jewish maid, i. e. her who shall bear a son, and it is set that he shall be great, and it is as though not to the full extent that he shall be called the Son of the Highest, and we find that it is not and again that he shall sit on the throne of David, and we are told it shall not be nor whether I can understand it or not. I am constrained to receive it in its plain meaning. And further has not Mary been singled out as of the house of David? What could she know but that it was spoken in the simple, natural sense? And what could she conceive the house of Jacob to mean but the twelve tribes restored to Palestine, which is in exact accordance with the plain predictions of the prophets with which he was doubtless familiar.*

REPORT OF QUARTERLY ASSEMBLY.

N. J. MORGAN.

The quartorly assembly of the Church of God convened at Brother John J. Speid's, on Saturday evening, June 18, having been hindered by the rain from meeting on Friday, according to announcement.

The introductory discourse was delivered by the writer from 1 Cor. i.

The meeting was quite a success, the little body there being in working order, and being of one heart and one soul, in the one glorious cause of the Master, or one faith and Lord, and one baptism. Everything was in readiness, nothing more could have been asked at the hands of the dear sisters and brethren and friends to make all in attendance comfortable.

The whole day on Sunday was spent in the beautiful green mansion, or Father's house, in reasoning out of the Holy Scriptures to a respectable congregation of over two hundred people, who seemed to be deeply interested in the many appeals made by the writer in the light of the glorious gospel to enable them to understand, and believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. We showed conclusively that as without faith it is impossible to please God, and as we cannot believe a thing before we understand it, that the only alternative is if we would attain to the high destiny to which we are invited in the gospel, we must come to the inspired book of God, with a childlike simplicity, and have the eyes of the understanding enlightened, that we may know what is the hope of the calling, and what is the riches of his inheritance in the saints. As a proof of the position among the many, the following Scriptures were cited:

When any one heareth the word of the kingdom and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart, but he that heareth the word and understandeth it, he it is that beareth fruit to the honor and glory of God. Again, after our Lord had proclaimed the glad tiding of the kingdom of God, and simplified them by many parables, he said, Have ye understood all these things; and his disciples said, yea Lord; then said he unto them, therefore every Scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven, is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old.

In the sequel of the discourse on Sunday night, we stated that it was a common thing for the preachers to want their pay after preaching for the people for a time; and it was right if the people employed them for to pay them, and that I now had served them in good faith, in connection with the little body in that part of the habitable world, who had stood firm to the truth and earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, and thus letting their light so shine before men as to constrain them to glorify our Father in heaven, and now we wanted our pay, which was we use to life everlasting. And having presented to the congregation the bridal robe, interwoven throughout from bottom without seam (which is the one Lord, one faith, and one baptism, in the one only name given under heaven or among men whereby we must be saved) we asked them if they would accept it. The brethren and sisters then while singing some of the sweet songs of Zion, gave to each other the right hand of fellowship in token of their love and esteem for each other, and three precious souls announced themselves as candidates, whereupon, on Monday morning on the confession of their faith in the things of the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized by the writer in the all saving name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.

Thus closed one of the best and warmest meetings I ever witnessed, the dear brethren and sisters' and friends' eyes all flowing in tears with gratitude to God and love for each other, while all was commended to God (in an humble position) and the word of his grace which is able to build us up and to give us an inheritance among them that are sanctified.

For many years this little hand,
Firm to the truth has stood;
And met to read, and sing, and pray,
And do the best they could.

O what a pleasure this must be,
To parents thus engaged;
To see their children stepping in,
As they come on the stage.

O may their lamps now lighted up,
Be trimmed and burning bright;
And may they serve the Lord their God,
With all their soul and might.

S. F. MORGAN.

Winchester, Va.

Selections.

Chicago Tribune.

PECULIAR PHENOMENA.

Extraordinary Meteorological Phenomena in Iowa, Sunday Night—People Hatless and Coatless in the Drenching Rain to Witness It.

O. T. W.

WHEATLAND, Iowa, June 10.

This place and all the surrounding country have had occasion to witness night to-night that will not soon be forgotten. Saturday night about 10 o'clock there came up a terrible rain shower which was accompanied by terrific bursts of thunder and flashes of lightning almost blinding. It lasted about three hours and then subsided, although it remained dark and lowering all day to-day. About five o'clock this evening the storm broke out again, and increasing in fury, soon blew almost a hurricane. The thunder was the most appalling I ever heard, and the lightning fierce and incessant. The wind blew the water along in a great sheet, and so much rain fell that by eight o'clock the ground was flooded. At this time occurred one of the most peculiar phenomena I have ever heard or read of. The darkness was intense, made so by the thick clouds which hung over the earth and the night as well. All of a sudden, a broad, bright wave of light shot up from the southwestern horizon, and sooner than I can tell it the whole heavens from east to west and north to south were one blaze of glory, in color something between a flame and a violet-shaded light; as far as the eye could see everything was visible as in the broadest noonday light. The earth and water took on a tawny cast, and a phosphorescent light seemed to lie upon everything. Faces looked blue and ghastly, while the light was so intensely perfect that a pin lying upon the ground was clearly visible to a standing person. This light lasted fully twenty minutes, and gradually faded, until the skies were of a bluish red hue, and so they remained until nine o'clock, or about forty minutes. During this time great balls of fire would shoot athwart the northern heavens, from east to west, at uncertain intervals. One came out of the sky and seemed to stand for a full second motionless, and then sent out from every side and in many different directions, fully thirty zigzag bolts of lightning, which covered the whole northern heavens for an instant with a web of brilliant light. Altogether it was the most brilliant spectacle I ever have or ever expect to witness, and few, if any, who were observers will care for its repetition in their lives.

The many prophecies of Mother Shipton and others of the desolation of the world at about this period crowd themselves into one's mind with terrible distinctness. People rushed hatless and coatless out into the rain and wind, and stood there until drenched to the skin, with faces turned to the glowing sky and a look in their faces not easily forgotten. "The world's on fire!" "It has come at last!" and many similar expressions were heard, and one could gain a tolerably good conception of how things will look on that day, if it ever does come, when this earth shall lose its equilibrium and fly off into space. I do not know how far this light, or illumination, or whatever it was, extended, but it must have been quite a distance, from its brilliancy, and the fact that it was in no one part of the heavens, but over all alike. It is another interesting sight, tales of which will be told, with the rain of stars in 1833, to our children's children if the world hold so long together.

The following is taken from the journal of Mrs. A. E. Davis who has started on her journey to Jerusalem, and who has reached London on her way. The splendid sight described below occurred on the evening of May 27, 1881, while on her voyage across the Atlantic. It is in beautiful contrast with the foregoing as narrated by the Tribune's correspondent:—

Last night at seven o'clock we were called on deck to witness the most wonderful and glorious sunset scenes that the eye of mortal ever rested on. When we came on deck, the passengers seemed to be amazed by the wonderful spectacle which was presented to our view. Along the horizon was spread a painting in pure gold. The clouds had assumed the appearance of a country of unrivalled beauty. In the background were hills of the most exquisite form and grandeur, with forests and lakes; while in the middle distance could be seen cottages and lovely vales.

In the foreground was the Eternal City, which no pen of mine can describe. Buildings of the most sublime architecture, of which no human brain has yet conceived, a golden lake within the city, while the crowning glory was the temple of pure gold in the centre on which the setting sun rested. For full thirty miles the picture remained unchanged. The group of passengers which had gathered around me seemed to be impressed with this wonderful scene. They all said, "This is a vision of the New Jerusalem." Every eye was bathed in tears. I had not spoken much to these friends of my faith and mission during the passage, but this scene had revealed to me in language unspoken the longings and aspirations of their hearts, as nothing else could do. No other event had brought us into communion with each other as this wonderful scene has done. The effect of the sublime spectacle was peace, after the trials and fatigues of our voyage. How the strife and troubles of life receded from my view during the half hour we looked on this enchanting scene!

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, July 18, 1881.

We direct special attention to the advertisement of the Library of Universal Knowledge that appears in another part of the paper this week. These books are a marvel of cheapness considering that they are closely and well-printed volumes of about 880 each. See also local notice in another place.

We have not had the time—nor indeed the room, crowded as we have been with communications lately—to answer questions that have been sent from brethren who have desired a response through the paper. We hope soon either to consider some of these ourself or submit them to some of our able contributors.

Although holding that the commission, Mat. xxiii 19, embodies the legal authority, and formula for the ordinance of baptism, yet we insert some communications from those who hold differently regarding this institution. When less crowded with manuscripts we will resume this subject. When we do this, we will commence at the beginning and give special attention to what has become the more embarrassing particular—THE NAME.

Instead of having to announce the death of the honored President of the United States this week, as there was much reason to fear a few days ago, we are rejoiced to state that the prospects for his final recovery are hopeful indeed. Believing, as we do, that the church is engaged in her last solemn work, and that the close of this dispensation impends, there is nothing scarcely more desirable than a peaceful undisturbed condition of affairs in the worldly administration of government while the "powers that be" bear rule. This was so desirable in the apostle's time that he thus writes to Timothy:—"I exhort therefore first of all, that supplications, prayers, intercessions, thanksgivings, be made for all men; for kings and all that are in high place; that we may lead a tranquil and quiet life in all godliness and gravity." 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2. R. V. The wild anarchy that would result from the horrible teachings of Communists, Nihilists, and demon-inspired assassins when carried out by these incarnations of diabolism, would effectually check us in the sublime mission of heralding forth the coming of that Holy and Just One who will soon appear as Israel's hope and Earth's Deliverer. Although persuaded that we are near a time of unprecedented trouble yet we pray that the tempest may be restrained till the last heir of the heavenly calling shall be brought into the fold of the Great Shepherd. Till the work of the household of faith is accomplished, and the redeemed are pavilioned above the storms of destruction destined to sweep this earth of its ungodliness, we ardently desire the continuance of stable government. For this, as one reason, we implore that the President may be permitted to reassume the duties of the responsible station to which the suffrages of the people have elevated him. Besides this we are persuaded that the Hon. James A. Garfield is eminently qualified for the position of Chief Magistrate of the Union, and that it would be a national calamity indeed should his place be made vacant by his death for any successor. Though no political partizan, as our aspirations are for the life and honors of the world to come, yet we have formed a very high estimate of the noble manhood and eminent talents of the honorable personage whose life has been so nearly extinguished by the hand of an assassin for whom the only excuse that has been urged is that he is a demoralized half-witted dead-beat. While therefore we pray for the recovery of the President and for the prosperity of the nation we more earnestly pray for the ushering in of God's kingdom whose his will shall be done in earth as it is done in heaven.

Selections.

Toledo Blade.

LETTER FROM BUCKEYE.

The Great Pyramid and Our National Seal.

WASHINGTON, June 14.

In my letter respecting the opposition which is being waged against the introduction of the French metric system, the quantity of material required to build the great pyramid was, through some blunder of mine or of the type setter, incorrectly stated. A competent engineer has said that it contains six million tons of masonry; which would build a wall one foot thick and five feet high 3,000 miles (not feet) in length. If it was to be removed and seven workmen were assigned to each ton, it would require an army of forty-two millions or more than all the people in the United States. How long it took to build such an enormous structure cannot now be ascertained, but the fact of magnitude (a base of thirteen acres) is important as showing the unity of purpose and design under which all the engineers and supervisors must have worked during all the long years that the building was in progress.

A curious fact, not mentioned in my letter, is that the great seal of the United States has on its reverse side a pyramid standing in a circle, the radius of which is the hight of the pyramid. Above it is the all-seeing eye, from the midst of a surrounding glory, diffusing its beams in every direction. This side of the seal is not used, and therefore not familiar to the public eye. It seems to have been adopted to show strength and durability and the guardian care of the Divine Being. But there is a mystic meaning in the circle which was probably not known when the seal was adopted. But the circle, in pyramid language, means one hundred years. The meaning is reached by the following process:

The solar year contains 365 days, 5 hours and 85 minutes, and a few seconds, or as expressed in decimals (see Appleton's Encyclopedia, under the head of year), 365.242. Now the height of the pyramid is 5,813 inches, which is the radius of the circle above referred to; the diameter of the circle will therefore be twice the length of the radius, or 11,626 inches. Our arithmetics say that when the diameter of a circle is given its circumference can be found by multiplying it into three and a fraction (3.1416). If, then, we take 11,626 inches and multiply it by 3.1416 the result will be 36521.2416 or just a year, multiplied by 100. Or, if we divide the above sum by 100 we have 365.242, exactly the time of our solar year. We have a right therefore to infer that this circle was calculated by the builders of the pyramid, that the height of the pyramid was fixed in view of it and other similar calculations, and that it means 100 years, perhaps some other hundred years yet to be ascertained. Then, if you take the diameter of this circle and multiply it by the polar diameter of the earth (see Appleton, 78091 miles) it gives our distance from the sun, another fact, showing that the height of the pyramid was fixed by astronomic data. But of this more hereafter.

*This error remained uncorrected in our reprint of June 30. Our readers can correct it with a pen.

[Can the one hundred years so wonderfully, though so occultly symbolized by the combined pyramid and circle figures on the reverse side of the Great Seal of the United States have any bearing on the destiny of this boasted Union? The length of the Grand Gallery, 1881-2 inches indicates some political crisis impending that will greatly affect the course of this world's history in A. D. 1881-2. Has the government of the United State unwillingly chosen a symbol that embraces a chronological period which reaches to some very important crisis in the history of the Great Republic? Articles of Confederation were ratified March 1, 1781, and the definitive treaty by which the United States were formerly acknowledged to be free, sovereign, and independent States, by Great Britain, was signed at Versailles, Sept. 3, 1783.

On the margin of the circle and under the pyramid of this reverse side of the seal are engraved the words—NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM—a new order of the ages.

As the pyramid of Egypt lacks the chief corner stone so the American pyramid lacks the addition of several stones (States) to crown the grand structure. Does this work of building States into the political pyramid cease when a century ends? Will "a new course of the ages" soon commence? We ask these questions which time will soon answer.—ED. RESTITUTION.]

Scientific American.

THE GREAT COMET OF 1881.

The comet whose appearance was announced last week continues to be the subject of much wonder, speculation, and scientific study. Though less striking in appearance than Donati's comet of 1858, it is one of the most brilliant and interesting of those erratic visitors to our skies that scientists have been permitted to study.

So far as heard from the comet was first observed in the northern hemisphere about four o'clock of the morning of June 20, by G. W. Simmons, Jr., of Boston, while camped at Morelos, Mexico, thirty miles west of Eagle Pass, west of the Rio Grande, about latitude 29.

It appeared in constellation Auriga, about eight degrees from the star Capella, and from its proximity to the sun was at first visible each clear day only for a short time just before sunrise and again for a little while in the evening. Its northward motion, however, soon carried it to a position permanently above the horizon. At first the head of the comet shone like a star of the first magnitude, while the tail glowed like a streamer of the northern lights.

In the absence of a sufficient number of observations for the exact calculation of the elements of the comet's orbit the estimate of the dimensions of the head and tail and their distance from the earth are little better than guesses. At Harvard University, on the 24th, the comet was thought to be about 60,000,000 miles from the sun and 20,000,000 miles from the earth. The nucleus was estimated to be 1,000 miles in diameter, the coma or nebulous head 12,000 miles in diameter, and the tail 50,000,000 miles long.

On the 27th Prof. Lewis Boss, of Dudley Observatory, Albany, N. Y., calculated the comet to be about 34,000,000 miles from the earth, and receding at a rate of nearly 1,000,000 miles a day. At that date the nucleus was estimated by him to be 1,200 miles in diameter, and the first and brightest semi-circular envelope of the head appeared about 14,000 miles broad. The largest branch of the tail measured, he thought, at least 35,000,000 of miles.

On the night of the 28th, as seen from the same observatory, the tail was traced for forty degrees. One branch of the tail passed in a perfectly straight line about two degrees to the east of the Pole Star. The other branch was shorter and fainter, and curved to the westward (eastward astronomically), terminating at a point about five or six degrees southwest of Polaris. The air was wonderfully transparent, and the fine gauze-like tail became an object of delicate and fascinating beauty.

Thus far no agreement has been arrived at among astronomers touching the comet's identity and orbit. By some its (approximate) elements are thought to resemble most those of the comet of 1807; others find greater resemblance to the elements of the comet of 1683. The majority of observers hold that the comet is receding, having made its perihelion passage some time in June, various dates being given. Most probably the comet is the one observed by Dr. Gould in South America on the first of June.

The comet was photographed for the first time June 26, by Dr. Henry Draper, of this city, and on several succeeding nights its photograph was secured here, and also, it is reported, in Europe. Dr Draper has likewise made careful studies of the composition of the several parts of the comet by means of a spectrum analysis. The nucleus gives a continuous spectrum, indicating a solid or liquid body heated to incandescence. The coma, or cloud about the head of the comet, gives a banded spectrum indicating the presence of some compound of carbon in the gaseous envelope. The tail gives a continuous spectrum which is not crossed by the characteristic lines of solar light, from which it is inferred that the tail shines by its own light, not by reflected sunlight, and that the incandescent particles which compose the tail are solid. On the strength of these discoveries Dr. Draper expresses the belief that the nucleus is composed of mineral substances, partly, perhaps, of olivine, which is an ingredient of meteorites, and of some volatile element which yields to the influence of heat. As the comet approaches the sun, the volatile part is turned into gas by the heat, and flames out to form the coma. The fact that the coma is on the sunward side of the nucleus strengthens this supposition. But after bursting forth on the side toward the sun, the vapor seems to be repelled and to stream away from the sun, thus forming the tail. The cause of this repulsion cannot be absolutely asserted; but in all probability electricity has something to do with it.

INFIDELITY.

H. C. LOMMER.

Humanity is left hopeless and helpless by infidelity. If we are in sorrow, it has no comfort; if we are in sin, it has no deliverance; if we are in perplexity, it has no message; if we are in darkness, it has no light. The virtue it preaches is without foundation, the heroism it inculcates is without inducement, and the immortality it whispers is without evidence.

Its loftiest sentiments are borrowed from the religion it affects to despise; the liberty which it claims to champion, it has sacrificed but little to secure; and the sweet charities it commends, it has done nothing to obtain.

The garland of eloquence with which it clothes itself is the adornment of a corpse, every flower about her a worm in its bosom, and every breath of fragrance is mingled with death.

Its ornery smells of the tomb, and the symbol of its hope is an eyeless, tongueless skull, grinning in mocking insolence at everything that dignifies and ennobles life. It brings no benefaction, it pronounces no benediction, but casts its baleful shadow on all that is fair and sacred.

From its cold lips there comes no grand and full-rounded Yea, to match its piercing, blighting and destroying Nay.

It is simply a huge negation, seeking with one hand to stop the mouth of religion, and with the other to write on human aspirations and reliefs a bitter and derisive No.

It has no gospel of salvation even for this world, but only an evangel of destruction.

Let us then turn from it, and proclaim him to whom is life, and who came "that we might have life, and have it more abundantly." Let us, in realizing the insufficiency of all other answers, repeat to those who ask, "What must we do to be saved?" "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved"—saved from sin, saved from despair, saved from uselessness and misery, and saved forever more in the everlasting kingdom of his glory.

Dew Upon the Heart.

"What we want is not so much, not half so much, light for the intellect as dew upon the heart." If Robertson had spoken but this one sentence, he would have been the world's benefactor. Childhood is charming because it has not lost the dew; old age is beautiful when it recovers it. We wonder when men of intellect select for their friends or choose for their wives those greatly inferior in mind; but the reason is simple: they desire only "dew upon the heart."

Communications.

FITLY FRAMED TOGETHER.

AZORAH M. HATCH.

Paul in speaking to the Ephesian brethren says, "At that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world."

When he found them in their Gentilism, before they were enlightened by the gospel, they were similar to the rough stone as it is when taken from the quarry; they had to be smoothed and the rough corners taken off so they could be fitly framed.

The great temple of Solomon was an exceedingly large structure, yet the most of the work was done under the ground, afterward not a sound of the hammer was heard, and when they were brought on the ground to be erected every stone was perfect and fitly framed.

The master mechanic when constructing a building, wants all the timber the proper length, breadth and thickness. He of course does not do much of the work; he does the planing and marking; he expects his workmen to do the work and if there is a mistake it is the fault of the master mechanic.

God has spoken by his prophets, the apostles, and his Son. They are the framers and builders, we are the material from which the temple is made, and when fitly framed we grow into one holy temple in the Lord.

It would not be prudent to bring in the different sects to our church, for some of them are preparing themselves for heaven, and not for the kingdom which is to be established on earth, so they would not be framed right, and they would have to be remodeled, and some of the rough corners smoothed off.

It is evident that the sects are not fitly framed for a holy temple in the Lord. Their Lord and Christ is not our Lord and Christ; their time and place of reward is not our time and place of reward. They expect to be rewarded at death, in heaven; we on earth, at the resurrection. Their man is immaterial, ours material.

Solomon says, behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth. They say they will be rewarded in heaven.

Jesus says, they (the poor) cannot recompense you, but ye shall be recompensed at the resurrection. Our dear Savior said "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." The place and time are closely stated in the Bible, also the one to be rewarded.

Those who are framed by the sects are no better than those not framed at all, and in fact their condition is much worse, for they have to unlearn all they have learned if they ever are fitly framed.

Dear brethren and sisters if we are not doing all we can for the blessed cause of our Master, let us be working.

As one of the humble servants, I want to be ready for his soon coming. As our dear brother Chaplin says, we need practical articles. We want to work, work, and in the language of the poet—

> Will ye play, then, will ye dally,
> With your watch and your wine?
> Up! it is Jehovah's rally!
> God's own arm hath need of thine.
> Hark! the cheer! will ye bold your > Faith that arms to duty lacky?
> Up! at once, throw down your sabbler:
> World's are clanging to the shock.
>
> Worlds are clanging—heaven beholding.
> Thou hast but an hour to fight;
> Now the Master's cross unfolding,
> On—right onward, for the right.
> On! it is all the need within you,
> For the truth's sake go abroad:
> Strike! let every nerve and sinew
> Tell on age—tell for God!

CONFERENCE REPORT.

According to announcement the brethren of the Church of God in Illinois, met in conference at Adeline, July 1-3.

Brother John Arnold was chosen as chairman of the meeting, and John Koontz, secretary.

The necessity of a compilation of a new and a uniform hymn book was discussed, and a committee to look after the matter further was appointed.

It was made the duty of brother Arnold, the chairman, to select time and place for the annual meeting which has usually been held in September.

The word of truth during the meeting was dispensed by Brethren A. W. Button, John Arnold, David Hans, and G. M. Myers.

Meeting adjourned.

JOHN KOONTZ, Sec.

Letter Drawer.

SONOMA, Cal.

Editor Restitution:

Sister S. Roxana Wineo's Chapter in Experience, in No. 23, of THE RESTITUTION, is an article worth perusing and keeping. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Prov. xxv. 11.

Dear brethren and sisters, I never had an article affect me as this one on Experience did. May God bless and aid the writer in her work. It is so in our lives, a kind word here, a smile and a soft answer there, will have its effect though not visible at the time; it will crop out in some form or assume some shape. I have found it so. I have talked with people, and they have said, well you are more reasonable than others, (meaning sectarians) that have talked with us. If we do not see as they do they get angry, and want to carry us by storm. But reason, dear brethren is what we want. We must be a peculiar people. How? By our patience and long-suffering, as our Father is to us.

If they oppose us and ridicule, we must be good natured; never let impatience or anger get control, for the moment we give way to such feelings as these, that moment we are thrown off our balance, and instead of gaining an audience with our opponent, we cause him to rebel, and turn away from reason. I have found it in my short experience to be invariably the case.

I have been doing but little here, being so situated as to require all my time to make our living.

Some kind brother paid for THE RESTITUTION for me, and I circulate it around as much as I can. I retain them only long enough to read them. I am isolated from all here.

My wife came near dying twice, but thanks to God she is spared.

Keep the beacon light turned on full for there will be stranded ones. These latter days are developing total depravity almost, like that that existed in the days of Noah and Lot.

A large comet has made its appearance in the northern horizon, it has a large tail, fan-shaped and points upward.

The sun shines here as if through smoke, and the people seem as if they were asleep.

THOS. HUGHES.

ARLINGTON, KAN.

Editor Restitution:

After struggling for some time I have aroused some interest in the cause of truth. Being on the unpopular side and alone I cannot do much.

Last winter I was called to preach a funeral sermon in absence of the regular preacher. This summer I have of course held up the truth whenever I could, and finally, June 5, they demanded of me to hold a public discussion.

The next Sunday afternoon we accordingly met and investigated the following—

Resolved, That man is mortal, subject to death, and does die.

They wanted me to take the affirmative so it was put in this way. I showed that, at creation, man was made, or formed, of the dust of the ground, and that the breath of life, or lives, was the vital breath, and the expression "living soul" was translated "living creatures" in other places, and should be here, for he was a living creature.

My opponent said in his first speech that he endorsed all I had said about man at creation; that there was no issue between us, then at once changed the subject and tried to prove there was an inward conscience which he regarded as the immortal soul; did not even once try to harmonize my testimony with his position, but kept quoting other Scripture to direct the minds of the people away from what I had said.

Although our time was short we think we left some impression on the minds of the people.

Now we say, we want more help. Come over and help us. Who is the nearest man I can send to for help, and what is his address? The cause of truth demands more help here. May the Lord send some laborers into this part of his vineyard.

Under disadvantages we are struggling with might and main that truth may arise.

J. A. MOYER.

LENAPE, KAN.

Editor Restitution:

I am willing to go to Yankton, Dacota, in answer to the notice in the paper a few weeks since, providing the brethren will bear my expenses. I would stop and hold a series of meetings. I am an Elder in the A. C. Church, but believe the gospel of the kingdom. I refer to Elders W. W. Cates, Hudson, Mo., L. J. Rich, Taylorville, Mo., T. Comstock, State Evangelist of Kansas, Mr. Willis, (Restitutionist) Paphaville, Mo.

Who will send me the means to go? Who besides will go?

D. J. MOULDEN.

ELK POINT, D. T.

Editor Restitution:

Seeing the request in THE RESTITUTION for some preaching brother to go to Yankton, D. T., I take this means of saying to whoever feels himself called upon to go there, that I should be pleased to have him stop at Elk Point which is on the route to Yankton, via. Sioux City. Myself and wife are the only ones here of our faith, but I think there is a good opening for some good work. Let us hear from some one.

Faithfully,

ALONZO HASSON.

Exegetical.

The Bondage of Corruption.

The Scriptures invariably assume, from their first page to the very close, that the totality of nature is bound up with man in one common history; that man and the totality of nature are inseparably connected together as center and circumference; that this circumference is affected by the sin which proceeds from man, as well as by the anger or the mercy which proceeds from God to man; that the judgments of God, as the history of nations proves, involve in fellow-sufferings even that part of the creation which is not free; and that this participation in the corruption (phthora) and glory (doxa) of humanity will come out with peculiar distinctness and force at the close of the world's history in a manner corresponding to the commencement; and, lastly, that the world in its present condition needs a palingenesia, or regeneration, quite as much as the corporeal nature of man, before it can become an object of good pleasure on the part of God.—Delitzsch on Isaiah ii. 18, 14.

That Cyclopedia War.

Full particulars of this great literary enterprise, given elsewhere in this paper, will interest every curious reader, and especially every searcher after useful knowledge. The last page of the great "Library of Universal Knowledge" was put in type on June 29, and the complete work, in 15 octavo volumes, large type, will be ready in large quantity for delivery to purchasers not later than July 10. A good cyclopedia is recognized by all intelligent people as an essential part of the furnishing of a home. This, the largest cyclopedia ever published in this country, and perhaps better adapted than any other to popular use, ought, and doubtless will, find its way into the homes of hundreds of thousands to whom such a work has heretofore been inaccessible on account of high cost. Special terms are given to clubs, and $10,000 special reward is offered by the publishers to club agents forwarding orders during the months of July and August. American Book Exchange, Publishers, New York.

Brevities.

Comptes Rendus.

LENGTH OF JUPITER'S DAY.

The Emperor of Brazil has transmitted to the French Academy a note of M. Cruls upon the time of Jupiter's rotation. The sharpness of the outline and the bright color of the brown spot which has been so long visible enabled him to deduce from nearly 1,100 rotations a period of 9h. 55m. 30s.

Interior.

The news comes of the massacre, by natives in Guinea, of a number of missionaries connected with the London Missionary Society. The outrage seems to have been committed out of sheer wantonness, without the slightest provocation, and with peculiarly atrocious accessories. Twelve persons were butchered in cold blood, including four members of the London Society's corps of agents, the wives of two of the number, four children, and two servants. Four native youths who accompanied the missionary party barely escaped with their lives by swimming. Intelligence of the massacre was sent to Melbourne by the Rev. Mr. Beswick, who, with others, managed to escape during the attack. It is stated that, owing to the fear of a similar visitation, the missionaries have vacated that part of the territory.

Scientific American.

DISCOVERY OF AN AZTEC CALENDAR STONE.

The World's correspondent at Mexico reports the discovery of a new Aztec calendar stone. It was found, June 2, by Captain Evans under a dilapidated Indian hut, which stood on the place that once formed the favorite garden of the Texcocan "Poet Prince" Netzahualcoyotl. It is a stone slab, eight feet by six, covered with hieroglyphs, and near the center of it is a clearly cut calendar—similar to the far-famed "Aztec Calendar stone" which is now attached to the cathedral in the city of Mexico. The stone goes to the Mexican National Museum. Further excavations are to be made on the same site, and since King Netzahualcoyotl "the Wise" built his palace on a hillock on which the residence of the sovereign lords of a more ancient nation had stood, it is probable that further researches in that locality may lead to interesting discoveries.

American Architect.

INTERESTING DISCOVERIES IN YUCATAN.

In Yucatan some discoveries have been made, of a very interesting character, mainly by Dr. Le Plongeon, the agent of the American Archæological Institute, who has excavated the ruins of Mayapan, once the capital of the Mayas, a powerful tribe among the aboriginal inhabitants. The later history of this important town is well known; for less than a century before the arrival of the Spanish invaders, the king of the tribe had been murdered by his nobles, his followers dispersed, and the royal city destroyed, so that the objects brought to light by Dr. Le Plongeon's exertions find their place immediately as historical documents. Among other things, portrait sculptures of the unfortunate king have been discovered, which are at once recognized as similar in face and figure to bass-reliefs at Chichen-Itza, the metropolis of Yucatan, where the lords paramount of the country held their court, and where the king of the Mayas is represented as doing a sort of homage to his suzerain. This coincidence seems to point to a period of special artistic development throughout that region, when pictorial or sculptured representations of the affairs of daily life had become somewhat habitual. Further proofs of enlightenment are found in astronomical instruments, such as stone dials of accurate workmanship, which were found still standing on a smooth platform of stone, covered only with a few inches of vegetable mould. Various observations were made in regard to the religious emblems discovered, but beyond a strong resemblance of some of them to those of Eastern Asia, no extraordinary developments are made. Dr. Le Plongeon's accounts show a remarkable and interesting continuity of language, family names, and even of habitants of Yucatan and their modern descendants. It has been well said that all archæological discovery originates in the endeavor to investigate traditions, which survive after stone and brick have crumbled to dust; and it is very probable that further acquaintance with the friendly and civilized natives may furnish clews to discoveries of great importance.

The believer's is a superhuman life. The sources of his strength and consolation are not in the country in which he sojourns, but in the higher lands beyond. He lives in God, and thus experiences personal joy, even when earthly springs are dry, or are turned to bitterness.

Poetry.

CHARITY.

J. T. GILLETLY.

And now abideth faith, hope, and charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.—1 Cor. xiii, 13.

Some boisterous war.
And some delight in singing tender love;
I have a theme nobler and greater far.
And far more.

Hear, blabbing fame,
And tell it far and wide from sea to sea,
The loftiest grace yet known to man—her name
Is Charity.

I somewhat know
The fierce delights with which the heroes rush'd,
Who in the opposition or the bloody foe,
Were cheered on by God.

My heart has lain
Nestled on love's pure heart, quick the shining pitch
Five drank of her benevolence when Eye met eye.

Yet I prefer
To leave love's delicate, and sit to cross hand,
And listen to the voice of her
That charms my mind.

Then passions cease,
With all their billowy hatreds—hope lies still,
And calmly ripple to a gentle peace,
That soothes the soul.

She left her home,
Where cherubim and seraphim still sing,
And here to scatter blessings from her come
On every wing.

She fearless goes
Where willful youth and prejudiced old age
Join in the clamor of her countless foes,
To rend their rage.

Proof against the pains,
Of zealot ignorance, or cruel scorn,
Or fury of the bigot's sanctioned curse
Beneath her cross.

Swift can she fly,
And stream and sea and rarified mountain chain,
And care and tongue and slander still try
To curb in vain.

Oh! Thou who art
The gracious sender to this world of sin,
Thy gentle Charity, force my locked heart,
And let her in.

Oh baneful rage,
Pluck forth the crank'rous roots that bury in vain;
Oh purge me from the brutal heritage
Of hating Cain.

And haste the day
When Royal Charity shall usher peace,
When rage and war and death have passed away;
When pain shall cease.

Communications.

BAPTISM IN THE NAME OF THE CHRIST.

J. J. WARNER.

Baptism was ordained by Jesus the Christ, and rests upon his personal authority, derived from the Father. Mat. xxviii. 18, 19. Therefore it must be commanded and administered in his name or by his authority; and is the test act of obedience to him, and the only practical answer to the pressing question, Will you be a Christian? Will you hear the voice of the Great Prophet and live? It is one of the conditions of pardon or remission of sins, submitted on the day of Pentecost, at Jerusalem, where "repentance and remission of sins" were first preached in his name; Luke xxiv. 47; Acts ii. 38, and as the only legal power to forgive sins, was invested in him; his apostles must submit the conditions of pardon "in his name," by his authority, that the guilty might know or rest assured their sins were really remitted, by the highest authority on earth and in heaven, and that life, not death was theirs.

This power, given by the Father to the Son, as the great head of the church, and by him to them (his apostles), need not be set forth in the same terms, or at least was not. We have in the name of Jesus the Christ, Acts ii. 38; in the name of the Lord Jesus, viii. 16; xix. 5; in the name of the Lord, x. 48.

In other instances we have the mere statement that they were baptized, and no name mentioned. If then we follow the apostles, in commanding and administering the ordinances we have no form of words, but a variety, or even none at all.

Which shall we use? Would not good practical sense say, that we must go directly to the commission itself to learn what Christ told his apostles to do and teach? and not to what they commanded the nations, if we wish to find any definite form? Their only object seemed to be to clearly set forth the power of Christ, regardless of any form of words. Notwithstanding, there is a form of sound words which must be held fast. 2 Tim. i. 13.

We have relative and official terms. To come into a relative term, is to come or enter into the relation indirected by that term, and as faith and baptism constitute us sons, we must be baptized into that relation, and consequently by one act God becomes our Father, his Son our brother, and the Holy Spirit our comforter, dwelling first in the Father, second in the Son, third in us.

"The spirit of the Lord God was upon him," and "God dwells in us by his spirit," we are begotten and sealed by the Holy Spirit, and he is the great connecting medium between God and us, as his adopted sons, and between us and Christ, his only begotten Son. How great and horrible that act that brought death into the world, and how great and glorious that act of obedience which brought life into the world; and how great the one act of obedience on our part, which, preceded by faith and repentance, brings us into the three greatest names that ever entered the heart of man, and relates us to Father Son, and Holy Spirit.

O, what love on the part of our Heavenly Father, to bring about such a relationship! Our hearts leap for joy, yet our greatness is hid from us, "It does not yet appear what we shall be."

We may be baptized into Christ relatively and be baptized "in his name," but how can we be baptized "into his name" or authority? we are now in a state of humility and suffering, but "shall reign with him." If we overcome we shall have power over the nations.

You see then that no man can be baptized into the name of Christ, it being an official name, indicating power that no man in the present state can claim. Relatively we claim the Father Son and Holy Spirit, we are in them and they in us, but who can claim the name or power of the Christ? or what man dare we call the Christ? If he be baptized into the name, it is his, surely.

What was said by the apostles at the water aside from the form of sound words into the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, we are not able to tell, but one thing we do know, that if they acted upon his authority, they baptized into the three great names. He never commanded anything else. What they told the nations to do and what Christ told them to do must not be confounded. He did not tell them to command baptism into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, but to do, or perform it, into those names, which were relative, and not official, as we have shown.

It follows then, most conclusively, that the man who baptizes into an office rather than into a relation does not act upon the commission of our Lord.

In administering the ordinance of baptism, I have deemed it necessary in this age of confusion to be somewhat explicit, and to use language that would express the author, design and relation of the ordinance, and have said, "In the name of Jesus the Christ, the Great Head of the Church, for the remission of your sins, through his most precious blood, you are baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," and am confident that the act can only be properly or legally performed when the three great names are used, whatever may be said before or after the act itself.

Oh, that the church might not be distracted and perverted by any division or misunderstanding in relation to this sacred ordinance, but may we all with a single eye, look for the coming of our blessed Lord.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

MATTHEW iii. 11.

HENRY BAUTERICH.

"I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance."

That the above text is correctly translated "with water," is evident when we take the context into consideration. That it does not refer to the method of baptism at all, but to the element employed therein, is plainly taught in the context.

In the fifth verse and further on we read:—

"Then went out unto him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan; and they were baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins. But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees coming to his baptism, he said unto them, Ye offspring of vipers, who warned you to flee from the wrath to come?"

In coming to the place where John baptized, they witnessed the mode, or method of baptism. John continued saying:—

"Bring forth therefore fruit worthy of repentance: and think not to say: We have Abraham to our father.... even now is the axe laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. I indeed baptize you with water."

The element John used was water, and he put the candidate in it; the element that Jesus was to use, of whom John spoke was not water, but as it is written:—

"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and fire."

This seems to be the import of the above text. That immersion is the Bible method for baptism in water, is irrefutable, it took much water (John iii. 23) and they were buried in it. Rom. vi. 4.

No intelligent Bible student (unbiased) would offer to dispute, that immersion is the only mode, or method, for water baptism, but there is considerable controversy in what name to administer it. If we consider the apostles good witnesses, there would be but little trouble about the matter. Peter, to whom the Lord gave the keys of the kingdom of heaven (Matt. xvi. 19), in using one of the keys at Pentecost, when filled with the Holy Spirit said:—

"Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

Would the Holy Spirit which Jesus shed forth (Revised Version: "poured forth") lead them (the apostles) to speak and act contrary to his will? Surely every honest soul will say no.

Paul the wise Master Builder, the Great Apostle to the Gentiles, said:—

"For if we have been planted (Revised Version: "for if we have become united") together in the likeness of his (Jesus') death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. vi 5.

Who died? Jesus of Nazareth, not God the Father of our Lord Jesus, no one can be planted in the likeness of the death of the uncreated, for God never died.

Baptism represents the death, burial and resurrection of our Lord Jesus; and to try to symbolize the death, burial and resurrection of God who created all things, is ridiculous. The idea expressed in baptism shows that the commission recorded in Matt. xxviii. 19, is misapplied by referring it to water baptism. The apostles received the commission:—

"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptising them into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I (Jesus) commanded you: and lo I (Jesus) am with you alway, even unto the end of the world (age)." Matt. xxviii. 19-20.

And they (the apostles) obeyed it too. They (the apostles) were endued with power from on high, so they might obey the great commission. On one occasion Jesus sent his twelve disciples out on a mission, and he also gave them power and authority over all devils, and they could cure diseases. See Luke ix. 1. Also see another occasion in Luke x. 1, 17. So in the instance of the great commission, the apostles did not begin their mission, until endued with power:—

"And behold I (Jesus) send forth the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city (Jerusalem) until ye be clothed with power from on high." Luke xxiv. 49.

Having received power, they then were fitted for their mission. Jesus said:—

"Greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto the Father." John xiv. 12.

The apostles did wonders, miracles and signs, all in the name of the Lord Jesus, the shadow of Peter healed the sick. Acts v. 15, 16. So we also find the plain evidence: that by the laying on of the hands of the apostles the people received the Holy Ghost:—

"Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost" (this was done after they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Acts viii. 14-20.

Again:—"And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them, and they spake with tongues and prophesied." Acts xix. 6. (This also followed after they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus; Acts xix. 5).

None but ambassadors could transmit the Holy Ghost, consequently Ananias and Paul, who both were sent by the king could by the inspiration of their hands give the Holy Ghost. See Acts ix. 5, 6, 10, 17.

Even Philip the Evangelist, who himself had received the Holy Ghost, could do wonders, miracles and signs, but had to send Peter and John to give the Holy Ghost to those whom Philip had baptized in water (only in the name of the Lord Jesus; Acts viii, 10). Peter and John had to come in person and lay their hands on the people, and they received the Holy Ghost. Acts viii. 14-18.

The church was established by the ambassadors of Christ, explicit evidence was given the people, that they were servants of the Most High God. "They went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them ("lo I am with you") and confirming the word with signs following." Mark xvi. 20.

Because the phraseology of Matt. xxviii. 19 is not recorded in the Acts: that does not imply that the apostles did not obey the commission, surely they both taught and baptized. Positive declarations are not always necessary to prove a fact, for instance: In the promises made to Abraham, there is no direct mention of a resurrection, yet the promises involved it. So also that man is mortal, is not found in this phrase: yet hundreds of passages imply it. The great import of the whole matter is: To believe that Jesus is the Son of God with power (Rom. i. 4): that he is both Lord and Christ (Acts ii. 36): that the life is in the Son. John v. 26. 1 John v. 11-12.

With this faith the candidate will be perfectly willing to become united with him (the Lord Jesus) by the likeness of his death, for the promise is:—

"We shall be also of his resurrection."

Submitted in love.

Baltimore, Md.

HAVING LOVED HIS OWN HE LOVES THEM TO THE END.

S. ROXANA TAYLOR.

He loves them to the end! Oh! there is a faithfulness here! Though every friend prove false, if we are the Lord's, he will love us clear through to the end of life's weary journey.

We can rest in him, for if he loves us, he will help us, will do everything for us that needs to be done.

It is no wonder that the Christian has peace that passeth understanding; it is no wonder that his cup so often runs over. The one that loves us died for us, and that love will never lose sight of us, until we are saved in the kingdom.

"He loves us to the end." He loves us until our salvation is reached; loves us until our redemption is brought about. "He loves us with an everlasting love." Oh how the words have comforted me! And can I forsake one who holds me so dear? Can I refuse to do the little that my poor hands may do for him? Never! Never! Let me die rather than prove false to my trust.

Let me seek first for the kingdom, give first for the kingdom; work, pray, and live for the kingdom, "denying myself all ungodliness and worldly lusts," that he who hath loved me may account me worthy to have an entrance there.

Selections.

Prophetic Times.

THE BUDDING FIG-TREE.

S. BONHOMME.

As early as the year 1834, an earnest appeal was made in the British Parliament, and a memorial presented to the Right Honorable Lord Palmerston, Her Majesty's Secretary for Foreign Affairs, for the Restoration of the Jews to Palestine. And one of the pleas was, that Great Britain being the Modern Turkish (Isa. lx. 9,) her ships are to convey the Jews with their gold and silver to Mount Zion, of the Jewish nation. The restoration of the Jews commenced first in the year 1840, and continues in progress, and Palestine is becoming an object of great interest; and as far as Jerusalem is concerned, a great and marvellous change is taking place, the city is being lighted with gas, and a street railroad is to be run to the top of the Mount of Olives. From 14,000 to 16,000 Jews now residing in the holy city; twenty-eight congregations of Jews, hospitals, schools, colleges, benevolent societies, are signs of our times and of the budding of the fig-tree.

The surveyor of buildings in the holy city, Mr. Schick, in his report states that ruined buildings have been rebuilt and restored, either by individuals or companies and building associations, and whole blocks of houses on the plan of Peabody's buildings in London, have been erected; thus according to prophecy is fulfilling, "Jerusalem shall be rebuilt upon her own heaps."

The remarks made by Mr. Oliphant, in view of the speedy decentralisation of Turkey in the provinces of her dominion, the establishment of a Jewish colonisation being considered very practical, must be regarded at this time a Providential interference, consequently to be accomplished. For the purpose of judging by personal observation what part of Palestine would be the most suitable location for his proposed colony, he found it necessary to visit the country with the view of selecting the district and examining the local conditions. He laid the matter before the British Government, with the view of obtaining their support and approval, communicating to the Prime Minister and Lord Salisbury the outlines of the project. From both ministers he received the kindest encouragement and assurances of support, so far as possible to afford it without officially committing the Government. The result of Mr. Oliphant's searching out of the land is thus given:—

"The region which he should propose for settlement of the Jews, in the first instance, would be the entire district of the Belka, from the Arnon on the south to the Jabbok on the north, extending eastward as far as the Hadji road, or at all events to the limit of the good land, and, if necessary, including the portions of the province of Adjun to the north of Jabbok as might be deemed the most desirable, making a tract of at least 1,000,000, or possibly, 1,500,000 acres. The western boundary would be the Jordan and the western shore of the Red Sea, thus including that singular sheet of water within its limits."

Political events in the East have so shaped themselves that Palestine, and especially the provinces to the east of Jordan, owing to the geographical position, have now become the pivot upon which of necessity they must ultimately turn. Situated between the holy places at Jerusalem and the Asiatic frontier of Russia, between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea, between Syria and Egypt, their strategic value and political importance must be apparent at a glance, and the day must be near at hand when it may be found that the most important interest of the British Empire, might be imperilled if she neglect to render the services in restoring the Jews with her ships and steamships which prophecy intimates it as her duty, like that of King Cyrus, who was likewise a subject of prophecy. (Isa. xlv. 13,) which he nobly fulfilled in sending the Jews home from his empire. It is evident that the nation that espouses the cause of the Jews, and their restoration to Palestine would be able to rely upon the powerful influence which they wield in the press of many countries, and on their political co-operation in those countries, which would of necessity tend to paralyze the diplomatic, and even hostile action of powers antagonistic to the one with which they were allied. Owing to the financial, political and commercial importance to which the Jews have now attained, there is probably no one power in Europe that would prove so valuable an ally to a nation likely to be engaged in a European war, as this wealthy, powerful, and cosmopolitan race.

Speaking of their colonization, we should not expect such families just now to come from England or France, though there may be those who would exchange their present settlement for Palestine, but we would expect them to come in large numbers from European and Asiatic Turkey itself, as well as from Russia, Gallacia, Roumania, Servia, and the Slav countries where they are more especially oppressed, and where there are many among the richer classes who would gladly exchange the persecutions under which they live for the free air which they would breathe even under Turkish rule. Since the movement of Mr. Oliphant, the Turkish Government has offered for colonization of the Jews in Palestine 30,000 acres of land. No one can fail to notice the signs of the times, and to discover the wise Providence of God, in retaining so large a portion of his ancient people in Eastern lands, and the facility for their return to the covenant land.

As regards the future propriety of Palestine, under any circumstances, it is impossible that the region which comprises within its limits the luxuriant pasture lands of Jaulan, the magnificent forest-clad mountains of Gilead, the rich arable plains of Moab, and the fertile sub-tropical Valley of Jordan, can remain much longer neglected. The Holy Land when provided with railroads and tramways now introduced, will offer the happiest blending of the Ancient and Modern Worlds. It will become another Egypt, with the distinct advantages of a superior climate, and for nobler races of men. Ezek. xxxvi. 33-38; Isa. lxi. 6. And lo! to-day our eyes behold this ancient prophecy touching its fruition. How then, should this strengthen our faith, not only in the restoration of the chosen tribes, but in all the blessed promises which are associated with it. For it is written, "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." Psa. cii. 16. Here then we have the budding of the Fig Tree.

A peculiar sign of our times is the rapid decay of what remains of the Turkish Empire. A special correspondent of the London Standard, in a recent interview with a Turkish official of high position, having intimated his surprise that the Porte did not accede to the recommendations of the Great Powers, in reference to the Greco-Turkish Question, received from the Turkish statesman the following reply:—

"How can the Sultan or his advisers be possibly expected to make up their minds yet, on such a momentous question as that which is now before them? Two generations ago, Turkey in Europe, extending from the Pruth to Cape Matapan, was next to Russia, the largest of European States. By successive loppings, by the separation of Greece in the south, then of Servia and Roumania in the north, and finally, the servanble after the last war, when Austria took Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria was made practically independent, Eastern Roumelia was erected into a semi-independent State, and Servia, Roumania, and Montenegro were enlarged with slices of adjoining territory; by all these deductions Turkey in Europe has already been reduced to one of the smallest of the European States. We have already lost two-thirds of our European dominions. Our European population has, in a few years, been reduced from 20,000,000 to 5,000,000. In 1820, we had 200,000 square miles of European territory. Of that we have barely 60,000 left. And you now come and ask us, out of this scanty remnant of our Empire, to give to Greece, nearly 10,000 square miles of territory, and three-quarters of a million of the Sultan's best subjects; or in other words, to cede two of the finest and fairest of his ancestral provinces, which forms one-sixth of all the territory the Sultan can now call his own in Europe."

When we remember that besides all this, Turkey has practically lost Egypt, a portion of Armenia ceded to Russia after the late war, and the Island of Cyprus made over to England, we can clearly see how rapidly the symbolic waters of the Euphrates are drying up (Rev. xvi. 12,) and how soon by their absorption, the way of the kings of the East, i. e., the Jews, will be prepared, Exod. xiv. 6; xix. 5.

Finally, the significant signs of the shooting forth of the Jewish Fig Tree is to be found in the fact that owing to the rapid decline of the Turkish Empire, and the gradual breaking up and reformation of the countries by which it was composed, the Jewish nation has become of some political importance. The kings and the statesmen by whom Europe it governed, in their various and conflicting schemes for the partition of the "sick man's" remaining goods when his final hour has come, are now compelled to take Palestine into account, and it will, perhaps, be found that the only practical solution of the great Eastern Question lies in the restoration of the Jews to their own land; a work which, it seems according to prophecy, is to be accomplished before long.

Sententious.

There is nothing so undignified as anger.

Hannah More says that there is one single fact that one may oppose to all the wit and argument of infidelity; that no man ever repented of Christianity on his death bed.

This is one of the sad conditions of life, that experience is not transmissible. No man will learn from the sufferings of another; he must suffer himself; each must bear his own burden.—G. H. Lewes.

Be trustful, be steadfast, whatever betide thee;
Only one thing do thou ask of the Lord;
Grace to go forward whatever betide thee.
Simply believing the truth of his word.
Thou shalt joy walk in the light of his love;
Thou be assured of your treasure above.

The example of Christ is living legislation—law embodied and pictured in a perfect humanity. Not only does it exhibit every virtue, but it also enjoins it. In showing what is it enacts what ought to be. When it tells us how to live, it commands us so to live.—John Eadie.

"Behold He Cometh!" Eyes that have long looked to see his glory, shall behold his face and rejoice at his return; hearts that have throbbed, and sighed, and panted for his presence, will lose their sorrows in the sunshine of his love.

A groaning world longs for the return of Him who will unbind her heavy burdens; a blighted world longs for the presence of One who will wipe from her bosom the stain of sin and the curse. The sure word of prophecy has told us that "the desire of all nations shall come."

The mists of time are fading fast,
And soon will appear our home,
And the sweetest tones of earth to my ear
Are telling our Lord will come;
And I love to sit in the twilight hour,
As the daylight fades away,
And think of that beautiful, beautiful home
That will soon be mine for aye.

Every man is a missionary now and forever, for good or evil, whether he intends or designs it or not. He may be a blot, radiating his dark influence outward to the very circumference of society; or, he may be a blessing, spreading benediction over all the length and breadth of the world; but a blank he cannot be. There are no moral blanks; there are no neutral characters. We are either the sower that sows and corrupts, or the light that splendidly illuminates, or the salt that silently operates; but being dead or alive, every man speaks.—Thomas Chalmers.

The Cyclopaedia War.

The month of July, 1891, witnesses the completion of the largest and most important literary work this country and the century have seen. It is the Library of Universal Knowledge, large type edition, in 15 large octavo volumes, containing 10 per cent more matter than Appleton's Cyclopædia, at less than one-fifth its cost, and 40 per cent more than Johnson's Cyclopædia, at a little more than one-fourth its cost.

Chambers's Encyclopædia, which forms the basis of the Library of Universal Knowledge (the last London edition of 1880 being reprinted verbatim as a portion of its contents), is the laborious product of the ripest British and European scholarship. It has developed Victory through a century of Cyclopædia making; its various editions having been many times revised, in successive years, till it has come to be universally recognized, by those competent to judge, as standing at the very front of great aggregations of knowledge, and better adopted than any other Cyclopædia for popular use. It contains such full and important information as the ordinary reader, or the careful student, is likely to seek, upon about 25,000 subjects in every department of human knowledge. Chambers's Encyclopædia, however, is a foreign production, edited and published for a foreign market, and could not be expected to give as much prominence to American topics as American readers might desire. To supply these and other deficiencies a large corps of American editors and writers have added important articles upon about 13,000 topics, covering the entire field of human knowledge, bringing the whole number of titles under one alphabetical arrangement to about 30,000. Thus the work is thoroughly Americanized, and the Library of Universal Knowledge becomes at once the latest and most complete Encyclopædia in the field, at a mere fraction of the cost of any similar work which has preceded it.

For The Price of the 15 volumes, complete, in even cloth binding, $15.00. In half Russia, sprinkled edges, $20.00. In half Russia, gilt top, $22.50. In full library sheep, marbled edges, $25.00.

The superlative value and importance of this great Encyclopædia lies especially in the fact that it is brought within the reach of every one who aspires after knowledge and culture. It is really a library of universal knowledge. It brings a liberal education easily within the reach even of every Revolution plowboy of the country and apprentice boy of the city. Every farmer and every mechanic in the land owes it to himself and to his children that such a Cyclopædia shall henceforward form a part of the outfit of his home. To the professional man, and every person of intelligence in every walk of life, a Cyclopædia is a necessity.

Of course the old and wealthy publishers who have grown rich (it is said that the Appletons have made a profit of nearly two millions dollars on their Cyclopædia) from the sale of their high-priced publications are not pleased that their monopolies are broken and their power overthrown. Of course the book agents and booksellers who have been used to getting from 40 to 60 per cent commission for selling these high-priced books are not so well pleased to sell the Library of Universal Knowledge on 15 per cent commission, though those who are not short-sighted discover that their own interests, after all, are identical with the interests of the people, and their real profits, in the end, are increased, by the immense sales which result from meeting the people's wants. The majority of booksellers, however, are better pleased to handle than to sell this and our numerous other standard and incomparably low-priced publications. But the Literary Revolution has always looked to the people, in whose interests it is, for its patronage, and it has never looked in vain, as our more than one million volumes printed last year (this year being increased to probably more than two millions) abundantly prove. You can order the Cyclopædia directly from us, and by uniting with your neighbors and friends you can secure club rates as follows:

$10,000 Reward To Club Agents.

A discount of 10 per cent will be allowed to any one ordering at one time three or more sets of the Cyclopædia; but a discount of 15 per cent will be allowed to any one ordering five or more sets at one time.

As a special inducement to our friends and patrons to go to work promptly and vigorously, each doing what he can for the dissemination of universal knowledge, we propose to distribute $10,000 in special premiums as follows, in addition to the regular discount to clubs:

$5,000 Reward to be distributed equally among the first thirty agents who procure lists of not less than five subscribers, after June 30th and before September 1st.

$5,000 Reward in addition to the first prize to be distributed among the thirty agents who during the above stated time shall send in the largest lists of subscribers, provided that no list contain less than twenty names. Orders for the $10,000 Reward must be sent in by the agents themselves, and not by subscribers, and must be accompanied by the names of the subscribers which form the list for which agents may send in.

The names of the subscribers to a list must be forwarded at once. The first set named will be distributed as specified as rapidly as the orders are received, and the remaining sets will be distributed promptly on the 1st of September. Orders will be received from agents in all parts of the country, and the premiums will be awarded to the agents who procure the largest lists, and the first set to arrive in the case of a tie. Subscribers must be actual purchasers for individual use, and not booksellers or agents who buy to sell again.

Persons desiring to take part in the contest are requested to write at once for sample volumes, terms, circulars, and full particulars as to the best methods of procuring subscribers. Every person should send for a sample volume, and a list for the vicinity in which he resides. Orders for the $10,000 Reward will be filled by us with the utmost promptness, while our ability to manufacture, begins not later than July 20th, and is being filled in the order of their receipt by us.

Specimen pages of the "Library of Universal Knowledge" will be sent free upon request. Prospectus containing full particulars of our new plan of introducing this work, with terms to agents, and a full description of the work, and type-setting by steam, will be sent upon application. Terms cash; money order, registered letter, or by express. Fractions of $100 may be sent in postage stamps.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
JOHN B. ALDEN, MANAGER. 764 Broadway, New York.

Poetry.

PSALM XC.

W. I. CROCKETT.

O gracious Lord, a steadfast dwelling place,
Through generations Thou has been;
Ere earth in beauty smiled upon the face,
Even before the mountain toys were seen—
Thy feet had trod,
The everlasting way,
And Thou art God.

Thou turnest man into destruction's night,
Returns to dust Thou sayest unto him;
But years on years unto thy wondrous sight,
Are but a yesterday, forgotten dim,
A trembling spark,
Or as a fleeting watch
When all is dark.

As with a flood Thou carriest us away,
When wandering in the silent realm of sleep:
And if through strength we greet the dawning day,
We fall as grass before the mower's sweep,
The morning dies,
It droops beneath the evening sun
And withered lies.

We are consumed in anger, and in wrath
Thou troublest us because of evil ways;
Our secret sins Thou knowest, and our path,
And under chastening pass away our days:
Though we grow old,
Yet all our years of life are lost
A tale that's told.

Three score and ten the measure out our years,
And if by strength they reach unto four score,
Yet sorrow's hand hollows our eyes with tears,
We are cut off and flourish here no more.
Who knows thy power,
Thy anger drove, and all thy wrath
That doth devour.

O teach us ever to apply our hearts
To wisdom's laws, that we may know our days;
And Thou, O Lord! return e'er life departs!
Repent Thee, Lord, thy faltering servant [illegible].
And glory shed,
In mercy widely our souls
That we be glad.

According as Thou has afflicted us,
And in the years that we have evil been;
O make us glad, O bade us prosperous,
And on thy servants let thy work be seen;
And glory stream
Upon their seed, until the earth be
Reflects the gleam.

The matchless beauty of the Lord our God
Descend upon us, and established be
Our handiwork, yea where in faith we've trod,
Let all our work forever stabilished be.
This does thy servant pray,
And now awaiteth patiently
Thy Glorious Day.

Selections.

HEBREW AS A LIVING LANGUAGE.

Many of our readers, says the Jewish Chronicle, may have been surprised as well as amused by the quotation we gave from a Hebrew newspaper describing in Biblical phraseology the now historic incident of Mr. Parnell's temporary expulsion from the House of Commons. It must have appeared to them like a piece of mediævalism transported into the nineteenth century. It seems opposed to all our ordinary ideas that Hebrew should be chosen as the medium for a newspaper of all things in the world. A review in Latin or a magazine in Greek seems the nearest parallel that can be suggested. To compose a newspaper in a "dead" language, to have advertisements of theatres, patent medicines, and the thousand miscellaneous articles of the modern press, all written in Hebrew, seems at first a bold flight of imagination. But the apparent audacity is merely due to the general ignorance of Western Jews as to the condition of their Eastern brethren. In the West Hebrew is indeed a "dead" language. But in Eastern Europe the study of Hebrew, so far from dying out, is year by year showing greater signs of life. No greater symptom of the lively interest in the language can be given than the existence of ten weekly journals printed in Hebrew and devoted to all kinds of Jewish interests. Besides these organs which deal with the current events of the time and place of their issue, there are eight monthly magazines in Hebrew more especially devoted to the higher interests of Judaism.

Those organs are not a sudden growth of the present day, but have been steadily developing ever since the Mendelsohn movement awakened the intellect of Israel. The Measef, which emanated from a little band of Mendelsohn's friends, who were hence termed the Measseffim, was the original of all these later forms of Hebrew periodical literature. From the time of Wessely to the present day, the Jewish organs have increased in number, and their circle of readers has continually spread. But not alone does a Hebrew press testify to the living nature of the Hebrew language. Many translations and original works have appeared during the past century and are still appearing. Not a few of the most important works in the world's literature can now be obtained in modern Hebrew, which is really nothing more than Biblical Hebrew, with slight adaptions to the requirements of modern life. Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" and "Othello," Milton's "Paradise Lost," Goethe's "Faust," Disraeli's "Alroy," Eugene Sue's "Mysteries of Paris" and "Wandering Jew," these, and many other works of imagination, can now be obtained in Hebrew. Hebrew verse is still written profusely, and original novels and tales are by no means uncommon. Elementary treatises on geometry, chemistry, and electricity, have been composed in Hebrew, and have run through many editions. In fact, Hebrew would deserve to rank as one of the minor literatures of Europe, like Polish and Danish, even if there were no early books in existence. And not only are books written in the language; it forms the means of communication between Jews separated by many thousand miles. The Anglo-Jewish Association has to conduct much of its correspondence in Hebrew, and its many Eastern visitors can often only be appealed to in conversation by means of Hebrew. All this modern Hebrew is unpointed; therein lies the sole difficulty to any one acquainted merely with Biblical Hebrew. And this difficulty soon disappears with a little practice. A knowledge of some part of this ever-increasing literature is necessary to understand the ideas of Eastern brethren. In the East, as we have seen, it is altogether a misnomer to speak of Hebrew as a "dead" language. It lives as much as any minor dialect of Europe lives, and it seems to bear marks of having still more life in the future. The increasing interest taken in Jewish literature may, we hope, be extended in England to the language in which it is written, which is still alive, still adapting itself to the widening wants of modern life and thought.

Youths' Column.

Youth's Companion.

Tim's Daisies.

He was only a little "street Arab"
Ragged and friendless! Ah, yes!
Unused to life's sunniest pathway,
Unused to its love and caress;
For she who had loved him—the mother
Whose arms round him once, long ago,
Had clasped themselves closely—all winter
Had lain 'neath the beautiful snow.

But the months passed away, and the spring-time
Came on with its bud and its bloom.
And the zephyrs of May, softly blowing,
Scattered far o'er the earth their perfume.
And then came a day dawning brightly
When soldiers brought flowers to spread
With love and with honor so loyal,
O'er the graves of the hero dead.

And poor little Tim, sadly thinking
Of his loved one, whose grave was unknown,
Wandered there 'neath the pleasant spring sunshine,
With tears in his eyes, all alone!
And he gathered the pretty white daisies,
For no other flowers had he,
And on the dear grave of his mother
He scattered them tenderly.

Only the simple white daisies!
Only the tears falling fast!
Only a boy's sad heart yearning
For mother caresses long past!
Oh, fair were the buds and the blossoms
Laid over the soldier-dead!
But as loyal and sweet were Tim's daisies
Over his mother's low bed.

Sacrifice for Christ.

A Cornish girl of earnest piety gave offense to some of her daily associates, who were not Christians because she wore ornaments in her ears. She had not been convinced of any harmfulness of it, but when she saw it really was a stumbling-block, she quietly took them off before them and with a stroke of the hammer with which she worked, crushed the jewelry to pieces, singing, as she did so the stanza beginning

"Neither passion nor pride thy cross can abide,
But melt in the fountain that streams from thy side."

This sacrifice, not so much of her trinkets as of her pride and her own notions, for Christ's sake and for the good of those she desired to benefit, had its own reward.

Her companions blushed as she sung her song of consecration and were struck by the superior power of a consecrated life that shrunk from no sacrifice for the real good of her daily associates.

Correspondence Chicago Tribune.

Do Birds Bury their Dead?

M. E. B.

While strolling through the woods at Coguoc Lake yesterday afternoon, I suddenly came across half a dozen birds known as brown-thrush or mocking-bird. They were all busy working at something on the ground, and did not notice my intruding till I was upon them, when, with a shrill cry, they flew off a short distance, and perched on some trees to watch my movements.

Having my curiosity aroused, I went to examine what I supposed was a nest of young birds, but to my surprise, I found the dead body of a female thrush that had been killed by the shot from some hunter's gun, and had fallen where it lay. The birds had been covering it with leaves, sticks, tufts of grass, etc., until only its feet stuck out.

Immediately the story of the babes in the wood covered with leaves by robins came to my mind, and all seemed real as the time when in childhood I read the story and believed it to be true.

Anxious to see what the birds would do, I stepped back of a large tree to a little distance, and watched them. Slowly the birds came back one by one and continued the work of burying the dead.

While engaged hopping about after leaves and grass, they would chirp, in a low, melancholy key, that I took to be the dirge notes of the little bird's funeral. I did not have it in my heart to disturb them, and watched them at their labors for half an hour, at the end of which time the dead bird was completely buried.

This in some way answers the questions so many times asked: "What becomes of all the birds? Do they ever die? And do their mates bury them?" I have no doubt but that the various species of birds thus dispose of their dead.

Battle Creek, Mich., June 14.

Parrots Taking Contributions.

A thrifty owner of pets once made a mouse useful by attaching spools to the axle of its cage-wheel, and causing it to wind thread.

Parrots can be made profitable in still more curious ways. In Wiltshire, in Dorset, lives an excellent good old woman who has been a Bible collector for many years, and, like many others in a humble station in life, resolved to do all she could to spread about God's Word. She had a parrot brought over from Africa by Captain Littledales, in 1842, which began to collect for the Bible Society about 1845. In the course of seven years the bird's cheery "Put something in the Bible box!" produced £10. At the end of that time Polly took advantage of the door being open and flew away.

It was succeeded by a green parrot, that collected £7 in six years, and then died.

Another, a gray one, was purchased, when only ten months old. Poor Mary Everett has had it eighteen years. The bird was taught to say, on the entrance of a visitor, "Walk in, sir—Bible box!" This one has earned £83 6s.

Captain Littledales is on the Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and when he narrated the above story the members of the committee united with him in purchasing a new cage, and this has been presented, with the following inscription:—

"To Mary Everett, from members of the Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society, November 5, 1877."

A Child's Faith.

DR. NEWTON.

A little child was once taken to a funeral of one of his young companions. He had never seen a dead body before. He looked long and earnestly on the beautiful form of his friend, as it lay, like a piece of wax-work or of polished marble in the dark coffin, with flowers all over it. He did not go to the graveyard. His mother took him home and let him stand at the window, where he could see the funeral procession of his playmate go by. He looked at it with fixed attention for awhile, then he turned to his mother, and his face all lighted up with gladness as he said:

"Oh, mamma! how beautiful it will be when Jesus says, 'Baby, come forth!'"

The little fellow was thinking, no doubt, of what he had heard about Jesus standing by the grave of his friend, in Bethany, when he said, "Lazarus, come forth!"

That dear child was making the right use of what the Bible teaches us about Jesus and the resurrection. In the morn of the resurrection Jesus will speak in that way to all the dead children and to all his people who have died believing in him; and it will, indeed, "be beautiful when they come forth!"

My Influence.

BALDWIN.

"Gather up my influence and bury it with me," were the dying words of a young man to the weeping friends at his bedside, as stated to the speaker awhile since by one to whom he was dear.

What a wish was this! What deep anguish of heart there must have been as the young man reflected upon his past life! a life which had not been what it should have been. With what deep regrets must his very soul have been filled as he thought of the young men whom he had influenced for evil—influences which he felt must if possible be eradicated, and which led him, faintly but pleadingly, to breathe out such a dying request, "Gather up my influence and bury it with me."

My young friends, the influence of your lives, for good or evil, cannot be gathered up by your friends after your eyes are closed in death, no matter how earnestly you plead in your last moments on earth. Your influence has gone out from you; you alone were responsible; you had the power to govern, to shape; your influence no human being can withdraw. Such a request can not be fulfilled. It is impossible. Your relatives and friends cannot "gather up your influence and bury it with you." Young men, live noble, true, heroic lives. Possess this "moral courage" in full proportions and at all times—everywhere.

New York Observer.

Birds of the Bible—The Bittern.

GEORGIANA KLINGLE.

There has been much discussion as to the word rendered bittern in the Bible. Some have supposed it referred to another bird, or animal, but the prevailing opinion is that the bittern is the one referred to. The bittern resembles the heron, but is only four inches in length, and has a less powerful bill. It is pale yellow, spotted with black. It lives by the margins of streams and builds its nest amid the rushes. It lays seven or eight eggs, of greenish tinge, and the young develop so rapidly that in three days after hatching they are able to follow their parent in search of food. It feeds on frogs and insects, and on vegetables when other food is scarce.

The voice of this bird is something remarkable, considering its size, and is mournful and desolate in the extreme. The lower part of the windpipe, dividing into the lungs, is fitted with a loose membrane, capable of holding a large quantity of air, the sudden explosion of which produces this hollow booming, like the booming of cannon heard through water, and may be heard at the distance of a mile. So baleful is this sound that in ignorant neighborhoods it is regarded superstitiously as the forerunner of evil.

The prophet Zephaniah refers to the bittern in connection with the ruins of Nineveh:—

"I will make Nineveh a desolation, and dry like a wilderness, and flocks shall lie down in the midst of her: all the beasts of the nations: both the cormorant and the bittern shall lodge in the upper lintels of it; their voice shall sing in the windows."

Critics have been disposed to dispute the right of the bitterns to occupy this place, saying that some other bird or animal must have been intended, but Nineveh was built on the left bank of the Tigris, and from information given by travelers, we know the ruins to not have been without subterranean canals, by which water could be conveyed, making it a suitable lodging place for the bittern. The ruins, now scarcely above ground, might afford lodging places for the bittern upon the upper lintels and windows. Isaiah refers to the bittern as finding habitation amid the waste places of Babylon, whose garden canals, leading, no doubt, from the river, may well be imagined to have watered the country long after it had been made desolate, and afforded nourishment to vegetation and attractions for the bittern: "I will also make it a possession for the bittern.

The drying up of the Turkish Empire is proceeding. During the last few years it has lost half of Armenia, all Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Cyprus; now it is proposed to take from Turkey and give to Greece, Thessaly and part of Epirus, while the French are manifestly aiming to possess Tunis. With what calm certainty are the great plans of the Lord worked out.—The Christian, London.

Do not find fault with the sunlight of grace because it does not unbolt the door of your will. It is your business to open the door, and the light will flood you with joy and salvation. Graciously, willingly, freely Christ waits to enter and gladden your heart.

The old city of Troy had but one gate. Go round and round the city and you could find no other. So to the strong and beautiful city of Zion there is but one gate, and no other. Do you know what it is? Christ says, "I am the door."

In life two men have failed from defect in morals where one has failed by defect of intellect.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

My address until further notice will be as follows: Until July 15, direct to Irving, Iowa, care of Levi Marsh. From that time direct to Mayville, Cloud county, Kansas.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing, I will be at Samuel Andrews on Friday before the first Sunday in July. Friday before the second Sunday in July at the Roose schoolhouse, or as brother Roose may appoint. Can fill another appointment on the third Sunday if the brethren at some other point desire me to hold a meeting.

J. S. HATCH.

There will be a basket meeting July 10, near brother Grady's, on Big Creek, Kan., nine miles northwest of Erie.

Also a basket-meeting July 17, near J. B. Rees', in Wilson Co., Kan. A general invitation is given to all to come. Brethren lay aside the toil and labor of life, and let us have a good time at both meetings.

By order of the Church.

JOHN FOORE.

The Church of God of Montague and Wise Counties, Texas, will hold their annual Conference at Valentine Springs in Montague County, commencing Friday, August 12, 1881, at four o'clock, P. M. The place of meeting is four miles south of Forestburg, sixteen miles south of St. Joe, sixteen miles southeast of Montaguetown, thirty miles west of Gainsville, and twenty miles north of Decatur. We invite every body that feels an interest in the word of God to come over. Brethren coming from a distance will go to brethren Hodges, Grimes, or Sowers, who live near the meeting place. We want all the preaching brethren we can get. Any preaching brother who can come will please address me at Sunset, Wise Co., Tex., and we will help him come.

T. T. DOYAL.

The Annual Assembly of the Church of God will commence on Friday, Aug. 5, at the house of the brethren in Winchester, Va., and continue over Sunday, which will be the first Sunday. All of the Abrahamic faith, and the people in general are respectfully invited to attend. All from a distance will please notify the writer in due time, and we will meet them at the R. R. depot, and take care of them during the meeting, and longer if they will stay, as we love the communion of the brethren in Christ.

N. J. MORGAN.

The Piedmont Advent C. C. will meet with the church at Tabernacle, Caldwell county, N. C., Aug. 7, and continue three days. Tabernacle is 16 miles from the R. R., Hickory being the nearest depot. Persons coming on the cars will go from Hickory to the conference by means of private conveyance.

JACOB J. HARSHAW, Sec.

A. B. MAGRUDER'S REPLY

—TO—

R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE BIBLE DEFENDED AND ATHEISM REBUKED.

A Reply to R. G. Ingersoll's Lectures, "Mistakes of Moses," "Gods," "What must we do to be Saved," etc.

Contains one hundred and forty-two pages, neatly printed on good paper, and good plain type, neat paper cover.

Price Fifty Cents per copy.

SEND TO THIS OFFICE FOR A COPY.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

--- MAN ---

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE.

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 26, 1881, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 12 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

THANATOPSIS,

—OR—

The First and the Second Death Scripturally Considered.

—By WILEY JONES.—

A neat tract of 70 pages. Price, one copy 10c.; 15 copies $1; 100 copies $5. Postage stamps taken for fractions of a dollar.

Send orders to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

394

THE TWO THRONES.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27, 1881.

—By H. V. REED.—

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. III. 21.

This is a clear and forcible argument showing the distinction between the throne of the Father and the throne of Christ; the title of Jesus to the throne of David, and the means whereby mankind may become fellow-heirs with him, and co-partners in the government of the world.

Just the Thing to Circulate.

PRICE TEN CENTS EACH, OR TWELVE FOR ONE DOLLAR.

Send Orders to

SAMUEL WILSON,
2018 N. 23d Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Also for sale by
THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

A NEW TRACT!

CIRCULATE IT!

REASONS WHY

I Believe the Bible to be the Word of God; or an

Unanswerable Argument

—AGAINST—

Infidelity AND Atheism.

The foregoing is the title of a lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburgh, Pa.,

—By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.—

It is a large size Sixteen Page Tract, and can be had at the Office of

The Restitution,

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

Price Five Cents Each, Twelve for Fifty Cents or Thirty for One Dollar.

A LETTER

TO A BAPTIST MINISTER ON THE LITERALITY OF

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN,

The Return of the Jews, and the Establishment of the

THRONE OF DAVID

—AND—

KINGDOM OF ISRAEL.

Together with Strictures on

Mr. Courtney in "THEODOSIA."

—By DANIEL HOWARD.—

A Capital tract for those desiring information on the subjects discussed. Send to this office for it, and after reading send it to your neighbor.

PRICE ELEVEN CENTS EACH.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose simple is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885.

—By M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages, 10c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of price listed price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PEARLS, Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Elder Baptist, in 1880. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 50c., or assorted packages of 100, 30c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 20c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 50c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Magruder.

Resurrection, Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is It True? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Luhg.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or $2 for 50c.

Is It Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contrasting the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 12 for 25c.

Christian Unions. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. D. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c. or $3 for $1.

The New Birth. Josiah Peters.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which Is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The Ring in the Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 4 for 20c. or $3 for $1.

Das Evangelium der Reichre Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of that Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 12 for $1.

Evangelion concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and title to be its everlasting possessors. E. Hilton. A careful and satisfactory consideration of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teachings. 36 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxii. 24 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 50 pages, price 15c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 91 pages, price 25c.

Bible Triumphant. By H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 30c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational minister, and W. Kellaway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 60c., paper 35c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Durk. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by Daily prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 184 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.00.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 200 pages, cloth $1.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 page, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 10 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 994 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND THE—

BIBLE Vindicated.

—By A. J. EVCHANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 10 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christadelphian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
E. V. DUGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
H. E. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
J. C. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, C. M. MYERS,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 20, 1881. NO. 27.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

His Proximity. First We Trumpet Continued. The Empire of the Saracens, or Caliphs. First Three Caliphs. Abubeker, His History. Second Caliph, Omar, His History. Third Caliph, Othman, His Life and Character. These Three Caliphs Reign at Medina. The Christians Under Their Government.

No. 75.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Empire of the Saracens.—On the death of Mahomet, there followed a great apostacy from the new religion. The Koran was of recent origin, and some of its requirements, such as five daily prayers, alms-giving, and abstinence from wine, were distasteful to the Arabians. The removal of their prophet was, for a time, the dissolution of their unity. They, again, were tribal, rather than national. The establishment of the empire required the combination of the political and religious elements. This combination could only be accomplished by the controlling influence of one great mind, clothed with supreme authority, civil and religious;—a royal high priest. Such an officer was the caliph—the successor and vicar of the prophet. The successor of Mahomet (Abubeker), by his firmness and power, reconquered Arabia, established the authority of the Koran, and secured the unity of the empire.

He left the command of the faithful to Caled, his lieutenant. This practice was followed by the succeeding caliphs, during the existence of the empire. The first three caliphs, Abubeker, Omar, and Othman, reigned at Medina. They directed the affairs of church and State; performed pilgrimages to Mecca; and, with the exception of Omar, at the siege of Jerusalem, never appeared at the head of their armies. They were priest kings. The Arabs, to keep them in subjection, required the presence of a king; and "They had a king over them."

Till the conquest of Arabia by Mahomet, there had been no king nor kingdom; their existence was tribal, governed by chiefs, like the red men. This feature will be noticed hereafter. The union of the tribes, and the establishment of an Arabian empire, were accomplished by Mahomet and his caliphs (successors).

Abubeker's circular to the Arabian tribes.—So soon as Abubeker had restored the unity of the empire, and the power of the Koran, he resolved to have a "holy war." For this course he had two reasons:—

1. To convert the world to Mahometanism.

2. To keep the Arabians fully occupied with foreign wars.

He was well satisfied that this could only be accomplished by the sword. He sent to the tribes the following circular:—

"In the name of the most merciful God, to the rest of the true believers. Health and happiness, and the mercy and blessing of God be upon you. I praise the Most High God, and I pray for his prophet Muhomet. This is to acquaint you, that I intend to send the true believers into Syria to take it out of the hands of the infidels (Christians). And I would have you know, that fighting for religion is an act of obedience to God."

The fruits of the circular soon appeared. The nation flew to arms. The camp of Medina was crowded with warriors burning with zeal, to go forth as war missionaries to subjugate the nations.

His instructions to the army.—His rules of action, for the army that was designed for the conquest of Persia, were unlike those designed for Christian lands. Persia was without the Romar empire, which was, in name, Christian. The instruction to the Syrian army, it being then a Roman, and a Christian province, would be equally applicable to all the Roman provinces. They were as follows:—

"Remember that you are always in the presence of God, on the verge of death, in the assurance of judgment, and the hope of Paradise. Avoid injustice and oppression, consult with your brethren, (this letter was for the officers) and study to preserve the love and confidence of your troops. When you fight the battles of the Lord, acquit yourselves like men, without turning your backs; but let not your victory be stained with the blood of women or children. Destroy no palm-trees, nor burn any fields of corn. Cut down no fruit trees, nor do any mischief with cattle, only such as you kill to eat. When you make any covenant or article, stand to it, and be as good as your word. As you go on, you will find some religious persons who live retired in monasteries, and propose to themselves to serve God in that way: let them alone, and neither kill nor destroy their monasteries. And you will find another sort of people, that belong to the synagogue of Satan, who have shaven crowns; be sure you cleave their skulls, and give them no quarter till they either turn Mahometans or pay tribute."

The command of the Syrian army was committed to Abu Obeidah, although they depended upon Caled in all severe and doubtful conflicts. The wars against Persia and Syria began under the first caliph, Abubeker, but they were finished by his successor, Omar, the second caliph; as Abubeker was soon removed by death, being far advanced in years, when he was called to succeed Mahomet. Abubeker was remarkably temperate in his food, and drink; and was zealously devoted to the principles of the new religion.

Omar succeeded him in the caliphate, and, consequently, as the royal high priest. He became the conqueror of Persia and Syria. With the fall of Persia our subject has no particular interest since it is without the Roman or Greek empire. The conquest of Syria and other Roman provinces we have to do, since, in those conquests we have the history of the Christian sufferings under the Sarcenic division, or form of the Mahometan empire. The empire of the False Prophet has had two reigning families:—

1. The Sarcenic, or Arabian family.
2. The Othman, or Turkish family.

Under the dynasty of the Turks it still exists.

Conquest of Syria.—This was the first Christian province wrested from the Eastern empire by the Saracens. The principal battles and sieges were the following:—

1. Bosra.—This was a strong fortress, the eighteenth station from Medina, on the direct caravan road into Syria. The armies met outside of the walls. This was the first battle between the Christians, and the followers of Mahomet. The former outnumbered the latter, three to one; but the soldiers of the Prince of peace could not resist the furious onset of those whose cry was, "Fight, fight! Paradise, Paradise!" But the holy crosses, and consecrated banner, on the strong battlements could not save the city. It was delivered over by its governor, treasonably; who renounced Christianity in these words:—

"I renounce your society, both in this world and in the world to come. And I deny him that was crucified, and whoever worships him. And I choose God for my Lord, Islam for my faith, Mecca for my temple, the Moslems for my brethren, and Mahomet for my prophet; who was sent to lead us into the right way, and to exalt the true religion in spite of those who join partners with God."

2. Damascus.—From Bosra they marched to Damascus, distant, four days journey. They pitched their encampment in the palm-groves, and at the fountains, at some distance from the city walls. Learning that the Romans were advancing to the relief of Damascus, suspending the siege, he, (Caled) with an army of 46,000 men, met the Roman army of 70,000 on the plains of Aiznadin, and obtained a most signal victory. Flushed with success, and having destroyed nearly 50,000 Greeks, they returned to the siege of Damascus. That city stood firm against all the assaults of the enemy for seventy days. At length their provisions being exhausted, they made an honorable capitulation to Abu Obeidah; while Caled, not knowing that the city had capitulated, forced his way into the opposite of the city, and made the streets flow with the blood of Christians.

"It was stipulated that the voluntary emigrants might depart in safety, with as much as they could carry of their effects; and that the tributary subjects of the caliph should enjoy their lands and houses, with the use and possession of seven churches. * * * In the adjacent meadow, a numerous encampment was formed of priests and laymen, of soldiers and citizens, of women and children: they collected with haste and terror, their most precious movables; and abandoned, with loud lamentations, or silent anguish, their native homes, and the pleasant banks of the Pharpar. The inflexible soul of Caled was not touched by the spectacle of their distress; he disputed with the Damascenes the property of a magazine of corn; endeavored to exclude the garrison from the benefit of the treaty; consented, with reluctance, that each of the fugitives should arm himself with a sword, or a lance, or a bow; and sternly declared, that, after a respite of three days, they might be pursued and treated as the enemies of the Moslems."—Gibbon.

The fate of these exile emigrants illustrates the true character of these Arabian "tormentors." On the fourth day from their departure, Caled, with 4,000 horse, in the dress of Christian Arabs, and guided by one Jonas, a discarded lover, and an apostate from the Bible to the Koran, started in pursuit. The country was familiar to Jonas. No halt was made except for prayer. The trail of the fugitives for some distance was distinct, and readily followed. It suddenly disappeared, indicating that the exiles had turned into the mountains, and were moving towards the sea coast to reach the highway to Constantinople.

Passing over the snow-clad summits of Libanus, and in traversing those ridges of a howling wastes the tormentors suffered intolerable hardships, but Jonas, their lover guide, knew nothing but to overtake his beloved, and Christian Eudocia. Avoiding all large cities, they made their way 150 miles into the territory of the Greek empire, before they had any view of the exiles. A single ridge intervened between them and the Roman army. The last night of their pursuit was dark, and tempestuous. At the clearing up of early morning, in a beautiful valley, not very distant were the tents of Damascus. An attack was made. All were slaughtered except Eudocia, who put an end to her own life; and the widow of Thomas the leader of the Christians in the siege of Damascus, said to be the daughter of Honorius, the Roman emperor, was spared by Caled out of contempt for the emperor.

For this act, Caled was removed from the command of the army, by the caliph Omar; the act being in violation of the stipulations of the surrender. It was likewise contrary to Abubeker's letter of instructions to the Syrian army, not to imbrue their hands in the blood of women and children.

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH.

NUMBER SEVEN.

J. CAMERON.

Another instance of New Testament use of the terms under consideration occurs in Matt. ii. 1–5:—

"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born. And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written by the prophet, And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, are not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel."

These wise men were divinely directed to the newly born King of the Jews and came to pay him homage. Their inquiry in Jerusalem caused great trouble to Herod because he was the actual King of the Jews at the time, and naturally feared a rival in the person of the promised Messiah, the King of the Jews predicted by the prophets. Herod would have had no immediate cause of trouble if the Messiah was to reign in a kingdom beyond the skies, or upon the earth after men in the flesh should no more exist. The true trouble was that he should be the Governor that should rule God's "people Israel," as quoted by the chief priests and scribes from the prophecy of Micah. And hence his rage when the wise men left Judea without telling him where the child was.—

"Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men."

But it may be asked—Would it be quite safe to understand the terms "my people Israel" and "the Jews" in this passage in their plain and natural sense—that is, the descendants of Jacob—"Israel according to the flesh?" But the real question should be rather—Is there any good reason for departing from the plain sense? And if not, can it be safe to adopt any other? If the language of the Old Testament is transferred to the New without its being intimated that it is used in a different sense, who will presume to say that its meaning must be changed? God by the prophet Micah speaks of the descendants of Jacob "according to the flesh" as "my people Israel," in the passage quoted to Herod. He does the same by other prophets as the following extracts show:—

"But go ye now unto my place which was in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel." Jer. vii. 12.

"And I have seen folly in the prophets of Samaria; they prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to err." Jer. xxiii. 13.

"And I will lay my vengeance upon Edom by the hand of my people Israel: and they shall do in Edom according to mine anger and according to my fury; and they shall know my vengeance, saith the Lord God." Ezek. xxv. 14.

Thus even in their "error" and "wickedness" the descendants of Jacob are termed by Jehovah "my people Israel." It is needless to quote instances of the term "Jews" being applied to the same people in the Old Testament, as this will be universally admitted.

But let us now inquire if the New Testament writers used these terms in a new sense. And first let us see how Jesus himself used these terms:—

"These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Matt. x. 5, 6.

"When Jesus heard it, he marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." Matth. viii. 10.

"But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of Man be come." Matt. x. 23.

"And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord." Mark xii. 29.

"Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me; and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you." John xiii. 33.

"Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews." John iv. 22.

"Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?" John iii. 20.

These are all the recorded instances of the use of the term "Israel" and "Jews" by Jesus, and there is no hint that they were used in any other than the Old Testament sense of the descendants of Jacob.

Let us next inquire as to the apostles' use of these terms. In the Acts of the Apostles the term "Jews" occurs upwards of sixty times and in every instance the meaning is obviously the descendants of Jacob. Take for examples the first and last instances—Acts ix. 22; xxviii. 29. Paul uses this term in Rom. iii. 29; 1 Cor. i. 22, and in eight other places, in every one of which the sense is exclusively the posterity of Jacob.

In addition to the instances of the use of the term "Israel" by Jesus, the term occurs nineteen times in the four gospels, in every one of which it can have no other meaning than the descendants of Jacob. See examples in Matt. x. 31; xxvii. 9; Luke i. 16.

The term "Israel" occurs fourteen times in the Acts with the same Old Testament sense in every instance.—Example, Acts i. 6; ii. 36.

This term occurs eight times in the Romans in seven of which the sense is admittedly that of the Old Testament—while the remaining instance can easily be shown to have the same meaning.

It also occurs nine other times in the New Testament in eight of which the Old Testament sense is unmistakable. The remaining instance can be easily shown to have no other.

Youths' Column.

Good Words.

Hymn for a Little Child.

God make my life a little light,
Within the world to glow:
A little flame that burneth bright
Wherever I may go.

God make my life a little flower,
That giveth joy to all,
Content to bloom in native bower,
Although its place be small.

God make my life a little song,
That comforteth the sad;
That helpeth others to be strong,
And makes the singer glad.

God make my life a little hymn
Of tenderness and praise;
Of faith—that never waxes dim—
In all thy wondrous ways.

Bruin's Kindness to a Poor Little Outcast.

In the winter of 1709 Pierro Trulvant, a little fellow of about ten years, having no longer parents or a home in Savoy, wandered to the province of Lorraine in search of a relative whom he heard lived near the palace of Leopold, Duke of Lorraine.

One bitter night he applied ton poor woman for shelter. She told him she had no room for him in her house, but he might go into the barn.

Adjoining the barn was a hut, where was kept a tame bear, owned by the duke. Ready to perish with cold in the empty barn, Pierre resolved to trust himself to the mercy of bruin.

Timidly he entered the hut and slowly approached the animal. Bruin, however, instead of doing him any harm, drew the shivering child between his paws and gently pressed him to his breast, till warm and comfortable he fell asleep.

The next morning when he awoke, he found himself still held by the bear, his head resting on the animal's warm fur. When he arose to go away the bear allowed him to leave, only following him with caresses as far as his chain would permit.

The young Savoyard wandered all day about the city, but finding no trace of his relative, returned in the evening to Marco's hut, that name having been given to the bear. Marco received him with the utmost kindness, and for some time this was his nightly retreat.

What was more remarkable, and added not a little to the boy's joy, the bear regularly kept part of his food for him.

A number of days passed without his being discovered, then one of the servants came to bring Marco's supper later than usual, and saw the sleeping child clasped to his breast.

The bear refused to move in order to take the food, and rolled his eyes in a furious manner whenever the man made any noise that might waken the sleeper.

The report of this extraordinary conduct soon spread at court, and came to the ears of the prince. Some of the courtiers, in order to prove the truth of Marco's hospitality, passed the night near the hut, and saw with astonishment that the bear never stirred as long as little Pierre showed an inclination of sleep.

When he awoke at dawn of day and found himself discovered, he was very much frightened and feared he would be punished. But the bear, caressing him with great fondness, tried to coax him to eat the food that he had saved for him from the previous evening.

Pierre was at first too much alarmed to comply, but finally did so at the request of the courtiers, who soon afterward conducted him before the Duke.

When Leopold heard the little Savoyard's whole history, and how long the bear had befriended him, he ordered that the child have a home at the court and the best of care and training given him.

No doubt he would have risen to a high position, if sudden death had not terminated his career a short time after.

Papyrus, or Paper Reed.

How the meaning of words change! and what different thoughts the same word has brought to the minds of people in different ages!

The word paper makes us think of cotton or linen, and a beautiful smooth white surface, along which, while I write, the pen moves without hindrance or rest.

Two thousand years ago paper had a very different meaning. It made the people of that day think of the bark of a large reed growing in the Nile, and was a course, dark-colored, and uneven substance. The name of this reed is still papyrus, and our word paper is taken from it. We still use the word, though the thing itself is different.

Imagine then the paper reed. The outer bark was first taken off; when within were found several [illegible] or films of fine bark, which [illegible] per; they were stripped [illegible] upon a table, the side of one piece was placed by the side of another; and then both were pressed firmly together. A little water from the Nile moistened the edges, and made them adhere. They were pressed again, and dried in the sun, and were then ready for use.

Some of our readers will remember, no doubt, that the Latin word for book had nearly the same meaning at first as the word papyrus. It is liber, and meant originally the inner bark of a tree, of which, indeed, books were in early days often made.

This paper, or bark, when written upon, was rolled up, in order to be removed, or read with greater ease. Each roll was called a volumen, or volume, from a Latin word which means "to roll."

Books are still said to be bound in volumes, though we do not roll them as our forefathers used to. Before the paper reed was used, men wrote on pieces of lead, or iron, or stone. Sometimes the stone was covered with wax, that they might write more easily; and if they pleased, blot out what they had written. The instrument used in this way was called a style—a word we still use, though in a different sense. We say a book is written in a "plain style," meaning, that it is so plainly expressed that it is easy to understand it.

After men had written many hundred years on papyrus they began to write on parchment; and last of all, on paper such as ours.

The paper reed is called in Scripture "bulrush," Ex. ii. 3; Isa. xviii. 2. It grew most freely on the banks of the Nile, and in marshy ground. The stalks rise to the height of nine or twelve feet.

They were often bound together like rushes, and made into sailing vessels and baskets. It was in one of these baskets Moses was placed, when his sister watched him.

Herodotus calls it byblus, whence the Greek biblon, book, and our word Bible.

Papyrus was used for writing at a very remote period in Egypt, and attention was first called to the papyri of Egypt when the history and antiquities of that country were developed by the French expedition. A great number have since been exhumed, and through their decipherment much light has been shed on the history, manners and customs, and literature of Egypt.

From the above our young readers can learn that our words paper and Bible come from different Greek words given to a large marsh reed. Late travellers say that it has disappeared from Egypt, though still growing in Abyssinia.

A Few Words of Exhortation.

W. I. CROCKETT.

To the young brethren I desire to say a few words concerning their walk and conversation. I also am young and can appreciate all the trials and besetting sins of youth. But the beloved Paul exhorted his young brother Timothy to "let no man despise his youth," and I hope my young brothers that we will heed the exhortation.

It is perfectly natural that young people should be exhuberant in feeling over the innocent enjoyments of youth. But beware lest such things absorb your whole time. Never be too light hearted to despise seriousness; (and the decay of seriousness is something alarming)—never be afraid of being laughed at for acting like men and women, who have put away childish things; that is, if I am justifiable in judging them by what Paul says concerning himself.

We are commanded to remember our Creator in the days of our youth. 'Tis wisdom! May we take it to heart. We have our part to play. As age slowly passes off the stage, 'tis ours to bear the "heat and burden," until we pass to death, or the Master's voice recalls us to that blest estate from whence our father Adam fell.

To the Word of God we must go if we would be truly wise; and to the throne of God we must go in prayer if we would be truly good. There is no other way appointed, and it behooves us to follow it.

My dear young brethren, do not think that because you have been baptized, that you have been saved. Do not think that you can follow after all the frivolities of a pleasure loving world, and be accepted when the Lord comes. He will have a godly people, a praying, righteous people, as the sons of his kingdom.

Did you ever think of the comparison—jewels? Do you suppose the Lord will choose those with flaws or disfigurements? No! He desires those that will reflect in glory the sunlight of his sublime presence, and radiate over the whole earth the eternal majesty of his reign.

The Lord will soon return to make up his jewels. One good, may the best, preventative of evil acts and thoughts, is a constant remembrance that the Lord is at the door, and may at any moment enter and find us, either engaged in his work, or idling our time in things wholly unprofitable.

And now in conclusion let me cite you to those most excellent and Divine words of Paul:—

"Make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and ever."

Louisville, Ky.

Pall Mall Gazette.

PENN'S BONES.

It is with a feeling of relief that most people will read in the morning papers that the Trustees of the "cemetery in which the remains of William Penn lie buried have not sanctioned the removal of his ashes to another soil. More than half of the charm of English travel lies in the associations of our church-yards, and of the burial grounds in which the troubled souls of the Nonconformists of by-gone generations at last found rest. Even in the graveyards of the National Church the proudest prelate of the age not infrequently lies side by side with the most strenuous supporter of an antagonistic creed. William Penn is in the company of those with whom he acted during his public life, and with whom he agreed in religious belief. No ground of equal appropriateness could be found in America for his bones to rest in. His grave is the object of frequent pilgrimages from intelligent Americans, and in its present position it has for them an interest which would be utterly destroyed were it transplanted from amid his friends and fellow workers.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, July 20, 1881.

SOME communications that we hoped to have appear this week are deferred to the next number.

OUR readers will find an article in this paper from Henry Constable on the New Revision taken from the Rainbow, which is written with the ability and candor that are so characteristic of all his writings. It will be seen that his estimate of the revision is quite favorable.

THIS year so far has been remarkable for destructive floods, cyclones, earthquakes, and other physical disturbances. We notice that the secular press, while compelled to observe these unusual phenomena, can not forbear to ridicule the doctrine of the Lord's coming in connection with their statements on the disordered condition of the natural world and the elements. While troubles become intensified, as they certainly will, wicked men and seducers will only become more and more intensely hardened in iniquity. Let us save ourselves from this untoward generation.

Corrections.

In the article written by Br. Henry Dautrich, which appeared last week, for the word "inspiration" of their hands read "imposition" of their hands. The word occurs in a paragraph where Annanias and Paul are said to have been sent by the king.

In some editorial remarks on the Great Seal of the U. S. for the word "unwillingly" read "unwittingly." One or two minor errors escaped correction.

News Items.

There were 414 deaths in Cincinnati last week from the excessive heat, 261 of which were from sunstroke.

President Garfield's condition continues to improve, and there is now a general agreement among all schools and classes of physicians that he will no doubt completely recover.

THE REMOVAL OF THE POPE'S BODY.

ROME, July 15.—The Diritto says: "The architect of the Vatican, who acted as intermediary between the Cardinals who are the executors of the will of the late Pope and the Prefect of Rome, promised the latter in writing that the cortege accompanying the body of the late Pope in its removal from St. Peter's to the Church of San Lorenzo should consist solely of a funeral car and two or three carriages, without any outward show. This promise was not observed, hence the disturbance which attended the removal."

BISMARCK'S DEMAND UPON THE SULTAN.

BERLIN, July 14.—Prince Bismarck has made a demand upon the Porte to refund the ransom money recently paid to Roumelian brigands for the release of two captive Germans.

SHORT CROPS IN GERMANY.

BERLIN, July 14.—There is every prospect that the harvest will be much worse than it was last year. There appears to be a prospect of a general harvest in all crops valued at only from one-half to two-thirds of an average yield.

The wheat harvests in Russia, Hungary and France are reported "excellent," while in Roumania all the grain crops have been seriously damaged by storms and rains.

A CURIOUS MALADY IN RUSSIA.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 15.—The Golos says: "The peasants in one district near Novgored are suffering from constant bleeding at the nose, accompanied by the appearance of large black spots on the body. The local Sanitary Committee has established quarantine in the environs of St. Petersburg. The deaths in St. Petersburg last week exceeded the births by 316."

The French have captured the Tunisian town of Sfax, after a bombardment by a fleet of war vessels.

ANTI-CLERICAL DEMONSTRATIONS.

LONDON, July 18.—A correspondent at Rome says: The anti-clerical ferment continues. No night passes without an attempted demonstration, which is instantly suppressed by the police. A committee has been formed to confer gold medals on the six men convicted of rioting during the removal of the body of Pope Pius IX. The Lega Della Democrazia expresses regret that "the carcass of Pius IX. was not flung into the Tiber," and says anti-clerical clubs are forming to promote the perpetual expulsion of the Papacy from Rome.

A LAND-SLIDE IN SWITZERLAND.

A great land-slip near Sigriswyl, in the Canton of Berne, Switzerland, which was reported on the 20th ultimo, is steadily moving toward the Lake of Thun at the rate of three meters a day. It is three miles long, one mile broad and of unknown depth. The houses in its path have been deserted. Sigriswyl and the neighboring villages are fortunately out of danger. This land-slip began in one of the severest thunder-storms that have ever visited Switzerland. The ground had been loosened by recent earthquakes, and a piece of it, about 5,000 feet long, began to move toward the lake, carrying with it houses and part of a beech forest. In the same storm the village of Isarehle, embracing 300 houses and chalets, was totally destroyed by lightning. Isarehle, although absolutely unknown to tourists, was one of the most interesting places in Switzerland. Its inhabitants, like those of two or three villages on the Val d' Anniviers in the same neighborhood, are a people apart, and are believed to be descended from Huns, who deserted from Attila's army when it passed through the valley of the Upper Rhone in the fifth century. This theory is borne out by the Mongol type of countenance which is found among the people of these villages, and the exotic words still existing in their vocabulary.

The Boston Journal of the 8th inst. has the following: "A dispatch from London announces the death of Rev. John Cumming, D. D., F. R. S. E., minister of the Scotch Church in Crown Court, Covent Garden, London. This eminent divine was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, Nov. 10, 1810. He became a resident of London in 1833, and has been a very popular preacher. Both at Balmoral and in London he has had Queen Victoria among his hearers, and on one occasion was personally thanked by her at the close of the service for the sermon he had preached. He was an earnest opponent of Roman Catholicism, and was a close student of the apocalyptic writings. Dr. Cumming was author of several religious works, the most notable of which was 'The Great Tribulation,' which treated of the prophetic descriptions of the coming of Christ and the end of the present dispensation. His writings have been strongly marked by a belief in the speedy second coming of Christ and by predictions concerning the end of the world."

PARIS, July 18.—Dispatches from Sfax report that during its bombardment and capture, 400 Arabs were killed and 400 wounded. South Tunis is very much disturbed.

[illegible] death July 18 of the Right [illegible] Pusey, theologian and Dean of Westminster Abbey, the Church of England loses one of its chief ecclesiastics and English scholarship one of its ablest men. The venerated Dean was 68 years of age.

WARNER OBSERVATORY,
ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 16, 1881.

Gentlemen:

Another comet has just been discovered, making the fourth which has come into the field of telescopic vision since May 1. When the visits of these erratic bodies will end seems to be an unsolvable problem, but their rapid coming, brilliancy of appearance, and unusual numbers, fix the year 1881 as a remarkable era in American Astronomical History.

A brief description of the new discovery is hereby appended.

Sincerely,

C. S. WHITTEMORE,
Secretary.

STILL ANOTHER COMET.

Prof. Swift, Director of Warner Observatory, Rochester, N. Y., has just verified the discovery of another comet in the Constellation of Auriga, made July 14, by Prof. J. M. Schaeberle, of Ann Arbor, Mich.

This new comet is apparently coming directly toward the earth, and, for a telescopic comet, is very bright; indeed, it can readily be seen with a good opera glass. It is quite remarkable that it should be in just the spot where the present large comet was first seen by the naked eye in this latitude, and shows that the two bodies must have crossed each other's paths. This makes four comets discovered within ten weeks, a circumstance heretofore unknown to history. Prof. Schaeberle has duly filed his application for the Warner prize of $200, and as yet he is the only claimant.

Communications.

"THE DEAD KNOW NOT ANYTHING," ECCL. IX.

HELENA M. HUNT.

To those who believe in the immortality of the soul, I suppose the fanciful idea of heaven beyond the skies, as a place of rest and joy must bring a very great degree of comfort—but we who have come to a fuller understanding of God's plan of salvation, will be able to realise the folly of such a belief, unsupported as it is by any testimony from the Scriptures; and more also that there is no future life apart from the resurrection of the dead. Still there is something unspeakably sad in the knowledge that in what Solomon says "the memory of them is forgotten"—there is a great deal of truth, a great deal of that sorrowful experience of truth which many are meeting every day. I think what makes us feel our loss by death most is this—the haunting remembrance that will rise up in our hearts and tell us we might have acted differently had we only known in time.

But alas! time is over. the page turned over, the book closed and clasped, and all we would do now, must remain undone forever. We stand by the side of some loved form now cold in death—we realize with a pang such as no other sorrow can bring, that whatever good resolutions we long to make, have come too late, we see the closed eyes, that have ever lighted up with kindliness, and know that their light is gone for ever, we see the cold hand once ever busy in works of goodness and know that it must remain still for ever—we know that the warm, generous heart is quiet and silent, its noble deeds remaining undone for ever,—and with all this comes the bitter remorseful memory of our neglect, our indifference or our want of sympathy—we think, O! if only our dead could know our grief, but no "the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a portion for ever, with anything under the sun."

A famous English writer beautifully says:—"Our dead are never dead to us until they are forgotten."

Yes, forgotten, and passed away from us for ever. It is indeed well for us if we can look upon our dead with no shadow of remorse for days gone by beyond recall; if we can say from our hearts, "I did all I could to make their lives bright and happy." I sometimes think of the unutterable joy of meetings on the resurrection morning, when all little differences will be all over, all forgotten;—and not a shadow rises to mar the joy unspeakable which we only know by faith before; where our sleeping ones will rise to greet us, and they shall not die any more; but be with us throughout the ages of eternity.

"There God the Son forever reigns
And scatters night away;
While o'er their wide extended plains
Shines one eternal day."

Brevities.

A race of "beautiful negroes" is reported by a missionary to exist south of Kordufan, among the mountains, whom the Moslems have not yet succeeded in proselytizing. But they are the prey of slave hunters and are sold at high prices.

An exchange says: "The whole world has good reason to be alarmed at the prevalence of the plague in Bagdad. It has commenced about the same time of year that it began its ravages in that city in 1831. It then defied all curative power, and in a few days the mortality reached 1,000 a day, and before it began to abate 2,000 perished daily. This was of short continuance. The city then had 80,000 inhabitants. It now has 150,000. Christianity has done but little to ameliorate the horrors of an epidemic in Bagdad."

THE JEWS AND SPAIN.

In the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, the Jews, after suffering dreadful persecutions at the hands of the Inquisition, were driven, to the number of 160,000, from the country, and since then Spain has held the peculiar position among Christian nations of having no Jewish population. King Alfonso has now, however, issued a decree allowing Jews to return to Spain. This decree originated in a communication from Constantinople pointing out that sixty thousand Jews have recently taken refuge in Turkey from the persecution in Russia and the adjoining States, and hinting that many desired to return to the homes of their ancestors in Spain.

Such was the terror inspired by the plague that several houses in Edinburgh were shut up after the visitation and continued so for over a century. The Highland soldiers of Prince Charles Edward in 1745 broke into several of these deserted tenements and found many valuable articles, but an outbreak of the disease followed their temerity. In 1808 some houses were pulled down that remained closed and uninhabited since the plague of 1645, and persons in the vicinity were apprehensive lest a reappearance of the sickness should follow. These fears proved groundless. Yet in the first cholera epidemic in London many people believed that its appearance was connected with the disturbance of the sites of the old "plague pits," where the victims of 1665 had been interred.

The Eastern Question is once more revived by the French policy in Northern Africa. The rumors in circulation two weeks ago of an intended attack by that Power on Tripoli are confirmed. A Paris dispatch to the London Times says: "The French Consul at Tripoli has begun the same kind of agitation as that with which M. Roustan forced the Tunis expedition on France, but Tripoli is really a Turkish province, and cannot be touched without provoking the intervention of Europe." The Pall Mall Gazette in a leading article on the attitude of France says: "The situation in Northern Africa is very serious. There are points in the Sultan's African dominions to threaten which would compel England to enter the field. The interests of France and England would be best served by making that fact clearly understood on both sides of the Channel." The relations between France and Turkey are strained to the utmost extent. The Sultan declared that he would never again receive M. Tissot, the French Ambassador at Constantinople, and M. Tissot sent as a reply that the Sultan might possibly learn some day what it costs to insult a great country in the person of its representative.

Exegetical.

Sheol and Hades.

The undoubted meaning of sheol is the grave, or world of the dead—the region of the Rephaim—the helpless. "They are dead, they shall not live"—they are Rephaim. Isa. xxvi. 14. "The earth shall cast out her Rephaim."

"Thou wilt not abandon me to sheol,
Nor permit thy holy one to see corruption."

The words "my soul" merely mean myself.

The argument that Christ's soul went to sheol and his body to the grave has no foundation. The Hebrew does not warrant the distinction. Christ's soul, in such an idiom, is his entire person.

Now what is meant by sheol? It is explained in the second clause. It is the place where corruption is seen, the region of the dead. So the apostle understood it. Sheol and hades do not mean that narrow bed in which one corpse is laid; but, in this relation, they signify that region of darkness and insensibility in which all corpses repose. One corpse is lowered into its (keber) grave,—all corpses lie in sheol. —Biblical Cyclopædia, by John Eadie, D. D. Prof. of Biblical Literature to the U. P. Church.

Selections.

Toledo Blade.

PREHISTORIC MAN.

Who were the mound builders? What became of them? Where have the largest mounds been found?

The first part of your question is one that has puzzled historians for ages. It seems, however, to be settled, that long before the Indians of the present day, there lived in North America a race of men who disappeared years ago, leaving no trace of history or even a name behind. Their monuments—or mounds—may be divided into three general classes:—

1. For war.
2. For sacrifice, or worship.
3. For the burial of the dead.

Of the first class, is a specimen near Chillicothe, O., where the summit of a hill is occupied by an irregular work of earth and stone resembling the breast-works used in modern warfare. At Marietta, O., are evidences of a covered way leading to the Muskingum River, evidently designed, in case of siege, as a safe avenue to obtain water. Similar instances are recorded along the Missouri River. On the Miami River, near Hamilton, O., are the evidences of what was once evidently a fortification. Another class of structures are called "Mounds of Observation," or alarm posts. They are small at the base and higher in proportion, and from their location are supposed to have been used as signal posts.

The second general class of these works have been styled "Sacred Enclosures," from their apparent use. They are regular in shape, forming almost a circle, with an opening at one side, or sometimes very much like a horseshoe, with a small mound in the center, which may have served for sacrificial purposes. Their location and structure preclude the idea that they were used for war purposes. It has been suggested by some that these people were worshippers of the sun, and built their holy places, in shape, to conform to that of the great luminary whence they supposed all life to flow. The "Sepulchral Mounds," however, are the structures from which the "mound builders" really take their name.

On the borders of Ossipee Lake, New Hampshire, near St. Regis, on the St Lawrence River, and at various points in the Middle and seaboard States, are heaps of earth which are popularly known as "Indian Mounds." These, however, are of comparative recent date, and are not classed as the work of the "mound builders" proper. At Grave Creek, West Virginia, is one of the most remarkable specimens of the so-called "mound builders'" work. Some forty years ago this mound was opened and explored. About forty feet from the summit the workmen came upon a vault 8x12 feet and seven feet high, formed by supporting timbers at the sides and overhead; another chamber of similar construction, but of larger dimensions, was also discovered. In each of these vaults was found the skeleton of a human being, surrounded with such a wreath of ornaments as to leave little doubt that they were the skeletons of chiefs or kings. In 1868 a mound was explored near Newark, O., about ten feet high, and eighty feet in circumference. This also contained skeletons, one being that of a child with a string of copper beads about its neck. In this mound were found hatchets of hematite and greenstone, a flint chisel, needles made from the small bones in a deer's foot, a few bits of pottery and bones of animals.

James H. Chapin, in his "Creation," says there is undisputable evidence that these works were built and abandoned centuries ago, and his theory is that 2,000 years ago, more or less, the interior of this continent was occupied by a large population of semi-civilized men far surpassing the Indian of the later day, and that they were driven from their homes by the invasion of powerful northern or eastern tribes, finding a refuge in Mexico, where they developed the type of civilization that culminated in the halls and courts of Montezuma.

Center.

THE BEAUTY OF CARMEL.

The name of Carmel is connected with some of the most thrilling events of ancient story. The name signifies "the garden mount," and it is but a feeble reminder of the former beauty of the mountain. No other place in Palestine retains so well the beauty and fertility of the time when all the Holy Land was a watered garden. Van de Velde says, "There is not a flower that I have seen in Galilee, or along the coast, that I do not find here on Carmel. The whole mountain side was dressed with blossoms and flowery shrubs and fragrant herbs." In Solomon's song, the graceful forms and flowering beauties of Carmel suggest the comparison of the face and head of a glorious bride, gay with comely ornaments. The summits are crowned with olive and laurel, and the sides with pines and oaks, and everywhere with verdure and fragrance; while the winter's cold and summer's draught seldom faded the grassy carpet which was seamed with crystal brooks leaping from rock to rock. This playground of beauty became the battlefield of truth.

Not far from the summit stood the altars of Baal, alongside of which Elijah built an altar to the true God. Within sight of these rival altars, on the plain below, a multitude could easily stand and see the acted-out worship of Baal. And just at nightfall, when the God of Elijah answered by fire, they could see the descending light from heaven, and the altar flaming with Elijah's sacrifice. In the sight of the people the ordeal of fire was accepted, and it proved that the Lord was God, and that Baal was false. The people, the country, and the government were God's, hence Baal's prophets were impostors, and traitors, and were convicted and executed for treason. Then Elijah went and knelt by the altar where his offering was yet smoking and prayed for rain. Six times his servant went to look for signs of its coming, and saw nothing but a cloudless, brazen sky. The seventh time he saw a cloud like a human hand in size hanging over the Mediterranean. Before even this appeared, he had told Ahab, the king, that there was a sound of abundance of rain, and as soon as the handful of cloud came in sight he told Ahab to prepare his chariot for a great rain.

The prayer of Elijah for rain was based on the direct promise of to him, that when he should pray for rain it should be given. Here, then, is the rule for faith. It is to follow along the line of promises. Whatever has been promised can be depended on. Take any promise, for specially described spiritual good, and if that particular good is really needed, you can ask for it with confidence. Faith does not imply that signs of answer are already seen. Faith implies that we do not see, otherwise it is sense, it is walking by sight.

But come to a river, led by no preceding footstep, to be told there is a concealed bridge, and that we are to walk across on its viewless supports, that requires faith. Faith spans the space between the real world of sense and the equally real world of spiritual things. Before a sign is seen that God is near, faith hears his coming footsteps.

It is not folly or fanaticism to say, I have asked God for a certain promise good, and I know I shall receive it. But it is folly to say, I have asked for a promised good and I do not expect it; or, I do not know whether I shall receive it or not.

"I have faith enough after we see the signs,"—so has the heathen. But true faith relies upon God's word in times of cold, or drought or dullness; in time of want or of grief or temptation.

The written word defines God's mode of administering. Faith accepts this, and confidently rests upon it.

Such a faith and such walking with and dependence upon God make the Christian like the perennial beauty of this grand old mountain of the sea. The wilderness and solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon will be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they shall see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God.

Sententious.

A good character shines by its own light.

It we would understand the Bible we must experience the Bible.

A man of integrity will never listen to any reason against conscience.

No books are so reliable as the lives of men; no character so plain as their moral conduct.

Give the man such a heart as the Son of God described in the beatitudes, and a whole universe of sorrow cannot rob him of his blessedness.

The heights of great men reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.
—Longfellow.

Lost patience is never found again. You may be patient next time; but the spoken word cannot be called back—not with prayers and tears.

If God hath made this world so fair,
Where sin and death abound,
How beautiful beyond compare,
Will Paradise be found!

When death, the great reconciler, has come, it is never our tenderness that we repent of, but our severity.—George Eliot.

Throughout the history of the church, it has always been found that the silent experience of the pious people of God has been truer, and has led the church in a safer path, than the public decrees of those who claim to be authoritative leaders of theological thought.—W. Robertson Smith.

In this world of many blessings
Blended oft with happy days,
Who has joy if not the Christian,
Shunning all forbidden ways?
When the hand of stern affliction
Overtakes the stricken one,
Who can say, if not the Christian,
"Father, let thy will be done?"

A religion that is false is unusually intricate. The only two rites that characterize the religion of Jesus are noted for their simple beauty. The Christian worship comes out of the soul, and not out of symbols.—John Reid.

Orphan's Friend.

TO-MORROW.

I have nothing to do with to-morrow,
My Savior will make that his care;
Should he fill it with trouble or sorrow,
He will help me to suffer and bear.

I have nothing to do with to-morrow,
Its burdens, then, why should I share?
Its grace and its strength I won't borrow;
Then why should I borrow its care?

Book Notice.

THE BIBLIOTHECA OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE.

Three volumes of this important work have come to hand. For completeness in detail, and comprehensiveness in embracing a description of every subject upon which information is desirable and necessary to the general reader, this publication certainly holds a pre-eminent place. As will be seen in another part of the paper, this great work, in 18 vols., octavo, nearly 1000 pages each, well bound in cloth, and printed on paper of fair quality, can be had at the low price of $15.

From the American Book Exchange we have also received the REVISED NEW TESTAMENT. The copy sent us is a handsome volume, neatly bound in cloth—print and paper both good enough—and is offered at $1.25, to which 6c. must be added for postage when sent by mail. We do not keep the book, but our friends can send to the office of publication.

THE INFIDEL SILENCED.

A neat pamphlet of 48 pages in handsome paper cover. Chicago Publishing Concern, 162 E. Clark street, Chicago, Ill. The price is not given.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing, I will be at Bro. Moore's, in Illinois, on Friday night before the fifth Sunday in July, and hold meeting over Sunday. August 8, I am to have a discussion with a Baptist minister at the same place, at Wells school house, south of Paris, Edgar Co., Ill. Following are the propositions:

Resolved, That the Bible teaches men and women (or sinners) are born of God in this life, and must possess everlasting life before they can believe in the Lord Jesus Christ.

C. W. Pain affirms. J. S. Hatch denies.

Resolved, That the Bible teaches Christ will come and set up his kingdom on this earth.

J. S. Hatch affirms, C. W. Pain denies.

I expect to spend the rest of August in Illinois as the brethren may appoint.

J. S. HATCH.

The Church of God of Montague and Wise Counties, Texas, will hold their annual Conference at Valentine Springs in Montague County, commencing Friday, August 12, 1881, at four o'clock, P. M. The place of meeting is four miles south of Forestburg, sixteen miles south of St. Joe, sixteen miles southeast of Montaguetown, thirty miles west of Gainsville, and twenty miles north of Decatur. We invite every body that feels an interest in the word of God to come over. Brethren coming from a distance will go to brethren Hodges, Grimes, or Sowers, who live near the meeting place. We want all the preaching brethren we can get. Any preaching brother who can come will please address me at Sunset, Wise Co., Tex., and we will help him come.

T. T. DOYAL.

The Annual Assembly of the Church of God will commence on Friday, Aug. 5, at the house of the brethren in Winchester, Va., and continue over Sunday, which will be the first Sunday. All of the Abrahamic faith, and the people in general are respectfully invited to attend. All from a distance will please notify the writer in due time, and we will meet them at the R. R. depot, and take care of them during the meeting, and longer if they will stay, as we love the communion of the brethren in Christ.

N. J. MORGAN.

The Piedmont Advent C. C. will meet with the church at Tabernacle, Caldwell county, N. C., Aug. 7, and continue three days. Tabernacle is 18 miles from the R. R., Hickory being the nearest depot. Persons coming on the cars will go from Hickory to the conference by means of private conveyance.

JACOB J. HANSHAW, Sec.

He who is false to present duty breaks the thread in the loom, and will see the defect when the weaving of a life-time is unrolled.

The Great Encyclopædia.

The completion of the great "Library of Universal Knowledge" the first of July, will mark an epoch in the lives of thousands of ambitious young men and women, as it places a liberal education easily within the reach of every one who chooses to aspire to it. Every department of human knowledge is in large measure here laid open to the understanding of the intelligent reader. Heretofore such a valuable and magnificent compendium of knowledge has been inaccessible to ordinary people on account of extremely high cost. This, the largest encyclopædia ever published in this country, in large type; excellently printed and bound, can be secured at the trifling cost of $15, and even beyond this, liberal discounts are allowed to clubs of three, five, ten or more persons, and during the months of July and August $10,000 special reward is offered to club agents. It is well worth while sending at once to the publishers for specimen pages and particulars. See also their advertisement elsewhere. The American Book Exchange, Publishers, New York.

— MAN —

AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE,

A Lecture delivered before the Liberal League, Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 16, 1881.

By Dr. J. H. THOMAS.

This is the article that appeared in THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 26, 1881, in pamphlet form. Most of our brethren know how ably the subject is handled, and the consequent importance of circulating it largely. Send to this office for it.

Price 5c. each; 12 for 50c., or 20 for $1.

Poetry.

STRENGTH ENOUGH.

MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

The morning mists that lie
About the day, that comes so softly in,
Hide all its secrets from the searching eye,
And none may tell what want, or pain, or sin
Shall break, new-risen, from the enfolding thread,
Nor what is in the cloud.

Before the busy feet,
In the hot noontide 'neath the blazing sun,
Shall with their rapid step-sounds fill the street,
Before the willing hands their work have done,
There may have burst some great and new surprise
Before our shrinking eyes.

It are to stand,
Forsaken, al ed, in a fight
With a determin and a hostile hand,
For the dear cause we honor as the right
And either be o'ercome or win a crown
Before the sun goes down.

We may be called to take
Some noble work that needs the wise and strong,
And do it faithfully for Jesus' sake,
Though no great talents may to us belong:
It may be only to seem to stand alone
Before the Master's throne.

Or we may have to-day
To lay all work aside, and in the gloom
That suddenly creeps up around the way
Take the short journey that shall find the tomb,
And see the earth-home fade before our face
In some strange place.

But how so'er it be,
We dare go forth to meet the dim unseen,
Tranquil and patient; God is near, and he
Will be our Helper, as he yet has been;
And let the day for us be fair or rough,
We shall have strength enough.

Selections.

Rainbow.

REVISED VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

HENRY CONSTABLE.

In the Revised Version of the New Testament, which has been just presented for acceptance to the English-speaking population of the world, we have, undoubtedly, a work of very great importance and of the deepest interest. From circumstances we have been unable to give to it that fulness of attention which we should have desired, and which perhaps at another time we may devote to it. We think, however, that we know enough of the work to be able to say that it has been undertaken and carried out with the most perfect honesty of intention to present to the world a true and accurate version of the writings of the New Testament. Throughout it, so far as we have been able to judge, there does not appear to have been the smallest bias in favor of any one school of thought or theology in the Christian world. The aim of the revisers appears to have been to present in the English tongue of our day the exact meaning which the sacred writers presented to the generation of their time in the language of Greece. We give them to the fullest extent the very high praise of an honest purpose honestly carried out.

The Authorized Version of the New Testament, which of course the Revised Version is intended to set aside as being better and truer, is very dear to us on many accounts. It has been in use for two hundred and seventy years, and so has the stamp of antiquity. It has been, throughout that long period, accepted among all Protestant communities and churches speaking the English tongue, who have appealed to it as their common standard of faith. In language of a beauty, a force and a simplicity which has never been surpassed, if it has ever been equalled, it has presented to us the message of God in the gospel of his Son. It is indeed a gift of God in the seventeenth century for which we can never be sufficiently thankful, whether it be retained in general use as heretofore, or whether it be set aside for a version yet better.

Whatever be our opinion of the Revised Version as destined or deserving to take that place in Protestant Christendom which the Authorized Version has occupied for well nigh three centuries, we have no doubt whatever, and have for long been convinced, that a revision of the latter was plainly and most urgently required. The true state of the original Greek text was not when it was made ascertained at all so well by scholars as it is now. Of the three most ancient manuscripts, the Vatican had been jealously guarded from the common eye. The Alexandrian manuscript, now in the library of the British Museum, was not sent into England before the year 1628, several years after the publication of the Authorized Version. The Sinaitic manuscript was only discovered some years ago. Besides these oldest manuscripts of the New Testament in Greek, there are early versions of it, such especially as the Syriac and the Vulgate, which are undoubtedly of high authority in determining the original text, an authority which does not seem to have been sufficiently attended to by the translators of the Authorized Version. For these and other reasons, which it is needless here to specify, it is conceded by scholars that the Greek text, of which the Authorized Version is a translation, itself required a close and careful emendation.

Now it is quite evident that it is of primary importance to ascertain, as nearly as we can, the actual state of the Greek text as it was first written by the apostles and the other sacred writers. The discovery of, or the better acquaintance with, the oldest manuscripts, the truer appreciation of the most ancient versions, the better acquaintance with the rules of criticism possessed by modern scholarship, must therefore call for a revision of the Greek text itself.

But besides this, and apart altogether from the soundness of the text, there are, in common opinion as well as in our own judgment imperfections in the translation of the Authorized Version which imperatively call for a revision of it. We cannot in a brief article refer to these individually or even in classes. Several of them will appear later on, when we pass in review some of the alterations which have been made in the Revised Version. But there is, and has been for a considerable time, a prevailing impression that a revision of our Authorized Version was needed and called for.

In the last century Dr. Newcome, Archbishop of Armagh, in his "Historical View" of English Biblical Translations, called for a revision of our present version by public authority. In our own day, the late lamented Dean Alford showed his deep sense of the necessity of such a step by his translation of the New Testament. Some of his alterations have been followed by our present revisers: there are others which, we regret to see, have not.

The efforts of the revisers have, of course, been made mainly and chiefly in these two directions:—

1. The establishment of, as nearly as possible, a perfect Greek text.

2. The true and accurate rendering of this text into the English tongue.

Other matters also they have had in view, but into these we do not enter at present. It must suffice to call attention to the main objects which they had in view and which are of primary importance.

In the emendation of the Greek text it may be remarked that there is no attempt made to supply any passage that might be supposed to have been lost. No such attempt has ever been made, nor has it ever been supposed that any part of the New Testament has been lost to the church. Some, indeed, have supposed a whole epistle of St. Paul, that to the Laodicean Church (Col. iv. 16) to have been lost; but this is a mistake; as that epistle is undoubtedly the one now erroneously addressed to the Ephesians. It is a cheering thought that no part of the writings inspired of God and directed to his church has been allowed to be lost. It is in the substitution of one word for another, or in the omission of passages which have been improperly added to the sacred text, that the labors of our revisers in this respect are seen.

The first important omission from the received text occurs in Matt. i. 25, which is rendered—"and knew her not till she had brought forth a son; and he called his name Jesus." The words for "her first-born" are plainly unjustified by authority. Their omission does not bear in any measure upon the point as to whether Mary had other sons than Jesus, as the words omitted here occur beyond question in the parallel passage in St. Luke ii. 7, from which they were probably introduced into Matthew's gospel. Nor can Rome avail herself of the omission, as the words occur in the Vulgate, her own authorized version of the Scriptures.

The next important omission from the received text is that of the doxology from the Lord's prayer, Matt. vi. 13. There is, we believe, no question but that such omission is required by all the rules of criticism, and therefore we rejoice that it has been made. It has no bearing upon any doctrine.

A more important omission in several points of view is made in John v. 4. Here the mention of the angel going down at a certain season into the pool of Bethesda is wholly abandoned. We think it is abandoned with reason. The giving up the passage relieves us of several difficulties. The reason for its insertion is not hard to find. There was some popular superstition about the angelic visitation which brought the sick to the spot. The omission of any reference to this superstition in the sacred writing is the tacit condemnation of it, while Jesus, by his wonderful work on one of its frequenters, shows himself the Great Angel of God.

Of course the famous passage of the three heavenly witnesses in 1 John v. 7 is omitted. It has long been given up by scholars, though it has occasionally figured in sermons in defence of the doctrine of the Trinity. We do not want it. We are glad that it should disappear altogether from the scene. An over-zealous, but not over-scrupulous, friend of that doctrine inserted what St. John never wrote.

Another change has been made in 1 Tim. iii. 16, where "God" has been omitted, and "he who" has been substituted. We are pleased with the change, as there was no sufficient evidence for the first reading. It is a primary duty of faithful revision to see that no passage that was not in the original writings should continue in the text.

And for this reason we regret that our revisers have retained in the text of Ephesians i. 1, words which certainly have no right to be there. We refer to the words "at Ephesus." They allow themselves in the margin, that "some very ancient authorities omit, 'at Ephesus.'" We have the express testimony of Tertullian and Basil that these words were not in the ancient manuscripts. It is a great pity then that they should continue to be inserted, as their omission would lead to the speedy recognition of the important fact that the grand epistle usually ascribed to the Ephesians was in reality written by St. Paul to the Church of Laodicea. Col. iv. 16.

We now come to another very important passage, where we regret to find that the revisers feel themselves obliged to take an undecided course, to confess, in fact, that they find it out of their power to say whether it should continue in the text or be excluded from it. We refer to Mark xvi. 9–20. It is well known that the gravest doubts have been entertained by scholars as to the authenticity of this passage. The revisers in separating the paragraph from that which precedes it by an unusual space, and by calling attention, in the margin, to the fact that the two oldest Greek manuscripts as well as other authorities omit it altogether, very plainly intimate that its authenticity is doubted by them. Yet they still retain it in the text. We regret this much. In this passage, short as it is, is one indubitable contradiction of St. Luke's narrative. In Luke xxiv. 34 we are told that when the two disciples returned from Emmaus they found the apostles full of faith in the Lord's resurrection. Whereas, in Mark xvi. 13, we are told that when these returned and told their story the apostles refused to believe them. Surely an error of such a nature as this should decide the revisers in giving that submission to the oldest manuscripts which, even without it, they ought to manifest.

With these observations on the revision of the New Testament, we turn for a short time to consider the important question of the manner in which its translation has been carried out.

The rules laid down by the revisers for their guidance in this matter are, in our judgment most excellent. They are found in the Preface. Their fundamental principle is thus stated:—

"The character of the Revision was determined for us from the onset by the first rule, to introduce as few alterations as possible, consistently with faithfulness. Our task was revision, not re-translation."—(Preface).

We cannot think our revisers have carried out this admirable rule to the extent that they might and that they ought to have done. They have, not at all unfrequently, made alterations which were not called for, while they have frequently retained what should have been altered. Space will only permit us to refer very briefly to particulars.

We are, of course, far from saying that the revisers have not in very many—and these often very important—respects, improved the translation. They certainly have; and in these improvements they have given valuable aid to a more perfect revision of the Christian Scriptures than that they have produced.

In their substitution of words for others that have changed their sense, or become obsolete or almost obsolete in the course of time, they have frequently improved the Authorized Version. Thus, for "offend," we have in Matt. v. 29, "causeth to stumble;" for "strait," we have in Matt. vii. 13, "narrow;" for "take no thought" in Matt. vi. 25, we have "be not anxious." It is quite evident of how much importance alterations of this kind are. Expressions well understood at the time the Authorized Version was made, fail now to convey their old meaning, or actually convey an opposite one. We are encouraged in Scripture to take thought for the morrow; we are forbidden to be anxious.

An admirable rule with the revisers has been that, wherever the same Greek word occurs in any verse, or in its immediate context, the same English word should be given in translation. They justly complain of what we have often complained, namely, a studied variety of rendering on the part of the translators of the Authorized Version.—(Preface).

Thus, in Matt. xii. 5, ., they put "guiltless" in both verses, because there is the same Greek word for both; and for the same reason they have in the oft-referred-to passage in Matt. xxv. 46, put "eternal" as the adjective connected both with "punishment" and "life." But as an example of this excellent principle, we would especially refer their rendering of Matt. xvi. 23, 26. I have in my work on "Hades" (5th Ed. p. 93), called attention to the gross impropriety of using the word "life" in the 25th verse, and "soul" in the 26th, as the translation of the same Greek term. The revisers have seen this; and, in putting "life" as the translation throughout, have enabled every one to arrive at the true meaning of the passage.

The revisers have done wisely in regard of the very important word "hell." It is known to every scholar that there are three Greek words in the New Testament which are translated by the same word "hell." Hence inextricable confusion to the mere English reader. The revisers have in a measure remedied this. The Greek word geheenna very properly continues to be translated "hell," signifying the place of final punishment. The Greek word hades is rendered "hades," and so all may judge for themselves what hades is. We regret that they did not carry out their rule in 2 Peter vii. 4, where they have left "hell" as the translation of a Greek word wholly different from geheenna. We are glad, however, that they have informed English readers in the margin that the place which St. Peter referred to was "Tartarus."

The manner in which the coins mentioned in the New Testament have been translated has often caused us surprise and annoyance. The simple principle is to give the name of the coin referred to, and let readers find out its value in our money. Our revisers have, in part, acted on this principle in relation to the coins referred to in Matt. xvii. 24–27. They have rendered "tribute money" and "piece of money" by "half shekel" and "shekel," with direct and proper reference to Exod. xxx. 13. They would, however, have done better had they named the coins referred to, the Greek didrachma and stater. These can then be compared with the Hebrew coins. We are much surprised that they have made no attempt to clear up the confusion that arises from translating the Roman coin denarius by a "penny." Matt. xviii. 28; xx. 2; xxii. 19. We remember how difficult it used to be for us to make our Sunday School scholars understand how a penny in Judea equalled eight pennies in England. But if they were told plain that a denarius was the hire of a laboring man in Judea, and that it equalled about eightpence of English money, all this confusion would vanish.

We gladly notice several other decided improvements in the Revised Version. Thus, "and" for "notwithstanding" is such. Matt. ii. 22. So is "threshing floor" for "floor" (Matt. iii. 12); "wine-skins" for "bottles" (Matt. ix. 17); "partings of the highways" for "highways" (Matt. xxii. 9); "I know nothing against myself" for "I know nothing by myself" (1 Cor. iv. 4); "divers portions" for "sundry times" (Heb. i. 1); "covenant" for "testament." Matt. xxvi. 28. We would also note the translation of Matt. xv. 5, and Jude 7th verse, as clearing up places often hard to be understood. In the division of the text into paragraphs, still retaining for facility of reference the chapters and verses; in the change of Greek proper names for their corresponding form in Hebrew; for the marked tendency to understand the Greek psyche as simply animal life instead of a supposed immortal principle: for all these we thank the learned revisers.

But we would not be treating them fairly if we did not say that these are but samples of the numerous improvements which they have introduced, and for which we are under deep obligation to them.

